Dup W.T.P

The Weekly Anglo-Afri[illegible]

VOL. II. NO. 41.—WHOLE NO. 93. NEW YORK, APRIL 27, 1861. PRICE, FOUR [illegible]

Poetry.

[From St. James' Magazine.]

A LEGEND OF ST. CHRISTOPHER.

"Carry me across!"
The Syrian heard, rose up and braced
His huge limbs to the accustomed toil:
"My child, see how the waters boil!
The night-black heavens look angry-faced;
But life is little loss.

I'll carry thee with joy,
If needs be, safe as nestling dove:
For o'er this stream I pilgrims bring
In service to one Christ, a King
Whom I have never seen, yet love."
"I thank thee," said the boy.

Cheerful, Arprobus took
The burden on his shoulders great,
And stepped into the waves once more;
When, lo! they leaping rise and roar,
And 'neath the little child's light weight
The tottering giant shook.

"Who art thou?" cried he, wild
Struggling in middle of the ford:
"Boy as thou lookest, it seems to me
The whole world's load I bear in thee,
Yet—" "For the sake of Christ thy Lord,
Carry me," said the child.

No more Arprobus swerved,
But gained the further bank, and then
A voice cried, "Hence, Christopheros be!
For carrying, thou hast carried ME,
The King of angels and of men,
The Master thou hast served."

And in the moonlight blue
The saint saw—not the wandering boy,
But Him who walked upon the sea
And o'er the plains of Galilee,
'Till, filled with mystic, awful joy,
His dear Lord Christ he knew.

O, little is all loss,
And brief the space 'twixt shore and shore,
If thou, Lord Jesus, on us lay,
Through the deep waters of our way,
The burden that Christopheros bore—
To carry Thee across.

[From the New York Evening Post.]

WEST INDIA EMANCIPATION.

The Commercial Aspects of Freedom.[*]

The Whole Case Well Stated.

Compactly put, the argument for negro slavery, as it is now presented by its ablest and most candid advocates, appears in the following formula: Slavery is a divinely ordained institution; and it is the only safe investment which will produce at least fifteen per cent. per annum.

It would be as [illegible] to [illegible] that it is thought divinely ordained because it brings in fifteen per cent., as it would be absurd to expect a slaveholder to keep his slaves at a loss, and purely from a sense of obedience to a Divine behest. But whatever lingering doubts may trouble a reasoning planter concerning the Divinity which hedges about his slave quarters, he has an unhesitating confidence in the profitableness of negro-owning, negro-breeding, negro-driving, and negro-selling.

The argument of profit seems somewhat selfish, and to bear its condemnation on its face. But slavery has exalted its horn so fiercely, and freedom has whined so pitiably, among us—going about, indeed, like the pig in the fairy tale, with a knife (and fork) under her fifth rib, asking, "Who'll have me?" and not finding a Border State to take her without something "to boot"—that even a merely selfish argument must be met, lest freemen, being merchants and capitalists should seriously ask themselves whether fifteen per cent. can be anything less than divine.

The admirable commercial aspects of slavery have been so repeatedly presented by the ablest advocates of "the institution"; we have been so persistently assured that "cotton is king," and that without slavery there can be no cotton, that it is well to look for once a little at the possible profits of freedom. If, as is urged, our entire national prosperity rests upon the basis of slave-labor, it is only just that we should hesitate before we condemn that by which we live and move and have our daily bread.

Happily for the impartial balancing of this account between free and slave labor, Mr. Sewell, the title of whose work we have placed at the foot of this column, is a man of an eminently commercial mind, who believes entirely in national prosperity, and is content to count very narrowly the profit and loss of a nation's allegiance to the goddess of liberty. "I deem the question (of emancipation) a commercial one," he says, "to be judged favorably or unfavorably by commercial rules, for whatever philanthropists may say to the contrary, it seems to me very evident that a system which would bring inevitable ruin on that portion of a population which controls the elements of civilization, cannot contribute to the moral and material progress of a country." "All other issues are involved in this," he repeats in another place; and we do him but justice when we add, that throughout his interesting work he speaks consistently from this standpoint. We add, also, Mr. Sewell's assurance that "it is not designed, in this work to draw from the results of British emancipation any inference, or to point any conclusion favorable or unfavorable to slave labor in the United States"; and can assure the reader that a book more conscientiously free from theories or speculations of any kind, we have seldom read.

It is now twenty-three years since the last slave became free in the British West Indies. No one will deny that the period is too short to take a fair measure of the results, even if the British government had wisely aided the men to whom it gave the great boon of liberty, instead of leaving them, ignorant, barbarous and vicious as slavery had made them, to the tender mercies of those who had been their task-master, and who instantly and constantly used every means which superior force and intelligence gave them, to reduce this ignorant rabble again to a not illegal serfhood. The generation who were slaves are not yet all departed. Men who were once under the lash of the driver now sit in the legislature of Jamaica. A full half-century would be too short a time to wait for a fair judgment on so vast a change as this, which at one swoop raised over 600,000 men and women from down-trodden slaves to ignorant freemen—and left them there. Not from the next generation, nor the next, will the mark of the iron entirely disappear. Thirty-five centuries have passed since the Israelites smote their oppressors, and to-day Rabbi Raphall yearns for the flesh-pots of Egypt.

But we must take what we can get, and we have no reason to be dissatisfied.

In 1831, under slavery, the British West Indies exported four million hundred weights of sugar. In 1857, after twenty years of freedom, they exported but three million hundred-weights. This is the charge against freedom. "Answer us that," exclaims the pro-slavery theorist; "figures can't lie, answer me that!"

Figures can't lie, and for that reason the answer is given here in Mr. Sewell's always pregnant figures.

> "The Colony of British Guiana, for four years prior to emancipation, exported an annual average of 96,000,000 pounds of sugar, while from 1856 to 1860, its annual average export rose to 100,000,000 pounds. The Colony of Trinidad, for four years prior to emancipation, annually exported an average of 37,000,000 pounds of sugar, while, from 1856 to 1860, its annual average export rose to 62,000,000 pounds. The Colony of Barbadoes, for four years prior to emancipation, annually exported an average of 32,800,000 pounds of sugar, while, from 1856 to 1860, its annual average export rose to 78,000,000 pounds. The Colony of Antigua, for four years prior to emancipation, exported an annual average of 19,500,000 pounds of sugar, while, from 1856 to 1860, its annual average export rose to 24,400,000 pounds. This is a total exhibit of 265,000,000 pounds annually exported now, instead of 187,300,000 pounds before emancipation, or an excess of exports, with free labor, of seventy-seven million, seven hundred thousand pounds of sugar."

And this is of sugar only, while, if other articles of export are counted in, as undoubtedly they should be, "the annual balance in favor of freedom (in the four colonies) will be found to have reached already fifteen million of dollars, at the very lowest estimate."

Where, then, is the ground for the charge? asks the uninformed reader. Is it found in Jamaica, poor ill-used Jamaica, the glory and ready example of every upholder of slavery; the shame and terror, for a long time, of those who would fain believe that freedom is not only right, but that it pays? She alone, "under slavery so prosperous, under freedom so ruined," (as the argument goes) makes the [illegible] deficit.

"A comparison of Jamaican exports in 1805, her year of greatest prosperity, with her exports in 1859, must appear odious to her inhabitants," says Mr. Sewell. "In the former year the island exported over 150,000 hogsheads of sugar, and in the latter year she exported 28,000 hogsheads. The exports of rum and coffee exhibit the same proportionate decrease."

Jamaica is therefore the great debatable ground of the controversy. To an examination of her condition and resources Mr. Sewell devotes a longer time and a greater space, than to any of the others; wisely bringing to his task, also, the experience and information gained in the other colonies. And to the consideration of the causes of her decline and of the present condition of her population, as exhibited by him, we shall devote the remainder of this review.

Let us state the charges that are brought against this fated island and its freedmen. They are: That the produce of sugar, which is the staple export of the island, has fallen off, since emancipation, from over 90,000 hogsheads in 1834, to 28,000 in 1859, with a proportionate decrease in rum and coffee. That the owners of sugar and coffee estates have been ruined and compelled to abandon their properties. That this is occasioned by the idle and profligate habits of the freed negroes, who, having their liberty, will no longer work, the climate and soil permitting them to subsist with no labor properly so called. That such of them as will work, ask such wages as sugar-growers cannot afford to pay and compete in the market with slave-grown sugar. That the entire industry of the island is therefore fatally prostrated, and what was once a prosperous colony is now a ruin. That, in short, free labor if it could be got, is more costly than slave labor; that it cannot that it cannot be got, as the black man will not work unless he is coërced into slavery, and that as a conclusive proof of the growing demoralization of the freed African, may be cited the fact that the black and colored population have actually decreased since the year of emancipation.

These are serious charges to bring against the people of Jamaica. Let us examine them by the light of Mr. Sewell's facts and figures.

The island of Jamaica has an area of about four millions of acres, and a total population of 378,000. Of these only 28,000 are whites; the remaining 350,000 are black and "colored." On the day of emancipation there were in the island 380,000 black and "colored" people, and Mr. Sewell says that between 1834 and 1844 there was an annual decrease of "nearly a half per cent." But what was it in the days of slavery? We find by the statements of the planters, published in the Blue Books and official Reports of that day, that after the abolition of the slave trade the annual decrease was at the rate of two and a half per cent.; that the great argument brought forward by these planters in favor of the continuance of the African slave trade was "the unfriendliness of slavery to population;" and that > —"though 600,000 slaves, at the lowest estimate, were brought to Jamaica during the eighteenth century, it is well known that at the end of that period the slave population of the whole island was not much more than one half of that amount. It was computed by the political economists of the day, that Jamaica required an annual supply of 10,000 slaves to provide against the wear and tear of life; and the statement will appear by no means incredible to those who have examined the statistics of Cuban slavery at the present time. In spite of this immense traffic, ruthlessly and recklessly carried on, Jamaica was never adequately supplied with labor. The slaves were overworked to satisfy their master's lust for gain, and to this the great mortality has been mainly attributed."

There remains yet, however, the positive, though small decrease of the free population; but when we know that that population is scattered broadcast over the Island, averaging only one person to eleven acres; that no less than 50,000 rank as "small proprietors" of from two to five or six acres, living, of course, at a distance from towns; that the Government has made no provision at all for medical assistance for these people; that the educational appropriation for 55,000 children amounts (1859) to £2,950 — less than twenty-five cents per annum for each child; and that the State has turned them adrift, ignorant and helpless as slavery made them, and cared neither for their moral nor their physical welfare, we shall cease to be surprised at this, but know where to lay the blame. Medical practitioners of any kind are few in number, and to be found only in the towns; the man who works for twenty-five cents per day, cannot go ten or fifteen miles for a doctor, whose fee would swallow up a quarter's earnings; and necessarily, "the mortality among children, from want of proper attention, is frightful."

> "The people of Jamaica are not cared for," says Mr. Sewell, indignantly; "they perish miserably in country districts for want of medical aid; they are not instructed; they have no opportunities to improve themselves in agriculture or mechanics; every effort is made to check a spirit of independence, which in the African is counted a heinous crime, but in all other people is regarded as a lofty virtue, and the germ of national courage, enterprise and progress."

But yet "sugar estates are abandoned, because the blacks will not work them."

> "It will be found upon examination that the most prosperous epoch of Jamaican commerce was that embraced in the seven years immediately preceding the abolition of the slave trade. Yet it is a notorious fact, to be proved by parliamentary Blue Books, that even then over one hundred estates on the island had been abandoned for debt."
>
> "The exportation of sugar had gradually decreased from 150,000 hogsheads in 1805, to 85,000 hogsheads in 1833."
>
> "During the fifty years that preceded emancipation, it is estimated that two hundred sugar estates were abandoned."
>
> "While the slave trade was yet in operation, over one hundred properties had been deserted—deserted, too, for the same cause that compelled their desertion in later years—debt, and want of capital."

"But free labor is more costly than slave labor, and the sugar planter cannot afford to pay the price demanded." In the first place, if free labor bears too high a price for the profitable culture of sugar, a thinking man would regard this as evidence that some other branch of industry is more profitable than laboring on a sugar plantation, and resign himself to a state of things which might not be beneficial to him personally, but must be so to the laborers—who are, after all, not created for the special behoof of the capitalist, but more or less for their own enjoyment. But Mr. Sewell believes with the planters, that the sugar culture must be always the predominant interest of the Island, on which its healthy prosperity shall depend. What, then?

This: That from the date of Emancipation to this day—in all the Islands more or less, but in particular in Jamaica—the planters have arrayed themselves against the laboring class; that, holding the power in their own hands, they have sought in every way possible to keep them in ignorance, poverty and dependence; in short, have never changed from that aspect of enmity to labor, which is the natural condition of capital in a slaveholding community. If they had been wise men, equal to their great part in this drama, they would have seen their account in fostering by all means the intelligence and industrious habits of the freed men. Instead of that, they invented as a first step the oppressive system known as "tenancy at will," by which those who consented to labor for them became at once serfs, little less oppressed, than when they were slaves. Under this practice, "a laborer has a house and land allotment on an estate, for which he pays a stipulated rent; but he is under an engagement besides, as a condition of renting, to give to the estate a certain number of days' labor, at certain stipulated wages, varying from one-sixth to one-third less than the market price. The rate of wages for field labor in Barbadoes is about twenty-four cents per day; but the laborer, fettered by the system of tenancy at will, is compelled to work for his landlord at twenty cents per day. He is, therefore, virtually a slave; for if he resists the conditions of his bond, he is ejected by summary process, and loses the profit he hoped to reap on his little stock."

Is it surprising that the negro, feeling himself for the first time his own man—not unnaturally disliking plantation labor, as reminding him of his former condition ("no inducement could bring a 'colored' man to work on a sugar plantation" to this day, Mr. Sewell says,) and naturally eager to try on his liberty, should be fatally repelled from the task which these aristocrats purposely made as hateful as possible to him? In Barbadoes, where of 106,000 acres 100,000 are cultivated, where land is worth $500 per acre, and where the proportion of population to land is "nearly one and a half persons to each acre," the rascally "tenancy at will" system still grinds the negro down. In Jamaica, which has but one person to eleven acres, the negro did what the white man would have done in his place—set up for himself. Fifty thousand able-bodied men were thus driven from the plantations, and are now small proprietors; and it is a creditable fact that they worked on the plantations till they had earned money enough to buy them a piece of land. "The planters schemed to deprive the independent settlers of their means of livelihood, to destroy their market, and compel them to accept again the shilling a day and the slavery of plantation work, that the master condescendingly offered. It was fortunate for all parties that these schemes proved a total failure."

Of course, it was the best men who were thus repelled, and we are not surprised that Mr. Sewell found the state of morality among those who remain on the estates, as "tenants at will" infinitely lower than among the independent farmers and tradesmen; marriages fewer, births fewer, crimes more frequent, mortality greater, and intelligence and property less.

Sparsely populated, however, as the Island is, and with the prevalent feeling against working on plantations, among the better class of the blacks, Mr. Sewell says: "I do most unequivocally state that, after diligent inquiry, I have been unable to discover a single property abandoned for want of labor alone;" and he found in the most sparsely populated parts of the Island estates in flourishing condition, and with no lack of labor. But their owners were men with money, not men with debts.

Planters complained that they could not get men to work steadily for them, and he admits that they had cause for this, the negroes taking certain times to attend to their own property, not unnaturally preferring that to the planters'. But he found men working steadily on the roads—labor infinitely more severe than field work—in the mines, also more severe; and when he inquired of the overseer of the road, this is the explanation: "Well, you see that laborers on the road are paid regularly once a week, while laborers on the estates often have to go two and three months without their wages, and the men do not like that. Sometimes, too, they lose their pay altogether." He instances a case, where twenty men were induced to go on an estate, thirty miles off, by the promise of thirty-six cents a day, "worked three months without receiving any wages, and at the end of the time were paid off at the rate of eighteen cents a day."

> "The planters themselves admit that they can always get men to dig cane-holes—the severest plantation work. But this is a definite and specific job. The negro contracts for the payment of so much money for so many cane-holes, and if he does the work he cannot be deprived of his due, except by open dishonesty."
>
> Anxious to get at all the bearings of the subject, "I sought information from the chief commissioner of roads, who has three thousand men under constant employment, and he assured me that they worked diligently for five days in the week—going to market, after their custom, on the sixth, or devoting it to the cultivation of their own grounds. He had no complaints to make of idleness, and instead of there being a deficiency of hands, he could obtain an additional thousand at any time he choose. The men, he said, preferred breaking stones on the road to estate-labor, though the former was much the severer work of the two.
>
> "I inquired further of the superintendent of the Rio Grande copper mines, in the parish of Portland—an intelligent, practical, energetic Englishmen, who for eight years has had a large body of men under his command. He told me that, at first, the planters ridiculed his idea of getting labor; nevertheless, in all his experience, he has not known what it was to want labor. If he stood in need of five men fifteen or twenty would apply. These men worked eight hours a day, and for six days in the week—and though some of them had been in the superintendent's employ five or six years, he never had occasion to complain of their idleness. 'They work,' he said, 'like very slaves, stripping themselves to the task; they work harder and more persistently, I am convinced, than if they were forced to it.'"
>
> "All the impartial testimony that I could obtain in Jamaica summed up a crushing contradiction to the unqualified pretension of the planter that the negro would not work. And when I asked the negro himself why he preferred the toil of the mine to the comparatively easy labor of the plantation, his explanation was very simple—'Buckra don't pay.'"

"They neither saved labor nor spared ground," says Mr. Sewell of the old plantocracy, and their successors are only slowly learning better by very bitter experience:

> "The obstinate determination of the planters to pursue the old system of management—to regard their laborers as serfs in whom every spark of ambition should be quenched—has been attended, I am convinced, by the worst consequences. The aid of settlers is still steadily refused for the cultivation of the cane, except it be given in the particular way and at the particular time that the planters ask for it."
>
> "He refuses to coöperate in any way with a people who will admit no more his patriarchal authority, and will recognize no longer his right to command their services whenever he pleases, and to any disadvantage to themselves. But more than this, the labor that he can even now obtain the Jamaica planter neither economises nor takes any trouble whatever to retain. He himself aggravates and increases the scarcity of which he so bitterly complains. He practically ignores all the mechanical and agricultural improvements of the century. Except in the one particular of steam, introduced at the last hour, his mode of cultivating and manufacturing sugar is the same now as it was in the year 1800. He rides his worn-out hobbies in spite of the demonstration of scientific men that, from the present amount of land in cane-cultivation, with slight additional labor or expense, one hundred thousand instead of thirty thousand hogsheads might be annually produced."

As for the cost of free labor being greater than that of slave labor, we must refer the reader to the work itself for the elaborate and interesting calculations on which the following estimates are based. The figures speak for themselves:

Islands.	Lbs. sugar produced.	Labor force.	Av. lbs. pr laborer.	Cost of ea. laborer pr. annum.	Cost of labor pr. lb.
Cuba	577,200,000	120,000	4810	$144 30	3c.
Jamaica(s)	160,000,000	70,000	2286	100 00	4 37-100
Jamaica(f)	50,000,000	20,000	2500	50 00	2
Trinidad	65,000,000	17,000	3823	66 00	1 72-100
Barbados	68,000,000	22,000	3090	44 00	1 2-5

And, lastly, a few words as to the moral status of these people. He found them cheerful, polite to passing strangers, not greedy to be paid for trifling services, but rather refusing money for the fruits they gave him; sober even in their wildest and most noisy festivals, as, for instance, at Christmas, which is the great holiday of the year. "I do not remember having ever seen a West Indian negro drunk." And though their intellectual culture has been so criminally neglected by the government, their "desire to learn cannot be denied, with the fact in view that 200,000 out of a population of 350,000, attend the different places of worship every Sabbath day."

Moreover, the Jamaican negro has two characteristics which are acknowledged to be of the first importance in their bearings on the civilization of a people.

> "He has an invincible dislike to move his household gods. It seems a unaccountable prejudice; but throughout the whole island the people may be found clinging to the plots of ground upon which they were born and their fathers before them, and they are not vindictive. They seem to have forgotten all ancient grievances, and never to have entertained a thought of retribution. The contrast in this respect between the reign of freedom and the reign of slavery, carries its own lesson and its own warning. Twenty-five years of freedom, and not a murmur of popular discontent! Twenty-five years of slavery—I take any period—and what fears and anxieties and actual outbreaks! It cost the government $800,000 to suppress the single insurrection of 1832, during which private property to the value of $6,000,000 was destroyed."
>
> Finally, "the latest Blue Book returns give the number of male and females engaged in agriculture at 187,000—more than one half of the population of the island—tending in itself to disprove the assertion that the people are averse to the tillage of the soil; but when the farther fact appears that out of this number 50,000 men, with their families, have elevated themselves to a proprietary rank, it speaks volumes, not merely in their own favor, but in favor of general intelligence and the wholesome progress."
>
> "I think the creoles of Jamaica have disproved, by their own acts, the calumny of a hostile interest, that they do not work. The most ignorant work whenever they can get work. There are fully twenty thousand, of both sexes, who work for the estates, and who may still be regarded as a laboring class. There are probably ten thousand who work as domestics. There are three thousand at work now upon the roads, where scarcity and idleness of laborers are made no grounds of complaint. The small proprietors work on their own lands and on the estates also whenever they can. Very large numbers work as merchants, mechanics and tradesmen, and not a few of the ex-slaves of Jamaica, or their children, are members of the legislature, and fill responsible offices under Government. In the Assembly alone there are seventeen black and colored members out of a total of forty-seven. The whole people of Jamaica work; and if their work is often misdirected and wasteful, the blame does not surely rest with the unlettered classes."

Well may Mr. Sewell say, "those who are not afraid of the confession will admit that the West Indian creole has made a good fight"; and we, who have patiently scanned his figures and facts, cannot avoid the conclusion that while the negro has steadily improved, notwithstanding all his disadvantages, the planter is still little better than the besotted would-be-tyrant that slavery left him. We are strengthened in the conviction that slavery injures the white master even more fatally than it does the negro slave—that the former finds it far the most difficult to recover himself from the prostitution of his virile powers and intelligence; and that he retains the spirit of brutal monopoly, the tyrannous and licentious passions, all the evil traits which Jefferson so strongly described as the result of the slave system on the master—long after the negro has turned from those vices which slavery has inflicted upon him. It is a lesson which wise Americans, North or South, will do well to study. In all probability men are now living who will see the end of negro slavery on this continent. To those who are privileged to aid in this great deliverance, the results of West Indian Emancipation may give a stronger faith; while the errors we may now discern in the manner of that measure, will serve as a beacon to guide our own experiment to a surer, speedier, and better fulfilment.

Slavery in America.

HOW CAN IT BE ABOLISHED?

LETTER FROM HAYTI.

CAYES, HAYTI, Jan. 10, 1860.

Gentlemen:—A journal, "The Union," of which we have been editors, has received your invitation dated Boston, Nov. 2, 1860, made to the officers and representatives of the different Abolition Societies, as well as to eminent men whose names have become illustrious by their having defended the cause of freedom. This document has been republished in its columns, together with an appeal addressed to the intelligent citizens of our country.

The end which you propose is grand, it is noble; never has anything more serious or more sacred occupied the attention of the nineteenth century.

With no other merit than that of belonging to a free society, proud of the advancement of the human race, we will indulge ourselves in uniting with you in this work, in here offering you a proof of our best wishes and the tribute of our feeble intelligence.

A year in the natural order, is nothing; in the social order it is sometimes more than a century. We believe that within ten years, Slavery, that leprosy which now devours humanity, which outrages the Creator in his most beautiful work, must cease to exist; man formed in the image of God must everywhere be free.

The moments are precious! Time is passing! We must be brief!

We have approached the subject, but we have not yet replied to the question which you propose. You ask—"How can Slavery be destroyed in the United States?"

As Haytians, having constantly present in our imagination the remembrance of 1804, the dawning of our national existence, we are astonished that a Spartacus more fortunate than John Brown, has not yet arisen from the very midst of the slaves of the South, showing them the reality and its triumph. As Haytians and descendents of the martyrs of a glorious independence, we believe that the means to abolish slavery is to oppose force to force! the most legitimate war being that which man undertakes for the conquest of his divine rights. We do not dread the contest, whatever it may be, having the conviction that the right (which is on your side) cannot fail. Philanthropic Europe, and all men, (for slaveholders are not men,) cannot be insensible to the new efforts which you will make for the cause of freedom. The slaves are minors, whom we ought to hasten to emancipate, for a breath is sufficient to arouse them, for one sun is too much to shine upon those dreadful scenes of horror that disgrace the United States.

As charitable men, as economists, if we may be allowed to use the last title, misers of human blood, "knowing that each drop of blood which is shed is rather a defeat than a victory gained," whatever may philosophically have been the cause of it, we propose something nearly like the opinion "of a celebrated person[*] of this century" that the slaveholder lose one-half the value of his black brother of whom he assumes to be the proprietor, that the Government pay one-fourth of it, and that the black, this same pretended furniture, pay himself, by his labor, one-fourth and thus obtain his enfranchisement.

But first, we would definitely fix the term of slavery. It is our opinion that this is the first step to take, and that this measure should guarantee its future success.

England has indemnified her colonists; so has France also; why cannot the Great Confederate Republic, so rich in itself, do as much? We believe that it is for the interest of the Free States, already in the majority, to prove that the sentiment of humanity among American philanthropists is equal to that of any, no matter what civilized nation. Is this sentiment could be shown to be still greater in the bosom of the New World, and by its native children, it would in our opinion be all the better. It would be like a lesson which the young American society would give to the old society of Europe.

Your invitation came to us very late. Nevertheless, we ardently wish that you may have been able already to lay the foundation of the noble project which has called you together. At all events, we should be happy to learn that these lines have been agreeable to the committee, and that it has found in them something useful to its important work.

With this hope we beg the committee to rely entirely on our devotion to the cause that it has embraced for the honor of the citizens of the Northern States, and for the glory of the human race. [Signed,]

S. RAMEAU, DULIEVRE,
HALLE AIME, A. DUBREUIL,
D. PROSPER FAUR; and others.

To the John Brown Committee.

LETTER FROM WORCESTER.

WORCESTER, April, 1861.

Mr. Editor:—I have received No. 37 of the Anglo African. Its appearance and contents I am much pleased with. It aims to the guidance of the Anglo-Africans of America to elevation, prosperity, and nationality, leaving each and all to choose their own path in which to advance. You propose likewise to inform your readers of the condition and the advancement made by the people generally, a matter of importance of itself, which should send your sheet weekly to the home of every Anglo-African (who is able to pay for it in advance) in the States.

Presuming, therefore, you might wish to know if in the heart of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts we are moving onward through the tide of opposition to which our race is subject more or less, throughout the United States, Permit me to say, that in Worcester there are from one hundred and seventy-five to two hundred colored persons. Some are painters, harness-makers, shoe-makers, three or four upholsterers, job cartmen, with a due number of white-washers, paper-hangers, house-cleaners, &c. The best kept bowling saloon in the city, we claim likewise. There are several ladies who carry on the hair-dressing business, and manufacturers of hair work, one teacher of music, needle workers, &c. And by way of encouragement to some, I would say that a colored lady of Worcester, exhibited a crotchet bed-spread of her own make, a few years since, for which she received the highest premium from the committee of the Fair, and sold the same for $50,00.

We have a kind of literary society, composed of about twenty members, ladies and gentlemen, who meet weekly. The exercises consist of reading compositions, and a lecture or address, monthly, by some one of the members, who is appointed by the president of the society. Such gatherings we consider the best motive power for our advancement. They not only unite, originate ideas, create thought, stimulate to action and respect for ourselves, but teach that we should respect each other. B.

A WORTHY TRIBUTE.

The "Garnet Testimonial" came off on Monday evening of last week, pursuant to notice; and, notwithstanding the unfavorable state of the weather, was a decided success.

The exercises commenced at an early hour, and were conducted strictly in accordance with the programme. The Rev. M. W. Walker stated the object of the meeting in a few appropriate remarks; after which, Mr. John Peterson read, in a very impressive manner, Paul's farewell address to the church at Ephesus—Acts xx.: 17–38.

The Rev. J. T. Raymond, in presenting the Rev. Mr. Garnet a horn—which, by the by, was filled—made a very stirring address, and by the time Mr. G. took the horn, they were smiling all around.

Mrs. T. G. Campbell delivered a very neat address.

Messrs. J. W. Williams, H. Miller, and P. S. Porter, delivered brief and interesting addresses during the evening.

We noticed in the pulpit and on the platform, the Rt. Rev. W. H. Bishop, Rev. H. M. Wilson, Rev. Mr. Macfarlan, Rev. Samson White, Rev. George Weir, Rev. W. J. Alstyn.

The Rev. Mr. Garnet, in returning thanks for the testimonial, took occasion to pay a very handsome tribute to his wife's excellence in every womanly virtue. The reverend gentleman, in thanking his numerous friends for their regard, and adverting to attempts that had been made to [illegible], remarked that [illegible] "Immediate, Unconditional [illegible] Emancipation; [illegible] Haytian Emigration; [illegible] Negro Nationality."

Rev. Mr. Crummell, who had been absent fourteen years from the United States, regarded this testimonial as a mark of progress. The dark races had been accused of want of respect for their leaders, and therefore incapable of elevation. But this was no test, because history showed that the white races had manifested the same defect under certain circumstances. In illustration, he cited the wars of Roses in England. He said that self-respect was indispensable to elevation, that self-respect implied a respect for those who represent or lead the people. He said that self-respect was difficult here, because our deference is drawn to the ruling race. But this testimonial was an evidence of their having risen superior to those influences. After eight years missionary labor in Africa, he had returned, temporarily, to revivify the germs of civilization. While Europe, India, and China were decaying, Africa was the same now as two centuries ago. The native African is master of his soil. Colored men must be educated not to be ashamed of Africa.—We do not know our race; we are not at all comparable, in the natural elements of manhood, with the native African. He concluded by an earnest exhortation to the people, to respect their leaders, and to teach their children to respect them. As no class of men were so self-sacrificing as the ministry, we ought to sustain their hands and uphold their influence.

The singing was well executed under the conduct of Mr. Robert Hamilton, whose name alone was a sufficient guaranty for that department.

The testimonial consisted of a very neat silver tea service, a Joshua's trumpet, and a gold-headed cane, to Mr. Garnet; and a China dinner service, to Mrs. Garnet, the whole accompanied by a framed scroll, containing a list of the donors.

THE SOUTHERN SATAN.—No finer or fitter words could be found in English literature to describe the hell-drunken intellects who lead the "Dance of Death," to which the insane slave-masters are madly rushing, than the following address of the Arch-fiend to the fallen Angels, who with him occupied the Infernal Regions. We commend it to the incarnations of diabolism who compose the Dahomian Confederate Government:

. . . "but of this be sure,
To do aught good never will be our task,
But ever to do ill our sole delight,
As being the contrary to his high will
Whom we resist. If, then, his providence
Out of our evil seek to bring forth good,
Our labor must be to prevent that end,
And out of good still to find means of evil;
Which ofttimes may succeed, so as perhaps
Shall grieve him, if I fail not, and disturb
His inmost counsels from their destined aim.
Let us not slip the occasion, whether scorn
Or satiate fury yield it from our foe. . . .
And, reässembling our afflicted Powers,
Consult how we may henceforth most [illegible]
Our enemy; our own loss how repair;
How overcome this dire calamity;
What reinforcements we may gain from [illegible]
If not, what resolution from despair. . .
Farthest from him is best. Hail, horrors! [illegible]
Infernal world! And thou, profoundest [illegible]
Receive thy new possessor! one who brings
A mind not to be changed by place or time:
Here we may reign secure, and, in my choice,
To reign is worth ambition, though in hell:
Better to reign in Hell than serve in Heaven!"

RETRIBUTION.—Bennett seems likely to comprehend the character of that element which so long he has used against all humanitarian effort. The Mephistopheles of the American press, will, we hope, yet be compelled to feel the measure meted out to him, which he has so long meted out to others. For a quarter of a century, the Herald has denounced Anti-Slavery, incited mobs, and in every way sought to crush out the slave and his friends. It has incarnated in its columns, all the ribaldry, obscenity and fiendishness, with which the "sum of all villainies" has poisoned the nation. Men who are an injury to the human family have no right to life, says Lord Bacon; and we are sure that the quicker James Gordon Bennett and his confrères descend into their appropriate [illegible] the better for the moral health of the people. It is indeed a species of poetical justice, to mob the man who has so often incited the mob-spirit against the heroic, yet [illegible] champions of right. If this war [illegible]ing like prairie fire over the North, [illegible] no other result than the hanging of the Editors of the N. Y. Herald, Day-Book, and Daily News; and of those of the Boston Courier and Philadelphia [illegible], we [illegible] thank God and take courage.

—There can be no peace without justice.

---

[*] The Ordeal of Free Labor in the British West Indies. By Wm. G. Sewell. New York: Published by Harper & Brothers.

[*] M. De Lamartine.

The Anglo-African.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY,
BY G. LAWRENCE, JR.,
NO. 48 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW YORK.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Two Dollars per year, or Four Cents per copy, payable on delivery.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.

Six Cents a line for the first insertion, and Three Cents for each subsequent insertion.

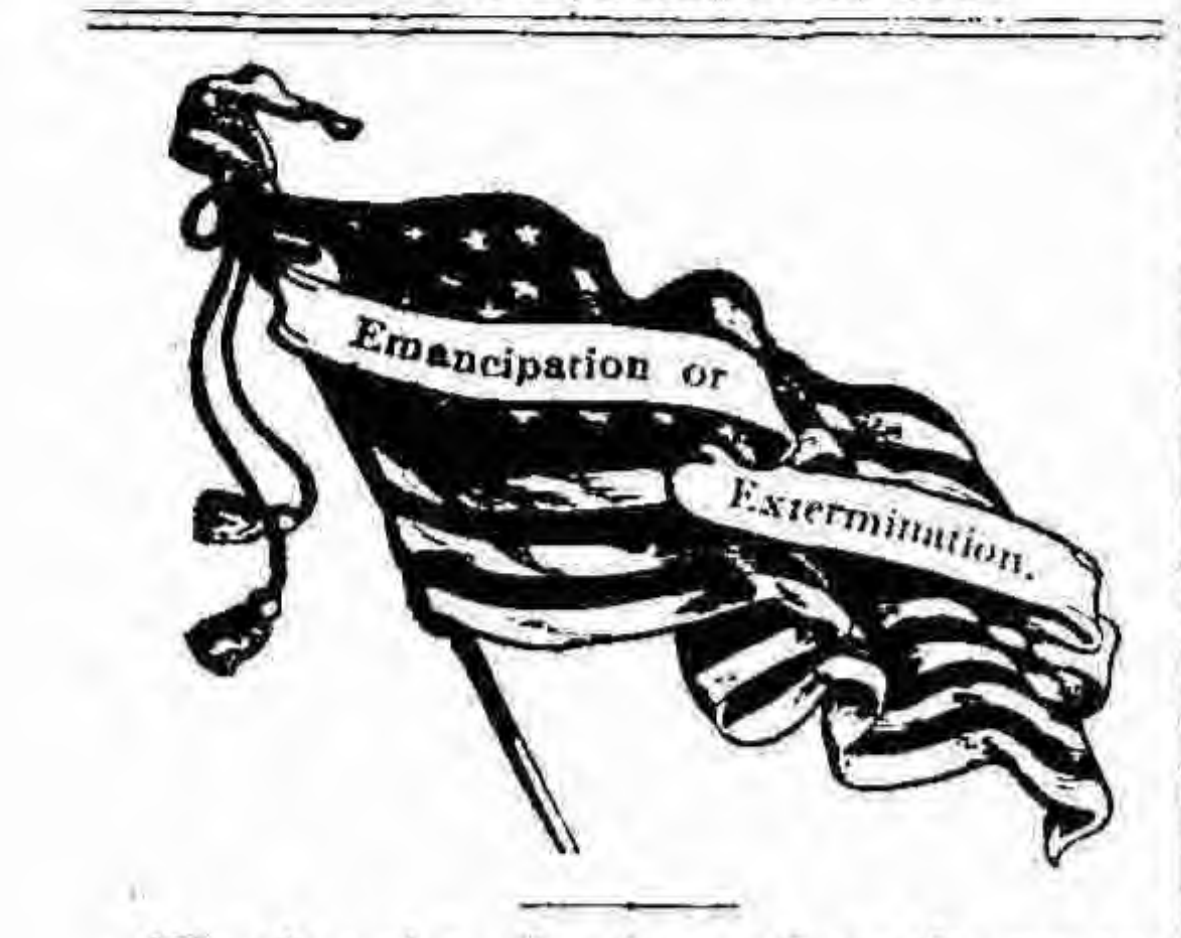
Notices of Births, Marriages, Deaths, Public Meetings, &c., inserted for Twenty-five Cents, provided they do not exceed five lines; if more than that, Five Cents for each additional line.

Advertisement for this paper must be accompanied by the cash.

Copies of this paper can be purchased of the news-dealers everywhere.

All communications for the paper must be addressed G. LAWRENCE, JR., 48 Beekman St., New York, [P. O Box, 1212.]

NEW YORK, APRIL 27, 1861.



The American flag is our flag; for we are Americans. But the usual interpretation of it, now so popular but so full of prejudice—"the Constitution and the Enforcement of the Laws"—is not ours, alas! but that of our bitterest and most malignant enemies. Withered forever be the hand, and paralyzed the arm of the colored American who lifts up either in support of the Federal Flag; until its supporters, seeing the justice of our claims and the greatness of our sufferings, they shall inscribe upon it the glorious motto under which, as we hear, our brethren this week sailed forth, to found a great Negro Nationality in the Antilles—the new watchword of the John Brown Abolitionists—terrible as the desolating breath of the volcano, but beneficent as the genial sunshine of the spring:

"Emancipation or Extermination!"

"HAVE WE A WAR POLICY?"

The free colored Americans cannot be indifferent to the progress of this struggle. Were it simply a question of internal strife, their past history proves too well their patriotic devotion, for doubt to be cast upon their willingness to defend the country which has only curses for them in return. But they have a deeper and more momentous interest in the inception and outgrowth of the war now looming over the land. The dominant class may strive, as a major portion do, to prove that it is this or that which lies at the basis of the difficulty; but we know, these liars and drivellers know—and history will indelibly prove, that it is slavery alone which has cast a thunder cloud of civil war over the land.

Not alone are free colored Americans involved in the contest, but their action in the Free States will be representative. They speak for the voiceless. They stand for the dumb and bound Black Samson. While themselves, outcast and rejected in a majority of cases, and in the few exceptions only winning a decent foothold by the veriest sufferance, yet are they the representatives of four millions of their race, bound down in the most despotic bondage. Out of this strife will come freedom, though the methods are not yet clearly apparent. Therefore must colored Americans feel the profoundest anxiety as to both the details and results. It is not to be wondered at that already many of them are enthusiastically advocating the duty of the people to prepare for the support of the Government and its war measures. The [illegible]dence of this enthusiasm will be found in [illegible] portions of our paper, and is seen on all [illegible]ds.

Yet before we take such measures, it will be well to choose our ground, survey the whole position, and see where we best can aid the slave—for this is the primary duty of every colored man, at least. A war of the sections has eventuated, brought about by the arrogance and treason of the slave power. It is not to be supposed that the millions "bowed and bound" in slavery are impassive observers of this internecine strife. Though they may have but confused notions of the state of affairs, they have a clear and decided idea of what they want—Liberty. It is only by the obtainance of this for the Southern slaves, that Northern free colored people can secure any recognition. Then the question of their war policy is simply confined to this one point—how can we so use our strength as to best aid the slave? The duty in this matter is so apparent as not to need argument. It is, therefore, on the question of policy alone, that discussion comes.

The only method yet proposed is to raise volunteer companies, and to offer them to the General Government. A word or two upon this point is sufficient. No Governor would allow colored soldiers to muster into service, and if he did, the General Government would reject such aid. It is the evident intention of the Republicans and the North generally, to make this a white man's war. It cannot be done, because, though a dark-hued man may not now be recognized by the powers that be, yet the fact remains, and will always assert itself, that it is for and against slavery, and that alone. But in view of the evident determination to disregard colored men as personalities, is it wise for them to put themselves in a position to have fresh contumely poured upon them? Therefore, our opinion is against the policy indicated by the movements in this city, Boston, and elsewhere, to organize volunteer companies, to be offered to the Government.

But we have a very positive duty, from which a palpable policy would naturally follow. Our duty, we again repeat, is to aid in making the slave free. Our policy will be dictated by our object. It certainly is not to fight for the Government. Let us, however, organize for military purposes, drill efficiently, procure arms, and hold ourselves as Minute Men, to respond when the slave calls. This time will come speedily enough. The expected results of the present state of affairs may be retarded by compromise or temporizing, and then those who feel a desire to aid the bond, must strike such a blow as will render peace impossible, until justice is done. Don't let us throw away our strength, waste ourselves in show, hold public meetings, and make speeches for Buncombe. No one wants to spread himself out thin for the purpose of showing his devotion to a Government which rejects him. Let us concentrate—we are none too strong. We need all our energy, our time, our money, our courage, to determine that this golden moment shall not pass by without a manly effort to reap a ripe harvest. We must organize, but let it be for work, and let the preliminaries be quietly conducted and efficiently carried forward. For such a work we believe means can be obtained.

This we say, for the benefit of the large majority who desire to aid effectually their brethren in bonds. For those who do not or cannot take up arms, there is work to do. For the large population who are looking to emigration as a means of amelioration, no better opportunity will present itself, to very actively aid in the work of hastening the jubilee of freedom.

The Cotton States will of a certainty be closely blockaded—Cotton will be King no longer. Yet the mills of England will need a supply. Her immense capital will be freely used to create such a supply. Inviting fields of labor are at our very doors—Hayti, the West Indies, Central America, all ask labor at our hands. Those who will not or cannot give back bullets to the South, can from Hayti overwhelm her with cotton bales.

This is then briefly our war policy. To let the Government take care of itself, and give our labors for the slave, and the slave alone.

HOW WE STAND!

Since our last issue, the "irrepressible conflict" has been pushed forward with startling rapidity. The Northern answer is hearty to the President's proclamation calling for seventy-five thousand volunteers, and drafting them proportionally to the number of enrolled militia from the States still in the Union. The Border Slave States respond by a refusal. Virginia, "mother of States" and slave-breeders, has seceded. Kentucky refuses and preserves an armed neutrality! Delaware has shown symptoms of treachery. Missouri through its Governor throws back a defiance, and in the Border Counties among the old Kansas ruffians, open secession has been proclaimed. The pirate flag has been hoisted in all those counties, and the United States Arsenal at Liberty, has been seized. So much for "Pukedom." Montgomery and the Kansas boys will take care of her hereafter. Tennessee responds by raising volunteers for the Confederate brigand army. North Carolina by ordering the seizure of the Federal forts, &c., in the State. Maryland nominally remains in the Union, but is really obstructing the passage of the State contingents.

The Northern States respond enthusiastically. Pennsylvania and Massachusetts were the first in the field. New York raises 30,000; Pennsylvania offers 100,000; Rhode Island responds to George N. Sanders by sending 1,000 men commanded by the Governor.

The Mass. Sixth Regiment passing through Baltimore on the 18th, were attacked in the streets by the secessionists. Three of the soldiers were killed, and eight wounded. Of the mob, eleven were killed and a number wounded. The Regiment arrived at Washington. All railroad communication has ceased between Baltimore, Washington and Philadelphia, and the telegraph beyond Baltimore is interrupted, probably by order of the Government. The remainder of the Massachusetts contingent has arrived at Forts Munroe and McHenry. Brigadier General Butler commanding, has head-quarters at Annapolis Junction on the Baltimore and Washington Railroad, supported at Annapolis by the New York Seventh. Other regiments are coming up. The mob, aided by the State authorities, is in possession of Baltimore and early demanded the surrender of Fort McHenry. The track has been torn up and several bridges destroyed on the roads leading from Baltimore.

Harper's Ferry Arsenal, was at the commencement of hostilities, in possession of a body of U. S. Infantry, forty in number, under command of Lieut. Jones. The Arsenal contained fifteen thousand stand of arms and a large quantity of ammunition, &c. The secession Virginia volunteers, organized under the Texas thief, McCullough, for the seizure of Washington, numbered some 16,000 men. The Harper's Ferry Arsenal, it was calculated, would furnish arms. Norfolk Harbor was to be obstructed, Fort Munroe to be assaulted, the Ferry seized, the volunteers were to be armed there, and then were to be precipitated upon Washington. Tuesday night 2500 men made an attack on Harper's Ferry. Lieut. Jones set fire to the buildings, and in the face of his foes, retreated across the Potomac, losing three men by the fire of the enemy, making a forced march of thirty miles across the mountains and arriving in Chambersburg, Pa., by morning. In all probability this brilliant movement has saved Washington.

The Federal Capital has now about 5,000 men encamped within it. The heights on the Virginia shore of the Potomac are strongly guarded, as are also the approaches to the same. A body of 5,000 Pennsylvanian troops were the first to arrive in Washington. Large bodies, both of regulars and volunteers, are approaching by way of the West, via Chambersburg, Pa. The citizens of the latter place find their willingness to be the bloodhounds of Virginia, during the John Brown conflict, as not at all likely to save them from invasion by that same nest of pirates.

All news from South of the District is of course completely stopped by Jeff. Davis. What they are, or are not doing is unknown.

It is probable that Washington has been strengthened sufficiently as to be able to resist all the force that can at present be brought to bear. Washington is admirably laid out to resist an attacking army unprovided with artillery, when a sufficient resisting force is in possession. Unless the Government are able to hold the surrounding heights, it can be easily shelled by the beleagurers. It is claimed that the feint of reinforcing Fort Sumter, which compelled the Confederates to open the war sooner than they intended, has saved Washington, by arousing the North, compelling Virginia to secede before she was quite ready, thrown in a sufficient force to protect Washington from sudden surprise, and hurried on reinforcements, forcing the traitors to fight in Maryland, instead of the District. Had Gen. Davis been enabled to have any portion of his seige trains in the neighborhood of Washington, instead of its being at Charleston and Pensacola, he would have been able to have dislodged the Government forces.

In all probability the first battle will be fought in or near Baltimore, and Maryland made the scene of a bloody resistance to the passage of the U. S. forces.

Thus stands the contest at the date of this writing, (Monday.)

P. S. As we go to press, the aspect of affairs have not materially changed, except to become intensified. U. S. Commodore Pendergast, acting under the orders of the Government, has destroyed the Norfolk Navy Yard with all the buildings and materials. He also scuttled the following vessels—line of battle ships: Pennsylvania, Columbus, New York, and Delaware; frigates Merrimac and Potomac; sloops Germantown and Plymouth, and brig Dolphin. The Cumberland, (liner) was towed out. Baltimore is still in the hands of the secessionists. Camps are established at Havre de Grace and Annapolis, Md., so as to keep open the communication between Philadelphia and Washington, via the Delaware Sound, Chesapeake Bay, and Annapolis. Constant skirmishing has taken place. Camps are also established in the Pennsylvania and Maryland borders. Davis is reported at Richmond, Va. 14,000 troops are now said to be in Washington. The heights around are in possession of the U. S. regular troops. Communication is suspended between the North and Washington, except such as comes by Government couriers. A decisive blow may be expected any moment.

NATIONAL HYPNOTISM.

Hypnotism, or the art of producing insensibility by the action of a glittering object on the visual organs, is become all the rage in the French hospitals. Under its influence patients undergo the most painful operations in utter unconsciousness. It seems to us that "ye almightie dollar" has produced the same effect upon the North, for although its lower extremities have rotted off, it appears to be unconscious of the fact, and still talks on about the Union. "Grim visaged war" is upon us, with all its pomp and circumstance, infecting all classes and both sexes, with its death-dealing propensities. Its most pronounced symptoms are, a mania for red, white and blue, and frantic demonstrations over the Flag of our Union.

Mingling, on Sunday last, in the dense crowds that thronged our streets and surged around the departing soldiery, rending the air with deafening cheers and shouts, we heard no voice raised for Liberty—the burden of their cry was Union. We find, too, the N. Y. Tribune attempting to prolong the national insensibility, and foster its delusion, by such remarks as these:

> "The War of Independence was made to assert the right of the people to establish a Republican Constitution, and to form a Union and a Government. The present war is waged to maintain that Constitution, that Union, and the Government, against a body of conspirators and madmen, who would overthrow it."

Only this, and nothing more. It might have added, with equal force, and to secure the rendition of fugitive slaves. The War of Independence was made to assert the rights of man; the Constitution, the Government, and the Union, were instituted to preserve those rights. But the Union, so sadly perverted from the intention of its framers, is dead, Laus Deo! and we await the resurrection of Freedom from its tomb, to re-baptize the nation with her sacred fire, and inaugurate the reign of equal and exact justice to all men.

We have no fear now for Freedom; we feel confident that she will take "no step backward." On the contrary, we believe that her advance will far exceed the thought or present wish, of many who are loudest in her advocacy. Public opinion, purified by the fiery ordeal through which the nation is about to pass, will rightly appreciate the cause of its political disquiet, and apply the remedy. It will learn that the black man is not the disturbing element in the body politic, but the abnormal condition to which the violation of a fundamental law consigns him. It must be that the key to the solution of the present difficulties, is the abolition of slavery; not as an act of retaliation on the master, but as a measure of justice to the slave—the sure and permanent basis of "a more perfect Union."

RECOGNITION OF HAYTI.

BOSTON, Mass., April 20, 1861.

To the Editor of the Anglo-African:

SIR—England, France, Spain, Sweden, Norway, Russia, Prussia, Denmark, Austria, the Hanse Towns, the Court of Rome, and Sardinia, have all recognized the National Independence of Hayti.

Hayti has political and commercial treaties with England, France and Rome.

Yours very Respectfully, A. TATE,
Captaine de la Garde de Son Excellence le Président d'Haiti.

—The above note from a Haytian gentleman, in the service of the Government of Hayti, answers numerous letters that have been recently addressed to us—among them our able Philadelphian correspondent, "Banneker."

The following telegraphic despatch will show that our very Christian country has not yet recognized Hayti; but that the practical Abolitionists are determined that Uncle Sam shall do it. We presume that it will be done, if energetic measures are taken—as a tub to the Anti-Slavery whale in the Republican ocean:

WASHINGTON, Friday, April 12, 1861.—Senator Sumner called on Secretary Seward to-day, with Mr. Redpath, Agent of the Government of Hayti, and made known the passage of the resolution of the Legislature of Massachusetts, instructing its Senators and Representatives to use their influence to obtain the recognition of Haytian Independence. Senator Sumner stated that this resolution was adopted on the petition of all the merchants of Boston having trade with Hayti, and added his own personal desires to those thus expressed by the Legislature. He said also that Governor Andrew warmly approved of this policy. It was also suggested that such a recognition was calculated to have a good effect in counteracting the reported Spanish movement against Dominica. The conference lasted some time.

THE SLAVE TRADE.

One of the benefits likely to result from Mr. Lincoln's Administration, its war policy, and undoubted command of the high seas, is the annihilation of the African Slave Trade. This infamous traffic would have long since almost ceased, but for the connivance of past Federal authorities.

Cuba is the only country which buys slaves, and the carrying trade between Africa and Cuba, is done almost entirely in American vessels, built, fitted, frequently commanded, and not unfrequently owned in the United States.

Spain is publicly committed to spare no pains to stop the barbarous traffic in human flesh. Her statesmen declare themselves horrified at its continuance. Yet it is fast increasing. In 1848, 17,000 slaves were imported into Cuba. In 1859, the number was 30,000, and last year it was between 40,000 and 50,000.

The American flag is the only one which now covers a slaver. Spanish slavers are lawful prizes to any nation. An American vessel, though laden with slaves, has only to batten her hatches, show her papers and colors, and she cannot be searched. In 1860, not less than 90 American vessels were known to have been sold in Havana, or fitted out in New York.

It is certain that all this will be ended, as the strictest watch will be necessary to keep suspicious vessels in our Northern ports from getting to sea.

EMIGRATION TO HAYTI.—On Tuesday evening, the fine British bark, Madeira, of Barbadoes, Captain Morton, cast anchor from Comey's Wharf, in this city, with nearly sixty emigrants for Hayti. She sails for New Haven, where she will take in the New England Colony, of which Rev. J. Theodore Holly is the leader. She carried at her topmast the British and Haytian flags. The Haytian flag was unfurled by Mr. Thomas, a colored citizen of Massachusetts. For the first time in our history, the banner of a Negro Nation has been seen flying in our harbor! The time is rapidly approaching, we doubt not, when it will be seen every week. Speed the day!

The Madeira carried another banner—the private flag of the charterer, Mr. Redpath, and the class of Abolitionists to which he belongs. It was the American flag with the motto—Emancipation or Extermination!

So great an amount of baggage was brought by each emigrant, that the Haytian General Agent was obliged to charter the General Veazie, of 150 tons, to carry it. The Gen. Veazie will sail on Wednesday evening, and go to New Haven, as tender to the Madeira.

Boston, April 23, 1861. S.

OYSTER SAUCINESS.—An Eastern caterer, whose tedious effusions we saw fit to stop, suggests that the name of our paper be changed. He does not like the name of Anglo-African. He likes Anglo-Saxon better. This is the true esprit de restaraunt—which is always either fawning or impertinent. Some people must either make mouths at white men or kiss their feet; we prefer to do neither, but, taking no thought of color, work zealously and cordially with every one who has the welfare of freedom and of our race in view.

——Communications addressed to this paper must be accompanied by the writer's signature, as no notice will be taken of anonymous letters.

ATTACK ON THE CONSTITUTION.

MEETING OF COLORED MEN.—A notice was issued that a meeting of colored men would be held yesterday evening at 178 Prince Street, for the purpose of tendering their services to the Government during the present war; but was prevented from being held, by Captain Helms, of the Eighth Ward detachment of the Metropolitan police. Capt. Helms assured the parties that he acted under the direction of Superintendent Kennedy, who stated that the Superintendent sympathized with the movement, but dreaded that it might lead to some unpleasantness in New York, as well as exasperate the South. The call was signed by Captain Johnson, Robert S. Williams and N. W. Walker.

The meeting was held subsequently, when above five hundred men tendered their services to the Government.

It is a gross perversion of the term to call that state of society free, in which the exercise of constitutional rights depends upon the caprice of some municipal Dogberry, or where personal liberties are wholly at the mercy of a policeman's baton. The Constitution of the United States, the supreme law of the land, guarantees to the people the right peacably to assemble for the purpose of expressing their sentiments. It is the duty of the authorities, both State and Municipal, to protect the people in the exercise of their rights, not to molest them. And yet, when the colored citizens of the city of New York convened a meeting on the evening of the 22d inst., and hired a hall for the purpose of expressing their sympathy with the Government in this crisis, the Captain of the 8th Precinct, acting under the orders of his superior officer, arbitrarily suppressed the meeting; brutally drove us from the door of the hall we had hired; and trampled upon one of the most sacred rights which the Constitution and Union were formed to secure. Putting aside its most serious aspect, it was a piece of meanness of which every white man ought to be heartily ashamed, and one, of which, we are proud to say, no black man would have been guilty.

If we are prevented from defending Constitutional Liberty, no hand of ours shall ever be raised to assail it. Amid all our discouragements we still retain trust in God, and faith in the immutable principles of Eternal Justice.

WEST INDIA EMANCIPATION NO FAILURE. Read the long article on our first page on Emancipation in the West Indies. The negro who consents to argue that he is not inferior in the capacity of self-government to any other race, as far as he personally is concerned, nullifies his logic by doing so. Let a negro tell an Englishman or American that their nations are inferior to the African, and they won't argue—they will only laugh. Shall a colored man, then, argue that he is not inferior? Let self-respect forbid!

All the theoretical talk in the world cannot settle these points. Facts alone will do so. Let every colored man and abolitionist therefore, store his mind with facts about our race, about freedom, about the effects of slavery, and then only will his talk tell. We intend to publish a series of articles on this question. Let us again advise our readers carefully to study them.

TO OUR FRIENDS.—Our circulation is steadily increasing, and we have taken measures to still further augment the value of our journal. We are taking measures to procure regular correspondence from Washington and all the leading cities of the United States and Canadas where our people are; we shall have frequent letters from Hayti, Nassau, and the other West Indies to which our people will chiefly migrate; and by occasional extras and the use of smaller type, will speedily and greatly extend the sphere of our vision and our news. As our paper will be exclusively devoted to the interests of the colored races, wherever found, we hope that all our friends, and expressly our own people will exert themselves to "promote our general welfare" by sending in subscriptions as fast as volunteers are dispatched to old Abe. Like a New York omnibus, our subscription list has always room for more.

TESTIMONIAL.—In addition to the splendid testimonial presented on last Monday evening, Mrs. Julia W. Garnet has received a silver cup, chased with gold, from Mr. and Mrs. Holmes; and the Rev. Mr. Garnet a silver cup from a lady and gentleman.

On Thursday evening the 18th inst., a party of young ladies and gentlemen numbering about thirty, took advantage of the temporary absence of Mr. Garnet and his better half, to enter his house and make themselves perfectly at home. On their return the worthy host and his wife were surprised to find themselves guests under their own roof; the party aforesaid having prepared a most sumptuous entertainment for them. We learn that the party enjoyed themselves until "the wee sma' hours ayont the twal," the gentlemen going home with the ladies in the morning.

We are requested to state that the subscription books will be kept open till the 4th of May to receive any further contribution that any one feels disposed to make as a testimonial to Mr. Garnet; and that an additional scroll is being prepared for the additional names. Subscriptions may be left with Mr. Titus, Thompson Street, near 4th., or Mr. M. W. Walker, 52 Laurens Street.

HISTORY OF THE REVOLUTIONS OF HAYTI.—Again the press of matter obliges us to postpone our instalment of the History of the Revolutions of Hayti. It will all be published during the present year. Keep your files, so as to preserve it.

——We received a call for colored men to volunteer in the present crisis, signed by Dr. Pennington and others. As the meeting has been held, and a notice appears in our columns, its insertion is unnecessary.

AID FOR THE SOUTH.—Block-ade.

VIRGINIA'S PUNISHMENT.

Thank God, the hour of retribution has come. Virginia! Mother of Harlots—Plunderer of Cradles—she who has grown fat, by selling her own children in the slave shambles:—Virginia! Butcher—Pirate—Kidnapper—Slavocrat—the murderer of John Brown and his gallant band,—at last will meet her just doom. The red glare of the torch, the gleam of the flashing steel, the ringing crack of the rifle, the sulphurous smoke of the booming cannon, all shall announce to her lecherous heart the terrible blaze of an aroused Democracy. Insolent in her iniquity, Virginia planned to enslave seventy thousand more of the wretched ones, and now seeks to despoil the national capitol and destroy the nation. The cannon shot from Fort Sumter sends sombre echoes throughout her borders. The red flame of the burning arsenal at Harper's Ferry reflects back the light from Charleston harbor. The Alleghanies shall glow in the glare, and fling back the echo from summit to summit, while every ravine and glen prolongs the wild refrain. It will go on swelling in its progress, until the enslaved arise and make of their oppressors one grand hecatomb. Virginia shall drink full of the cup of woes. Aye, down to the dregs and to the last drop therein. It will be the first battle ground of the troops of the Union, while the majestic Alleghanies shall become bristling fortresses for the aroused Helots and their friends—those who have the memories of Harper's Ferry, of the gloomy prison and the scaffold at Charlestown to stir them to puissant deeds for Freedom. God speed the punishment.

MONSIEUR TONSON COME AGAIN!—Mr. Geo. T. Downing is a gentleman for whom we have heretofore entertained as much respect as his abilities would command, and have always regretted that unfortunate propensity of his to open his mouth. Of a fine presence and pleasing manners, he might pass for a wise man, if he would only be silent. But alas! he must be babbling, and every time he opens his mouth, as the Irishman remarked, he puts his foot in it. Pitying his infirmity, and lamenting his propensity to impertinent interference with matters beyond his concern, we pass over his characteristic and inconsequential attempt to disparage us, to express our surprise that so respectable a journal as the Liberator should lend its columns to so lamentable a proof of mental imbecility, on the part of a race whom it has labored to elevate. We apologize to our readers for intruding so insignificant a subject on their notice, but as we have never troubled ourselves about the COLOR of Mr. Geo. T. Downing's employers, not concerned ourselves about the duties they may call upon him to perform, it occurred to us, that unless he is a greater fool than we take him to be, he will, in future, follow our example.

Geo. L[illegible], Jr.
New York, April 23, 1861.

——The practical Abolitionists have often been denounced in consequence of voting for Republican candidates in preference to maintaining a "solemn protest" against the pro-slavery features of the Constitution by refraining from all political action. See how the wisdom of their policy looms up now! If Lincoln had not been elected, the slave trade would now be a flourishing commerce; the Crittenden propositions would have been incorporated with the Constitution, and all colored men would have been everywhere disfranchised; slavery would have been extended into all the Territories, and the abolition of it postponed for a century. The day for agitation is past; it has done a good and grand work, but its mission is fulfilled; henceforth, we need leaders of strictly practical intellects with clear and large and comprehensive programmes of action.

——"One man in the right, is a majority." Frederick Douglas crystalized the heroism that animates practical Abolitionists, in those ringing words. They were forcibly brought to our minds, by hearing a prominent orator say, that, being in the minority, it was no use trying, for colored men to attempt stemming the current. We wonder if he thought that, when, but a few years since, as a slave, he fled the land of bondage. Five hundred black men, divided into guerilla bands, and working their way through the mountain Ranges of Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Arkansas, and the swamps of the Atlantic Coast, can do more to destroy slavery, than five-thousand Regulars. It only wants men determined to do or die. White men had this spirit at Harper's Ferry, on that memorable October morn. We want Nat. Turner—not speeches; Denmark Vesey—not resolutions; John Brown—not meetings.

——We learn that the ministerial labors of the Rev. J. G. Carter (Cong.) officiating at East Hampton and Port Patrick, have been blessed by the conversion of sixty souls, forty-eight of whom have united with the Society. Communications intended for him will have to be addressed to East Hampton, Suffolk Co., N. Y.

——A prior engagement was nearly fulfilled when Roger A. Pryor, of Va., at the surrender of Fort Sumter, drank a tumbler of Iodide of Potash, thinking it to be brandy. Old Nick has had a mortgage on Roger for some time past.

ANOTHER EXTRA.—We publish this week another Extra—containing Wendell Phillips' great speech on the Crisis. We have no space for comments; only time enough to say—thank God for His great gift to us of this pure and resplendent soul.

Home Correspondence.

AGRICULTURAL BUREAU.

NEW JERSEY, April 16, 1861.

To the Editor of the Anglo-African:

SIR,—I took occasion, now some several months since, or a year [illegible], to communicate information in [illegible] chances and prospects in this vicinity, which I thought might be eminently serviceable to many who wish to avail themselves of such. It was in reference to cheap and accessible lands.

I further volunteered to impart additional information if required, through the Anglo-African, or to individuals, with notes on the subject of agriculture and country life. More than once I called the attention of the Anglo to the subject; but it seems to have been at that time beyond the limits of its investigations. But since the new administration announces a more comprehensive and a more extensive range, in the consideration of practical matters of general interest, I may yet hope to make this paper the medium of imparting some facts that may yet be useful, although the lands in question have risen considerably in price, and the chances proportionally diminished. These lands are in the county of Monmouth, about two hours' travel, by steamboat and railroad, from New York, lying directly on either side of the said road, on different parts, running from Port Monmouth to Cape May. The lands which may be bought commence about eight miles from Red Bank, and about the same distance from Long Branch, to which place a branch of the road runs.

At the time I wrote, a year ago, they could have been bought for from $5 to $15, [illegible] now they are worth from $10 to $50. There was a large tract held by one individual, who at that time desired to sell it all to colored people, and offered it on reasonable terms. He will yet sell to them, but the price has risen greatly, yet it is cheap to what it will be a year or two hence. There was room here for a large portion of the surplus colored population of the cities of New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore; they who neither will, nor can, emigrate any further, or at least, neither to Africa or Hayti.

I, sir, am an emigrationist, as I have long been. But still, I believe in doing wherever I am, whatever my hands find to do. It is not surprising that person seeking homes out of cities should accept the only invitations that are offered—abroad.

While upon this subject of getting homes in the country we should be thoroughly posted while there are so many who desire it, and would be so much better by it. The Irish, Dutch, Italians, and Hungarians, ransack every State and County from Maine to Texas, in pursuit of cheap lands and situations of all kinds, by the agency of offices and individuals.

In fact, I know of no object more commendable that could engage the labors of a society among us, than this very matter of getting homes in the country and collecting and imparting agricultural information, or in other words, an Agricultural Bureau, to get homes within the limits of the States, as well as beyond them. One would naturally think that the opponents of emigration would see to this matter. Although an emigrationist myself, still I honestly urge it, seeing as I do, the necessity for it. I would most respectfully commend its consideration to Mr. Smith, "of the manor born," or some one of those elaborate theorists.

In proposing this however, my claims to chiefship are not to be lost sight of. I have no idea of working and scheming, plowing and sowing, all my life, and just as the crop begins to ripen, have a fellow walk in with his machine and clip off all the ripest and best heads. Not I. I protest, Mr. Editor, that I am serious and mean nothing personal.

Mr. Smith, of Saddle Rock, let us hear from you on this subject of an Agricultural Bureau. I am "in for it."

There are in all our large cities hundreds wanting homes in the country, and to be relieved of heavy rents. And almost everywhere among our people is farming most miserably managed. Let not this important interest be any longer neglected. J. N. S.

MEETING IN BOSTON:—A meeting was held on Tuesday evening at the Baptist Church in Southac Street, to consider the propriety of forming a colored American regiment and offering it to the Government. It was largely attended, the audience being much excited and divided on the question. A set of resolutions in favor of this course were introduced. They were strenuously defended by Robert Morris, G. T. Downing, Lewis Hayden, and Rev. J. Sella Martin. Wm. Wells Brown opposed them earnestly but unsuccessfully. A full report will appear in our next issue.

LIBERTY OR DEATH.—A runaway negro secreted himself in Dr. Norwood's stables, Henderson County, Kentucky, on Monday. The doctor, called to visit a patient, went for his horse. On seeing the negro, he demanded his surrender, when the fugitive shot him. The doctor called for his gun, and on Mrs. Norwood bringing it, the negro threatened her with death if she advanced, and she retreated to the house. The doctor died soon after, and the negro escaped; but a hundred citizens went out in search of him, and he is not expected long to avoid capture.

—'Tis a pity that the doctor did not remember the injunction: "They that are whole need not a physician."

THE CLIMAX OF INSULT.—It is reported that the Secessionists of Richmond placed a negro astride of the statue of Washington!

—The above, italics included, is from a Boston Republican paper. We don't see any insult in it. Both Washington and the slave were driven by destiny toward the same goal—Universal Liberty.

——The North, having been bitterly humiliated by the capture of Fort Sumter, is determined to make the South "see stars." As a preparatory penance, she has rigorously flag-ellated herself, and is completely covered with the stripes.

DR. J. B. SMITH, of Boston is on a tour to the States of Maine and New Hampshire, and will visit such places in those States where colored persons reside, in behalf of the Haytian Bureau of Emigration.

Foreign Correspondence.

LETTER FROM NASSAU.

Nassau, New Providence, W. I.
March 19th., 1861.

Mr. Editor :—A few years ago this verdant little isle was almost entirely unknown to the busy portion of mankind, partly on account of its extreme smallness and isolated position, it being but a mere speak on the earth's surface. But now universal advancement has extended its benign effects, penetrated these rocky, yet verdurous, shores, and awakened the somnolent inhabitants from the lethargy in which indolence had so long kept them.

The grand incentive is immediate intercourse with America, but lately enjoyed through the medium of steam navigation, an event from which may be traced a gradual but satisfactory development of the natural resources and productions of the Bahamas, and an event to be chronicled in their annals as one from which to date their prosperity.

The progress of two years is highly gratifying to the observer, and amazing to the illiterate nature.

Theorists were not wrong in their speculations when they alleged that an influx of foreigners was the desideratum to elevate Bahama to the rank of her sister colonies, and class her as one of the thriving dependencies of the British crown.

But there is a diversity of opinion as regards the real benefit to accrue therefrom to Bahamians socially. Some regard it with feelings akin to regret; for in proportion to the progression they are sensible of the departure of those good old English times and customs so dearly associated with pleasant memories. They dislike the peculiarities of sentiments of Americans, and Americans they know will be the principal innovators.

In the aggregate, connection with America is regarded as of infinite importance to the colony politically, and as such its succeeding evidences are hailed with delight, but its ameliorating effects upon society are very much doubted.

Hotels have sprung up as if by magic in all quarters of the island, and an enormous sum of money is now being expended by the Government in erecting one. Its site is on a beautiful eminence overlooking the subjacent harbor and offing, and when finished its magnificence will attract general admiration. This edifice is being constructed by Messrs. Howell & Stuart of New York, who have contracted to erect the same for the sum of sixty thousand dollars, untrammelled by custom dues, &c.

Of course the native contractors are indignant at the Government's proceeding in patronising foreigners to monopolize the trade that belongs exclusively to themselves; especially as such a sum as the entire cost of the Hotel, will leave no little vacuum in the Public Treasury coffers. But Government, with that admirable prescience that characterises many other transactions, resolved to employ foreign artificers. Whether their design in so doing was to give the Hotel an air a la mode Americaine, which would on that account be more attractive to American visitors, or whether it was thought a more expeditious mode of proceeding, is yet a matter of conjecture. Certain is it, however, that if the latter were the Government's design the result will prove more than gratifying, for a hastier built structure it will never be Nassau's misfortune to contain.

In addition to this Fifth Avenue, Nassau contains the following well filled hotels, viz., Royal Victoria, Karnak, Clifton, United Arms, Hudson's, Johnson's, Farrindon, and Matanzas, besides numerous private boarding houses.

Among recent importations of novelties from America is an omnibus, which, en passant, I must say something about. It is a fine large-sized vehicle, capable of containing about twenty persons, filled up similar to those on Broadway, and as I had the pleasure of being one of the party who tested its conveying qualities, I may safely add that an easier running, or more comfortable vehicle, it is impossible to conceive, as it rolls almost noiselessly along the white and even macadamized streets of Nassau. The children, who saw its chief attraction in a representation of one of Christy's minstrels that adorns its steps, greeted its first appearance with all the warmth of excited simplicity, and wherever it stopped, an increasing crowd of the white-toothed cannaile was the inevitable result.

We had another slave wreck upon our shores, but, owing to its proximity to the island of Cuba, the slavers succeeded in landing their cargo in that place, ere our Government had any intelligence of it.

The rescued Africans who were liberated in our island in August last, and prudently apprenticed to the most eligible masters, are improving in general intelligence, and fast becoming initiated in the mysteries of civilization,

A few weeks ago a Gift Book store opened for business in our town, under the grandioquent appellation of "The Great Southern Gift Book Establishment," and caused some excitement amongst the verdant islanders. Their eyes being dazzled by the brilliant lusture of the gifts, it scarcely matters whether the contents of the books are Hebrew or Chinese hieroglyhics, nor can they in their simple-mindedness conceive how the munificent proprietors of these miniature el doradoes can afford to circulate literature on such liberal terms.

Amusement-seekers and subjects of ennui are delighted at she arrival of L. B. Lent's New York Circus in our town, from Porto Rico, consisting of a large equestrian troupe. According to their advertisement, the performance includes "every imaginable variety of scene and trick riding, gymnastic feats, acrobatic exploits, comic scenes, dancing, singing, and tricks by trained horses and ponies." In addition to this renowned antidote for ennui, we have the presence of the family of the Virginia Liliputians, consisting of Major Hiram Walters, fifty years old, thirty-eight inches in height and fifty-three pounds in weight; Miss Roxana Walters, forty-four years old, thirty inches in height, and twenty-eight pounds in weight; Miss Kate Walters, forty-one years of age, thirty-four inches in height, and thirty-seven pounds in weight; and Miss Nancy Walters, twenty-two years of age, and five feet seven inches in height.

We are in expectation of a visit from His Royal Highness Prince Alfred, who is now at Jamaica, where he has been cordially received by the enthusiastic people Though we are sorry that our island was not honored by the presence of the Prince of Wales, after his visit to America, yet we are quite anxious to welcome Prince Alfred to our shores, and our Government intend making such preparations as will ensure a reception worthy of the son of our august sovereign. And I am sure that our populace, with proverbial loyalty, will not allow so distinguished a personage to quit our shores without being duly impressed with their demonstrations of the appreciable honor. I for one, am determined to express my appreciation of the honor (apropos, I am advised to keep my loyalty within the limits of prudence) in a manner characteristic of A Loyal West Indian.

COLORED AMERICANS AND WAR.

We publish, below, a series of extracts from different journals, which should be carefully pondered by our people. We shall make our own comments on them elsewhere; but, as we do not wish to prejudice any mind, we would like our readers to peruse these clippings first, and make his own deductions.

—New Orleans should be occupied, and a strong chain of posts established along the Mississippi. As it would be a great sacrifice of life to occupy these positions with white men during the summer months, it may become necessary to enlist a certain number of black regiments for this purpose. and this enlistment under the circumstances, will be perfectly justifiable, and a fair retaliation for the proposed piratical expeditions of the Confederates. There are great numbers of free blacks at the North desirous of responding to the call, and we hope now they will be enlisted, organized, and prepared to occupy the yellow fever posts in the enemy's country, during the summer months.—Boston Traveller, April 18th.

—If we are victorious, as we shall be occasionally, what shall we do with the prisoners? Shall we let them run, or employ a large force to keep them in safety, to be returned, or paid for at the close of the war? or shall we exchange them for Northern prisoners? Then how shall we prevent a servile war, probably incited by the successors of the Walkers and John Browns. This black anomaly, with its two elements, person and property—shall we refer the case to ethics or political economy? Then the Slave States, themselves, if conquered, would they return to the Union under any conditions acceptable to the North? In the meantime, what is to be the industrial condition of the parties, and their finances? Some foreign nation may possibly be drawn into the contest, which would end in subdivisions of these States, such as we do not now dream of. Mexico would be a paradise combined to this divided people, for their ignorance would be submissive and pacific, much more tractable than ou turbulent knowledge and ambition, where every man aspires to high office. I do not wish to live to see what may happen if we have a protracted war; I would prefer to see the Slave States in the peaceable enjoyment of all the blessings of slavery. What would be their condition when the slave population becomes double that of the freemen, I will not venture to inquire; but certainly no Government short of an iron despotism will be able to control such a people."—Correspondent Boston Courier, April 18th.

—"The letters of marque and reprisal is a war upon private property, and stands in marked and disgraceful contrast with that clause of the President's proclamation, in which he declares that "the rights of private property shall be respected." The next step of the Confederates in rebellion, will be to confiscate all debts from Southern men to Northern creditors. It is strange that they do not see how easily and how terribly this game may be retorted. The action of Davis will, if persisted in, justify the inroad of scores of John Brown crusaders into the Southern States for the express purpose of setting free the Southern slaves, and arming them against the Southern rebels. The 'property' of the South is much more open to assault, than even the commerce of the Northern States. No letters of marque and reprisal will be needed, to make the war effective.

"We trust, however, that the Government will not find it necessary to retaliate by so fearful a process. One thing is very clear. The President's Proclamation assures the Union men of the South that their rights of property shall not be disturbed. If they stand by the Government, this pledge will insure them complete immunity from the worst horrors of civil war. If they join the rebels, and unite in their warfare upon private property at sea, they will have only themselves to blame, if the Government retaliates by tolerating war upon their property on land."—N. Y. Times, April 18.

—"Virginia, as the northermost State of the Southern Confederacy, would have a fate hard enough to bear; but it would be aggravated a hundred-fold in her case, by the efforts which she is, in case of secession, morally bound to make, to subdue her late Western citizens, which will never be permitted by the Federal Government, if its aid should be needed. Nor will this be her only difficulty. Western Virginia has no slaves of any consequence, compared to the whole white population, and it is by no means improbable that it will speedily, of its own accord, in the event of division, proclaim emancipation. In Eastern Virginia, moreover, negroes are not unintelligent, and know the North Star; they also know the Pennsylvania border is not very far distant, and when once war has begun in the State, they will be likely to 'lay down the shovel and the hoe,' 'and hurry off in droves to the Northern paradise they have longed for so long."—N. Y. Tribune, April 17th—Article on Virginia.

—"In his Proclamation calling out the militia and convening Congress, as well as in his letter to the Virginia Commissioners, President Lincoln defines distinctly what he intends to do. He simply re-affirms the declarations of his Inaugural Address, but in more decided language, such as the more aggravated form of the Southern rebellion requires. In performing his duty 'the utmost care will be observed, consistently with the objects aforesaid, to avoid any devastation and destruction of, or interference with property, or any disturbance of peaceful citizens, in any part of the country. . . . . The war into which the Government is now dragged, is not a war against slavery, not a war against the Southern people. It is a war for the defence of the Constitution, the protection of the whole people, the preservation of the nation."—Philadelphia Bulletin, April 15.

—"There need be no mincing this matter. We have it gingerly told to the Southern States, that if they rebel against the Union, and become parties to another Government, their slaves may, and probably will run away, and not be returned to them. This is true, as far as it goes; but it by no means meets the question at issue. It is our right—a right which the Law of Nations under such circumstances confers—whenever we march into the enemy's country, to declare by proclamation, that all who will give us aid, no matter what their color—or whether bond or free, apprentice or slave—shall have and enjoy our protection, and be protected in the enjoyment of equal rights with ourselves. Such is our right; and do not let the people of the Border Slave States suppose for a moment, that we shall hesitate to exercise it. If on the contrary, they, or any of them, remain faithful to the Union, as is our duty now, and as it will continue to be under our present Constitution, they are certain to be protected in the possession of their slaves forever; and if any of them escape, they will be returned when discovered, or their full value be paid to their masters. The people of the Border States understand this question; and in our judgment, they will permit their interests to guide their patriotism in a direction favorable to their continuance in the Union established by their Fathers, instead of uniting themselves with traitors in rebellion, against the Government of Washington and his brother Patriots, of the Revolution."—Courier and Enquirer, April 18.

—The Express (Dog Noble) the same day heads the above paragraphs thus:—

"The civil war, of course, is to assume the form of servile war—of course, we coolly say—for the duty of the Journalists is, to foresee as well as to record or discuss."

—"While the people throughout the whole of the Free States are united in their patriotic efforts to sustain the administration, it is humiliating that we have an organ in our midst that recommends that war be made upon the South, by inciting an insurrection of the slaves. Such a horrible, inhuman proposition is enough to chill the very heart's blood of all true-minded and patriotic citizens. As much as we may hate the South for their attempts to destroy the Union, all honorable men will frown down a suggestion that would lead, perhaps, to the massacre of thousands of innocent women and children. Jeff. Davis's piratical Proclamation is a mild recommendation compared to that of the Liberator, and if he deserves a traitor's doom, what fate does that man deserve who would entail upon any community or country, whether friendly or at enmity with us, whether at peace or at war, the unutterable woes which would inevitably attend an attempt upon the part of the slaves at the South to gain their freedom by violence and bloodshed! We agree with a cotemporary that 'every white man who is detected in stirring up insurrections among the slaves, will be hung as high as Haman, and if the Federal Government cannot enforce its laws, and maintain the supremacy of the Constitution without resorting to such instrumentalities, we trust it will be thoroughly beaten in every encounter.' The calamities attendant upon war are sufficiently horrible, even if it be carried on according to the usages of modern civilized warfare, without resorting to the worse than barbarous means which some of the most rabid Abolitionists have the hardihood and inhumanity to propose."—Boston Saturday Express April 21.

The Liberator, (it is only due to its non-resistant character to say,) has never recommended a negro insurrection; but, on the contrary, has always advocated the policy of peaceful disunion—to ultimate in peaceful abolition.

—In the accounts of the enthusiasm at Philadelphia, on the arrival of the news from Fort Sumter, we are told that, when opposite Gerard House, the mob amused themselves, while waiting for the flag to be displayed, by riding an unoffending colored man on a rail.

—The colored people of the city are in a high state of excitement, and express their readiness to volunteer whenever permitted to do so. A leading man of them, in a conversation at the State House, expressed the belief that a few companies of colored troops, placed in the Slave States, would soon have an army of thousands of slaves at their back. He hoped, if an extra session of the Legislature should be called, that the word "white" would be struck from our military law.—Bocton Trveller.

—To show the feeling with which the condition of the slave is esteemed in this contest, we have only to refer to the fact that the Boston Daily Republican papers refused to publish the noble, stirring and most eloquent oration of Wendell Phillips, which we issue as an extra to our present number. That superb effort of genius, taking ground in favor of the war, and teaching the lesson of liberty from it, these patriotic Republican editors were afraid to issue, because Mr. Phillips is an Abolitionist, and it is not desirable that the Administration should be embarrassed by his support. Complimentary to Mr. Phillips, but damaging to the party. "Oh! Shame, where is thy blush?" How much regard does this evince for the enslaved or free colored Americans?

A Suggestion, by one who believes the Almighty holds a negro in the same estimation as a white man.—Throughout the Northern States are a large number of young, active and intelligent colored men, who are alive to the fact that the present civil war has grown out of the existence of slavery in the South, and that in a short time the North, being convinced that all of our national troubles are to be attributed to that fact, will demand its entire extinction. When that time arrives, it will be time for the colored man to act. In the meanwhile, let them prepare themselves, by organizing, drilling, and making all needful preparations. Let them open communication with the thousands of fugitives in Canada, who will rejoice at the prospect of visiting once more the place of their birth.

I would suggest that they adopt a uniform peculiar to themselves, somewhat similar to that of the Turcos in the French Army, which is simple, cheap, and attractive, and allows great liberty of action. In the war of the Revolution, the colored men showed their devotion to the cause of liberty in many a well-fought field, and they will soon have another opportunity of showing that they are worthy of being freemen! Alexander.

——Fifty colored citizens of Rochester, N. Y., will sail for Hayti about the middle of May. They will sail from New York.

Northern Motto.—Stars and Stripes for the Union—Scars and Stripes for the Traitors.

——A slave insurrection is reported in Kent Co. Md. The statement needs confirmation.

[From the New York Evening Post.]

To the Men of the North and West.

Men of the North and West,
Wake in your might,
Prepare, as the rebels have done;
For the fight;
You cannot shrink from the test,
Rise! Men of the North and West!

They have torn down your banner of stars;
They have trampled the laws;
They have stifled the freedom they hate,
For no cause!
Do you love it, or slavery best,
Speak! Men of the North and West.

They strike at the life of the state,
Shall the murder be done?
They cry, "We are two!" And you?
"We are one!"
You must meet them, then, breast to breast,
On! Men of the North and West!

Not with words, they laugh them to scorn,
And tears they despise,
But with swords in your hands, and death
In your eyes!
Strike home! leave to God all the rest,
Strike! Men of the North and West!

R. H. Stoddard.

——[By the time this paper is in the hands of its readers, the colony for whom the annexed appeal was made, will have left these unfriendly shores for those of the "Gem of the Antilles." We publish it as part of the history of a movement, far more important in what it suggests, than in the results which to the unobservant there may seem likely to come.

The New Haven Colony is composed of the élite of our people; they will do no discredit to the name of colored Americans, which in carrying to Hayti they do not throw aside, but rather bear with a prouder and deeper significance. Hayti is the germ of that coming Nationality, whose wide arms shall reach around these tropic seas, and upon whose zone glisten as stars the sun-permeated, luxurious isles of the Gulf. A Nationality, rising out of sin, sorrow, and suffering, cradled in darkness and desolation, whose childhood was measured by the task-masters lash, and whose manhood was lifted up by the sternest struggle to the full measure of humanity. Such a Nationality our friends have gone to aid in rearing. These movements, insignificant as they appear, give another proof of the destiny for which the centuries keep this continent so mystically veiled from the eye of all the past. That destiny is to prove that in America, there shall be no Geography in Liberty! No Distinctions in Race or Nationality! We bid our brothers God speed.

Our next issue will contain a most interesting verbatim report of the farewell meeting of this colony at New Haven, on the 24th inst.—Ed.]

Appeal for a Farewell Benefit for the Haytian Emigrants from New Haven.—Citizens of New Haven! One hundred and fifty persons of color propose to go forth from your midst on April 25th, to make their future homes in Hayti, in response to a cordial invitation that has been extended to them for this purpose, by the Haytian Government. These emigrants, one half of whom belong to New Haven, are composed of industrious, but poor persons, whose scanty means will prevent them from making comfortable provision for their first necessities after their arrival in Hayti. To aid them in this matter, some benevolent persons have generously opened their hearts and hands with contributions that have been gratefully received by these emigrants, and which they now desire to publicly acknowledge, particularly making mention of the gift of a first-class sewing-machine from Messrs. Wheeler & Wilson, and of a globe and a liberal supply of slates from the New Haven Slate Globe Company. Nevertheless, further aid is needed; and can be usefully bestowed upon them to meet wants that still remain unsupplied. And it is believed that there are numerous persons in this city who have not been called upon in this matter, who would doubtless gladly contribute to meet these necessities, if they can be reached by some feasible plan by which each one of them can give a small amount to make up an aggregate sum, to be presented to these colonists in the name of the citizens of New Haven. To attain this end, a farewell benefit for these emigrants will be held on Wednesday, the 24th inst. Several gentlemen of this city have been invited, and have given their consent to address the assemblage on appropriate themes. Due notice will be given by advertisement of the place of meeting and the names of the speakers. Tickets of admission, 25 cents. Exercises to begin at 8 P. M.

Citizens of New Haven! Descendants of the Pilgrims! You are invited to rally to the hearty support of this Mayflower expedition of sable pioneers in the cause of civil and religious liberty, which it falls to your lot to Hayti in the name of New England.

See to it, that the aid and countenance which you give to this undertaking, for the elevation and regeneration of a long down-trodden race, shall be worthy of the generous traditions of this noble land of the Pilgrims.

J. T. Holly, Leader.
Chas. I. Freeman, Secretary.

A Special Meeting of the Young People's Christian Association was held in the lecture room of the Plane Street Church, Newark, on Tuesday evening, April 16, 1861. The President of the Association called the meeting to order, and Mr. D. Jennings was appointed Secretary. The Committee on Resolutions reported the following, which were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, mournful intelligence has been received of the death of our beloved Pastor, the Rev. Elymus P. Rogers, at Cape Palmas, Africa, in February, 1861, and whereas by this sad and deeply afflictive event of Divine Providence we are called to mourn the loss of a faithful and earnest spiritual father, whose labors amongst us ever evinced that he sought our highest interest for time and eternity; whose words of admonition and of hope can never be forgotten, and whose deep and fervent letters were read by all who knew him; and whereas our dear Pastor laid the foundation of this now flourishing Association, known as the Young People's Christian Association, of the Plane Street Presbyterian Church, of the city of Newark, and having himself been connected with the same as a member; therefore,

Resolved, That we consider this dispensation of an over-ruling Power, which, though dark and mysterious, is but the fulfilling of those great purposes which tend to the glory of God and the highest good of His creatures.

Resolved, That the members of this Association wear a crape rosette for three months, in token of that love which they will ever cherish for the memory of the deceased.

Resolved, That while we acquiesce in the inscrutable dealings of God towards us, we feel to mourn with her who has lost a kind and devoted husband, and we thus tender our heartfelt sympathies, and pray that He who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb, may pour into her heart the balm of consolation and fit her to bear this sad bereavement.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the widow of the deceased.

Resolved, That the doings of this meeting be published in the daily papers of this city, and in the Anglo-African, of the city of New York.

D. Jennings, Secretary.

A Compliment from an Enemy.—Jeff. Davis advertises in a Mobile paper for 75,000 coffins. He must think highly of the skill of our Northern troops, when he thus shows that he expects each one of them to kill one of his ruffians.

"Long may it Wave!"—The Anti-Slavery Rooms at Philadelphia have displayed the stars and stripes.

CHICAGO VIGILANCE COMMITTEE.

The following report was crowded out last week. It appeared in the Chicago Post on the 7th inst. We are glad to see the Old Guard at work once more. Our only advice however is not to hold any more meetings where reporters can enter, make their committees small and of stern stuff. Above all, stop passing resolutions to petition the President to remove the kidnappers. He won't do it, and the people must, one way or the other. Let the endangered people, and all who stand for the right, act—not talk or resolve, but do. Make the wretches personally responsible. We repeat it. It is the fear of death that alone allows these things to be safely done.

"Pursuant to call, a considerable number of "live men," Simon-pure Abolitionists, met last evening in the office of F. C. Freer, Esq., 51 Clark Street, to consider what is best for them to do in view of the course of the new United States Marshal of this District in arresting fugitive slaves.

Mr. Freer stated his object in calling the friends together. They were all aware of the barborous act of the United States Marshal in arresting a family of colored persons in this city on the 3d inst. He had thought it best to call the Old Guard together to consider what should be done. There were a great many fugitives in the city, and it was evident they were not safe here. He thought a Vigilance Committee should be appointed and means taken to raise money to protect the fugitives or send them to a place of safety. About two hundred dollars had already been spent in sending fugitives from Chicago to Canada since the arrest, which money had been subscribed by about a dozen persons. It was only day before yesterday that a slave woman with her five children had arrived here, poorly clad, and weary with the long journey from Missouri. She had hardly got here when the fingers of the United States Marshal were after her, and she crept for concealment under a stable, where she and her children remained for thirty-six hours in the cold and damp, subsisting upon food furnished to them by stealth. During a portion of the time, the Marshal's imps were pacing back and forth within her sight. Such cases were of almost daily occurrence. The slaves arrived with little clothing and no money. They must be protected here, or provided with the means of going on to a land of freedom. This was one part of his object in calling this meeting.

Another part was to consider whether it was not time to organize as a distinct political party, coming out from among the Republican party, which had betrayed the principles it professed towards the Old Liberty Guard. He would like to hear what the friends might have to suggest upon the subject.

Mr. Warner suggested that the subject be divided. On motion, Mr. Freer was then made Chairman, and Dr Haven, Secretary of the meeting.

Mr. Warner moved that a Vigilance Committee of seven be appointed, whose particular business it should be to see that no more fugitives were taken from Chicago by the officers.

Mr. Pinkerton thought the Committee should be small; if they had to work against fraud, conspiracy and villany, a small number was better than a large one.

The motion of Mr. Warner was adopted, and the Vigilance Committee was made up as follows: L. C. P. Freer' John Jones, J. F. Temple, Philo Carpenter, Watson V. Coe, William H. Kennicutt, and C. L. Jenks.

The Committee was voted power unlimited, to raise money, to appoint sub-committees, secret agents, and to do in general such acts as may be necessary to prevent the execution of the Fugitive Slave Law.

The political part of the subject was then taken up, and Marshal Jones was discussed and cursed in warm terms. Ex-Alderman Abbott was disposed to be inquisitive and asked the chair to inform him what the duty of the Marshal was by law.

The chair said, that technically, the Marshal's duty was to execute the law; but he thought it also the Marshal's duty, when a writ for the arrest of a fugitive was put into his hands, to deputize the Old Guard to serve it!

C. P. Waite thought the Marshal attended to the execution of this law to the neglect of his other duties.

Mr. Hawley spoke in favor of a public meeting to denounce the Marshal. The people of Chicago, he said, were indignant at the outrage recently committed by an officer of this Administration. They would demand of Mr. Lincoln his immediate removal from office.

The Rev. A. Waite seconded the movement for a public meeting. He too, thought the people of Chicago had been outraged in the name of the Republican party, and that the Marshal should be removed forthwith.

The Chairman read a paper he had prepared in view of a separate political movement, which was loudly applauded.

Mr. Hawley desired to have a public meeting first, to get the public mind upon matter.

Mr. Schilling, one of the "German element," made some very sensible remarks upon the effect of public meetings in general. In his opinion they seldom amount to much. He was for reorganizing the old Liberty party on the spot.

C. B. Waite desired to give the Administration a little longer trial.

Chancellor Jenks said he had just come from a meeting of colored persons, and the spectacle he saw there was enough to make any freeman's blood boil. All was consternation and terror. Families were breaking up; sacrificing their little property, and preparing to flee the oppressor. He proceeded to denounce city officers, supposed to be connected with the arrest, and pitched into the Mashal heavily, charging him as guilty of bribery. He understood that two more fugitives had been arrested to-night. To put a stop to such proceedings, it was only necessary to have a funeral, and he was in favor of having it.

Resolved, That whereas the United States Marshal of this District, by his recent course in the arrest of several alleged fugitive slaves, hurrying them back to a state of slavery, has evinced a mean and atrocious subserviency to the Slave Power, and has outraged the rights of our common humanity; therefore,

Resolved, That the time has come when every friend of liberty should become a committee to attend the steps of said Marshal, and his Deputies, with such physical circumstances as shall effectually put a stop to such outrages.

Resolved, That Republicans do not expect the United States Marshal to manifest an alacrity and love for the nefarious duties that the infamous and unconstitutional Fugitive Slave Law requires.

Resolved, That a Committee be appointed by the Chairman, to draw up a petition and circulate it for signatures, respectfully requesting the President to remove the present United States Marshal, for neglecting his other official duties, and devoting himself with so much avidity to the business of kidnapping colored people and running them into slavery, stopping at no fraud or stealth necessary to carry out his purposes.

The meeting, after appointing a Committee to call a public meeting in Metropolitan Hall, next Monday night, adjourned.

Irish Emigration.—During the sixteen months ending September 1, 1760, the emigration from Ireland to the United States amounted to 1,140, 982 persons,—or at the rate of 2377 a day! That is the way in which great nations are made now-a-days; by the introduction in vast numbers and absorption of foreign yet kindred peoples. The foreign vote of this country is estimated to be about one-twelfth of the whole. If the twelve millions of men of African descent now scattered throughout the American continent and the adjacent islands, were animated with this spirit, in ten years they could form a consalidated nation second only in strength to the people of the North. And this seems to be our destiny by the tendency of events in all countries where our people live. Speed the day!

——The Rev. M. D Conway, the young, earnest-hearted, fiery-tongued preacher of freedom in Cincinnatti, lately delivered an able discourse in review of a pamphlet published in that city by the Rev. Sabin Hough of that city, which almost transcends South side Adams in its devilish devotion to slavery. In answer to a statement that in freedom the colored people were beggars, Mr. Conway, who is himself a Virginian and the son of a slaveholder, gives the following valuable testimony:

"A colored beggar, except for help to get himself or his household free, is extremely rare. In this city, twenty suffering white families can be shown, for one colored, —allowing for the disproportion in number. There are several colored families here that I can show any one, who came from the same place that I did in Virginia, and are doing very well here, much better than there, where their homes were among the very best in the State. Some years ago, I myself visited the chief cities of Canada, and their negro-quarters, and learned from their own lips, and those of the Mayors and the Governor, and from my own eyes, the utter falsity of the report that the negroes were a suffering or retrogressive people in Canada—even there, where the climate might justify it. Let this writer go to the colored schools of this city, and the Sunday schools, to see his own slander of this race, and the effects of freedom on a second or third generation refuted."

——The cruel logic of South Carolina is occasionally at fault. The following, from a Montgomery correspondent of the Charleston Mercury, shows clearly how, when it trenches upon their interest or ambition, the principles, so called, upon which they affect to base negro slavery, pass away. Slaves are persons, when it pays. The slaveholders will find them so to their cost, before long:

"On account of the small size of the future House of Representatives of the Confederate States under the old apportionment, it is not unlikely that it will be altered, so as to afford a larger and more efficient body. It is to be hoped that a full representation will be given to negroes as persons, which would partially remedy the evil of too small a Honse."

MARRIAGE.

In Williamsburg, L. I., 18th inst., by Rev. Mr. Manning, Mr. Daniel Johnson to Miss Julia Ann Jackson, both of this city.

DEATH.

In Newburgh, N. Y., after a short illness of four days, William Loyd, 80.

'T is finished—'t is done—the spirit is fled,
The prisoner is gone, the Christian is dead;
The Christian is living through Jesus' love,
And gladly receiving a kingdom above.

Special Notices.

A sailing vessel will leave New York City, on Friday, May 17, for Hayti. Fifty-one emigrants are already engaged for this vessel. Any others intending to go, under the terms announced by the Agents of the Government of Hayti, are earnestly requested to give immediate notice to this Bureau.

A. E. NEWTON, Corresponding Secretary.
Haytian Bureau of Emigration, Boston, Ms.

A sailing vessel will leave Boston on Saturday, the first of June, at twelve o'clock, noon, precisely, for St. Mark, Hayti, direct. Emigrants intending to go by this vessel, must give the Haytian Bureau of Emigration, in Boston, two weeks notice before the day of sailing. A. E. NEWTON, Cor. Secretary.

Tour through New York.—William Wells Brown will lecture at the following places, in the State of New York, on the Past History and Present Prospects of the Republic of Hayti:

At Albany,	Friday,	May	3.
" Troy,	Sunday,	"	5.
" Schenectady,	Monday,	"	6.
" Amsterdam,	Tuesday,	"	7.
" Mindon,	Wednesday,	"	8.
" Little Falls,	Thursday,	"	9.
" Utica,	Friday,	"	10.
" Rome,	Sunday,	"	12.
" Syracuse,	Monday,	"	13.
" Auburn,	Thursday,	"	16.
" Geneva,	Friday,	"	17.
" Canandagua,	Monday,	"	20.
" Elmira,	Tuesday,	"	21,
" Corning,	Thursday,	"	23.
" Bath,	Friday,	"	24.
" Rochester,	Sunday,	"	26.
" Lockport,	Tuesday,	"	28.
" Buffalo,	Wednesday,	"	29.

Anniversary!—The Ladies' Sinking Fund Society of the 7th Avenue Presbyterian Church, on 7th Avenue, between 11th and 12th Streets, Rev. Henry M. Wilson, Pastor, will celebrate their 12th Anniversary in the lecture room of the above Church, on Thursday evening, May 16, 1861, by suitable music, addresses, festivities, &c., &c. Tickets 50 cents, to be obtained from officers and friends of the Society. Mrs. Esther Schenck, Directress, 100 West 17th Street; Mrs. Caroline Bees, 13½ Le Roy Street; Henry M. Wilson, Guardian, 8 Morton Street. 93—3t

The Zion Baptist Church, Rev. John T. Raymond, pastor, worship in the large and commodious brick meeting-house, in Sullivan street, between Prince and Houston. Services at 10½ A. M., 3 and 7½ P. M.

Summer Style of Gents and Children's Hats and Caps—the most fashionable styles and largest variety in the city. First premium for ladies' riding and children's hats. The clergy supplied at a discount. KELLOGG, 70—1y · 381 Canal Street.

Madame Magnan, 154 Sullivan Street, New York. Home from 11 A. M. to 3 P. M.

"SINEWS OF WAR." As the raising of a [illegible] of in Black Republican [illegible] suggest the [illegible] with a bottle [illegible] as after [illegible] filled with [illegible] grenade, or [illegible] ly fire-eaters [illegible]
CHAS N. MILLER [illegible]
93—1t

BOARDING AND LODGING. [illegible] Brown continues [illegible] pleasant rooms for Lodging [illegible] at 18 Wadsworth Street, Hartford, Ct. Board by the day or week, where [illegible] will be given, and every effort [illegible] house a home to all who may be pleased to patronize her. The public will find [illegible]
93—tf

PURE KEROSENE OIL, [illegible] This cheap and elegant illuminator [illegible] together with lamps, wicks, &c., for [illegible] sale in quantities to suit purchasers, by
CHAS. N. MILLER, Drug [illegible]
93—1t No. 40 Grand Street, New York.

GENUINE HAVANA SEGARS, "La Rosa de Santiago" of Pedro Roger, for sale, wholesale and retail, by CHAS. N. MILLER, 93—1t Drug Middleman, 40 Grand Street.

APARTMENTS TO LET in House 217 Sullivan street. Enquire on the premises. 93—1t

HELP! HELP! HELP! Wanted at Tilmon's Agency for Employment, No. 70, East 13th Street, one door east of 4th Avenue. Spring has come, and now is the time for all first class help who want to get good situations and steady employment for the season. Our spring customers are coming in from both city and country, notwithstanding the disturbed state of the country. The highest wages are offered in this [illegible] help. For cooks, wages range from $9 to $10, $12, and $14; laundresses, from $8 to $9 and $10; housekeepers, from $7 to $8 and $9; coachmen, waiters, farmers, gardeners, and boys to drive; chambermaids and waitresses, from $7 to $8 and $9; seamstresses and children's nurses, from $7 to $8 and $9. As the demand is great for Southern help, all North, East, West and South of New York would do well to call, as no one coming to this office need be out of employment one hour if they are willing to work and will take places. We intend paying every possible attention to business this spring, and all who favor us with their patronage will meet with prompt attention. Particular attention paid to boarding-houses, hotels, saloons, club-houses, and watering-places. Office hours from 7 A. M. to 5 P. M.
91—3t L. TILMON, Proprietor.

TO LET. The Convention Hall, 170 Wooster Street, New York, for Church purposes. Apply to G. W. BOGERT, 91—tf No. 13 6th Avenue.

APARTMENTS TO LET. A few respectable families can be accommodated with large, handsome apartments, by applying to 91—2t JOSEPH CROW, 188 East 33d St.

LADIES CAN BE ACCOMMODATED WITH a comfortable home, and private boarding, during confinement, at 407 South 12th Street, Philadelphia. 89—13t

DR. TIEBOUT'S CELEBRATED LINIMENT for Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sprains, Cramps, Numbness of the Joints, Burns, Scalds, Frosted Feet, Headache, &c. Certificates can be shown from many persons who have been cured by the use of the Liniment. Prepared and sold by Dr. Tiebout, 209 West 15th Street, New York.

PLEASANT R. SMITH, MANUFACTURER and wholesale and retail dealer in WASHING BLUE, INK, SHOE-BLACKING, AND MATCHES, 87 Pitt Street. Residence, 77 Ludlow Street, New York. Keeps constantly on hand a large stock of Yankee Notions—viz: Perfumery, Soap, Toilet Articles, &c. The trade supplied on reasonable terms. 83tf

PAUSE FREQUENTLY, THINK SERIOUSLY, read slowly, and then act decidedly. The original and genuine
BADEAU'S STRENGTHENING PLASTER.
Summum Bonum.
Read all this, as it may prove interesting:—
N. W. Badeau, the inventor of this highly celebrated Plaster, is pleased to announce that, with the aid of machinery, he is now enabled to make such a reduction in the price as to place them within the means of every person. The price has long been a serious objection with many, but so great an amount of labor has heretofore been required in their manufacture that they could not, consistently with his views, &c., be sold for less. This objection exists no longer, and who choose may now obtain them.
These Plasters are prepared for pains or weakness in the breast, side, back, or limbs; also for the gout, rheumatism, liver-complaint, and dyspepsia, and for coughs, colds, asthma, difficulty of breathing, oppression of the stomach, &c., they will give almost immediate and soothing relief, and for pleasantness, safety, ease, and certainty, are decidedly superior to most other remedies. At certain seasons of the year, when coughs and colds are so prevalent, and when so many are afflicted with affections of the breast and lungs, there is nothing in the whole range of the materia medica that can be used with so much safety and certainty as Badeau's Plasters.
The ladies, to whom this portion of the card is addressed, are respectfully informed that the subscriber's opinion of the female mind and character is far too exalted to suppose for a moment that they can be cajoled or flattered to patronise him, but wishes to address them in a few words to their good sense only. They are politely notified that "Badeau's Strengthening Plasters" were prepared with special reference to their favor, and they are most earnestly recommended to such as are troubled with pains in the back, breast and side, or those who are afflicted with coughs, colds, asthma, &c. He is confident that if it were possible to ascertain the names of the ladies who have received benefit by wearing these beautiful plasters, he could present an array which, for modest worth, intelligence, and respectability, would far outweigh his highest recommendations. They are spread on the most beautiful, soft, and pliable lamb's skin, and may be worn by the most delicate female, in all situations, with ease and comfort, for one month.
Persons about purchasing will be particular always to ask for BADEAU'S PLASTERS, then look on the back of the Plaster and see if the signature of N. W. BADEAU be on it, and if not, it cannot possibly be genuine. And if at any time they should be imposed upon, they are advised to send it back to where they purchased it, and [illegible] me of the name and residence of the [illegible] offender.
For sale at all the principal [illegible] United States.

GENTLEMEN'S CLOTHES [illegible] repaired, in the neatest manner [illegible] FRANCIS THOM[illegible]
73—1yr 41 Hicks Street, [illegible]

CLOCKS, WATCHES, AND JEWEL[illegible] fully repaired by W. C. H. Curtis, [illegible] livan Street, New York. Silver-plating and [illegible] gilding neatly restored. 68—tf

TO LET.—The whole or part of house No. 13 Johnson Street, Williamsburg. It contains twelve rooms, besides two basements. It is on the Broadway Railroad, and within fifteen minutes walk of all the ferries. Apply to Edward R. Henderson, on the premises, or to C. M. Fortes, 26 Mulberry St., any evening after 7 o'clock. 85—9t

TO LEASE FOR A TERM OF YEARS—A house containing six rooms, on 15th Street, between 7th and 8th Avenues, Brooklyn. Inquire on the premises.

TO LET.—Apartments in Houses 46 and 48 Varet Street, Williamsburg; several rooms and bedrooms at 97 High Street, Brooklyn; a two-story frame house, containing seven rooms, with lot, in Rahway, N. J., about three minutes walk from the depot, and other apartments in Rahway.
Apply to SAM'L J. HOWARD,
34 Fleet Street or 97 High Street, Brooklyn.

FAMILY BOARDING HOUSE, BY MRS. S. BABCOCK, 68 Sullivan Street, New York. Late 541 Broome Street. 36—tf

BOARDING AND LODGING, BY MRS. S. PLANT, (formerly Richardson,) 69 John Street, Brooklyn. [illegible]

FRANKLIN L. JONES, TAILOR, 162 Mulberry Street, New York. Residence, 65 7th Avenue.

PRIVATE BOARD AT SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y. Mrs. Susan Boxendale [illegible] announcing to the public, that [illegible] to Putnam Street, Saratoga, and [illegible] ate neighborhood of Hamilton and [illegible] which are accessible to our people [illegible] the bath-houses attached [illegible] respectfully solicits the patronage of the public.

FURNISHED ROOMS [illegible] with or without Board [illegible]

A[illegible] [illegible]

Notes on Hayti.

THOUGHTS ON HAYTI.

BY J. THEODORE HOLLY.

IV

The Objects and Method Necessary to a Successful Emigration of the Colored People of the United States to Hayti.

I have promised, in this article, "to point out a method by which an emigration from the colored people of this country, may proceed to Hayti, with benefit to themselves, and with profit to their adopted country." I shall now endeavor to fulfil this promise, in as brief and concise a manner as possible.

When a body of men proposes to emigrate from one country to another, they should not simply seek to better their own condition: but they ought, also, to be desirous of being serviceable to the country whither they may go. Accordingly, an emigration of colored persons from this country, seeking the political boon of Haytian liberty, independence, and national citizenship, should diligently consider what return they can make to their adopted country, for the inestimable privileges that they seek under her flag. This inquiry will develope the objects necessary to set on foot a successful emigration to Hayti.

From what has been already set forth, in an incidental manner, in the preceding articles of this series, we may gather the idea that political sovereignty, or national independence, high-toned morality and religion, erudite scholarship, and untiring industry, are necessary to the greatness and prestige of any people. And we have seen that the Haytian people can only be said to possess one of these concomitants of national greatness, viz: political sovereignty. To this, however, I may add that the half-century's independence of that people has seen them make considerable progress in intellectual erudition. Some of the sons of Hayti have graduated with the highest honors, in the Universities of Europe, particularly France, and have thereby shed an imperishable lustre on the intellectual capacity of the Negro race. Thus, then, two of the elements of national greatness, as enumerated above, may be said to be within the present grasp of the Haytian people.

But, on the other hand, we have seen that Haytian society is sadly deficient in the elements of morality and industrial progress. These, therefore, constitute her most pressing wants; and an emigration of colored persons, that shall proceed with a view to supply these national necessities, can be successfully prosecuted "with benefit to themselves, and with profit to their adopted country." And, as I have indicated that education among the Haytians is only in a successful course of development, and thereby implied that something more is still necessary to bring it to completion; therefore, this emigration should also include the idea of perfecting the means of intellectual culture in that Island. Education has only borne its choicest fruits among the upper classes of Hayti, whose sons were able to go to Europe, to enjoy the advantages of her institutions of learning. But, aside from these, there are the sisters of these young men, who cannot, prudently, go so far abroad for their education, and who ought to be cared for by academies and seminaries of learning, at home. Above all these are the great masses of the people, who must be born, live, and die, almost in the same spot; and who need to be cared for by a general common school system, that shall bring the advantages of elementary education home to the doors of the meanest and most secluded peasant of Hayti, in order that every citizen may be animated with a spirit necessary to constitute an independent, self-respecting freeman. Beyond all this, it is also essential to a proper culture of national patriotism, that the education of even the sons of the wealthy should be transferred from the Universities of Europe, to classic halls of learning erected on her own soil. Such are an indication of what is still necessary to complete the intellectual greatness of the Haytians; and how to meet this demand, is a point that may well be considered, by an Emigration Movement from this country, in common with the two needs already set forth. Hence, then, religion, industry, and education, should be the threefold motto and primal objects that should actuate an emigration movement of the colored people setting towards the shores of the Queen of the Antilles.

Having arrived at this conclusion in regard to the objects of emigration, it is only necessary for me to set forth the method on which it should be conducted, in order to fill out the outline sketched for this article. On this point, I have only to say that since the Hon. Eli Thayer has mathematically and practically demonstrated the superiority of organized emigration over all preceding methods, in the settlement of Kansas, it would be worse than [illegible] to repeat the unsystematic emigration of [illegible] went to the shores of Hayti, and [illegible]9, which proceeded to the British [illegible]ies. And still more inexcusable [illegible] that heartlessness of purpose and [illegible]ss of intellect, that would conduct an [illegible]tion on the heathenish and graveyard [illegible]em of Liberian Colonization. I say heathenish system of Liberian Colonization, because slaves just emancipated on the plantations of Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, are sent off by ship loads, steeped in all the ignorance and degradation of slavery, to add to the darkness and superstition of Africa, making her ancient confusion worse confounded, as even President Benson himself has intimated in a recent document emanating from his pen. And I call Liberian Colonization a graveyard system, because emigrants have been, and even now are being sent without proper sanitary regulations and accommodations being provided for emigrants who are left to fall victims to the African pestilence.

But to return from this Colonization digression, let me come to speak more particularly of what should be the characteristics of Haytian Emigration. The leading motive and the actuating spirit of this Emigration Movement should be that of religion, as in the case of the Pilgrim settlers of New England. The Christian religion is the salt of the earth; it is necessary to the national preservation of any people; and if this element is not soon strongly infused into the Haytian Commonwealth, beyond anything now at work, looking to that end, it will be impossible to ward off the internal corruption of revolutionary parties in that country, or to delay the ultimate decay and annihilation of its political sovereignty. Hence, then, the emigration movement thither, should assume the shape of well-organized religious communities, headed by an educated ministry, and backed and sustained by learned laymen, in sufficient numbers to open up the way for, and lead on, the progressive wants of civilized settlements. Agriculture should be made the chief industrial basis of these communities, and each emigrant should prepare himself to that end. Nevertheless there should be interspersed in all such communities such mechanics and handicraftsmen as may be necessary to supply the immediate wants of such primitive settlements in the line of domestic artizanship. Congeniality of association should be the principle of attraction by which these Emigration parties should be organized; and the persons thus attracted and organized, should settle in locations of not less than twenty-five, nor over two hundred families.

Such being the select principle upon which a successful emigration may be conducted, let me say, in conclusion, that it must be apparent to all who are conscious of the present condition of the colored people of this country, that this emigration should necessarily be very limited at present, and for some time yet to come. Because educated clergymen and learned laymen are a rarity among us, we are deficient in those who are qualified to be the only successful leaders in such an enterprise. Therefore a great preparatory work is necessary to be done in this country, before this movement can be carried on to the full tide of success. Young men must be educated for the Christian ministry, and others must be qualified in the various departments of literature and science. And as fast as they are thus qualified, let them head such emigration parties as I have indicated, composed of the choicest persons, all imbued with the spirit of religion and industry; and let them remove to Hayti and settle down in communities, looking forward to further growth, expansion and development. By this means, Haytian society will become slowly but surely leavened with the elements of moral, scientific and industrial progress. And when that country shall thus be carefully leavened and permeated with these principles, and her political greatness fixed upon a firm basis, by national institutions that cannot be shaken, then a general and en masse emigration of the colored people might set to those shores from all parts of the world, like that from Europe to America, without endangering the existence and prospects of Hayti with that retrograde decline, which would certainly ensue, if the general ignorance and barbarism now prevailing among the colored people of the world, were incoherently blended and superadded to that already existing in that country.

[Written for the Anglo-African.]

POLITICAL MATTERS IN HAYTI.

BY HENRY MELROSE.

For the political purposes which are well understood in all free countries, the Republic of Hayti is divided and sub-divided in order to meet the local requirements of the people. The two great divisions into which Hayti is divided are called departments; the departments, again, are still further divided into arrondisements; the arrondisements into communes; and the communes into rural sections. Over the departments no superior officer is placed. Each arrondisement, however, is commanded by a government official, who has hitherto been an officer of superior rank. This office is more political than military. They are, in fact, the representatives of the Secretaries of State; they receive their orders from those functionaries, and are besides entrusted with the superintendance of the high police.

The communes are also commanded by military officers, each of whom is responsible to the commander of the arrondisement of which his commune forms a part.

The rural sections are governed in a similar manner, with the exception that their commanders are officers of the rural police. These officials, in turn, are responsible to the commander of the commune.

In Hayti, there are five departments, viz, the South, the West, the North, the Artibonite, and the North-west; twenty-one arrondisements, and fifty-five communes.

For the purpose of administering justice, the Republic is divided into seven districts. In these districts courts are established which have jurisdiction in all criminal, correctional, and maritime case. Tribunals of commerce have also been established, and extend their jurisdiction throughout the whole of the districts. In every commune there is likewise a police court, which exercises its authority over the entire commune.

The Court of Appeals, or Tribunal de Cossation, is at Port-au-Prince, and, like similar courts in other countries, takes cognizance of appeals from all parts of the Republic.

In order to administer the Finances of the State, the Republic is divided into thirteen financial arrondisements, in the chief towns of which the representatives of the Government reside. Each of these functionaries has under his orders, the Treasury, the Director of Customs, the Government Storekeeper, and Government Overseer, of the district in which he resides.

The revenues of the State are collected from duties on exports and imports, harbor dues, stamps, registry fees, the sales and leases of public lands and buildings, and the "patents" or licenses of merchants. The revenue thus derived averages over two millions of dollars a year. Of this sum between $800,000 and $900,000 are obtained from import duties, and about $800,000 from the tax on coffee.

Hayti, like too many of the Nationalities of Europe, is burdened with a National Debt. Under the Presidency of Gen. Boyer, the the Government agreed to pay France 150,000,000 francs for recognizing Haytian Independence, and as an indemnity for the losses of the colonial proprietors. By this means a national debt was created—much to the indignation of the people. For some years past a proportion of the debt has been annually liquidated, and although it amounts at the present time to eight millions of dollars, it will be liquidated in about eighteen years.

In the time of Boyer, the standing army consisted of 40,000 men; under Soulouque, it was reduced to 22,000; but the prosperous condition of the country has enabled President Geffrard to reduce it to between 10,000 and 11,000 men, and it will be further reduced as soon as circumstances will permit. This fact alone speaks volumes in favor of the present state of Hayti. A large standing army in times of peace, invariably shows that "there's something rotten in the State;" and in proportion as that rottenness disappears, the more prosperous does the State become. With regard to Hayti, this is especially true; for as she is already stinted with regard to population, she thus, by reducing her army, enables hundreds, or even thousands, of her citizens, to return to their homes, to cultivate the arts of peace.

The police force, which is also an armed body, numbers upwards of three thousand men, and in case of emergency, could coöperate with the regular troops.

It should be stated that in Hayti every man is trained to perform military duty; indeed, the law makes it incumbent to do so, from the ages of 15 to 60, inclusive. But the military system differs in many respects, from that which prevails in Europe and the United States. Not more than one-half of the army is engaged in duty at the same time. It is divided into the paid and unpaid National Guard. The paid National Guard includes that portion of the Army which lives under military discipline; and the unpaid National Guard, those who are able to bear arms. Generally, a very small number of the regular troops are in service each week, in their respective garrisons or cantons, and the others are at liberty to work at their respective occupations. On the indication of danger, however, every one of them must be prepared to take the field. The unpaid National Guard is formed on a basis similar to the military companies of the United States. They are drilled and reviewed at certain stated times, but do not perform any regular military duty. In case of actual war, however, they are liable to be called upon to coöperate with the Republican troops

The navy of Hayti is very small, comprising but a small number of vessels. It is large enough, however, for all the purposes that are required of it.

[Written for the Anglo-African.]

RESOURCES OF HAYTI.

COCOA.—The cocoa presents less beauty than utility to its cultivator, for its branches form so many trunks separating from each other to a distance immediately above the parent one, and these bend with their separate branches immediately down to the earth. It seldom, therefore, rises high. Its leaves are long, terminating in a point, and emitting an agreeable smell. In the pistil of a flower blooming from every part, is contained an husk, in the form of a melon, which grows ordinarily to the length of six inches, and the breadth of four or five, composed of several small enclosures, in which the fruit, comprising a number of small nuts, of the shape of almonds, is found. It is propagated from the seed; is green in the early part of its growth, and becomes yellow at maturity. When it assumes a deep hue, it must be immediately gathered and dried; two crops of equal value are annually formed. It requires shade and moisture, and loves the protection of large trees at a sufficient distance, which must also be regarded with respect to its own plants. It requires rather due care, and a few necessary precautions, than a culture either laborious or expensive, and its returns are of the most profitable kind. Cocoa is well known for its nutritious qualities, and the preparation made from it, and both in its primitive form and in that of chocolate is one of the most acceptable articles of diet, which Hayti produces for the delectation of the palates of other nations.

Its commercial value is very great, and it is capable of even larger values, as the following will show. M. de St Mery, in his minutely interesting description of Hayti, written in 1791, says:

"Cocoa is an object of the first consequence in the Spanish part. It is also a native, and is found in a great number of places. According to Valverde,* (from whom I borrow this article), at the time of the discovery of the island, the cocoa was, after the mines and sugar, the most abundant source of the riches of the colonists. In the sixteenth century there was no other cocoa than that of Spanish† Domingo, and this island then provided all Spain with that article. There was even too much, which led the colonists to solicit the Court of Madrid to permit them to transport it into foreign countries. . . . . We yet see in the Plain de la Vega Real, and in other places of the Northern colony, a sufficient testimony of the former utility of this shrub; that is, innumerable wild cocoa-trees growing in the middle of the woods."

At the date of St. Mery's (1790) work, there were fifty-four plantations in the French Colony, entirely devoted to the cultivation of this product. The present annual exportation of cocoa, amounts to 1,200,000 lbs, Haytian, to which must be added 25 per cent., as the difference in the American weight. The following advice relative to this is given by a writer in Le Progress:

"The proprietors of plantations which are used for the cultivation of the cocoa-tree or chocolate plant should multiply his plants each year in all localities where this tree can be cultivated. This tree requires a rich, soft soil, elevated and shady places, and a temperate atmosphere. During the first year, while the plant is tender and delicate, it should be protected from the sun by the shade of other trees. They should be planted about fourteen feet apart. In Hayti they begin to bear in four or five years and continue to produce fruit till they are forty-eight or fifty, or even sixty years old. Two or three men are sufficient to take care of a thousand trees, to gather and prepare the harvest. They will produce five or six pounds of cocoa each, which will bring $25 per quintal, so that a thousand trees will bring $1250, Spanish, and this revenue will be permanent for fifty or sixty years."

* The name of a Spanish writer, whose works upon Hayti are of some value.
† The Spanish name of Hayti,

——The State Revenues are drawn from the duties on exports and imports, harbor dues, stamps, registry fees, the sales and leases of public lands and buildings, and the "patents," or licenses of merchants. The State income averages over $2,000,000. Of this amount, about $800,000 are derived from the tax on coffee. The import duties range between $800,000 and $900,000. An immense future income will probably be derived from the exploration of the woods, islands, and mines of the Republic. The national debt contracted for the "Indemnity," and a loan from France, amounts to about $8,000,000; which will be totally extinguished in 1879, by the payments annually made according to the treaty. The paper money in circulation amounts to between two and three millions of American dollars in value.

MILITARY STRENGTH OF THE NORTH AND SOUTH.—By the returns made and published in the Army Register of 1859, it appeared that the total number of all the enrolled militia in the several States, was 2,727,486, of which number 1,629,000 are enrolled in the Free States, and 1,098,000 in all the Slave States. The number enrolled in the seven seceded States, was 350,000.

We have 19,000,000 of inhabitants in the Free States. The seceding States have about 2,700,000 whites, and 2,350,000 slaves. The Slave States combined have a little more than 8,000,000 whites, and about 4,000,000 slaves, the latter being an element of weakness. The seceding States have no navy and can have none. They are not a maritime people, and can neither build nor sail ships. The few vessels they have stolen, are entirely useless to them.—Boston Journal.

Books.

PUBLICATIONS FOR SALE BY
THOMAS HAMILTON,
P. O. Box, 1212. 48 Beckman St.

The First Volume of the Anglo-African Magazine, Bound. Price—In half Morocco, $1.62; half Morocco, gilt edges, $1.87; Muslin, $1.38. CONTENTS: Embellishments—Portrait of Alexander Dumas. Music, by A. J. R. Connor. Articles by Bishop D. A. Payne, James M'Cune Smith, M. D., Prof. Geo. B. Vashon, Dr. Martin R. Delany, Mrs. Sarah M. Douglass, Prof. Robert Campbell, Prof. Wm. J. Wilson, Rev. J. W. C. Pennington, D. D., Rev. J. Theo. Holly, Mrs. Frances Ellen Watkins Harper, Prof. M. H. Freeman, Edward Blyden, Esq., Rev. Robert Gordon, Prof. Chas. L. Reason, Mrs. M. A Shadd Cary, Dr. James Fields, Rev. Amos Gerry Beman, Miss Grace A. Mapps, Rev. J. Sella Martin, Wm. C. Nell, Esq., J. Mercer Langston, and J. Holland Townsend, Esq.

The Life of Captain John Brown, the Liberator of Kansas, and the Hero of Harper's Ferry. By James Redpath. An elegant 12mo. volume of 400 pages, illustrated and embellished with a superb Steel Portrait of the Glorious Old Man. Price $1.00.

My Bondage and My Freedom. By Frederick Douglass. One vol., 12mo., 464 pp., Illustrated. Price $1.00, postage, 22 cts.

Life of Jermain W. Loguen, the great Underground Railroad King. Price $1.00.

The Martyrs and the Fugitive. By the Rev. S. H. Platt. A thrilling work on Slavery and the Slave-trade, detailing the capture of a family in Africa by the Slave-dealers, their fearful journey to the coast, the horrors of the "middle passage," their sale in America, and subsequent martyrdom; the slavery of their son, his terrible sufferings and perilous escapes. Sent, postpaid, upon the receipt of 38 cts.

Twelve Years a Slave. The Narrative of Solomon Northrup, a citizen of New York, kidnapped in Washington City in 1811, and rescued in 1853, from a cotton plantation near Red River, Louisiana. Seven Illustrations, 336 pp. 12mo. Price $1.00, postage paid.

Our National Charters. For the Millions. Including—1. The Federal Constitution of 1787-9. 2. The Articles of Confederation, 1778. 3. The Declaration of Independence, 1776. 4. The Articles of Association, 1774. With notes showing their bearing on Slavery, and the relative powers of the State and National Governments. Also a summary of Legal Rules of Interpretation and Legal Opinions, collected from the highest authorities, is prefixed to the Constitution. An Appendix contains extracts from State Constitutions and Bills of Rights; Ordinance of 1787, excluding Slavery from the Northwest Territory; also, Sentiments of the Revolutionary Fathers, &c. By mail, postage prepaid, single copy, 15 cts.; four copies, 50 cts.; nine copies, $1.00.

The American Slave-Code, in Theory and Practice: Its Distinctive Features Shown by its Statutes, Judicial Decisions, and Illustrative Facts. 430 pp., 12mo. Price 75 cts., postage paid.

Unconstitutionality of Slavery. By Lysander Spooner. In paper, 294 pp., 8vo. Price 75 cts., or postage paid 86 cts.

Review of Lysander Spooner's Essay on the Unconstitutionality of Slavery. By Wendell Phillips. Price 25 cts. Postage 5 cts.

The Revelations of a Slave Smuggler; being the Autobiography of Captain Richard Drake, an African trader for fifty years, from 1807 to 1857. The work is handsomely illustrated, with graphic representations of scenes as they actually occur on the slave ships and on shore. Illustration No. 1 is a large cut, over 16x23, representing a Slave Market on the Coast of Africa. Illustration No. 2 represents a Scene in the Hold of a Slaver (middle passage). Then there is a large plate, giving views of a slave vessel between decks, regulation slave-deck, regulation packing, &c. The work is handsomely printed, contains one hundred large 8vo. pages, and is published at a price which places it within the reach of the masses—viz: 25 cts. a copy. When sent by mail the postage (six cents) must be added.

The Nat Turner Insurrection—A full and reliable account. Copies will be sent to any address on the receipt of five cents.

Uncle Tom's Cabin. By Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe. Two volumes in one. Price, $1.25.

The Kidnapped and Ransomed, being the personal recollections of Peter Still and his wife Vina, after forty years of slavery, by Mrs. Kate E. R. Pickard, with an introduction by Rev. S. J. May, Illustrated. 12mo. cloth, $1.25.

Gerrit Smith in Congress. "Slavery has no right but to die!" A work of over 400 pages, containing all his speeches delivered in Congress; also, an accurate likeness. Price, only 80 cents per copy, and postage paid.

The Dream; Or, the true history of Dea. Giles's Distillery and Dea. Jones's Brewery. By George B. Cheever, D. D. Price per single copy 10 cts., $1 per doz., or $7 per hundred.

A Summer on the Borders of the Carribbean Sea. By J. Dennis Harris. With an introduction by Geo. William Curtis. Sent by mail on receipt of $1.

A Pilgrimage to my Motherland; An account of a Journey among the Egbas and Yorubas of Central Africa, in 1859-60. By Robert Campbell, one of the Commissioners of the Niger Valley Exploring Party; late in charge of the Scientific Department of the Institute for Colored Youth, Philadelphia; and Member of the International Statistical Congress, London. Price, 63 cents. When sent by mail, the postage (10 cents) must be added.

Turner's (J. A.) Cotton Planter's Manual. Being a compilation of facts from the best authorities on the culture of cotton, its natural history, chemical analysis, trade and consumption, and embracing a history of cotton and the cotton gin. Price, $1. Postage, 15 cents.

The Manual of the Wardrobe. 100 large octavo pages, in paper, by Mrs. Pullan. Price, 25 cents. Sent, postpaid, upon receipt of the price. It comprises a thorough dissertation upon taste in dress, an explanation of the different kinds of stitches made in sewing, remarks upon the various kinds and qualities of fabrics used in the wardrobe, with complete directions for cutting and fitting all kinds of garments for women's and children's wear; the preparation of table, toilet, and bed linen. Illustrated by nearly one hundred cuts of patterns and modes. Orders received for publications of every description.

MRS. JAS. W. BELL would respectfully inform her friends and the travelling public that she HAS REMOVED from 168 Church Street, to her
NEW BOARDING HOUSE,
513 Broome Street, near Sullivan Street, which will be found comfortable and convenient, with warm and cold baths, etc., where all attention will be given, and every effort made to make her house a home to all who may be pleased to patronize her. 37-1y

---

MASONIC HEAD QUARTERS.
EMPIRE STATE HOTEL AND UNION HOUSE,
341 Broome Street, between Sullivan and Varick Streets, New York, on an improved plan, by Widow T. L. JINNINGS, successor to Mrs. Ramsay.
Board by the day, week, or month, on moderate terms. Call and see for yourselves. 38-1y

---

FOR SALE.—House and Lot 132 North 4th Street, Williamsburg—lot 25 by 100, two-story and basement frame house. Price, $2,000, half cash, and the balance on bond and mortgage for a term of years to suit purchaser.

Also, a lot northeast corner Bocrum and Johnson Street—price $1200, half cash, and balance on bond and mortgage.

Also the lot No. 15 Johnson Street—price $1000, half cash, and balance on bond and mortgage.

Also two houses and five lots on Frost Street.

Apply to B. N. C. WORRICK,
No. 54 Johnson Street,
Williamsburg.

Haytian Advertisements.

Liberty. Equality.

Republic of Hayti.

INVITATION.

Hayti will soon regain her ancient splendor. This marvellous soil that our fathers, blessed by God, conquered for us, will soon yield to us the wealth now hidden in its bosom. Let our black and yellow brethren, scattered through the Antilles, and North and South America, hasten to coöperate with us in restoring the glory of the Republic. Hayti is the common country of the black race. Our ancestors, in taking possession of it, were careful to announce in the Constitution that they published, that all the descendants of Africans, and of the inhabitants of the West Indies, belong by right to the Haytian family. The idea was grand and generous.

Listen, then, all ye negroes and mulattos who, in the vast Continent of America, suffer from the prejudices of caste. The Republic calls you; she invites you to bring to her your arms and your minds. The regenerating work that she undertakes interests all colored people and their descendants, no matter what their origin or where their place of birth.

Hayti, regaining her former position, retaking her ancient sceptre as Queen of the Antilles, will be a formal denial, most eloquent and peremptory, against those detractors of our race who contest our desire and ability to attain a high degree of civilization.

GEFFRARD.

CIRCULAR.—No. 1.

To the Blacks, Men of Color, and Indians in the United States and the British North American Provinces:

FRIENDS,—I am authorized and instructed by the Government of the Republic, to offer you, individually and by communities, a welcome, a home, and a free homestead, in Hayti.

Such of you as are unable to pay for your passage will be provided with the means of defraying it.

Two classes of emigrants are especially invited—laborers and farmers. None of either class, or any class, will be furnished with passports, who cannot produce, before sailing, the proofs of good character for industry and integrity.

To each family of emigrants, five carreaux* of fresh and fertile land, capable of growing all the fruits and staples of the tropics, will be gratuitously given, on the sole condition that they shall settle on it and cultivate it, and declare their intention of becoming citizens of Hayti. To unmarried men, on similar conditions, two carreaux will be granted.

Board and lodging, free of cost, will be furnished to the emigrants for at least eight days after their arrival in the island.

The government also will find remunerative work for those of you whose means will not permit you to begin immediately an independent cultivation

Emigrants are invited to settle in communities.

Sites for the erection of schools and chapels will be donated by the State, without regard to the religious belief of the emigrants.

The same protection and civil rights that the laws give to Haytians are solemnly guaranteed to the emigrants.

The fullest religious liberty will be secured to them; they will never be called on to support the Roman Catholic Church.

No military service will be demanded of them, excepting that they shall form military companies and drill themselves once a month.

All the necessary personal effects, machinery and agricultural instruments introduced by the emigrants shall be entered free of duty.

The emigrants shall be at liberty to leave the country at any moment they please; but those whose passage shall be paid by government, if they wish to return before the expiration of three years, will be required to refund the money expended on their account. A contract, fixing the amount, will be made with each emigrant before leaving the continent.

I have been commissioned to superintend the interests of the emigrants, and charged with the entire control of the movement in America, and all persons, therefore, desiring to avail themselves of the invitation and bounty of the Haytian Government are requested to correspond with me.

I shall at once, as directed by the Government, establish a bureau of emigration in Boston, and publish a Guide Book for the use of those persons of African or Indian descent who may wish to make themselves acquainted with the resources of the country and the disposition of its authorities.

I shall also appoint Agents to visit such communities as may seriously entertain the project of emigration.

Immediate arrangements, both here and in Hayti, can be made for the embarkment and settlement of one hundred thousand persons.

By order of the Government of the Republic of Hayti.

JAMES REDPATH,
General Agent of Emigration.
BOSTON, Nov. 3, 1860.

* A carreau is 3 acres and 3½ rods.

CIRCULAR.—No. II.

HAYTIAN BUREAU OF EMIGRATION,
Boston, Jan. 8, 1861.

BUREAUX AND AGENTS.

Under my General Instructions from the Government of Hayti, I have organized the following Bureaux of Emigration, and appointed the following Agents:

GENERAL BUREAU—No. 8 Washington Building, 221 Washington Street, Boston.
A. E. Newton, Corresponding Secretary.
Miss Elizabeth Howard, Translator.

NEW YORK BRANCH BUREAU—48 Beekman Street, New York.
Geo. Lawrence, Jr., Resident Agent.
R. J. Hinton, Corresponding Secretary.

WASHINGTON BRANCH BUREAU.—Henry Melrose, Agent for the Border States and the District of Columbia. Temporary Office, corner of F and 7th Streets, Washington, D. C.

A Bureau will be established in Philadelphia in May.

John Brown, Jr., Agent for the Canadas. Address, care of Isaac Carey, Chatham, C. W.

H. Ford Douglas, Agent for the Northwest. Address, 89 Buffalo Street, Chicago, Ill.

Joseph E. Williams, Agent for Indiana. Address, Indianapolis, Ind.

W. H. Burnham, Agent for Eastern Kansas, and Western Missouri. Address, Leavenworth City, Kansas.

J. J. W. Reeves, Agent for Maine. Address, Portland, Maine.

The "Guide to Hayti" can be had, for the present, of these agents only. It will not be published for the trade, nor be for sale, until the government contract is filled. Agents will distribute the book to intending emigrants gratuitously.

JAMES REDPATH, General Agent.

CIRCULAR.—No. VI.

HAYTIAN BUREAU OF EMIGRATION,
No. 8 Washington Building, 221 Washington St.
BOSTON, March 8, 1861.

Arrangements have been made by this Bureau by which Emigrants can sail from Boston and New York in regular Packets, every two weeks, or oftener, for the Republic of Hayti.

Those who go by these packets must in all cases pay their own passage, the price of which will be $18, provisions being found. This is about one-third the usual rates of charge from northern ports.

Whenever any colony of eighty or over, signify their readiness to sail at a designated time, a vessel will be chartered expressly for the purpose of conveying them comfortably and speedily from either Boston, New York, Philadelphia, or Washington, to Hayti. Price of passage, same as above.

Children under 3, free; under 12, half-price.

LABORERS and FARMERS going by these chartered vessels, if unable to pay their own passage, can have it advanced to them, including provisions. But they must furnish their own bedding for the voyage.

All whose passage money is thus advanced will sign a contract engaging to repay the amount ($18) to the Government of Hayti within three years, in case they take grants of Government lands, or choose to leave the country within the time specified.

Those who do not choose to accept Government lands, but remain over three years in the Island, will not be required to repay it at all.

Emigrants must defray their own expenses in earching the port of embarkation.

Those who go in vessels specially chartered by this Bureau will be allowed to take any reasonable amount of household goods and farming implements free of charge.

Those who go by regular packets will be charged for freight at the rate of ninety ce[illegible] per barrel, or eighteen cents per square foot.

Usual length of voyage, from fourteen to twenty days.

All who design to emigrate are earnestly requested to give this Bureau ample notice of their readiness to sail.

JAMES REDPATH,
General Agent.

CIRCULAR.—No. VII.

HAYTIAN BUREAU OF EMIGRATION,
Boston, March 20, 1861.

Experience has shown that it has become an imperative necessity that a change should be made from the terms of a recent Circular relative to the system of boarding emigrants during their passage to the Republic of Hayti. It was stated that passengers might choose between boarding themselves or paying $8 in advance for their board. The passengers both by the Janet Kidston and the Mary A. Jones, decided to board themselves; but, in both cases, in a majority of instances, failed to provide for the wants of an ordinary voyage. If this system were continued, a long passage would necessarily result in starvation, unless the Bureau should provide against such a contingency, by laying in a sufficient amount of provisions. To avoid the expense, therefore, the embarrassment and danger attending the present system, after a full consultation with other agents and men experienced in the business, I have come to the resolution to have the ship provide provisions for all the emigrants, and to include the expense of board in the sum to be specified in the contract. That is to say, passengers will either pay $18 for an emigrant's passage, their board being found and cooked for them, or sign a contract to pay that sum after one, two, or three years, as they prefer, with the important exception, also, that those who may remain more than three years, and decide not to accept of the Government grant of lands, will never be required to repay any amount whatever.

This arrangement, it is hoped, will overcome the difficulty expressed by many industrious men, but without money, who, living in the interior, have not found it possible to pay their expenses to the seaboard, and then to provide themselves with provisions (as the United States laws require) for at least one month in advance.

The board provided for emigrants will be the navy rations of the United States, minus intoxicating spirits, which will not be allowed in our vessels. The following is the fare:

NAVY RATION FOR EACH DAY OF THE WEEK.

Days.	Bread.	Beef.	Pork.	Flour.	Rice.	Dried Fruit.	Pickles.	Sugar.	Tea. Choice.	Coff. of either.	Butter.	Cheese.	Beans.	Molasses.	Vinegar.	Water.
	oz	lb	lb	lb	lb	lb	lb	oz	oz	oz	oz	oz	pt	pt	pt	gl
Sun.	14	1		½		¼		2	¼	1						1
Mon.	14		1					2	¼	1			½			1
Tues.	14	1			½			2	¼	1	2	2				1
Wed.	14		1				¼	2	¼	1			½			1
Thurs.	14	1		½		¼		2	¼	1						1
Friday	14	1	1		½			2	¼	1	2	2		½		1
Sat.	14						¼	2	¼	1			½		½	1
	98	4	3	1	1	½	½	14	1¾	7	4	4	1½	½	½	7

Every emigrant should be provided with a mattress two feet wide, and bedding, a gallon tin can (for water), a tin cup, a tin plate, knife and fork, a few pounds of soap, and towels, with such extra utensils as may be deemed necessary to hold the daily rations.

As efforts have been industriously made by unscrupulous men to misrepresent the conditions under which emigrants who not prepay their passages, will accept the offers of the Government of Hayti, it is deemed advisable to publish below, in full, the contract to be made with them. The words in italic and within brackets (blank in the original) are filled up to show precisely the terms on which a single man can emigrate. It should be distinctly understood, that no barrier whatever will be put to any man's return, excepting that he shall pay the sum of eighteen dollars before embarking for the United States, if he did not pay for his own passage from this country to Hayti. The Government of Hayti, while they will welcome all visitors, cannot reasonably be expected to pay their passages. Hence this provision.

The following is the contract with the emigrants who do not prepay their passages:

Articles of Agreement.

THIS AGREEMENT, made and entered into this [first] day of [January], A. D., 1861, by and between JAMES REDPATH, of Boston, General Agent of Emigration, on behalf of the Government of the Republic of Hayti, and [John Smith], late of [Detroit, Michigan], and an emigrant to Hayti;

WITNESSETH: That said James Redpath, on behalf of the Government of Hayti aforesaid, agrees to provide a passage for said [John Smith] from the port of [Boston] to the port of [St. Mark] in said Hayti, in the [Brig L'Ami d' Hatti], leaving the port of [Boston] on or about the [third] day of [January], 1861, upon the conditions hereafter following, viz:

First, said [John Smith] hereby acknowledges the receipt of [a] ticket of passage from said port of [Boston] to said port of [St. Mark], in Hayti, and agrees during the term of said voyage to provide [his] own bedding, and the necessary utensils for eating and drinking.

Secondly, in consideration of receiving the passage aforesaid, said [John Smith] further agrees, that if he accepts a grant of land from the Government of Hayti, under the provisions of the law on Emigration, approved by His Excellency the President of the Republic of Hayti, September 1, 1860, he will repay to the Treasury of the Republic of Hayti the sum of [eighteen] dollars, American currency, within [three years] from the date of this contract.

Furthermore, that if from any cause said [John Smith] sees proper to leave Hayti before the expiration of the term of three years from the date of [his] arrival in the Island, [he] shall pay the Treasury of the Republic of Hayti the sum of [eighteen] dollars, American currency, as repayment of expenses incurred by the agents of the Government for [his] passage to Hayti; but, nevertheless, with this express provision: That if [he] does remain three years in the Island from the date of [his] arrival therein, and does not see fit to accept a grant of land from the Government of the Republic of Hayti, [he] shall not be required to repay to the Treasury of the Repulic of Hayti, or any agent of Government thereof, any sum whatever on account of said passage.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the said parties have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year above written.

[L. S.] [John Smith.]
[L. S.] JAMES REDPATH.

First-cabin passengers, by Government vessels, will be charged $30 (payable invariably in advance), which will include all the necessities of a voyage to the tropics, and first-rate fare.

JAMES REDPATH,
General Agent.

CALL FOR EMIGRATION.

Men of our race dispersed in the United States! Your fate, your social position, instead of ameliorating, daily becomes worse. The chains of those who are slaves are riveted; and prejudice, more implacable, perhaps, than servitude, pursues and crushes down the free. Everything is contested with us in that country in which, nevertheless, they boast of liberty; they have invented a new slavery for the free, who believed that they had now no masters; it is this humiliating patronage which is revolting to your hearts. Philanthropy, in spite of its noble efforts, seems more powerless than ever to lead your cause to victory. Contempt and hatred increase against you, and the people of the United States desire to eject you from its bosom.

Come, then, to us! the doors of Hayti are open to you. By happy coincidence, which Providence seems to have brought about in your behalf, Hayti has risen from the long debasement in which a tyrannical government had held her; liberty is restored there. Come and join us; come and bring to us a contingent of power, of light, of labor; come, and together with us, advance our own common country in prosperity. We will come by this means to the aid of the philanthropists who make such generous efforts to break the chains of those of our brethren who are still in slavery.

Our institutions are liberal. The government is mild and moderate. Our soil is virgin and rich—we have large tracts of good land, nearly all uncultivated, which only need intelligent workmen to till them. Everything assures you in this country of a happy future. For those among you who possess capital, it will be easy to find at once a place among us. The country offers them immediate resources. They can count on the solicitude of the Government, and on its special protection. Our society is ready to adopt them and prepares for them a fraternal welcome. They will enjoy here all the considerations that they merit; they will occupy the rank that their respectability assigns them—all the things that a blind and barbarous prejudice refuses to them in countries inhospitable to our race.

The poorer emigrants shall have the right to all that their situation demands. The Government will provide for their first necessities, and will take the proper measures to secure to them a quiet and honorable asylum, as well as to facilitate for them the means of obtaining employment.

It is very natural that you should ask, before coming to an unknown country, what are the facilities that will be afforded to you, as well for the satisfaction of your first needs, as for your definitive settlement. This thought has seriously occupied the Chief of the Republic and his Government.

I proceed to state the determi[illegible] to which it has come:

To such of you as are not able to pay the expenses of your passage, aid will be given from the public treasury.

Agents, whom I shall presently appoint in the United States, will be charged to make the necessary arrangements in this respect.

On their arrival here, the emigrants will find lodging gratuitously, where, during the first few days, their wants will be provided for.

Government will occupy itself from this time with providing means to offer to each person, on arrival, either on private estates or the public domains, sufficiently remunerative work.

Every individual, the issue of African blood, may, immediately on arrival, declare his wish to be naturalized: and after one year's residence, he can become a citizen of Hayti, enjoying all his civil and political rights.

The emigrants will be exempt from military service, but their children, when they are of the requisite age, shall be held to perform the service conformably to the laws of the country; that is to say, for a limited time, and by the result of conscription. [Par suite du tirage au sort.] This conception does not constitute, in their favor, a modification of the law on the National Guard, of which every citizen must form a part.

You will have power, also, freely to exercise your religion.

I have spoken here only of the members of the African race, who groan in the United States more than elsewhere, by reason of the ignoble prejudice of color; but our sympathies are equally extended to all those of our origin who, throughout the world, are bowed down under the weight of the same sufferings. Let them come to us! The bosom of the country is open to them also. I repeat it, they will be able to acquire, either on the public or private estates, fertile lands, where, by the aid of assiduous labor, they will find that happiness which, in their actual condition, they cannot hope to find.

The man whom God has pointed out with his finger to elevate the dignity of his race, is found.

The hour of the reunion of the children of Hayti is sounded! Let them be well convinced that Hayti is the bulwark of their liberty!

Given at the office of the Secretary of State of the Interior, at Port-au-Prince, the 22d of August, 1859, 56th year of Independence.

The Secretary of State of Justice and of Worship, charged par interim, with the portfolio of the Interior and of Agriculture. F. E. DUBOIS.

LAWS ON EMIGRATION.

I.

Law on the Emigration into the Country of Persons of the African and Indian races.

FABRE GEFFRARD, President of Hayti,

By the advice of the Council of the Secretaries of State and the Legislative Bodies, after having considered and declared the urgency of it,

Has rendered the following law:

ARTICLE I. After the promulgation of the present law, five carreaux of land will be granted, free of all charge, to every family of laborers or cultivators of the African or Indian races who shall arrive in the Republic. This grant will be reduced two carreaux when the laborer or cultivator is unmarried.

ART. II. These grants will be delivered, without expense, and with a provisional title, to every family that shall have made, before the proper magistrate, the declaration prescribed by law with the view of obtaining naturalization, and they will be converted into final grants after a residence of a year and a day in the country.

ART. III. The final grants will be given in exchange for the provisional grants only when it shall have been ascertained by the Government agents that cultivation has already commenced on the property granted.

ART. IV. The grantee shall not have power to dispose of his grant before the expiration of seven consecutive years of occupation. Nevertheless, he will be able to obtain the authority to exchange his grant for another property, but only on the conditions, terms, and with the powers abovenamed.

The present law shall be promptly executed by the Secretary of State, of the Interior, and of Agriculture.

Given at the National House of Port-au-Prince, the 57th of September, year 57th of Independence.

The President of the Senate: F. LACRUZ.
The Secretaries: CELASTIN, J. Y. MENDOZA.

Given at the Chamber of Representatives of Port-au-Prince, the 5th September, 1860, year 5th of Independence.

The President of the Chamber:
W. CHANLATTE.
The Secretaries: J. THEBAUD, F. RICHIEZ.

IN THE NAME OF THE REPUBLIC:

The President of Hayti ordains that the foregoing law of the Legislative Bodies be stamped with the seal of the Republic, published and executed.

Given at the National Palace of Port-au-Prince, the 6th September, 1860, year 57th of Independence.

BY THE PRESIDENT: GEFFRARD.
The Secretary of State of the Interior and of Agriculture, F. JN. JOSEPH.
The Sec. of War and the Marine, T. DEJOIE.
The Keeper of the Seals, Secretary of State of the General Police, JH. LAMOTHE.
The Sec. of State of Justice, etc., F. E. DUBOIS.
The Sec. of State of Finances, Commerce, and Exterior Relations, VN. PLESANCE.

II.

Law on the Naturalization of Emigrants of the African and Indian Races.

FABRE GEFFRARD:

On the report of the Secretary of State of Justice, and by the advice of the Council of the Secretaries of State,

Considering that prompt action is demanded in behalf of those who possess the required qualifications to become Haytians, in order to enable them with facility to enter into the immediate enjoyment of the right attached to naturalization,

Proposes the following law:

ARTICLE I. Article 14 of the Civil Code is modified as follows: "All those who by virtue of the Constitution are able to acquire the rights of Haytian citizens, must, during the first month of their arrival in the country, before the Justice of the Peace of their residence, and in presence of two well known citizens, make a declaration to the effect that they come with the intention of settling in the Republic. They will, at the same time, before the Justice of the Peace, take oath that they renounce every other country save Hayti.

ART. II. Provided with the verbal process of the Justice of the Peace, setting forth the declaration that they come to settle in the Republic, and their taking of the oath, they will present themselves at the offices of the President of Hayti, to receive an act from the Chief of the State recognizing them citizens of the Republic.

ART. III. The present law annuls all laws or measures which are contrary to it, and shall be executed with dispatch by the Secretary of State for Justice. Given at the National Palace at Port-au-Prince, the 27th day of August, 1860, the 57th year of Independence. GEFFRARD.

[Then follow the signatures of various officials, as in the previous law. Both of these laws were unanimously passed through both branches of the Legislature.]

NOTICE.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE OF FINANCE.

Those of our citizens in the different localities of the Republic who are engaged in Agriculture, and who, thanks to persevering efforts, have succeeded in giving a certain development to these labors, can, if they desire it, procure for themselves, on the following conditions, such agricultural implements and machines as are used at present in the most enlightened countries, either for the separation of the seeds of cotton, or for the manufacture and refining of sugar.

A foreign company has offered these machines to the Government, which has consented to act as an intermediate agent between this company and the agriculturalists and manufacturers of the country who may need them.

The machines will be furnished at the lowest prices for which they are sold at any place in Europe, and their several prices shall be agreed upon between the purchasers and the government, according to the prices current which it has received from its foreign agents.

A commission of five per per cent. will be added to the price of the machines, to be paid down, and an interest of six per cent., and a yearly payment of a tenth or fifteenth on the principal, which will give to the real manufacturers an advantageous mode of payment.

Those who desire to procure the machines and utensils above named, should, on the appearance of this notice, have their names entered at the Office of the Secretary of State of the Interior and of Agriculture, and present to the high functionary, placed at the head of this department, an exact description of the mills, furnaces, &c., which they will need. These descriptions should minutely and precisely state the dimensions and power of each machine, and should be accompanied, by a well drawn plan, which would enable the company to decide on, and to execute the order conveniently.

When that is done, a contract in due form shall be passed between the Secretary of State of the Interior and the Agriculturalist or the tendering party, in which all the necessary conditions to secure the payment of the interest, and that of the installments shall be stated according to the contract. It is well understood that all the payments shall be made the Government which has become a guarantee for the contracts by virtue of which the machines are to be furnished.

Among the securities that will be required of the purchasers will be the machines themselves, and the plantations for which they are furnished.

The tendering party will be furnished, by the Minister of the Interior, a catalogue of the plans and drawings of the machines perfected for the use of Agriculture and of Industry.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Jan. 29, 1861.

The Weekly Anglo-African.

"MAN MUST BE FREE!—IF NOT THROUGH LAW, WHY THEN ABOVE THE LAW."

4/13

L. I. NO. 2. NEW YORK, AUGUST 10, 1861. PRICE FOUR C

he Weekly Anglo-African.
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY SATURDAY,
BY ROBT. HAMILTON,
48 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW YORK.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
Dollars per year, or Four Cents per copy, le on delivery.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.
Cents a line for the first insertion, and Three for each subsequent insertion.
ices of Births, Marriages, Deaths, Public ngs, &c., inserted for twenty-five Cents, pro they do not exceed five lines; if more than Five Cents for each additional line.
communications for the paper must be ad d ROBT. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman st., New York.

W JOHN BROWN FOUGHT AT HARPER'S FERRY.

was about twelve o'clock in the day n we were first attacked by the troops. to that, Capt. Brown, in anticipation ther trouble, had girded to his side the us sword taken from Col. Lewis Wash n the night before, and with that orable weapon, he commanded his men st General Washington's own State.

hen the Captain received the news the troops had entered the bridge from Iaryland side, he, with some of his men, into the street, and sent a message to Arsenal for us to come forth also. We ned to the street as ordered, when he —"The troops are on the bridge, com nto town; we will give them a warm ention." He then walked around among iving us words of encouragement, in wise:—"Men! be cool! Don't waste powder and shot! Take aim, and every shot count!" The troops will for us to retreat on their first appear ; be careful to shoot first." Our men well supplied with firearms, but Capt. n had no rifle at that time; his only on was the sword before mentioned.

e troops soon came out of the bridge, ip the street facing us, we occupying egular position. When they got with ty or seventy yards, Capt. Brown said, go upon them!" which we did, when l of them fell. Again and again the was repeated.

was now consternation among the s. From marching in solid mar'al ms, they became scattered. Some ened to seize upon and bear up the ided and dying—several lay dead upon ground. They seemed not to realize, st, that we would fire upon them, but ntly expected we would be driven out them without firing. Capt. Brown ned fully to understand the matter, and e, very properly and in our defence, rtook to forestall their movements. The uence of their unexpected reception after leaving several of their dead on ield, they beat a confused retreat into ridge, and there stayed under cover reinforcements came to the Ferry.

the retreat of the troops, we were or back to our former post. While go angerfield Newby, one of our colored was shot through the head by a per who took aim at him from a brick store w, on the opposite side of the street, who was there for the purpose of firing us. Newby was a brave fellow. He one of my comrades at the Arsenal. ell at my side, and his death was ptly avenged by Shields Green, the e of the band, who afterwards met his lmly on the gallows, with John Cope Newby was shot twice; at the first e fell on his side and returned it; as , a second shot was fired, and the ball d his head. Green raised his rifle in tant, and brought down the cowardly erer, before the latter could get his gun hrough the sash.

re was comparative quiet for a time, t that the citizens seemed to be wild terror. Men, women and children for the place in great haste, climbing up s and scaling the mountains. The seemed to be alive with white fugi fleeing from their doomed city. During me, Wm. Thompson, who was return m his errand from the Kennedy Farm, rrounded on the bridge by the rail men, who next came up, taken a pris the Wager House, tied hand and foot, t a late hour of the afternoon, cruelly red by being riddled with balls, and n headlong on the rocks.

te in the morning, some of his prison d Capt. Brown that they would like e breakfast, when he sent word for h to the Wager House to that effect, ey were supplied. He did not order ast for himself and men, as was cur but falsely stated at the time, as he cted foul play; on the contrary, when ed to have breakfast so provided for he refused.

tween two and three o'clock in the oon, armed men could be seen coming every direction; soldiers were march and counter-marching; and on the tains, a host of blood-thirsty ruffians swarmed, waiting for their opportunity to pounce upon the little band. The fighting commenced in earnest after the arrival of fresh troops. Volley upon volley was discharged, and the echoes from the hills, the shrieks of the townspeople, and the groans of their dying, all of which filled the air, were truly frightful. The Virginians may conceal their losses, and Southern chivalry may hide its brazen head, for their boasted bravery was well tested that day, and in no way to their advantage. It is remarkable, that except that one fool-hardy colored man was reported buried, no other funeral is mentioned, although the Mayor and other citizens are known to have fallen. Had they reported the true number, their disgrace would have been more apparent; so they wisely (?) concluded to be silent.

The fight at Harper's Ferry also disproved the current idea that slaveholders will lay down their lives for their property. Col. Washington, the representative of the old hero, stood "blubbering" like a great calf at supposed danger; while, the laboring white classes and non-slaveholders, with the marines, (mostly gentlemen from "furrin" parts,) were the men who faced the bullets of John Brown and his men. Hardly the skin of a slaveholder could be scratched in open fight; the cowards kept out of the way until danger was passed, sending the poor whites into the pitfalls, while they were reserved for the bragging, and to do the safe but cowardly judicial murdering afterwards.

As strangers poured in, the enemy took positions round about, so as to prevent any escape, within shooting distance of the engine house and Arsenal. Capt. Brown, seeing their manœuvres, said: "We will hold on to our three positions, if they are unwilling to come to terms, and die like men."

All this time, the fight was progressing; no powder and ball was wasted. We shot from under cover, and took deadly aim. For an hour before the flag of truce was sent out, the firing was uninterrupted, and one and another of the enemy were constantly dropping to the earth.

One of the Captain's plans was to keep up communication between his three points. In carrying out this idea, Jerry Anderson went to the rifle factory, to see Kagi and his men. Kagi, fearing that he would be overpowered by numbers if the Captain delayed leaving, sent word by Anderson to advise him to leave the town at once. This word Anderson communicated to the Captain, and told us also at the Arsenal. The message sent back to Kagi was, to hold out for a few minutes longer, when we would all evacuate the place. Those few minutes proved disastrous, for then it was that the troops before spoken of came pouring in, increased by crowds of men from the surrounding country. After an hour's hard fighting, and when the enemy were blocking up the avenues of escape, Capt. Brown sent out his son Watson with a flag of truce, but no respect was paid to it; he was fired upon, and wounded severely. He returned to the engine house, and fought bravely after that for fully an hour and a half, when he received a mortal wound, which he struggled under until the next day. The contemptible and savage manner in which the flag of truce had been received, induced severe measures in our defence, in the hour and a half before the next one was sent out. The effect of our work was, that the troops ceased to fire at the buildings, as we clearly had the advantage of position.

Capt. A. D. Stevens was next sent out with a flag of truce; with what success I will presently show. Meantime, Jeremiah Anderson, who had brought the message from Kagi previously, was sent by Capt. Brown with another message to John Henri, but before he got far on the street, he was fired upon and wounded. He returned at once to the engine house, were he survived but a short time. The ball, it was found, had entered the right side in such manner that death necessarily ensued speedily.

Capt. Stevens was fired upon several times while carrying his flag of truce, and received severe wounds, as I was informed that day, not being myself in a position to see him after. He was captured, and taken to the Wager House, where he was kept until the close of the struggle in the evening, when he was placed with the rest of our party who had been captured.

After the capture of Stevens, desperate fighting was done by both sides. The marines forced their way inside the engine-house yard, and commanded Capt. Brown to surrender, which he refused to do, but said in reply, that he was willing to fight them, if they would allow him first to withdraw his men to the second lock on the Maryland side. As might be expected, the cowardly hordes refused to entertain such a proposition, but continued their assault to cut off communication between our several parties. The men at the Kennedy Farm having received such a favorable message in the early part of the day, through Thompson, were ignorant of the disastrous state of affairs later in the day. Could they have known the truth, and come down in time, the result would have been very different; we should not have been captured that day. A handful of determined men, as they were, by taking a position on the Maryland side, when the troops made their attack and retreated to the bridge for shelter, would have placed the enemy between two fires. Thompson's news prevented them from hurrying down, as they otherwise would have done, and thus deprived us of able assistance from Owen Brown, a host in himself, and Tidd, Merriam and Coppic, the brave fellows comprising that band.

The climax of murderous assaults on that memorable day was the final capture of the engine house, with the old Captain and his handful of associates. This outrageous burlesque upon civilized warfare must have a special chapter to itself, as it concentrates more of Southern littleness and cowardice than is often believed to be true.

[From O. P. Anderson's Narrative.]

LETTER OF GERRIT SMITH TO SENATOR BRECKINRIDGE,

PETERBORO, July 23, 1861.

SENATOR BRECKINRIDGE—Dear Sir: I have just read your speech of the 16th inst., in the Senate. I do not deduce from it that you are dishonest—but only that you are self-deceived. You know the old story of the gentleman who gave, as his reason for not rescuing the drowning man, that he had never been introduced to him. But the gentleman was self-deceived, if he thought such an unheard-of regard for social forms to be the true reason. He failed to save the man simply because he did not care to save him. And not less groundless is your fancy, that it is owing to your great regard for Constitutional forms, that you do not fall in with the measures for saving the nation. You do not care to save it. Nay, it is evident that your heart has long been set on breaking it up. All who busy themselves in declaiming against the unconstitutionality of these measures, are self-deceived if nothing worse. Their concern to save the Constitution is no greater, but their concern to save the nation is much less, than that of others.

The traitors had got the control of some eight or nine of the States; had captured Fort Sumter; felt sure of Washington; were threatening the large cities of the North; and had, in a word, brought the nation to the brink of ruin. It was in these circumstances that President Lincoln made haste to save it. Shame to you for saying that he "made war!" His steps were not all constitutional, you say. Nevertheless, by such persons as were for saving the nation their unconstitutionality was forgiven if seen—but was probably unseen. Indeed so anxious were they for the life of the nation, that they had neither time nor heart to think of the Constitution. But you, being free from such anxiety, had leisure and composure for surveying the President's departures from the Constitution. Moreover these departures were all the greater in your eyes since they grew out of his honest and earnest endeavor to preserve a Government and a nation, which you were intent on destroying. A loyal man no more thinks of national rules when he sees his loved nation in imminent danger of a violent death, than does a true son think of family rules when he sees an assassin upon his loved father. But you, dear Sir, are in just the mood of mind to call for the rules and the red tape.

* * * * *

You denounce the President as a usurper. Most unjustly so. His words and deeds prove him to be an unsophisticated man. He is over careful to keep himself in unison with the public sentiment, and is too much afraid of taking a step in advance of it. He is a sincere servant of his country. You denounce the President for acting unconstitutionally. I honor him for hastening to save his country, by means, whether constitutional or unconstitutional. Exceedingly rare is the cause in which the Constitution may be put aside. But when, to hold to the Constitution is manifestly to lose the nation, he is both a coward and a traitor who will hold to it. The old Austrian Generals complained that the first Napoleon did not fight according to rule. Nevertheless, Frenchmen did not regret his victories, because they were achieved through the violation of rules. Frenchmen love France; and did you love America more than you love slavery, you would not regret her salvation even though it were purchased at expense to the Constitution. Your joy would be too full to leave room for regret.

This cry of "The Constitution! the Constitution!" is not less disgusting to patriots than was Johnny Hook's celebrated cry of "Beef! Beef!" It is even more so. For Johnny, was entirely sincere. He meant beef when he cried beef. But those who prate of the Constitution mean slavery. The Constitution was made for the saving of the nation. Very guiltily do they pervert it who degrade it to a watchword in their war upon the nation.

President Lincoln has done well. I admit that he might have done better. Not, however, by following your counsels, and, giving himself up to the study of Constitutional limitations, while the traitors were left to complete the destruction of Government and Nation. On learning that Sumter was taken, he should have made a sure and speedy end of the war. He should have "cut it short in righteousness," by proclaiming the freedom of the slaves in all the States which had seceded. This measure followed up as it should and would have been, would have ended the war ere now. Other States would have seen that they could not secede but at the peril of the like proclamation. Doubt not that the North would have sustained the President in it. They were in just the temper for it. The high measure would have harmonized with the storm of their indignation; and ere that storm had begun to subside, that measure should have been put to its nation saving operation.

Other nations agree with the great writers on the "Law of Nations; with Vattel, for instance, who says that in war we have the "right to weaken our enemy, in order to render him incapable of supporting his unjust violence;" "to deprive him of everything which may enable him to make war," and to deprive him of it "in the manner most suitable to us." But we, with rare generosity and chivalry, leave to our enemy his slaves to till his land for him, and build his fortifications. Without the help of his slaves, our enemy could hardly maintain a war against Lilliput. Our last Congress—although the Pro-slavery war was, in point of fact, already begun, though not so admitted by all—not only failed to meet the war, or, if you prefer, the prospect of the war, by providing "for the common defence and general welfare of the United States," but it actually took steps to provide for the protection of Slavery. Our President's first official words were gratuitous assurance of such protection. With such assurance do our Generals enter upon their friendly war against the Rebels. And the people of the North, instead of assembling in all their towns and calling on Government to abolish Slavery, and thus stop the war, and save them from the needless loss of tens of thousands of lives, and hundreds of millions of money, feel little power and less disposition to move against Slavery. Whence this infatuation and this paralysis? It is a part of our punishment for having fostered and honored Slavery until at length we have come to regard it as sacred and inviolable—for having served it and fallen down before it until at length we are spell-bound and helpless in its presence. In prosecuting the present war we are almost as much embarrassed by our reverence for Slavery as were the ancient Egyptians in battle by their worship of animals—their enemy ingeniously protecting himself by placing the objects of worship between himself and the Egyptians. The Egyptians were to be pitied because it was their enemy who made this appalling disposition of the sacred animals. We are not to be pitied, because we can, if we will only muster the resolution to do it, hurl Slavery out of our path. The enemies of the Jews were wont to fall upon them on the Sabbath, hoping they would not defend themselves on the day they so superstitiously observed. Our enemies venture to wage a war for Slavery, and even to employ slaves in it, presuming on our long service and worship of Slavery that we cannot have a heart to strike at it.

I thought the war would be very short, because I assumed that the North would soon be sufficiently provoked to tell the slaves that they were free. She will yet tell them so; but I fear she has not yet suffered enough to do it. It may be that the God of the oppressed has much more suffering in store for her before she can be brought to tell them so. It may be that the war must first carry sorrow into thousands more of her families, and much more of ruin to her industrial and commercial interests, ere she will feel constrained to do so. God's controversy with the North is the same as with the South; and "LET MY PEOPLE GO," is the one only condition on which He will consent to end it with either. What has come upon the nation does not astonish the handful of Abolitionists. For thirty years have they been "crying in the wilderness" and in the city that Slavery, if not soon put away in peace and righteousness, would end in blood. How happy had they been listened to! How different from now would have been the condition of our country had William Lloyd Garrison been heeded—that great and good man whom more than thirty years ago God called in his youth and from his obscurity and commissioned to sound a prophet's alarm in the sleeping, alas, still sleeping, ears of the American people! Then would our nation have been united instead of broken up; the blessing of peace upon it instead of the curse of war; not one slave in it instead of 4,000,000; then it had been the glory instead of the shame of mankind; the pattern instead of the warning of the nations. But I repeat that the war may not end very soon. He, into whose ears have ascended the groans of the successive generations of American slaves, and who has bottled up all their tears, may not be content with less than wide desolations in both the North and the South. He may think this needful for a sufficiently conspicuous and enduring monument of the crime and punishment of Slavery—for a sufficiently effective warning to all nations not to oppress His unoffending and helpless poor. Would God that all this might be averted by the instant and penitent abolition of Slavery! Would God such an abolition might not be delayed until He shall say: "But ye would not! Behold your house is left unto you desolate!" I fear, however, that it will. I sorrowfully lay my account with the continued stupidity and infatuation of the American people in regard to Slavery. I even fear that Congress will close the present session without resolving in favor of its abolition.

Pardon my wonder that a gentleman of your very great intelligence should be so anxious to save [illegible] the impending destruction. It could survive it but a short time. The war has already given it death wounds. The shots at Fort Sumpter, being all shots at Slavery, were enough to make the death of Slavery sure. Never more will the cotton manufacturers rely on the South for supplies of cotton—and that is as much as to say that never more will Slavery recover its vitality. From other considerations, also, Slavery has lived out its day. The accursed relic of barbarism is a trespasser on the advanced and advancing civilization of Christendom. It will soon hide itself forever from the sight of earth and heaven,

Very respectfully yours,
GERRIT SMITH.

BARBARISM IN ALABAMA.

From the N. Y. Tribune.

About two weeks before Christmas 1860, the inhabitants of Pine Level, a little town in Montgomery County, Alabama, were startled by the announcement that the negroes on the settlement had planned an insurrection, to take place on Christmas eve. The discovery of the plot was made by a planter, who, being one of those who believe that the negroes must be whipped sometimes with or without cause, had concluded to whip one of his slaves at the above time by way of pastime. It must here be remembered, that for some time previous, and especially, after President Lincoln's election, the Southern press had been doing its best to create an excitement and ill-feeling against the Northerners—warning the people against Abolitionists, insurrectionists, and incendiaries—assuring them constantly that the Northerners intended to put an end to Slavery by sending emissaries to tamper with slaves, and induce them to repeat so-called "JOHN BROWN RAIDS." Thus, the most stirring accounts of Abolitionists and their doings were set in circulation, and were eagerly believed by the frightened slaveocracy. The planter, in thus whipping his negro without cause, except to keep him in due respect of his master's supremacy, was acting according to the custom of the greater number of slaveholders While the punishment was in progress, the poor slave asked:

"Massa, why, do you whip me? I have tried to do right, massa."

"Do you want me to stop?" asked the master.

"O yes, massa, please massa!

The master, continuing the unjust chastisement, said, "Don't you know that I have an excellent reason to punish you? you have done something very bad lately, and I will stop only if you will tell what you have done." The poor slave in his desire to satisfy the tyrant and stop the lashes recalled all his old sins; but the confession of these failed to satisfy his master, and stroke after stroke of the lash was administered. With increasing agony the slave prayed, "O stop, massa, I will tell all you want me to, but I don't know what you want." He was then asked:

"Have'nt you lately been speaking about Mr. Lincoln to the niggers?"

"Yes, massa," was the reply.

"Don't you conspire to make yourselves free?" (continuing whipping.)

"Yes, massa. O massa! do stop; I can't stand it; you kill me."

"How are you going to make yourselves free?"

"I don't know, massa. O massa, stop, massa! They say Mr. Lincoln is a powerful black man, and he will make us all free if we rise!"

"Don't you intend to kill all the whites?"

"Yes, massa, O stop, massa!"

By this time the planter had worked himself into such a state of excitement that he continued striking his slave in the most cruel manner—asking all sorts of questions which his irritated state of mind suggested—all of which his victim would invariably confirm by uttering, "Yes, massa, O massa! don't kill me!"

Not daring thus to deny any question whatever, the slave confessed that he, together with several other negroes whom he mentioned, had conspired to rise on Christmas eve, and that he intended to kill his master with an axe. This confession infuriated the planter; and, after having carefully secured the negro by tying up his hands and feet, he proceeded to impart the disclosures to his neighbors, who of course, believing every word, became equally excited and ran for their guns and pistols—arrested those who were implicated or suspected—and kept the strictest watch over the rest, threatening to shoot down any negro, man or woman, who would dare to disobey any order from a white man.

The so-called conspirators were whipped and examined in the same manner, and of course found no other means of satisfying their torturers than by confessing everything they were asked.

The whipping was continued for four days in Pine Level and on the surrounding plantations; a great number of slaves were implicated as conspirators, and the most contradictory revelations were brought to light, which were made to correspond by a skillful questioning and energetic whipping. Several hundred negroes were thus tortured in a most barbarous manner. Two committees—one on whipping, the other recording confessions—were at work almost day and night during these four days of the horrible scenes which I witnessed. I will relate only a few incidents.

A slave, during the process, was asked by a bystander, "Don't you niggers intend to get married to the white women?" The question after being repeated several times, was at last answ Being asked to giv woman whom he w the wife of Marti be present. Noll barrels of his rev strangely enough, f one of the dense crowd gathered around; he then drew his knife and jumped at him, to "cut the throat of the d——d black son of a——." The crowd, or rather the owner of the slave, held him back, and Noll then went to seek satisfaction by torturing other negroes. This Martin Noll is at present captain of the Pine Level Company, now stationed in Virginia under Beauregard. A Massachusetts man by the name of Baldwin, who was impressed by him in Pine Level, lately deserted from him and sought refuge in Fortress Monroe, and his statement was published in some of the New York papers.

Another negro called Simon, a blacksmith, was implicated by a tortured fellow slave, and as Simon was one of the most intelligent negroes in town (he was very shrewd and could read and write better than the average of the Pine Level Slaveocracy,) he was suspected to be one of the ringleaders.

He was said to have made a key to open Mr. Shaver's dry goods and provision store, where the negroes would seize arms and powder, and as a reward for this key he was to receive the store. The negro, whose enforced confession implicated him, told precisely the spot where the key was concealed; on searching, however, nothing could be found there, nor in his hut or shop, to serve as evidence against him. Yet Simon was tortured. He was undressed, had his hands and feet tied, and his knees were bent in against his chest, and a stick put under them above his arms. In this condition he was rolled on the floor, and received 280 lashes—his blood, of course, flowing in streams ere the punishment was over. When one of the torturing brutes was tired, he would ask his neighbor to take his turn, while others were counting the number of lashes, and shouting in a diabolical way, "Go on; make him tell; go on!" But Simon received the 280 lashes without uttering a word of confession or praying for pity, and the brutes only stopped because they found out if they went on there would soon be an end of his sufferings. When he had a little recovered he was carried away. One Purcell, a young man, bookkeeper with Mr. Clarke, noticing that Simon got sick, drew his knife and held it at his throat, while another member of the chivalry, one Levi Shaver, pointed his cocked revolver at his mouth, both threatening to kill him at once if he would dare to vomit.

Of those who were whipped, almost all, men and women, had their clothing torn off, many being tied up like Simon, others being whipped on both sides, until their bodies presented the appearance of one vast wound.

When the slaveholders thought they were in possession of all the secret plans of the conspiracy, the same were summed up as follows:

During Christmas night, at the sign of the bursting of a big pine tree, the slaves were to rise and slay all the white men and old women; the remaining white women were to be distributed among the negroes; and beside a white lady, every black man was to receive two mules, forty acres of land, the necessary agricultural implements, and $500 in cash. The principal leaders of the insurrection were said to be: William Rollo, a poor white man; Andreas Higgins, a free octaroon; Simon, the blacksmith, a slave; Ike Zang, a ditcher, called "Ditchey," a slave, and uncle Tom, a slave.

William Rollo had been driven from Pine Level four weeks previous to the insurrection, because he was suspected of buying stolen chickens from the negroes, and had gone to Montgomery. Some negroes had said that he was to lead the insurgents from Pine Level to Montgomery, where they would take possession of everything valuable, and where Rollo would be established as the principal storekeeper—all the black folks having pledged themselves to trade with him. This scheme may seem incredible, but was generally believed by the gullible Chivalry, who for months afterward could not find anything ridiculous in it. They at once dispatched two men to Montgomery to capture the chief of the conspiracy, who was so unconscious of the affair that even after having been warned, he made no attempt to escape. Poor Rollo was not a little surprised at being tied up with ropes and dragged along by two ferocious brutes, one of whom was the before-named Martin Noll. Nothing but the confession of the slaves, obtained in the manner described above, was brought as evidence against him; and though the Southern Chivalry exclude negro evidence from all the courts, still a drunken mob (there was neither judge nor jury) condemned him to be hanged in company with the others who were said to be ringleaders.

The gallows was erected in the middle of the town, that the spectacle might strike terror into the hearts of the slaves, and that everybody might participate in the enjoyment. Rollo was placed on a car, and a rope was then put around his neck; he could hear his poor wife screaming, and see her begging the brutes to spare him. She wanted to run to his rescue, but was actually pushed and kicked back—the car was hurried off, and Rollo was left in his agony—while his wife accused his murderers and entreated God to avenge her innocent husband.

During the two or three following days the other so-called conspirators were disposed of in the same manner. Some prayed for their lives and some said that the white folks could do with the poor nigger what they pleased. Simon begged to be released of his pains as soon as possible; he had previously begged to be shot or killed in some manner, and said he was glad but one or two slaves, whom t ended to hang, took them away places, thereby saving their pro other feeling than cupidity pre There never has been investig matter before the court, none was accused, and nobody has be Rollo's wife is now a beggar. of the slaves did not even dare to cent of indemnity. The only the matter was made in some ne townships, where more intelligen once perceived the true state of threatened to interfere if the P mob did not stop their illegal p Still, the excitement lasted till C Of course, the slaves were not a enjoy their holidays as in olde Christmas even the whole white p was on the lookout, fearing that th tree might yet burst. About 12 when the anxiety was at the high somebody imagined that he hea picious noise.

Imagine four to five hundred men, women, and children, m armed, and in trembling expec coming events. At length, to assu selves, they concluded that thr should go out as a reconnoiterin But only two of the Chivalry offere and finally a German shopkeeper J. M—— had to volunteer to mak required number. Well knowing was a humbug, he felt amused at of his mounted companions. Aft miles' ride they came upon a hal guished camp-fire. There the bef tioned Purcell stopped, and remarke chattering teeth, that the niggers mu held a meeting there. He pretend their footsteps distinctly, and slo vanced, cocked revolver in one h bowie-knife in the other. Whe 150 paces distant from the big pi Purcell proposed that one of the re ering party should dismount, an toward the tree as a scout. J. went alone to the tree, of course discovering anything, and stealthil ing a good laugh at his comrades. turning he reported that he had hea a suspicious noise, which had also b case with his trembling comrades. hurried home, reporting the camp-fir footsteps, and suspicious noise (the M——'s opinion made by little pigs bushes). During the whole night Level folks were in dreadful antic an attack; the whites were afrai slaves, and the latter were afraid masters.

Events similar in character, much smaller extent, and not so g credited, happened at Prattville and gaville, near Montgomery. At thos the negroes were whipped until th fessed, and at Autogaville several and one white man were hung.

Hail, Crimson Morn.

We are awakened again from the ber of gloom to behold in the fir of hope, THE WEEKLY ANGLO-AF another orb of promise to light and our path along the steep and rugge of sorrow to that of welcome joy.

We are awakened too in a fruitf son, for 'tis summer. NATURE IS IN ALL HER BEAUTY. The fields are ing with their bounteous blessing from forest and hill echo the rich of nature's sweet songsters to delig grateful senses. Man's heart is lifted up and each succeeding day as he ris greet from hill top the ruddy tint he exclaims, from the gushing full his heart, "Hail, Crimson Morn!"

Yes, nature is kind, though she yields some spots weeds, in others fr flowers. There is a good gardener rules her, and in his own good time the unhallowed weeds from her bur bosom, and plants instead wholesome to nourish and gladden the child earth.

But again we turn from this brigh templation, and a cloud obscures the ance of morn. The songs of the are drowned in the groans of the and the crimson beams are turn crimson floods. Alas! It is the of civilization, now as ever, markin foot-prints in blood. Her irres power subdued two quarters of the and she is marching onward and on with sure and steady step, knowin complexion in the glorious DEEDS of and will continue until the whole shall be relieved of the unhallowed of heathenism and barbarism which a portion of the earth—God's foot Let us arouse from our slumbers and this glorious light. Let us encourag strengthen its power. Let us appoi our watchman on the tower to pro the good news when the cloud shall away and the bright morn shall again on man in his primitive cha otherwise from waking dreams of morn, we sleep again in sorrow.

The Weekly Anglo-African.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 10, 1861.

Advertisements for this paper must be [illegible] by the cash.

Copies of this paper can be purchased of [illegible] dealers everywhere.

WHO PAYS FOR THE WAR?

It is assumed very generally that the North will conquer the South. There is difference of opinion as to the time it will take, but not in regard to the result. Two are greater than four, twenty greater than eight, and twenty millions of freemen must whip eight millions of slaveholders.

We [illegible] nothing of the Justice, Humanity, [illegible] &c. &c., which are claimed as make-weights on either side—so far as we can see, [illegible] al reason; nor do we say aught of the [illegible] interference of the Almighty by [illegible] such men as Garrison and Gerritt Smith [illegible] to hope rather than see that this [illegible] emancipation.

[illegible] grant that the North will conquer [illegible] who will foot up the bill? It is usual, [illegible] that the conquered nation pays [illegible]s of the war. That is to say the [illegible]d pay—a thing they never have [illegible] war.

[illegible] the South be made to pay the expenses of this war? The sum will range from [illegible] thousand millions of dollars. But the [illegible] already bankrupt. How can it pay? [illegible] a suggestion to offer, [illegible] een calculated that the slaves at the [illegible] worth two thousand millions of dollars as property. But that property has de[illegible]l of seventy-five per cent. since the [illegible] they are worth less now than five-[illegible] millions of dollars—as property, and [illegible] benefited by the depreciation.

[illegible] this five-hundred millions of dollars [illegible] of Congress, or proclamation of the [illegible] be suddenly converted into MEN! [illegible] cost the Southern slaveholders five-hundred millions of dollars, and would pay the United States three thousand millions of dol-[illegible]

[illegible] would be a gain of four millions to the people of the United States. Union [illegible] best stripe, dyed in the wool, sub-[illegible] fits of dishonesty in peace, to no [illegible] war, true hearted, strong-limbed and [illegible] the cause of liberty as men alone [illegible] have been baptised in the blood of [illegible]

[illegible] llions who would need and earn and [illegible] clothing, and provisions, and oh [illegible] bought, education, by a steady and [illegible] and joyous outpouring of industrious [illegible] as the South has never witnessed.

[illegible]EEDOM hand in hand with labor
Walketh strong and brave!

[illegible]eed men, the bone and sinew of the [illegible] who have hitherto vainly "prayed God [illegible]t of that banner;" would of them-[illegible] the expenses of the war in money, and in the enduring cement with [illegible]y would hold together forever [illegible] broad fair Empire State with State.

[illegible] see—for one suit per annum of negro [illegible] there would be a demand for one suit [illegible] and one broadcloth; for one coarse [illegible] a dozen; for one chip hat, at least [illegible] and one beaver; for one pair of bro-[illegible] pair of shoes, to say nothing of [illegible]. And when we come down to wo-[illegible]xins"—ki. Why they would require [illegible]zen "Claflin & Mellens" dry goods [illegible] keep up the supply.

[illegible] it is objected, that the masters will not be willing to live in the same states along with their recently emancipated slaves! Indeed! This is no difficulty at all. The masters, by their rebellious acts, by their war and perfidy, [illegible]ited all claim to live in those states at [illegible] only Union men, women and children [illegible] the South, with few exceptions, are [illegible]es! The land of the masters, which [illegible] to the government by the law of con-[illegible] or at least the right of the conquerors [illegible] be bestowed on the slaves by act of Congress; and then, if there be any difficulty, [illegible] be settled by the people of the slave states themselves—to wit, the emancipated [illegible]

Thus [illegible]ll pay for the war. Let Congress im-[illegible] pass the Act of Emancipation, and the war will be at an end. There will be no more [illegible] of [illegible] hopes and fears, depending on General this and General that. There will be no more [illegible] the issue of bat-[illegible] plain. Men [illegible] know what they are fighting for, Christians will know on which side God is, and [illegible] to the battle [illegible]uting freedom! Glory [illegible] vah; [illegible] banners bearing the mot[illegible] ALL" would be a host in them-[illegible] which the hosts of slavery would [illegible] selves in vain.

[illegible]l the war be paid for; otherwise it [illegible]er be a victory to the North nor to [illegible] nor to the cause of humanity.

[illegible]E REV. H. H. GARNET

although the choir was quite slim. The Rev. J. A. Prime then offered prayer. "Blow ye the trumpet blow," was the next hymn sung. After which the Rev. Mr. Garnet announced as his text, the 26th chap. of Acts, verse 6.

In a brief and hasty manner he passed in review the nature of hope, showing its close alliance with faith. He also spoke of the promises made by God, in relation to the seed of Abraham, and his unbounded faith in this and all other promises made by God. And after showing by many examples and incidents, the proneness of the world to persecute the righteous for opinions' sake, gently urged his hearers to cultivate a spirit of charity and tolerance where we are not able to think alike. In this way, and this way only, can we ever hope to become a united people. He said that all his persecutions arose from the fact that he believed what God had said concerning our poor despised and down trodden race, as much as any other promise made in the Bible; and because of the utterance of that belief, many of whom he had expected better things, had sought to crush him. But he trusted that they might yet learn to tolerate, and not only to tolerate, but to defend every man in the free expression of his opinions, provided they were not detrimental to the moral well being of society. He urged his hearers to greater exertions in every line of duty, but he particularly besought the people to unity of exertion in the common cause, stating that unless they become more united, they are a doomed race in this land. At the conclusion of the discourse, which occupied about an hour in the delivery, he bade the people farewell. Mr. Garnet, will leave in a few days for England, where he goes to confer with Anti-slavery friends, and also to secure a little rest from his arduous labors. He has kindly promised to furnish us with a letter occasionally.

THE FIRST OF AUGUST

Was very generally celebrated by our people, but being without an organ till within a few days (our first number having been issued on the 27th of July), they had no means of making their arrangements generally known.

THE YONKERS CELEBRATION.

The day being very fine, many of our people wended their way to the boat and barge provided for their accommodation by Messrs. Kenney, Miller, and Nelson, and after a very pleasant sail of about four hours we arrived at the place of destination. Everything passed off pleasantly on the passage up. The band discoursed its most lively strains, whilst the wave of many a friendly hand gave us a cheer as we glided along. We regretted to see that some sharpers were permitted to have a gaming table on board, disposing of their brass jewelery at 25 cents per throw.

The meeting was organized at three o'clock, by the appointment of MR. JOS. W. B. SMITH to the chair, and ROBT. HAMILTON, secretary.

The Chairman made a few remarks on taking the chair which were very well received. We regret that we cannot give our readers a report of the Chairman's remarks, as they contained some things which our enemies ought to know, but as they were in unison with the sentiments of our people generally in reference to the war, we will refrain from publishing them at present reserving them for a more convenient season. After the performance of an appropriate piece by the band, the Rev. Dr. Pennington took the stand and after taking one of those rapid glances at the Heros of the black race of which, he alone, of all our public men is the most capable, passed to a review of the duties of the colored men in view of the dangers that envelope the country. The Dr. has been pleased to enlarge on the subject, in a written document, which will be found in another column. At the Dr.'s suggestion three cheers were given for our last hero, Wm. Tilman. The band, at the conclusion of the oration, played "God Save the Queen."

The Rev. J. D. S. Hall was then introduced. The shortness of time prevented him from delivering much of an address, but his and the remarks of Mr. Jeremiah Powers were received with much applause. The company, at half-past five o'clock, were summoned to the boat. This early departure from the ground was caused by the failure, as we understand, of Mr. Griffin and the white man who keeps the bar to fulfil their promises in regard to their quota of the expenses of the celebration. As the same thing occurred last year at Yonkers, we think that it will be some time ere there is another celebration held there.

PIC NIC AT BELLVUE GARDEN.—Prof. Voorhies' Pic Nic on the Anniversary of British West India Emancipation, was a very fine affair. The company began to assemble about one o'clock, as there was to be a promenade in the evening. The crowd continued to increase during the afternoon, who enjoyed themselves by boat sailing, scupping and pleasant walks through the grove; while others were participating in the mazy dance, directed by the Prof. as master of ceremonies, assisted by Messrs. White and Freeman. The company was a pleasant one, and nothing occurred to mar the harmony of the occasion. About four hundred persons, as near as I could calculate, were present. The festivities were kept up until after [illegible] o'clock, when all seemed to regret that the [illegible] separation had come. About six [illegible] H. Townsend addressed the assemblage in a [illegible] well-toned remarks, touching the subject of West India Emancipation, and the state and condition of our own country at the present time—commenting pretty severely upon the system of American ~~caste which~~ proscribes us in the schools, churches, mechanics' [illegible] its remedies, were also spoken of by Mr. T., whose remarks were well received by the audience, and a large number of recruits for the army who were present. After which several patriotic songs were sung by Messrs. Dangerfield, Mannings, Johnson, and Voorhies, the assembly joining in the chorus, accompanied by the band.

P. S. I understand that the Prof. proposes having a moonlight excursion in September; if such be the case, we wish him a bumper, as he is ever on the alert in catering for the public amusement.

EXCELSIOR.

EMANCIPATION DAY IN WILLIAMSBURGH passed off pleasantly and quietly. The celebration, through the enterprise of J. A. Trower, who planned and managed it, was a perfect success. The daily papers of the day after the affair were inclined to represent it as a failure as far as attendance was concerned, but we will assure our readers that we have in our possession sufficient data to show that not less than fifteen hundred persons visited the Park during the day. One dirty little sheet called the "Brooklyn Daily Times," the editor of which, it is reported, (we hope falsely,) to have "contraband blood in his veins." And which (we mean the paper,) has secured an existence by the patronage of the colored people, made a miserable attempt to caricature the gathering, but the effort was so characterized by palpable falsehoods that the sensible portion of its readers were disgusted with it. We would here suggest to the "Times" editor that as his continued blackguarding of the colored people does but a little toward falsifying the report that he is "one of them," it would be well to refrain from it and not bring further discredit on them by playing the blackguard as well as ingrate.

But to the celebration. At an early hour in the afternoon an organization was had, and Mr. Samuel S. Rankins proceeded to read the following letter from Mr. William P. Powell, recently of Liverpool, who had been announced as the orator of the occasion.

NEW BEDFORD, July 30, 1861.

DEAR FRIEND:—Referring to our conversation when we last met as to my participating in the exercises of your first of August celebration, I beg to say that it will be inconvenient for me to be present, as business of importance requires my presence in Boston on or about that date. Under these circumstances I could do no less than to advise you of the cause of my non-attendance.

In the meantime I do not consider my attendance of any great importance, other than to unite with you and others in the grand Hallelujah of this, the West India Negro's Jubilee.

The act of the British Parliament which proclaimed the boon of freedom to 800,000 West India slaves, was one of long withheld justice, and not an experiment. It was the right of the enslaved, and not a privilege. It was the duty of the government, and not one of magnanimity—what a contrast this stupendous iniquity presents in the nineteenth century. Two hundred and forty-one years ago England joined hands with Spain, Portugal, France, Holland, Denmark, and all civilized Europe, (Russia excepted,) and in the name of a crucified Jesus robbed Africa of more than 200,000,000 of her children. Less than one hundred years ago, as a nation that had sinned, grievously sinned before high heaven, and the world's humanity, England humbled herself as it were in sackcloth and ashes, and abolished the infamous African slave trade. Twenty-seven years ago in order to make her former repentance not to be repented of, doubly sure, Great Britain at a sacrifice of £20,000,000 set another example worthy to be imitated by the advocates of negro-slavery in this country, and which adds another bright page in the imperishable book of fame, pre-eminently glorious, I again repeat it by emancipating 800,000 British West India slaves. It is without a parallel in the world's history. It has renovated—given an impetus, and, opened wide the floodgate of commercial greatness all over the world, beyond the comprehension of the most astute political economist. It has reconstructed on a prominent basis the free industry of that little circumscribed gem of the ocean, upon whose imperial dominions the sun never sets! the glory of England, the only safe asylum for the oppressed of every nation (Africa not excepted,) whose proud flag has floated upon the pinnacle of the temple of fame, and withstood the surging waves of time for more than a thousand years, growing brighter and brighter in the glorious sunlight of her progressive free institutions! What has made that speck of earth, that sea-girt isle and secured for her to the end of time, the fear, wonder and admiration of the whole world, "great, glorious and free? I answer. Her freemen—free labor, free thought, free speech—free constitution and her free christianity. England's success, prosperity, and indomitable powers need no encomiums from my humble self. I have seen it in her thousands of stupendous factories and smoked chimneys towering up to the heavens belching forth their lurid light at midnight as signals of remunerated free industry. I have seen her millions of free operatives, agriculturists, mechanics and artisans (the "greasy mechanics, small-fisted farmers, and mudsills,"—so to speak in South Carolina parlance,) on their holiday excursion, dressed in English broadcloths, satins and silks. It is seen in her mercantile marine with tens of thousand ships. It is seen in her mammoth floating batteries of wood and iron, part propelled by steam and manned by tens of thousand of brave tars. It is seen in hundreds of thousand of her invincible soldiers and volunteer corps, who dare to do and die in defence of their country's honor! All! all! speak out in thunder tones the irresistable genius of British freedom.

But how stands the record in our own unfortunate distracted country? Alas! tell it not in heathen lands, publish it not in the [illegible]ds progressive civiliza-[illegible] king—the lords of [illegible] open rebellion with [illegible]nst the best slave-[illegible]hat ever cursed the [illegible] I say that the lords of the lash still live as a terrible power.

The time was when this "vexatious question" could have been calmly discussed to successful results. Even slavery—chattel slavery could have been abolished never to have shook its gory lock into the face of the nation in 1871—by compensation, and the question of non-extension could also have been settled for all times to come, if Missouri had been persistently refused admission into the Union as a slave State in 1819 and 20.

Still even then there were hopes that, the growing civilization of the age would devise some safe and feasible plan whereby American slavery could be ultimately abolished. Hence the organization of the African Colonization Society, an institution which never even as much as pretended to ameliorate the condition of the slave, but if any thing, rendered his emancipation entirely beyond the hope of redemption. For instance—from 1816 to 1861 only 5,770 slaves have been colonized, or within a fraction of just two weeks of this years increase, and less than two and a half slaves per week for the last forty-five years have been emancipated under the auspices of that "Slogomotive" Society.

Now, computing the slaves value per capita the same in 1816 as the emancipated 800,000 West Indian slaves in 1834, at $187,500,000, and hypothecate the computed sum supposed to have been received and expended by the Colonization Society in forty-five years—that is to say $3,600,000 as an emancipation fund, and all the slaves then living, and all born on or after 1816, declared free, and the African and inter-state slave trade put a stop to the compound interest together with the principal $3,6000,000 would have increased in 1871, to the enormous sum of $230,400,000, leaving a surplus of $42,900,000 sufficient to have paid for all the slaves in 1816, and to have educated them at the same time. But in my humble opinion the abolition of American Slavery will now be subjected to the laws of physical force, the signs of the times clearly indicate that negro slavery in this country must be abolished, or else there will be an everlasting end to this model republic.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

WM. P. POWELL.

After the reading of the letter, remarks were made by Messrs. Willis A. Hodges and others, at the conclusion of which the "Sir Trower Union Club" sung the "Star Spangled Banner," assisted by the entire audience. Mr. Trower then addressed the audience as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen, we are here to celebrate the emancipation of the slaves of the British West India Islands, which took place August 1st, 1838, Think of four millions of human beings bound by the iron chain s of slavery! Oh! If they could call themselves free men and women, if only for a day, what would they not give in exchange for the privilege. It is said that the slaves are better off than the free colored people of the North. Is it because they are worked and driven worse than horses? Is it because their infants are taken from their mothers breast, and the mother sold never to see her child again—the husband separated from the wife? the son from the father? Do you call this faring better than the people of the North? Although you will see slaves in the South, dressed in broadcloth and patent leather boots, with the appendages of gold watch and chain, and if asked, some will say that they love master better than liberty, but go on the plantations and see how they are treated there, and if your heart don't ache, it will be because you have no humanity. They will tell you, "Give me liberty, if with only a crust of bread a day,"

In conclusion, let me say to you, sons and daughters of liberty, live in love and unity, the good effects of which I will illustrate. I visited St. Domingo while Boyer was president. The whole island was under his jurisdiction, and the people were loving and united. But how do we find it now? One half in the hands of the Spanish, and the other occupied by the Haytiens. So much for disunion. Let us pray, my friends, that God may hasten on the time when the chains of slavery shall be broken and the captive set at liberty. When fathers, mothers, sisters and brothers who have been sold, never to see each other again, shall have a glorious reunion."

After Mr. Trower had finished his address, the assemblage proceeded to enjoy themselves in every possible manner; the young men and women taking to the dance, for which provisions had been made by securing the services of Prof. Robert H. Brown and band, while the juveniles took to the swings, flying horses, &c. About 6 o'clock Prof. E. G. Hutchinson made his appearance, bringing with him the balloon, the ascension of which the assemblage so anxiously awaited. After but short preparation and the sending off of a small balloon as a pilot, the mammoth one, on which appeared in very large letters, "EMANCIPATION," made its way to the heavens, where its movements were watched by thousands of persons until it was lost from sight. It probably landed somewhere on Staten Island. After this feature of the affair was over, the company began to leave for home, and at eight o'clock the park was entirely deserted.

The Springfield, O., "Evening News" furnishes the following:

Our "colored brethren" had a day of it yesterday. Ward's wood swarmed with them, and the streets were alive with them. At the wood, Messrs. Shelton, Douglass, and others made fine speeches. During the evening the young gentlemen and their partners "tripped the light, fantastic toe," and did various other things. A number of the ladies were very beautiful, and one of our brother editors had his head completely turned—so much so that he spits backwards to-day. Our colored friends "had us" yesterday. The town surrendered. They put up at the Willis, patronized the saloons, visited dry-goods palaces, and made themselves generally prevalent. We hope (and we are pretty sure) that they [illegible] had a good time.

EVERY BARBER SHOP in New Castle, Pa., was closed on the [illegible], masters and assistants uniting in the cele[illegible]tion of the glorious day.

AT CHICAGO.—The people of Chicago, celebrated the day by a pic-nic at Desplains, and in the evening an oration was delivered at Witkowsky Hall, after which there was a ball at the same place, which we regret to say, was broken up by a party of drunken soldiers, who were at first driven off, but subsequently returned with reinforcements, and demolished chairs benches, and &c.

AT PITTSBURGH.—Our colored citizens celebrated the first of August with more than ordinary zest. Celebrations were held at Iron City Park, McFarland's Grove and Breed's Grove. Dinners were served up and addresses delivered at each. All were well attended. The Fort Pitt Cadets were out on parade, having with them two or three contrabands. The "Social Band" was out in full regalia. The day was rather sultry, but all seemed to enjoy themselves.

AT MURDERERS CREEK, ORANGE COUNTY, N. Y.—The celebration took place on the 6th inst., and was well attended, addresses were made by several gentlemen. The guests were well entertained by the people of the village.

AT HARRISBURGH, Pa., there was no regular celebration, but a pic-nic was held in a neighboring woods, which passed of pleasantly.

THE DAY IN PROVIDENCE, R. I.—From the Providence Journal, August 3d.

"The Anniversary of West Indian Emancipation was celebrated yesterday in the grove, on Smith's Hill, under the auspices of the colored citizens of this State. The attendance was quite large, and several speeches were made suitable to the occasion by gentlemen from this city and Massachusetts. Elder Edward Scott presided.

THE DAY AT LEFFERTS PARK.—The Sabbath School of the Concord St. Baptist Church (Rev. S. White,) spent the day at this place. The company was not numerous, but they had a very pleasant time. The School was addressed by the Rev. S. White and the Rev. Mr. Bolden of Ohio. There were also addresses by the children.

The people of New Brunswick, N. J., celebrated the day by a Pic Nic in the woods, and an entertainment in the church in the evening, at which time there was some solo singing by Madam Gilbert of this city. Everything passed off very finely, and a large amount was realized from the sales in the evening, which was added to the funds of the church.

THE DIXONION LITERARY INSTITUTION OF FLUSHING celebrated the day by a grove meeting, a full account of which will appear in our next.

A WORD TO COLORED POLITICIANS.

MR. EDITOR: My imperfect performance yesterday at the people's celebration, Fairy Grove, Yonkers, would not allow (on account of the shortness of time, the number of speakers, &c., &c,) me to touch one or two very important points in my general review of our state and condition as a people.

The only question among our colored politicians is:—"ARE WE BOUND BY PRINCIPLES, OR SWORN TO HELP FIGHT THE BATTLES OF THE PRESENT CIVIL PRO-SLAVERY WAR?" Some say yes, others say no.

Pity we had not settled this question before the crisis came upon us. But as it is there is no time to be lost.

1. This is being by the South for the "extension" and perpetuation of African Slavery.

2. The uprising of the North is to "restore the Union as it was," seeing the South has broken it up.

3. In this state of affairs it is obviously the duty of colored patriots to go for the "Union without Slavery, and for emancipation of the Slaves of the South without expatriation from the soil where they now are."

The present session of Congress has voted President Lincoln the large number of 500,000 men, and the equally large sum of $300,000,000 to carry on the war. This shows that there is heavy business on hand.

Now, as to this money it can be got on loan. But the loaners wish to know how their interest on loans will be secured, or by what means the President will be empowered to get the money to pay the interest on borrowed money.

There are two ways to pay national debt, or the interest on such debt.

One is to station your officers at every port of entry, authorized to demand of every incoming merchant or trading vessel so much on her cargo, revenue duties, &c., &c. Another is by DIRECT TAXATION, which means this, to send the government tax collector to the head of every family except paupers, to demand and collect so much of his or her income, wages, &c.

There is now a direct taxation bill before Congress, which if passed into a law, will affect the free colored people of the North, in the same proportion that it will white men, hence whether colored men help to fight the battles of the present, in the field or not, they will be compelled to help to pay the war bills: yes, the direct tax will come to you in many shapes which you will not be able to escape, unless you plead and show that you are living on CHARITY. Let our colored politicians ponder these facts, and decide what part we shall take in this struggle.

To say we will sit back in the shade and take no part, is unpolitical, unphilosophical, unmanly, and I had almost said, traitorous to our own race. Thousands of those who have fled from the old world, came to escape direct taxation, which in a state and country, burdened with public debt, is a sort of omnipresent tormentors.

[illegible] gentleman, we cannot [illegible] Mark my words, ge[illegible] get out of this terrible scrape, without in some way helping to decide the contest; and I believe that we are on the eve of the grand heroic age of the race, when the last vestige of African Slavery shall be wiped out; and I repeat what I said yesterday, that an army of 25,000 black troops marching from the North west, upon the rear of Jeff. Davis, can recapture king cotton—or take that great gun which has been worth from $80,000,000 to $100,000,000, to the South per annum. And then the race will hold the position of the world. Because if cotton is king in the money market of the world, our race in America has by its blood, tears, and sweat crowned it a king, and are therefore entitled to the benefit of his reign.

J. W. C. PENNINGTON.

August 2d, 1861.

DEATH'S DOINGS.

Time has, within the last few months, borne to their long home many of our oldest and most distinguished citizens, but no note has been taken of their demise, beyond that of the church where they were best known, and where their influence was the more clearly felt. Among the long list, the first we have to mention is Mr. John J. Washington of Brooklyn. This gentleman, who had long been connected with the Colored Baptist Churches of this city and Brooklyn, and was also one of the most public spirited men of his day, fell asleep, after a few moments illness, at his residence in Jay Street. The Rev. Levin Smith who was the oldest minister in the A. M. E. Zion Church, (his licence out-dating that of the Rev. Christopher Rush a few days) has also fallen. He was a man of very great usefulness in the church, and such was his popularity at one time that he was chosen Superintendent of the Connexion, but being an extremely modest man, he peremptorily refused to serve. He died last May, much regretted by all classes of the community, and was buried at Rossville, Staten Island. His funeral sermon was preached before the New York Annual Conference of the A. M. E. Zion Church, by the Rt. Rev. Wm. H. Bishop.

HENRY SCOTT.—This gentleman who has occupied a very important and serviceable position in this community for many long years, has also passed from earth. He died after a few hours illness, on the 22d of May, aged 72 years. He was engaged in mercantile business in this city for upwards of 30 years, and retired from business a few years since with a competency. He was, at the time of his death, the treasurer of St. Philip's Church, an office which he had held for the last 30 years, which fact is a sufficient testimony to his integrity.

ARRON L. POYER AND WIFE are both dead. Mrs. Poyer dying first. We do not know the date of her death, but she preceded her husband but a few days. Her incessant watching at the couch of her sick husband, and her daily toil was too much for a body naturally frail to bear, and she sank beneath the load. Mr. Poyer died July 25th, aged 95 years. Thus do those whom we have long looked upon, and learned to love and venerate, for their virtues and their years, pass away leaving naught but pleasant memorics of the good old days of yore.

Letter from New Haven.

New Haven has for the last few days presented a scene of considerable stir, and ~~excited commotion~~ in consequence of the movements of the Connecticut State Volunteers. In the first place the hearts of many deeply and personally interested, were made glad by the return of the 1st and 2nd Regiment of Connecticut Volunteers. Some however of the courageous sons of Connecticut, who nobly offered themselves for their Countrys safety, in these regiments have bravely fallen in the heroic strife. Among these was one colored young man, Francis Welsh who was killed by the "Black Horse Cavalry." There are hearts that feel his loss as keenly as if he had been the bravest officer in the army. Peace be with the ashes of the brave youth who had the courage to brave the dangers of a battle field in which his manhood was not fully recognized on either side, and to die for the maintenance of a set of laws, among which is one that could at any moment deprive him of his liberty. Mr. Hancock of New Haven who went with the 2nd Regiment was captured by the rebels, but fortunately made his escape. On Monday week thousands of our citizens congregated on the wharf, to witness the departure of the 5th Regiment of C. V. They were accompanied by a number of brave colored men—brave because but few free colored men dare go to Virginia and Maryland in times of peace, let alone in time of war, when if captured they will be sure to be killed or sold.

We were quite surprised on Sunday last by the unexpected return to this city of one of the Haytian emigrants, Mr.—— Brooks a member of the "New Haven Colony," who has been obliged to return home to the United States in consequence of ill health. He arrived in the Brig King Brothers. He reports most of the members of colony to have been sick, others to be sick, and some of the old people to have died. He has had the third attack of the fever, and is very much prostrated at present. He says the colonists have removed to their settlement on the President's estate, about three miles from Port Au Prince. He is a carpenter by trade, and found employment when able to work at one dollar and a half Spanish money per day, which is equal to 18 dollars Haytian money. He would have remained if his health had permitted. He thinks that there is great room for improvement in Hayti, and that the people are behind the age in many respects—that the progress of improvement must necessarily be slow, or in proportion to the enlightenment of the masses, since they seem to oppose very improvement [illegible] will interfere with any establishment [illegible] ed branch of labor. They have no canals, no Railroads, no Telegraphs, and many poor roads. He says that the President is a very excellent man, and that the intelligent and respectable Haytians as a general thing make much of the emigrants and treat them with becoming respect. But the [illegible] masses among the poor have not much good heart for the emigrants nor for the emigration movement; still they show no disposition to molest them. They have been heard to make use of expressions to the following import: "I could cut their throats and drink their blood." The Rev. Mr. Holly is holding divine service weekly in a building on the President's estate. There is a large sugar mill in operation on the estate worked principally by Chinamen who are very expert at the business.

The Rev. Mr. Crummell, late from Liberia, spent a Sunday with us a few weeks ago. He preached in St. Luke's Church, morning and afternoon, and in the evening lectured in Rev Dr. Bacon's Church. It was one of his happiest efforts, and I heard this remark in a groupe of gentlemen the next day: "I'd rather hear him than Fred. Douglass."

Mrs. Wilson's recent examination and exhibition was excellent, especially the examination in the department of English Grammar and Geography. Her school is worthy of patronage. NEW HAVEN.

Letter from Hayti.

The following was placed in our hands for publication, by the gentlemen to whom it was addressed.

Port Au Prince, 16 July, 1861.

Messrs. N. R. Ashby & Geo. Lyon, New York.

DEAR SIRS,

I have received your esteemed favor of the 10th ult, per "King Brothers," and have perused with attention the contents. [illegible] my last our political position has suffered, and our safety is precarious. I sincerely hope that the United States Government, will take such steps as will put an end to Spanish aggression, and secure the ~~influence~~ and commercial predominance, which she enjoys in these seas. On the 6th inst., a Spanish fleet composed of three steam frigates and three steam Sloops of war arrived here, and after anchoring sent a note to our Government demanding—1st that the Spanish flag be saluted with 21 guns without answer. 2nd an indemnity of $200,000, Spanish for wrongs and depredations committed on the frontiers.

The first demand was based on the ground that the Spanish flag had been trampled by our people on the frontiers in the village of Las matas, and the second for damages. Thus you will easily conceive that this demand is a crying injustice which constitutes Le droit du plus fort. The government refused to comply to these demands, the British and French charge d'affaires and consul General interceded and through their exertions negotiations were on for four days, and on the fifth day the Spanish Admiral sent his ultimatum on shore by the American Brig Bohw, which had appeared before our harbor, not to enter the harbor, thus establishing a blockade which was not legally announced. These demonstrations hurried the French and English Consuls to Government to prevail on the President to accept the demands and that in consideration of nearly fifty millions of foreign interest that would be compromised, the population was determined for war, preparations were being made, severial families had already left the town, carts were about the streets transporting goods and baggage, in fact everything appeared gloomy and the people only awaiting the cannon of alarm to stand like one man to defend this only land of the African Race, when the government yielding to the solicitations of the foreigners and their consuls, ordered the Spanish flag to be hoisted on the Fort St Clair, and saluted it with 21 guns, which was immediately answered by the Admiral's frigate, it is also supposed that government has also agreed to pay a portion of the indemnity asked. Poor Hayti, what an imposition upon her children! We have yet a Spanish frigate in Port, the Princess of Asturid, which in all probability will remain here two months, it would appear that Spain dreams of extending her power over the whole Island. Will Republic America remain a [illegible] spectator of these acts of injustice, nothwithstanding domestic troubles? will America allow the stripes and stars of the Union [illegible] disrespected in her teeth? Will in fact America and her people allow Republican Hayti [illegible] crushed by a despotic and superstitious government like Spain, who holds one million of the African Race in bondage? I do not believe that President Lincoln, whose hand, I hope, will give the last blow to slavery, will not open his eyes upon what is going on this side of the world—let us hope so. The emigrants at St. Marc, of the Lawrence association, are doing well. The Rev. Mr. Lewis, a methodist preacher an emigrant, also gave me the most flattering account of their progress.

I see with pleasure your intention of emigrating here, and as you ask my opinion I will say that Hayti is a good field, but much depends upon the manner by which you are introduced in this country. To be candid every foreigner of whatever color has a good deal of trouble to undergo and very often loses money before his experience is made, on account of the erroneous system that prevails and which time alone will destroy, but the principal guide is, to fall in the hands of a man of experience who knows the country, and who will, like a true friend direct your first steps in the country. Commercial or agricultural pursuits better suit you. A cooper cannot gain a living in this country, a distillery may do something having a capital to start with. At all events you decide to come this way I will do all in my power to be of use to you. St. Marc will be a good field; however I would advise you to hold on until affairs are settled this way, because then if you are inclined to come out [illegible] a small invoice of provisions and domestic goods, it will be a good beginning. Provisions are scarce; pork, mess, is worth $500 per barrel, lard, 5 1-2 per lb., flour, $150 per bbl. gold, $15 paper per Spanish dollar.

Very sincerely, your ob't serv't,

F. C. DOMIN[illegible]

Poetry.

THE SLAVE MINGO'S POEM

[The following remarkable poem was sent us from the South by a friend, who informs us that the author of it was a slave named Mingo, a man of wonderful talents and on that account oppressed by his master. While in his slave-prison, he penciled this poetic gem on one of the beams, which was afterwards found and copied. My friend adds that Mingo did escape, at night, but was recaptured and destroyed by the bloodhounds. My friend promises to send other poems of his, which, he says, are in possession of Mingo's aged wife. C. W.]

Good God! and must I leave them now—
My wife, my children, in their woe?
'Tis mockery to say I'm sold—
But I forgot these chains so cold,
Which goad my bleeding limbs, though high
My reason mounts above the sky.
Dear wife, they cannot sell the rose;
Of love, that in my bosom glows.
Remember, as your tears may start,
They cannot sell th' immortal part;
Thou sun, which lightest bond and free,
Tell me, I pray, is liberty
The lot of those who noblest feel,
And oftest to Jehovah kneel?
Then I may say, but not with pride,
I feel the rushings of the tide
Of reason and of eloquence,
Which strive and yearn for eminence.
I feel high manhood on me now,
A spirit glory on my brow;
I feel a thrill of music roll
Like angel harpings through my soul,
While poesy with rustling wings
Upon my spirit rests and sings.
He sweeps my heart's deep throbbing lyre,
Who touched Isaiah's lips with fire.

To Plymouth Rock, ye breezes bear
These words from me, as I would dare,
If I were free: Is not our God
Our common father?—from the sod
He formed us all! then brothers—yes;
We're brothers all, though some oppress
And grind their equals in the dust,
O Heaven! tell me, is this just?
[illegible] is fiendish. No! I will not go
And leave my children here in woe!
God help me! out, bright dagger! gleam,
And find the coward's heart, and stream
With fiendish blood—This night, this night,
Or I am free, or it shall smite
The master and his slave, and we
Will seek the heavenly liberty!
There will my master's bloody lash
No longer lacerate * * *

Note.—The last line was from some cause incomplete; perhaps his feelings overcame him at the conception. I concluded to give it as it was found. C.W.

—Boston Journal.

THE NEGRO'S JUBILEE

TUNE—HAPPY HOME.

Send the glad tidings o'er the sea,—
His chains are broke, the Slave is free;
Britannia's justice, wealth, and might
Have gained the Negro's long-lost right!
His chains are broke, the Slave is free,—
This is the Negro's jubilee!

Hail! blessed and auspicious day!
Dear is thy first bright dawning ray,
Which comes, an angel from above,
Herald of freedom, joy and love:
Thy breezes whisper, "Slave be free!"
Now is the Negro's jubilee!

Oh Thou, whose favor long was sought,
What full deliverance hast thou wrought!
The Captive's groan has pierced thine ear,
And thou hast wiped the falling tear;
The curse is past, the Slave is free!
This is the Negro's jubilee!

Our prayers shall now with praise combine,
For freedom poured on every clime:
For holy freedom, gracious Lord,
To join a world in sweet accord;
Then, freed from sin, from error free,
We'll keep a brighter jubilee.

I LOVE IT.

I love it—I love it—the laugh of a child,
Now rippling and gentle, now merry and wild,
Ringing out on the air with its innocent gush,
Like the thrill of a bird at the twilight's soft hush;
Floating off on the breeze like the tones of a bell,
Or the music that dwells in the heart of a shell.
Oh! the laugh of a child, so wild and so free,
Is the merriest sound in the world for me.

Aristocracy—One of the parvenue ladies of our village, but would-be wonderful aristocratic in all her domestic concerns, was visiting a few days since at Major G——'s, (all know the old Major,) when after tea the following conversation occurred between the Major's old fashioned lady and the "top-knot," in consequence of the hired girl occupying a seat at the table.

"Why, Mrs. G——, you do not allow your hired girl to eat with you at the table? It's horrible!"

"Most certainly I do. You know this has ever been my custom. It was so when you worked for me—don't you recollect?"

This was a "cooler" to silk and satin greatness; or as the boys call it, "codfish aristocracy." After coloring and stammering, she answered in a very low voice,—"Y-e-s I b-e-l-i-e-v-e i-t w-a-s," and sloped.

Unlike Angels.—A vagrant called at a house on Sunday, and begged for some cider. The lady refused to give him any, and he reminded her of the oft quoted remark, "that she might entertain an angel unawares." "Yes," said she, "but angels don't go about drinking cider on Sundays."

"A widow, who had lost her husband, was weeping bitterly for her dear departed. A friend tried to console her. "No, no," said the fair mourner, "let me have my cry out; after that I shant think anything about it."

An Epitaph.—Here is a neat specimen of the laconically narrative and descriptive:

In memory of John Saxe, maker of sausages,
Who was killed with twelve other passen-

The Milwaukee Sentinel says, "A jug of the celebrated Montreal malt whisky has been sent to this office to be tested; as no one connected with the establishment imbibes whisky, we use it for perfume on our handkerchief. When we want to attract a crowd, all we have to do is to go out and shake our linen at the corner!"

As a proof of the fact that girls are useful articles, and that the world could not get along very well without them, a late writer states it as a fact, "that if all the girls were driven out of the world, in one generation the boys would all go out after them."

A Bereaved Western widow addressed the pall-bearers at the funeral with, "You pall-bearers, just go into the buttery and get some rum, and we'll start this man right along."

Buying out a Pedlar.

Everybody on the western waters knows Charley D——; at least his acquaintances think they do.

Charley is a little fast: travels the river eight months in the year, and has sometimes been known to engage in a quiet game of brag, or draw-poker, "just for the amusement of his fellow passengers, nothing else." To those who know Charley, it is unnecessary to add, that he generally succeeds in "amusing" them.

But to our story. One sweltering August day, Charley was travelling on one of the dusty thoroughfares known as county roads, in the State of Hoosier. Choked with dust, half melted with the heat, jaded with a hard-trotting horse, that would insist upon waltzing around every black stump at the road-side, and with not a grocery upon the whole line of the road, our traveller was of course in a most benevolent humor.

Somebody had to be victimized, or Charley would not be able to sleep that night. The only question was, who it should be, and that was soon answered.

A short turn of the road brought him suddenly upon a Jew pedlar, whose pack of jewelry was temptingly displayed at the road-side, and who was chaffering with a young Hoosier for the sale of a breast-pin, and assuring his customer "bon his onner," that the article in question was the very counterpart of the pin worn by Queen Victoria at her coronation.

Charley was dressed a la Hoosier, and a sharper eye than the Jew's might have readily taken him for what he seemed to be, an unsophisticated denizen of the very ruralest (vide Webster, next edition), of the rural districts. Reining up his horse, he cast an admiring glance at the glittering treasures of the pedlar.

"Why, old feller, you must be right from Californy," said Charley. "I didn't think there was that much real gold in all Hoosier."

"Dere nowsh young man, do you hear dat? Dersh a shentleman ash knowsh golt, hear vot he saysh."

This was addressed to the Hoosier, who had just expressed some vague doubt as to the purity of the metal.

Charley got off his horse, hitched him to a fence-corner, and sitting down by the outspread pack, seemed lost in some abstruse mental calculation.

The Hoosier proved rather a slow customer. The truth was, he had not a cent of money present or prospective, and the Jew had began to suspect as much, so he turned his attention to his new game.

"Vot can I sells you to-day, my goot frent—a pair of earrings vor your sweet'art, or a nice dimont ring vor 'er finger?"

"Diamond! why that's what they cut glass with, aint it?' said Charley.

The Jew entered into a lengthened history of the diamond and its uses, embracing some facts not yet generally known to the scientific world.

"And is all these things pure gold?" asked Charley.

"Yesh, yesh, all de very besht—no jewelers golt, but right from Californy."

"What might you ask a feller for this?"

It was a pin of magnificent proportions, an oval of painted glass about three inches by four, set in a flimsy rim of washed metal, and worth for the Indiana market about fifty cents.

"Vell, my frent, seein' its you, I'll sell it sheap. Zay vive dollars, datsh two dollars lessh dan I solt von to de governor's vife for lasht veek."

Charley stuck it on his shirt bosom, but when he spoke of wearing it to church next Sunday, even the old Jew opened his eyes slightly, and hinted something about its being "more purposed vor a lady to vear."

Article after article was priced by Charley, and expatiated upon by the Jew.

"Well, old feller," said Charley at length, "them's all very well for retail prices; but how much will you knock off for wholesale?"

"Vat you meansh, my frent, by wholesale?"

"I want to buy you out and go into the business myself."

The Jew looked at him for a full minute before he answered. He was taking his measure, and he thought he had it.

Taking Charley confidentially by the arm and leading him out of hearing of the Hoosier, he said to him.

"Vell, now, my goot frent, I will tell you jusht how it ish. I have been in dish bishnes jusht three yearsh, and I have made all so mush monish as I vant. I only vant to shell out my shtock and quit de bishness, and live upon my farm in Ohio, de resht of my life. My goot frent, I vill sell my shewelry to you so sheap as you cannot buy it in New York. You shall have it vor jusht vot it cosht me in the old country. I shall sharge you nossing vor ze carriage, and nossing für ze duties."

"Well that's fair enough, at any rate," said Charley, "but how am I to know what they did cost?"

"Oh, my goot frent, you vill take my vort vor dat, I knowsh," said the Jew with an air of half-injured innocence.

It was now Charley's turn to take the Jew's measure; and after a look, which the latter sustained with a placid smile of virtuous confidence, he said—

"Well, old hoss, you have got an uncommon honest face, that's a fact. Give us your hand; I could take you word for a load of corn, without measurin' it, any day; you'll hav to do the cal culatin', for I aint got no larnin'."

The Jew took another long uneasy look at his customer, but the stolid simplicity with which the latter met his gaze, was too much for his [illegible], and he sat down beside the pack to make an inventory of its contents,

"Just the cost in the old country, remember, old feller."

"Yesh—yesh, jusht de cosht; nossing vor ze duties or carriage."

The Jew drew forth a greasy memorandum book, and opening at a blank page, spread it on his knee preparatory to taking an "account of stock," as the merchants say.

The first thing taken up for appraisement was a flashy watch-chain, which the Jew ventured to value at ten dollars.

"Cheap as dirt," said Charley; "couldn't be made for twice the money in this country."

The Jew winced; he had evidently lost five dollars by not saying fifteen, and he determined to make it up on the next article, which proved to be a breast pin of even more imposing proportions than the one which had first captivated Charley's fancy, and the Jew boldly put it down at fifteen dollars.

"Come, come, old hoss, that's pilin the agony a little too high."

"Bon my onner, my frent, it cost me fifdeen dollarsh, in Barish."

"Too much—too much—say ten dollars, and put it down."

"My goot frent, you vill ruin me—say twelve dollars—come now, 'low me little brofit."

The winning smile with which this was said, conquered, and the pin was put down at twelve dollars.

Two long mortal hours, did the Jew perspire over his task. The sun seemed to have been gotten up especially for the occasion, and never shone half as intensely before, while the wind brought the dust from all points of the compass at once.

At last, the inventory was completed, and footed up some nine hundred and odd dollars. The Jew rolled the pack up, and for the hundredth time wiped the mingled perspiration and dust from his brow.

"Well, what about the leather contraption that you carry 'em in—you'll throw that in I s'pose, won't you."

"Vell, vell, I s'posh I musht do dat,' said the Jew with a pleasant smile.

"How much did you say it all comes to?"

"Nine hundred and vorty doo dollarsh and vivty centh."

"You must throw off the two dollars and fifty cents, and call it even nine hundred and forty."

"Vell, vell, ve vont shtand upon trifles—it shall be ash you say, my frent."

"All right, then, old feller; have you got a pen and ink, about you?"

"Vot vor you want pen and ink, my frent?"

"I want to give you my note for the money."

"Your note? Vot vor I shall vant your note? I vant your monish, not your note; I don't know you."

"Neither do I know you," said Charley, "so there's no advantage on either side. Besides, that's the way I always trade. I was willing to take your word for the cost of the things, and it's darned strange if you can't take my note for the money."

The Jew fairly danced with rage.

"Well, old feller," said Charley, during a temporary lull in the storm, "are you going to stand to your bargain?"

"No—no—no," screamed the infuriated Jew, "give me my monish, and you shall have ze goodsh."

"Young man," said Charley, turning to the Hoosier, "can you tell me where I can find a justice of the peace in this neighborhood."

"Daddy" happened to be a justice of the peace, and the young man gave very explicit directions how to find his house about two miles further on; and mounting his horse, Charley rode off, vowing that if there was any law in the land, he would see whether a man could make a fair bargain and then back out from it.

The young Hoosier is prepared to make his affidavit, that the oaths and curses in which the Jew sought to relieve his overcharged feelings for the next hour, actually killed two young birch saplings that stood near.—Spirit of the Times.

A Romance in Real Life.

ADVENTURE OF AN ENGLISH LORD—"TRUTH STRANGER THAN FICTION."

From the Clinton [Ill.] Transcript.

Many of our readers will doubtless remember a young man named John F. Fenwick, who resided in this place during the year 1859, and who was employed at different times, by the editor of this paper, Mr. Sackett, druggist, and last by Mr. James Stanbury, Clerk of our County Court, who had him engaged in writing in his office. He was a smart, active, intelligent lad, and gave unmistakeable evidence of one who had been well reared. He told several persons that he was a son of a lord—that he had been kidnapped from England and sent to this country, and that if he had his just rights, he would be enjoying life and affluence in his own ancestral halls in Northumberland, England. His statement, however, was generally disbelieved, although everybody with whom he was acquainted gave it as their opinion that there was something singular connected with the lad and his past history.

The facts in the case, which have been since learned from undisputed authority are about as follows:

Some time in the year 1837, Sir John Fenwick (the father of the lad alluded to), while engaged in a shooting expedition on the Cumberland Hills, was thrown from his horse, and was conveyed to the humble cottage of a poor clergyman near by, with a shattered ankle. The clergyman was a widower, with an only child—a beautiful young daughter just budding into womanhood, who attended to the duties of their humble home, and cheered the declining years of a kind, venerable parent. She was unremitting in her kind attentions to the noble guest, and seldom left his bed-side until he was entirely recovered. To make the matter short, Sir John fell in love with the young lady and proposed to her. In reply, Clara (for that was her name), told her noble suitor that she loved him in return, but that she would not leave her father, but would remain with her kind parent, and lend a solace to his declining years. They parted, and after exchanging the lover's usual token:

"With many a vow and locked embrace
Their parting was full tender,
And pledging oft to meet again
They tore themselves asunder."

In the autumn of the same year, the mild and mellow English autumn—fit time indeed for the exit of so pure a soul from its earthly casket, the spirit of the venerable pastor winged its way to the realms of bliss beyond the skies.

* * * * * * *

The marriage was simple and most unostentatious, the ceremony being performed in private by a young curate, in order to escape the ridicule of the bridegroom's haughty relatives—and Clara Seymore became the bride of Sir James North Fenwick of Fenwick Hall. They made the tour of the Continent, and in due time returned to England, when she presented her husband with a boy, the subject of our present sketch. Sir John's friends, instead of contumely and reproach, pretended to greatly admire Lady Fenwick, and congratulated him on his choice. Two of his sisters took their residence in Fenwick Hall, and while pretending an unbounded affection for the victim, were daily and hourly engaged by a malicious talent in poisoning Lord Fenwick's mind against his wife. Poor Clara, all this time, unaware of the cruel, unrelenting course pursued toward her—Lord Fenwick becoming more and more morose and cold to her every day, and she, unaware of the true cause, attributed it to the seeming fact that he regretted having united himself with one as humble as she. In the meanwhile the boy reached the age of seventeen.

Suddenly one day these female fiends threw off the mask in the presence of Sir John, accused her of the most horrible crimes, and alleged that his wife confessed that her son was the fruit of illicit amour between herself and a certain French Count, to whom she was introduced by her husband, when they were sojourning in Venice during the honeymoon.

The lightning does not more surely rift the tallest oak than did this rude shock prostrate Lady Clara. She swooned, and Sir John strode madly from the Hall, his heart and brain on fire. He gave directions to his heartless sisters, to have her and her accursed brat expelled immediately from the Hall. He then threw himself upon his horse and galloped madly to the nearest seaport, and immediately embarked for the Continent.

Of course the unfeeling sisters were not long in executing their brother's command. Lady Clara and her son were immediately driven forth, although suffering from delirium, and were conveyed by the servants to the nearest inn. These villainous women had at length accomplished their vile purpose, which was to keep the magnificent property within their grasp; for they could not brook the idea that one whom they regarded as the offspring of an humbly born young female, for whom their brother had conceived an affection, should ever succeed to their proud title and the broad lands of their father. Thus it will be seen that villainy and treachery triumphed for the time being.

Poor Clara lay at the village inn raving from the effects of brain fever, where she was daily visited by Captain O'Neil—a gallant, warm-hearted Irish gentleman—of Enniskillin Dragoons, who was at the time quartered in the vicinity. He became acquainted with Lady Clara at Fenwick Hall.

When she became sufficiently recovered, he importuned her with much eloquence to go with him to his estate in Galway, Ireland. After many importunities, she at length yielded, for her husband's cold and harsh treatment had utterly obliterated all love she ever felt for him. Luckily, she had possession, beside her jewels, of two thousand pounds. Accompanied by Capt. O'Neil, she proceeded to Liverpool, where she placed her son on the steamer Adriatic, which was about to sail for New York, giving him directions to seek a cousin of her's, named Summerville, a wealthy planter in the interior of Texas. She gave him one thousand pounds, and bidding him an affectionate and tearful farewell, they parted—forever.

She accompanied the captain to his estate on the coast of Galway, where they were privately married. Her health failing, her husband took her to the south of France, in order to recuperate her shattered nerves. Capt. O'Neil dearly loved the yet beautiful Clara.

* * * * * * * *

After a short and pleasant voyage, our young hero arrived in the Empire City, where he immediately took passage in a steamer bound for Galveston, Texas. On his arriving there he purchased a beautiful Indian pony, and by adhering to the directions given him by a merchant of that place, who was acquainted with his relatives, he reached his cousin's ranche on the ninth day of his journey. On discovering who he was, and learning his strange and eventful history, his cousin received him with unbounded affection and kindness. His relative was the owner of two thousand acres of land and fifty negroes, and numerous herds of cattle; he was married to an amiable and intelligent American lady, and his household was gladdened by the presence of his beautiful daughter Estelle.

He spent his time most happily and agreeably at the ranche for about six months, devoting his time to hunting, fishing, and rambling over the flower-bespangled prairie with his charming relative, Estelle, with whom, it is almost unnecessary to say, our hero fell desperately in love.

He was suddenly awakened from his dreams of happiness and pleasure one night by the startling and unwelcome intelligence that the Comanches and a large party of Mexican guerrillas were bearing down to attack the ranche. All hands were immediately mustered to repel the blood thirsty marauders; the defenders numbered seven white men, including our hero and his cousin, and twenty negroes. The attacking party numbered over six hundred guerrillas and Indians. The attack was commenced almost immediately,—the assailants discharged showers of arrows and escopet balls at the defenders, who were stationed in the building, which, however, did little or no execution—the defenders replying with their death-dealing rifles, causing many a tawny savage and Mexican ruffian to bite the dust. But why prolong this fearful scene? Suffice it to say the ranche was carried by storm, after a desperate resistance, and every person, male and female, was butchered except our hero, who was taken prisoner and conveyed to Mexico by the Indians, after plundering and burning the ranche. Our hero shed many a bitter tear over the fate of his darling Estelle, and kind and generous relatives. He remained a prisoner about three months, and, strange to say, although closely watched, was not subjected to any cruel treatment.

One day, the tribe whose captive he was, started out on a marauding expedition, leaving him in charge of an Indian. He was the very savage who had tomahawked his beautiful Estelle! The Indian indulged in liquor freely, soon fell asleep. It was but the work of a moment for our hero to unsheath the scalping-knife from the belt of the sleeping savage, and plant it in his heart. Estelle was avenged! Seizing the Indian's rifle and ammunition, he started off in a northerly direction, and in three days reached the Rio Grande, where he found a canoe and crossed, and very soon reached Brownsville, Texas.

Here he met three Texan drovers, who were about to start with an immense drove of cattle to Carlinville, Macoupin County, in his State. Being short of hands, they offered to hire him to go with them and help them drive. Rendered destitute by being deprived of everything by the marauders, he gladly accepted their offer and went.

Arriving at Carlinville, he determined to return to England, and boldly proclaim his rights. Accordingly he took the cars for the East. While traveling on the New York and Erie Railroad, he fell in with a noble-hearted farmer, named Dreston F. Sappington, of Point Isabel, of this county, who induced him to go to Clinton, for the purpose of studying law with Mr. L. Weldon. Our hero, however, disliked the profession, and as we have above stated, was employed in this office by Mr. Sackett, and lately by Mr. Stanbury. While here, during October term of the Circuit Court, he stated his case to the Hon. Abraham Lincoln, who immediately wrote to the British Consul, at Chicago.

Two days afterward, the British Consul, the Hon. Mr. Wilkins, arrived at this place. After listening to Fenwick's story, and having a long consultation with Messrs. Lincoln and Stanbury, he took him to Chicago and employed him in his office. Meantime, the Consul wrote to England, making inquiries in regard to Sir John Fenwick, but could only hear that he was traveling on the Continent, but could not ascertain the precise spot.

The Prince of Wales, while traveling in this country, it will be recollected, stopped at Chicago. There the Consul introduced our hero to the Prince, who became convinced of the truth of his statement. He accompanied the Prince in his tour through the United States, and went with him to England.

On arriving there, our young hero proceeded immediately to his ancestral hall, where he was informed by the servants that one of his aunts, who had caused him and his mother so much trouble and unhappiness, was now on her death bed, attended by her brother Sir John Fenwick. He entered the chamber of death! The ghastly vision of the dying woman became still ghastlier when she beheld the boy whom she and her sister had so deeply wronged. She immediately confessed that the tale they had invented to blast the reputation of Lady Clara and ruin her innocent son, was without foundation—that Clara was a good and true wife till he drove her away and spurned her. Lord Fenwick folded his long lost son to his heart, and shed tears over him, The woman died in a few moments after making the confession. Her sister is at present the inmate of a convent, and strives to atone for her black-hearted treachery, by fasting, penitence and prayer.

* * * * * *

In a quiet, sequestered vale, near a sweet little village, in a province in the south of France, are two graves, over which is engraved the following simple inscription:—

SACRED to the Memory of CAPTAIN EDWARD O'NEIL, and his
DEAR WIFE CLARA.

Sweet and simple memento! May they sleep tranquilly. The soft southern wind sighing with a mournful cadence through the willows and tall grass, is a fit requiem.

Clara died of consumption a short time after her arrival in France, despite the tender care of her husband, and the exertions of skillful physicians. A short time after her death Capt. O. unintentionally insulted a French officer, which led to a challenge; they met and fought with small swords. The combat was desperate and prolonged, for they were both splendid swordsmen. O'Neil at length stretched his antagonist lifeless at his feet, and he was borne to his residence mortally wounded. Previous to his death, he gave directions to be buried with his wife, in the manner stated above. Having no heirs of his own, he willed his immense and valuable estate to his wife's son, John N. Fenwick.

* * * * * * *

Our young friend is now in Fenwick Hall, (as the following letter sent to us will testify), living in ease and affluence, receiving all the care and kindness lavished upon him by a now affectionate father.

* * * So you may imagine my feelings at present.

"To those persons in Clinton who doubted my statement and ridiculed me, I have no unkind feelings. I entertain toward the people of Clinton a lively feeling of gratitude for their many kind acts and favors. To Robert Lewis, Esq., I desire you to return my most sincere thanks. Tell him I still have the boots he presented me, which, together with the gold pen from Charley Dennet, I shall keep in remembrance of them, and my once humble condition in life.

"My best regards to my ever good friend, Mr. Stanbury, to whom I send in a package a breast pin. My love to Mrs. C——, and the children. I have many times since I left your roof thought of them and longed to see them.

* * * The package I send you I hope will entirely clear you of debt, and make you independent in life.

"Tell Al. Blackford I will send him a splendid Manton fowling piece by the next steamer. He has my likeness, which I would be glad to have left with Miss Julia C——.

"Yours, as ever,
JOHN NORTH FENWICK, Bart."

Reader, we have done. Is not "truth stranger than fiction?"

What Does It Mean.

A Galveston, (Texas) paper says that Horse Head, the six-foot nigger who assists Wild Cat in governing the Seminole African colony, opposite Eagle Pass, has arrived in Matamoras, and is daily to be seen sunning himself in the promenades of that place.

Horse Head is in Matamoras for the purpose of hunting up the free niggers, with the design of establishing a highly-perfumed colony, somewhere near the Indian-Nation, and in close proximity to the Box colony, Wild Cat desires to create the "irrepressible conflict" in Mexico, and is putting a negro establishment alongside of the whites in Durango; and time, he says, will develop which is the natural slave, his nigs or Box's whites. We learn that this colony will probably number five or six hundred.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MRS. WINSLOW'S

SOOTHING SYRUP

Every mother should be prepared to act in the capacity of both nurse and physician to her children she can, if she will, discharge these duties much better than any one she can employ. If she does not, she ought to know that there is a Medicine prepared by an old nurse and female physician which has stood the test of many, many years, and is the most perfect thing on earth for children teething; it also cures Wind Colic, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, and is sure to regulate the bowels. We say to every mother, do not let your own prejudices, or the prejudices of others stand in the way of the relief that will be sure—yes, absolutely sure—to follow the use of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP certainly does, as the name implies, "soothe" the little sufferer into a quiet, natural sleep, from which it awakes invigorated and refreshed. And for the cure of diseases incident to the period of teething, such as Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Wind Colic, &c., we have never seen its equal.

We have always been, and still are, opposed to the practice of drugging infants. This article has no deleterious effects whatever, and from our own experience (we speak advisedly) we have every confidence in it, and can heartily recommend it to all mothers. Take our advice—use it—and you will as strongly recommend it to others as we have to you.

When we say that MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP acts like a charm, we do but reiterate the language of every person who ever used it for their children, for all diseases incident to the period of teething, such as Dysentery and Diarrhœa, Wind Colic and Cholera Infantum. It will produce quietude and rest, relieve all suffering, and the infant will awake invigorated and refreshed, and not with the dull and stupefying effects of preparations of opium.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the excruciating pain of cutting teeth? If so, go at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately—depend upon it; there is no mistake about it. There is not a mother on earth who has ever used it who will not tell you at once that it will regulate the bowels, and give rest to the mother and relief and health to the child, operating like magic. It is perfectly safe in all cases, and pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States.

During the thirty years of unprecedented and increasing popularity of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP, innumerable "Cordials" and other nostrums, prepared by pretended M.D.'s, have sprung up and lived but a mushroon existence, the SOOTHING SYRUP has been constantly increasing in popularity, and become a household word, and for the health of their children, by the use of her invaluable article.

THOUSANDS OF MOTHERS THANK
MRS. WINSLOW

PRICE 20 CENTS PER BOTTLE.

For sale by
THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St., N.Y.

TIME, MONEY, AND LABOR SAVED,
BY USING
B. T. BABBITT'S
SUPERIOR FRENCH
CHEMICAL ERASIVE SOAP,

Made and improved by the Original Inventor of the German and Austrian Chemical Erasive or Detersive Soap, of which the real and genuine article has, since its first introduction to the American public, been most favorably known, as the Best and Cheapest Washing Soap in the market, and with the present improvement, which is not known to any other manufacturer, we Challenge the World to produce a better article.

1. One pound of it will accomplish as much as three pounds of any other soap.
2. But one quarter the time and labor are required to do the same amount of washing, as with the best of family soap.
3. It does not injure the most delicate fabric; will tend to set the colors, and wash cleaner than any other soap in use.
4. Clothes need no boiling, and but little rubbing with the hands, thus avoiding their wear upon the wash-board.
5. Paints, Grease, Tar, and stains of every description vanish as by magic, before its wonderful, searching, erasive powers.
6. It is invaluable to Machinists, Printers, Painters, and all others using Inks, Oils, etc., for washing hands; it does not chap them (like other soaps,) but will cleanse and soften the skin.
7. It may be used in hard or soft water, and is adapted for use in all climates.

Put up in one pound bars, sixty bars in each box.

For sale by the bar or box by
THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman Street.

MEDICAL.

THE BEST MEDICINES IN THE WORLD!!!

The following invaluable medicines may be obtained of
THOMAS HAMILTON, 48 Beekman St.

DR. CLARKE'S
VEGETABLE SHERRY-WINE BITTERS,

Are composed of Sarsaparilla, Dock-root, Rheubarb, Thoroughwort, Dandelion, Prickly Ash, Bark, &c. they should be taken not only in the Spring, but at all seasons of the year, as they operate directly on the liver, removing from it all coating of morbid matter, and restoring it to its normal action; also opening the bile ducts, causing the requisite flow of bile so essential to good health. Their influence upon the kidneys, also, is advantageously felt; at the same time they operate upon the blood, cleansing it from all impurity or taint of any kind. Humors of long standing are eradicated from the blood, thereby speedily curing jaundice, headache, weak stomach, sore eyes, nervousness, and other chronic diseases arising from impurity of the blood.

The palatableness of these bitters renders them agreeable to every one, and being composed entirely of vegetables, they may be used by all classes of people with safety.

Sold for the low price of 25 cents per pint bottle.

DR. CLARKE'S
SUGAR-COATED HERB PILLS.

These pills are made mostly from a valuable herb that grows on the proprietor's farm.

Warranted to cure Bilious Stomach, Bilious Bowels, Bilious Colic, Bilious Fever, and all diseases which arise from a bilious state of the system, viz, Jaundice, Headache, Heartburn, Sour Stomach, Liver Complaint, Weak Stomach, Pain in the Stomach, Costiveness, Loss of Appetite, and a host of diseases too numerous to mention, as their number is legion.

Warranted to cure diseases peculiar to the female sex.

Warranted at all times safe and efficient.

Warranted for a gentle family physic [illegible] an equal in America, operating without pain.

Warranted not to contain calomel, aloes, gamboge, colocynth, or other drastic poisonous drugs, which always do the system more hurt than good, and by their continued use are sure to cause a derangement of the liver, bring on costiveness, and its inevitable consequence, piles, and dyspepsia, and finally break down the constitution, and cause the victim to drag out a miserable existence. Touch not, taste not, handle not the wily poison. Your life is your own,—preserve it. Take a simple herb, sure in its effects, but safe and pleasant,—no wrenching pains, no ill effects, and made pleasant to take by a fine coat of sugar. Children love them, ladies admire them, fools and wise men cannot do without them, doctors prescribe them,—and every body takes them. Yes, every body; from the honest farmer and mechanic to the most learned philosopher. And why? Simply because they are good, excellently good; and will do you good.

PRICE, 25 CENTS PER BOX.

DR. CLARKE'S COUGH AND CROUP SYRUP.

It is the most wonderful, effective and extraordinary medicine for the lungs ever used by man. It is perfectly safe and pleasant to take, and gives relief immediately. Thousands have been cured by its use, and tens of thousands will be again. All who use it pronounce it to be the best lung remedy ever discovered. Common coughs and colds are dispelled by the use of only a few doses, and children can be cured of croup at once if taken in its first stage. Long-standing diseases require perseverance, but a cure will be guaranteed. No medicine before ever possessed such excellent healing and curative power for the lungs. It seems, with almost magic power, to dispel the most severe cases of cough and throat ail.

Vocalists and public speakers should not fail to keep a bottle on hand at all times. A small quantity taken occasionally renders the voice beautifully clear and the lungs extremely strong. Words cannot fully express the great benefit to be derived from the use of the world-renowned remedy. Delay not, but procure a bottle at once. Use it if needed, and if not, keep it till necessity requires its use, as all, sooner or later, are overtaken by some unpleasant affection of the lungs or throat.

Price, 25 Cents per Bottle.

BOOKS.

PUBLICATIONS FOR SALE BY
THOMAS HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE ANGLO-AFRICAN MAGAZINE. Bound,—Price—In half Morocco, $1 25; half Morocco, gilt edges, $1.50; Muslin, $1.00. Contents: Embellishments—Portrait of Alexander Dumas. Music, by A. J. R. Conner. Articles by Bishop D. A. Payne, James M'Cune Smith, M. D., Prof. Geo. B. Vashon, Dr. Martin, R. Delany, Mrs. Sarah M. Douglass, Prof. Robert Campbell, Prof. Wm. J. Wilson, Rev. J. W. C. Pennington, D. D., Rev J. Theo. Holly, Mrs. Frances Ellen Watkins Harper, Prof. M. H. Freeman, Rev. Edward W Blyden, Rev. Robert Gordon, Prof. Chas. L. Reason, Mrs M. A. Shadd Cary, Dr. James Fields, Rev. Amos Getry Beman, Miss Grace A. Mapps, Rev. J. Sella Martin, Wm. C. Nell, Esq. J. Mercer Langston, and J. Holland Townsend, Esq.,

The Life of Captain John Brown.
The Liberator of Kansas, and the Hero of Harper's Ferry. By James Redpath. An elegant 12mo. volume of 400 pages, illustrated and embellished with a superb Steel Portrait of the Glorious Old Man. Price $1.00.

My Bondage and My Freedom.
By Fredrick Douglass, One vol., 12 mo., 464 pp. Illustrated. Price $1.00, postage 22 cts.

Life of Jermain W. Loguen.
The great Underground Railroad King. Price $1.00.

The Martyrs and the Fugitive.
By the Rev. S. H. Platt. A thrilling work on slavery and the slave trade, detailing the capture of a family in Africa by the slave-dealers, their fearful journey to the coast, the horrors of the "middle passage," their sale in America, and subsequent martyrdom; the slavery of their sons, his terrible sufferings and perilous escapes. Sent, postpaid, upon the receipt of 38 cts.

Twelve Years a Slave.
The Narrative of Solomon Northrup, a citizen of New York, kidnapped in Washington City in 1841 and rescued in 1853, from a cotton plantation near Red River, Louisiana. Seven Illustrations, 336 pp. 12mo. Price $1,00, postage paid.

Our National Charters.
For the Millions. Including—1. The Federal Constitution of 1787–9. 2. The Articles of Confederation, 1787. 3. The Declaration of Independence, 1776. 4. The Articles of Association, 1775. With notes showing their bearing on slavery, and the relative powers of the State and National Governments. Also a summary of Legal Opinions, collected from the highest authorities, is prefixed to the Constitution. An Appendix contains extracts from State Constitutions and Bills of Rights; Ordinance of 1787, excluding Slavery from the North-west Territory: also, Sentiments of the Revolutionary Fathers, &c. By mail, postage prepaid, single copy, 15 cts.; four copies, 50 cts.; nine copies $1,00.

The American Slave-Code,
In Theory and Practice: Its Distinctive Features Shown by its Statutes, Judicial Decisions, and Illustrative Facts. 430 pp., 12mo. Price 75 cts postage paid.

Unconstitutionality of Slavery.
By Lysander Spooner. In paper, 294 pp., 8vo Price 75 cts., or postage paid 86 cts.

Review of Lysander Spooner's Essay on the Unconstitutionality of Slavery.
By Wendell Phillips. Price 25 cts. Postage 5 cts.

The Revelations of a Slave Smuggler.
Being the Autobiography of Captain Richard Drake, an African trader for fifty years, from 1807 to 1857. The work is handsomely illustrated, with graphic representations of scenes as they actually occur on the slave ships and on shore. Illustration No. 1 is a large cut, 16x23, representing a slave market on the Coast of Africa. Illustration No. 2 represents a scene in the Hold of a Slaver (middle passage). Then there is a large plate, giving views of a slave vessel betwen decks, regulation slave-deck, regulation packing, &c. The work is handsomely printed—contains one hundred large 8vo. pages, and is published at a price which places it within the reach of the masses—viz: 25 cents a copy. When sent by mail the postage (six cents) must be added.

The Nat Turner Insurrection.
A full and reliable account. Copies will be sent to any address on the receipt of five cents.

Uncle Tom's Cabin.
By Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe. Two volumes in one. Price, $1,25.

The Kidnapped and Ransomed.
Being the personal recollections of Peter Still, and his wife, Vina, after forty years of slavery by Mrs. Kate E. R. Pickard, with an introduction by Rev. S. J. May, Illustrated. 12mo. cloth, $1,25.

Gerrit Smith in Congress.
"Slavery has no right but to die!" A work of over 400 pages, containing all his speeches delivered in Congress; also, an accurate likeness. Price, only 80 cents per copy, and postage paid.

The Dream;
Or, the true history of Dea Giles's Distillery and Dea. Jones's Brewery. By George B. Cheever, D.D. Price per single copy 10 cents, $1 per doz., or $7 per hundred.

A Summer on the Carribbean Sea.
By J. Dennis Harris. With an introduction by Geo. William Curtis. Sent by mail on receipt of $1.

A Pilgrimage to my Motherland;
An account of a journey among the Egbas and Yorubas of Central Africa, in 1859-60. By Robert Campbell, one of the Commissioners of the Niger Valley Exploring Party; late in charge of the Scientific Department of the Institute for Colored Youth, Philadelphia; and member of the International Statistical Congress, London. Price, 63 cents. When sent by mail, the postage (10 cents) must be added.

Turner's (J. A.) Cotton Planter's Manual.
Being a compilation of facts from the best authorities on the culture of cotton, its natural history, chemical analysis, trade and consumption, and embracing a history of cotton and the cotton gin. Price, $1. Postage, 15 cents.

The Manual of the Wardian [illegible]
100 large octavo pages, in paper [illegible] Price, 25 cents. Sent, postpaid, [illegible] the price. It comprises a [illegible] upon [illegible] kinds of [illegible] the various [illegible] and [illegible] and bed [illegible] cuts of [illegible]

CHURCH NOTICES.

Zion Baptist Church, Sullivan street, near Houston. The congregation of this Church is on the increase, but there has not yet been any increase in the church. The labors of the pastor seems to be highly appreciated, many of our citizens being attracted to the place by his very eloquent discourses.

A. M. E. (Bethel) Church, Bridge street, Brooklyn. At the expiration of the term of service of the Rev. Mr. Speaks, the Rev. Edmund Cosby, took charge of the church, until the arrival of the Rev. Mr. Kane. This gentleman who, in early life was taken by his parents to the west, now returns eastward again with a mind well stored with practical knowledge, and which has been greatly improved by diligent study in the Wilberforce University, at Xenia, Ohio.

We have not had the pleasure of hearing him preach, but we learn that his sermons bear the evidence of deep research.

The Concord St. Baptist Church, Brooklyn.—This Church is now in the enjoyment of peace and quietness. Some time since there was some difficulties between the pastor and some of his parishioners, but since the settlement of these troubles, nothing has occurred worthy of note. The Rev. Sampson White, is still the pastor.

St. Paul's Congregational Church, Hudson avenue, Brooklyn. This Church has long been without a pastor. After the Rev. G. W. Levere withdrew, the Rev. John B. Reeve, had charge of the church for a while, but having a call from the Central Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, which he had accepted, ere he entered on his charge at St. Paul's Church, he was compelled to leave. The Rev. Eli N. Hall, has been engaged, to fill the desk, and this he is doing very successfully. There has been quite an increase in the church since he has been there.

Siloam Presbyterian Church, Prince St., Brooklyn. This Church has been very fortunate in the choice of a pastor. On the recommendation of the Rev. A. N. Freeman, the late pastor, the present pastor, the Rev. Chas. H. Thompson, who was then a student at Oberlin College, was called to the charge of the church. We have had the pleasure of listening to one of his discourses, and we were highly pleased, not only with the matter and its arrangement, but also with the manner of de[illegible] [illegible] [Sabb]ath-school of the church gave [illegible] [illegible]ie on the 31st of July, which [illegible]ded, and passed off finely.

[illegible]st Church, Williamsburgh.—[illegible] [u]nder the pastoral charge of the Rev. James Hamilton. By his faithfulness and gentlemanly bearing, as a pastor and a man, he has won to himself troops of friends. The church is very fully attended, and is at peace within its borders.

Zion Church, Williamsburgh.—Many of the friends of this church, will be pleased to hear that it is in a very prosperous state. The administration of the Rev. Moses Manning, has been of very great benefit to it. We think that the Williamsburgh friends have been very fortunate in securing the appointment of this gentleman to the charge of their church. Messrs. Manning and Hamilton frequently exchange pulpits, and this has a very beneficial effect upon both churches.

St. James, P. E. Church, Williamsburgh.—The Rev. Mr. Taylor, still officiates at this church, but we are not able to report any increase in the congregation, one great drawback to the church is, that it is never open in the evening.

Slavery and the War.

The following petition to Congress from the New York Republican Central Club [illegible] [m]eeting:

[illegible] [th]e the establishment [illegible] Slavery has been [illegible] [dist]urbance and crime; [illegible] [belie]ve that the present conflict will prove to be irrepressible so long as slavery exists, inasmuch as it is the sole cause of the present war and consequently will generate future war; and whereas we believe it is the duty of Congress to resort to every Constitutional method of saving the nation and future generations from the enormous debt and loss of life with which we are now threatened; therefore be it

"Resolved, That we believe that a large majority of the people of the North will faithfully sustain those members in Congress who vote for improving the present constitutional opportunity of delivering the nation from the great curse of slavery. And, in view of the formidable opposition and awful loss of life at Manassas Junction, we hereby petition Congress not to leave Washington until they shall have either passed in substance the proposed law of the Hon. Seth C. Pomeroy, for the suppression of the slaveholders' rebellion by abolishing Slavery in the seceded States, amended, if thought best by compensating the Union slaveholders out of the confiscated property of the rebels, or abolish the Fugitive Slave Law as pertains to said seceded States.

"Resolved, That copies of the foregoing be transmitted by our Secretary to the [illegible] and Speaker of the [illegible] [illegible]es, with the request [illegible] [bo]th House of Con[gress]."

Another Vessel Saved through the Agency of a Colored Man.

A correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune at Fortress Monroe, writing under date of July 28th furnishes the following:—

"The gunboat Albatross, Capt. Prentiss, came into the roads a few days since with the Enchantress and her prize crew, recaptured after she had been taken by the privateer Jeff. Davis. The following account of her last cruise may not be uninteresting:

The Albatross, after leaving her first prize with Commodore Stringham, proceeded to sea again on the 18th of July, and on the following day arrived off Oregon Inlet, on the coast of North Carolina, where she saw a rebel steamer towing a schooner. The Albatross immediately gave chase, but the steamer, being of light draft, was able to get out of the way, under [illegible] of a large battery commanding the [illegible] and took her position [illegible] a sand[illegible]. The Albatross opened fire on her, she returned, but her shot [illegible] [with o]ne exception, which just [illegible] stack of the Albatross [illegible] the port bow, but the Albatross [illegible] no injury. After she was [illegible] [st]eamer took a safe position further [illegible] was another steamer that took [illegible] in the engagement. Finding it [illegible] to attempt pursuit or a landing, the [illegible] [c]ross [illegible] for Cape Hatteras, speaking and boarding several craft on the way. She found the [illegible] strongly fortified with batteries. In the Harbor were six vessels and three steamers, and a light ship which was supposed to be a floating battery. Heavy guns were mounted on either side of the channel. Not being able to enter, in consequence of these fortifications and steamers, the Albatross put to sea again. This was on Sunday, the 19ht. After sailing two or three hours southward and eastward, she sighted a vessel, and gave chase, and soon fetched up to what proved to be the Enchantress, captured by the privateer Jeff. Davis, six days out from Boston, to St. Jago, and in possession of a prize crew of five rebels and a negro belonging to the schooner before she was taken. On speaking her and demanding where from and whence bound, she replied, Boston for St. Jago. At this moment the negro rushed from the galley where the pirates had secreted him and jumped into the sea, exclaiming "they are a privateer-crew from the Jeff. Davis, and bound for Charleston." The negro was picked up and taken on the A. The prize was ordered to heave to, which she did. Lieutenant Neville jumped aboard of her, and ordered the pirates into the boats, and to pull for the Albatross, where they were secured in irons. Two of the prisoners are Charleston pilots, one is from Boston, and two from Brooklyn—one of the latter has a brother in Fortress Monroe, and the other has a brother on the Roanoke. Prizemaster Tunis D. Wendell was ordered on board the schooner, which was taken in tow by the Albatross, and arrived in Hampton Roads on Wednesday, the 22d. The Albatross will shortly proceed to Philadelphia, or New York, for repairs to her machinery. The vessel has now a reputation which is a terror to the Rebels, on sea and coast, as a fighting craft which they had better give a wide berth to.

A correspondent of the Liberator, writing from Newburyport, Mass., says of the Enchantress:

"She was owned by Messrs. Benjamin Davis, Atkinson Stanwood, John T. Page, E. Manson, E. M. Reed, R. Plumer, E. Evans, J. B. and W. J. Cresy. She was built on our river, of one hundred and sixty tons burthen, and as good a vessel as ever sailed from this port. Captain Devereaux, the commander, is a very capable man—one in whom the owners have entire confidence. She left Boston, bound to St. Jago, and when one hundred and fifty miles south of Nantucket Shoals, while on his course, came in sight of what he supposed was a French brig, with French colors. From his appearance, Captain D. supposed he was bound to New York. As he came along very near to make inquiries, Captain D. chalked on his quarter what he supposed this Frenchman wanted to ascertain—viz: the longitude. When near enough to throw a biscuit on board, up jumped some one hundred men—the "long-tom" was uncovered—ports were opened—and down came the French flag, and up went the Confederate! As the Enchantress was unarmed, and had a crew of only eight men and boys, what else could the captain do but submit to the one hundred, all armed, and ready for a fight! The E. was a clipper, and the fastest sailor in the States; and, with the least suspicion on the part of the Captain, could easily have sailed the piratical craft out of sight."

Exodus of the colored population of Hampton, Va.

The removal of Government stores from the village commenced early in the evening. It was the occasion for fresh rumors, among which was one that the village was to be shelled by the Fortress, and probably burned, which rumor I suspect had rather more foundation than some of the earlier ones. An indescribable panic ensued among the colored population, which all at once appeared to swell beyond all previous calculation. The streets swarmed with the terrified people. In less than half an hour the exodus commenced. The tide that for hours after poured over Hampton Bridge toward the Fortress, the scenes that marked the flight of the remnants of the population of the once great and aristocratic village, I will not undertake to describe. The moon made the night almost light as day. Between 8 and 9 o'clock the long wagon train of the Albany regiment turned into the main road leading from the Fortress to Hampton, which already swarmed with fugitives. They were principally on foot, the men and women, the latter greatly preponderating, carrying bundles big as hogsheads, containing the entire household effects of a family. Some were wheeling barrows containing a wagon-load. Children were straggling; those that were capable of carrying anything had some article or other of economic housekeeping; all fleeing as from instant peril. Women were shouting to men heavily laden to hurry up, and men urged women similarly encumbered not to lag behind the grotesque cavalcade that stretched the entire distance from Hampton to the fortress, their place of refuge. The scene was one seldom beheld anywhere. It was at once ludicrous and melancholy. But when to it was joined the camp train of kicking, baulky mules and fractious horses, with shouting, cursing, rollicking drivers—here a large wagon in the gutter, and there another stalled and half upset—it was quite past description. It was well toward night when the fugitive train began to dwindle. Some lingering, lame ancient Uncle Ned or Joe, who, though as deeply impressed with the sense of danger, was yet late in setting out, or unable to keep pace in the flight, formed the rear of this remarkable exodus. It was beyond midnight when I strolled through the streets of the village. The guards had generally been withdrawn, and save the main one, the streets were all quiet and desolate. Here and there in the neighborhood of the batteries and the bridge, squads of soldiers, who knew the rebels were little likely to make their appearance, or if they did were ready for them, lounged in door-yards or sprawled on the green grass, and were singing excellently well as a general thing in the German tongue, songs which the scene was so well calculated to inspire, while here and there others sang glees of the sea, that gave you to [und]erstand that the Naval Brigade had not [re]treated. With a friend I visited [illegible] of two Union families absent, where the negro [illegible] great and small, old and young, [illegible] [illegible] certain [illegible] gave us to understand that an extemporized prayer-meeting was going on. We were not intruders for they were in [illegible] of trouble," and pressed us for that assurance which, with unbounded and noisy faith, they were praying for. We told them to go to bed, keep quiet, and that it would be all right. We had the satisfaction of being believed with a thankfulness that for once it was a luxury to give advice. We went to another house, where there were two female servants alone. They, too, had been in "heaps of trouble," but, more philosophical if not more trusting, had come to the conclusion 'dat ef de Secesh ded come dey couldn't help, and dat war no use crying." Thus convinced, they had placed a chair against the door as a barricade, and gone to bed and were sound asleep when we knocked. "Do yes think, massa, dat dem Secesh will come for sure?" We told them not to be alarmed, which appeared to be perfectly satisfactory. We strolled through shaded streets from which the moonlight was almost barricaded by the meeting branches. Large fine mansions with doors and windows open, and which three months ago were tenanted by Virginia aristocracy, evidenced the unusual desolation. Now and then might be seen the flicker of a light carried by a marauding soldier exploring garret and cellar for something that had escaped previous search. Passing out of the village and over the bridge, we took our way to the fortress on foot. The road was yet traveled by fugitives, doubting or belated, and occasionally by a regimental sutler's cart, who with an eye to business had lingered for the last cent's worth of trade. In the neighborhood of the fortress the Babel scene which reigned when we left, had relapsed into something like quiet. The fugitives who had found refuge under the guns of the fortress, lay sprawled and scattered over a wide space in the shadow of its frowning walls. Soldiers, weary with the excessive labors of the day, lay in groups in the open air. The wagonways, and every foot of space not otherwise appropriated, were crowded and jammed with wagons with mules tied to them. Beside our particular friend, the burly and hard-working Quartermaster, and his faithful wagon-master, few were stirring. The sentinels slept at their posts, and cared little whether we knew that the countersign was "Rich Mountain" or "Bull Run."

The Contraband Question.

A LETTER FROM GEN. BUTLER.

Headquarters Department of Va., }
Fortress Monroe, July 30, 1861. }

Hon. Simeon Cameron, Secretary of War—Sir—By an order received on the 26th of July from Major General Dix, by a telegraphic order from Lieut. Gen. Scott, I was commanded to forward, of the troops of this department, four regiments and a half, including Colonel Baker's California Regiment, to Washington via Baltimore. This order reached me at two o'clock, A. M., by a special boat from Baltimore. Believing that it emanated because of some pressing exigency for the defence of Washington, I issued my orders before daybreak for the embarkation of the troops, sending those who are among the very best regiments I had. In the course of the following day they were all embarked for Baltimore, with the exception of some four hundred, for whom I had not transportation, although I had all the transport force in the hands of the Quartermaster here, to aid in the Bay line of steamers, which, by the same order from the Lieut. General, was directed to furnish transportation. Up to and at the time of the order I had been preparing for an advance movement by which I hoped to cripple the resources of the enemy at Yorktown, and especially by seizing a large quantity of negroes who were being pressed into their service in building the intrenchments there. I had five days previously been enabled to mount, for the first time, the first company of Light Artillery, which I had been empowered to raise, and they had but a single rified cannon, an iron six-pounder. Of course everything must and did yield to the supposed exigency and the orders. This ordering away the troops from this department, while it weakened the posts at Newport News, necessitated the withdrawal of the troops from Hampton, where I was then throwing up intrenched works to enable me to hold the town with a small force, while I advanced up the York or James river. In the village of Hampton there were a large number of negroes, composed in a great measure of women and children of the men who had fled thither within my lines for protection, who had escaped from marauding parties of rebels who had been gathering up able-bodied blacks to aid them in constructing their batteries on the James and York rivers. I had employed the men in Hampton in throwing up intrenchments, and they were working zealously and efficiently at that duty, saving our soldiers from that labor under the gleam of the mid-day sun. The women were earning substantially their own subsistence in washing, marketing, and taking care of the clothes of the soldiers, and rations were being served out to the men who worked for the support of the children. But by the evacuation of Hampton, rendered necessary by the withdrawal of troops, leaving me scarcely five thousand men outside the Fort, including the force at Newport News, all these black people were obliged to break up their homes at Hampton, fleeing across the creek within my lines for protection and support. Indeed, it was a most distressing sight, to see these poor creatures, who had trusted to the protection of the arms of the United States, and who aided the troops of the United States in their enterprise, to be thus obliged to flee from their homes, and the homes of their masters, who had deserted them, and become fugitives from fear of the return of the Rebel soldiery who had threatened to shoot the men who had wrought for us, and to carry off the women, who had served us, to a worse than Egyptian bondage. I have therefore now within the Peninsula, this side of Hampton Creek, 900 negroes, 300 of whom are able-bodied men, 30 of whom are men substantially past hard labor, 175 women, 225 children under the age of 10 years, and 170 between 10 and 18 years, and many more coming in. The question which this state of facts present are very embarrassing.

"First—What shall be done with them? and Second What is their state and condition?

"Upon these questions I desire the instructions of the Department.

"The first question, however, may perhaps be answered by considering the last. Are these men, women and children slaves? Are they free? Is their condition that of men, women and children, or of property, or is it a mixed relation? What their status was under the Constitution and laws we all know. What has been the effect of rebellion and a state of war upon that status? When I adopted the theory of treating the able-bodied negro fit to work in the trenches, as property liable to be used in aid of rebellion, and so contraband of war, that condition of things was in so far met as I then and still believe, on legal and constitutional basis. But now a new series of questions arise. Passing by women, the children certainly cannot be treated on that basis; if property, they must be considered the incumbrance, rather than the auxiliary of an army, and, of course, in no possible legal relation, could be treated as contraband. Are they property? If they were so, they have been left by their masters and owners, deserted, thrown away, abandoned like the wrecked vessel upon the ocean. Their former possessors and owners have causelessly, traitorously, rebelliously, and to carry out the figure practically abandoned them to be swallowed up by the winter storm of starvation. If property, do they not become the property of the salvors? but we, their salvors, do not need and will not hold such property and will assume no such ownership; has not therefore all proprietary relation ceased? Have they not become thereupon men, women and children? No longer under ownership of any kind, the fearful relics of fugitive masters, have they not by their masters' acts, and the state of war, assumed the condition, which we hold to be the normal one, of those made in God's image. Is not every Constitutional, legal, and moral requirement, as well to the runaway master as their relinquished slaves, thus answered? I confess that my own mind is compelled by this reasoning to look upon them as men and women. If not free born, yet free, manumitted, sent forth from the hand that held them never to be reclaimed.

"Of course if this reasoning thus imperfectly set forth is correct, my duty as a humane man is very plain. I should take the same care of these men, women and children, homeless and unprovided for, as I would of the same number of men, women and children, who for their attachment to the Union had been driven or allowed to flee from the Confederate States. I should have no doubt on this question, had I not seen it stated that an order had been issued by General McDowell in his department, substantially forbidding all fugitive slaves from coming within the lines, or being harbored there. Is that order to be enforced in all military departments? If so, who are to be considered fugitive slaves? Is a slave to be considered fugitive, whose master runs away and leaves him? Is it forbidden to the troops to aid or harbor within their lines the negro children who are found therein, or is the soldier, when his march has destroyed their means of subsistence, to allow them to starve because he has driven off the rebel master? How shall the commander of regiment or battalion sit in judgment upon the question, whether any given black man has fled from his master, or his master fled from him? Indeed, how are the free born to be distinguished? Is one any more or less a fugitive slave because he has labored on the rebel intrenchments? If he has so labored, as I understand it, he is to be harbored. By the reception of which, are the rebels most to be distressed, by taking those who have wrought all their rebel masters desired, masked their battery, or those who have refused to labor and left the battery unmasked.

"I have very decided opinions upon the subject of this order. It does not become me to criticise it, and I write in no spirit of criticism, but simply to explain the full difficulties that surround the enforcing it. If the enforcement of that order becomes the policy of the Government, I as a soldier, shall be bound to enforce it steadfastly, if not cheerfully. But if left to my own discretion, as you may have gathered from my reasoning, I should take a widely different course from that which it indicates.

"In a loyal State I would put down a servile insurrection. In a state of rebellion I would confiscate that which was used to oppose my arms, and take all that property, which constituted the wealth of that State, and furnished the means by which the war is prosecuted, beside being the cause of the war; and if, in so doing, it should be objected that human beings were brought to the free enjoyment of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, such objection might not require much consideration.

"Pardon me for addressing the Secretary of War directly upon this question, as it involves some political considerations a well as propriety of military action.

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

"BENJAMIN F. BUTLER."

Liberty to the Captive—Preach it!

"Wake, wake the song, and strike the lyre,
Each breast be filled with patriot fire,
As pledge we now, both heart and hand,
To Freedom's own, our native land!"

Preach it?—Yes, preach it louder than ever. Now is the time, the set time. No time was ever more opportune, more favorable, more important than the present, to preach freedom, liberty to the captives, "cry aloud, spare not, lift up your voice like a trumpet." Thunder it out, flash it out. God is preaching it in thunder tones. He waited long and patiently for ministers to open their mouths for the dumb, why did they refuse? God preaches freedom, the opening of the prison-doors to them that are bound. He has always preached thus, declared positively, "he that stealeth a man and selleth him, or if he be found in his hand, he shall surely be put to death." And he always will preach thus, till every yoke is broken, and the oppressed go free. "Let my people go," is sounded louder and still louder in the ears of every one; the voice is in every breeze, every zephyr, every whistling wind, in sunshine, the gentle shower, in the storm, in hurricane, the still small voice. The thunders thunder it; the lightnings flash it; the earth quakes it; the heavens declare it; the sun, the moon, the starry firmament the heavens above, the earth beneath, all nature cries: —"Loose the bands of wickedness, undo the heavy burdens, let the oppressed go free, break every yoke."

"Long, too long, have we been [illegible]
O'er our country's sin and shame;
Let us now, the time redeeming,
Press the helpless captive's claim,
Till exulting,
He shall cast aside his chain!"

Preach it! yes, preach it, pour in the truth burningly, scorchingly, the liquid flame of God's word. Preach it by word of mouth, the sword, the bayonet, the forty-pounder. Preach it as God preaches it.

"Blest Freedom, still thy sway extend.
O'er all the earth thy bl[illegible],
Break every tyrant's galling chain,
Rule all the land, rule all the main.
Then shall be heard from shore to shore,
In thunder tones, like ocean's roar,
The nation's shout as loud they sing
The praise of God, their only King."

Golden Rule.

From the Anti-Slavery Standard.

Colorphobia in Jamaica.

Kingston, Jamaica, July 5, 1861.

There's great dearth of news here. Excepting the case of the Rev. Robert Gordon, there's nothing that will interest your readers. The Bishop of this Diocese is likely to get into bad odor, in consequence of his unjust conduct towards that clergyman, now resident in the city of Kingston. The Rev. Robert Gordon is a black, a native of Jamaica, and a minister of the Church of England. He obtained ordination in Canada by the Bishop of Huron, about three years ago. Mr. Gordon was employed by the Colonial Church Society, and his services were deemed by those among whom he labored as efficient and attended with a pleasing measure of success, as letters testimonial and other documents in his possession show. It is to be expected that a black native of the tropics, and one resident for upwards of a quarter of a century in the Island of Jamaica, should find the habits of a Northern people unsuited to his tastes, and the rigors of a wintry climate trying to his constitution. Mr. Gordon stood the first winter well, but his health afterwards declined, and there appeared no other alternative left him, if he would preserve health, than to quit the frosty region of Canada. He sought, naturally enough, the congenial region of his native land. In returning hither, he fully expected employment as a clergyman, there being many localities where he might be advantageously employed; moreover, it was in Jamaica that he had fitted himself for a life of usefulness; all his considerable information had been acquired here, and here, above all places in God's earth, he was free to do all good. But Mr. Gordon has found great difficulties, for opposition of a formidable kind has beset him. There's a body of whites in Jamaica who are virulently prejudiced against even the educated blacks, and this body is composed of the old slaveholders, and they openly declare that the black clergyman would be better employed in digging cane-holes than in preaching. The Bishop has been influenced so far by this dominant party as to deny employment to the black priest, and to keep him in suspense. Mr. Gordon received his clerical honors at the hands of a Canadian Bishop; but, previous to his application in that quarter for ordination, he had constantly and solicitously sought ordination in his native land, but without success, having been then opposed by the same party which now urges the Bishop to deny the black man bread. During his earlier struggles to obtain a footing in Jamaica, Bishop Courtenay gave him the promise—reluctantly given, to be sure, but still formally made—of an appointment in the Church here; a promise he never redeemed, and now declares he never will. Mr. Gordon, in spite of hope deferred, and malignant opposition, has triumphantly compassed his cherished wish in now presenting himself to his countrymen for employment as a full and accredited Priest of the Church of England. By a course of deferential conduct to those over and around him, he has succeeded in winning the sympathies of the public, and the whole Jamaica Press is thundering at the gates of the Episcopal Palace for the admission of the black priest into the charmed edifice; and unless Bishop Courtenay gives due heed to the demand, his personal character and high social position are at stake.

We, here, are all watching with intense interest current events in America.

Success to the Anti-Slavery cause!

N. L. E.

From the Liberator.

Colored Citizens of Canada.

At the recent city election in Toronto, C. W., the colored citizens have borne quite a prominent part through the agency of lectures, public meetings, questioning of candidates, and activity at nominations and at the polls.

During a speech of William J. Watkins, Esq., of Rochester, New York, he referred to the Anderson case as having furnished the colored people with an admirable test to show them who were their friends, and the reverse. He showed that it was the opposition members of Parliament who had battled for the rights of humanity assailed in the person of the colored man Anderson, while the ministry and their supporters took a very different course—the Premier of the Government and the Chief Justice having done their part towards sending him back to be burned alive. As he saw a considerable number of the colored electors present, he should have something to say particularly to them, because he thought that they, he might almost say above all other people in the Province, ought to see to it that they occupied the right position, and that they gave no aid or comfort to the enemy. (Cheers.) The eye of the whole world was upon the colored men of the United States and of Canada, and it was their duty to take that course which would refute the absurd and wicked allegation of their natural, mental and moral inferiority. (Cheers.) These white men, said Mr. Watkins, cannot do it for us. The Hon. George Brown, with all his brilliant eloquence, cannot do it. We, colored men, must do it for ourselves. (Cheers.) The colored man must stand up before the nation, and prove by the development of all that is within him, that he is a man in every sense of the word. (Loud cheers.) They could not do this, if they committed suicide by voting aid and comfort to the enemy. (Cheers.) Mr. Watkins proceeded to complain that the colored citizens of Toronto had been most grossly misrepresented and libelled in a paragraph which had appeared in that morning's Leader.

An interesting correspondence between A. T. Augusta, M. D., a colored citizen, and Adam Wilson, Esq., was also published, relative to public questions involving rights of the colored people in Canada.

N.

ALLEGED ATTEMPT TO ENSLAVE SIX COLORED MEN.

On last Monday morning six colored seamen presented themselves at the office of Marshal Murray, and stated that they were part of the crew of the Robert C. Wright, and were charged with [illegible] ashore by their captain. [illegible] them in custody until the arrival of Mr. Commissioner Osborne, when they made the following statement:

The brig sailed from this port bound to Aspinwall with a cargo of coals. The crew consisted of the master, two mates, and the six colored men, who hailed as follows:

Charles Darling, aged fifteen, West Indies; Jose Cardez, aged twenty-five, Chili; Obra Walker, aged nineteen, Bermuda; Lorenzo Thompson, aged twenty-two, West Indies; Charles Ranny, aged twenty-two, Jamaica, West Indies.

From Aspinwall, the brig proceeded to Trinidad to get freight, and from thence to Cuba; but in consequence of the civil war at the South, the Spanish merchants were very cautious, and refused to make shipments under the United States flag. The captain then ran for Cardenas, and subsequently made up his mind to put into Baltimore, Maryland. The men put in a demurrer to this, as they supposed it was intended to sell them into slavery.

Symptoms of insubordination bein gapparent, and fearing that he and his officers might be murdered while asleep in their berths, the captain ran before the wind to New York; and gave up his crew to the authorities on the charge of intending to make a revolt, mutiny, and murder. This morning they were arraigned on the charges, but no prosecutor appearing, they were discharged, and went on their way rejoicing.

The following is the statement of one of them named Charles Ranny:

We sailed from this port on the brig Robert C. Wright, Garland master, having signed articles for a voyage from New York to Aspinwall, thence to Cuba, and to return to the United States. On the voyage out we were civil and worked hard, but were threatened with shooting, and the captain said if he had us in Baltimore we should go up in the country, and he would walk the streets like a gentleman. We supposed he would sell us. The second mate ran away at Aspinwall. As we could get no cargo in Cuba or Cienfuegos, the captain said he would go to Baltimore, and then commenced his promise of licking and selling us.

We told the captain several times that we did not want to go there, but he said it was none of our business where we went, and that he would do as he pleased. He said that he would give Charley Simpson and the cook a free passage to go North, but he would sell the rest of us down South. We talked the matter over forward, and came to the conclusion we would not go South, but would come to New York.

At that time we made no display of force and had no arrest of any kind. The mate threatened to cut us with a cutlass, but the captain finding we were firm in our determination to come to the port of New York, said if we would do our duty he would come here. We do not think we have done wrong, believing that if we were taken to Baltimore we should be sold for slaves.

The brig Robert C. Wright is rated A 1 1-4, 190 tuns, built in Baltimore in 1855, and is owned by J. Randall. She has no cargo.

After the prisoners were discharged, ex-Judge Beebe took the necessary steps to libel the vessel for the wages of the crew, claiming one month and a half, at twelve dollars per month. Thus the affair stands at present.

Anglo-African War Items.

A Boston correspondent of the New York Tribune in a recent letter says:

"A mulatto from Westchester County, New York, came into a recruiting office in State Street yesterday, and said he had come all the way from home on purpose to enlist, for he had heard that in Massachussetts colored men were received in the army. He was turned off, of course, because Congress is so select in its tastes that it will not employ yellow men to fight yellow men. I don't see as the poor fellow can serve his country, and the cause of freedom unless he can contrive to get captured by a privateer, and then slay the prize crew and bring his vessel into port, as your black hero, Tillman, did."

We are personally acquainted with the individual referred to, and will confidently predict that before many months have expired, we will hear of daring deeds performed by him.

A correspondent of the Syracuse, (New York,) Standard, writes:

Several companies of negro cavalry charged on Sherman's battery, and were met with grape and canister. Then they were greeted with shell of two seconds fuse, which exploded just at the proper time.

Hon. Kennedy Marshall, of Pittsburg, who was in the woods near Bull Run, during the conflict, saw six slaves, who said they escaped from one of the rebel batteries. They said that the rebels have thousands of negroes with them who do all the work, cutting down trees, making fortifications, and working batteries; that several whole regiments are made up of them, but so far have been kept in the rear, and not put in fight except to work the batteries. While talking to them a company of calvary dashed by, and the negroes screened Mr. Marshall from them by their bodies, and assured him that all the negroes would aid us if they had a fair chance—that it took nearly an equal number of whites to watch them.

The Legislature of Tennessee has passed an act "for the relief of volunteers," which authorizes the governor to impress all the free negroes of that State, between the ages of fifteen and fifty years, being sound in mind and body. These "volunteers" are to perform such menial services in the camp as may be required, and to receive therefor regular rations, with eight dollars per month as wages.

Governor Moore yesterday telegraphed to Richmond, to offer the services of fifteen or twenty, or as many more if needed, of the free colored women of this city to act as nurses.—N. O. Crescent.

The Richmond Examiner says that among the prisoners here is a free negro, who came as a chaplain to one of the Connecticut regiments.

The Examiner has been sold.

A member of one of the [illegible] regiments relates that at the battle of Bull Run he encountered a stalwart colored man, belonging to the Secession ranks who was arrayed with a heavy broad sword and rif[le] [illegible] head, with such force that the woodwork of the rifle with which the white soldier was defending himself, was completely severed, whereupon the soldier retreated.

A slave man, belonging to Major B[illegible] of one of the Alabama regiments, was [illegible] for two boxes of cartridges, one of which he accidentally dropped in the water, [illegible] was afraid to mention the fact on delivering them. A soldier on opening the [illegible] supposing that they had been wet intentionally, immediately shot the slave dead.

After the battle of Bull Run on the 18th ult., while the Northern troops were in pursuit of the rebels, they overtook a colored man by the name of James Blake, belonging to the rebel army. He immediately informed them that Beauregard was only a short distance ahead, and could be easily captured; but they not crediting Blake's story which was truthful, Beauregard got away.

Cool.—The following resolution was offered in the rebel congress at Richmond by Mr. Vedder of Virginia: read it and see if you have ever seen any thing in its line, to equal it in coolness:

"Resolved, by Congress, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into and report on the expediency of prescribing by law, while the facts are fresh and susceptible of proof, some uniform mode of taking, authenticating, and preserving the evidence of the abduction or reception by the enemy of slaves, with their age, sex, and value, owned by any citizen of the Confederate States, to the end that indemnity may be hereafter exacted from the enemy."

Referred as directed.

Return of Fugitives.—The Annapolis Gazette of Thursday says that a few days since three negroes came up the bay in a small boat, landed at the Naval Academy and asked to be sheltered there. Colonel Roberts immediately delivered them to the sheriff of Anne Arundel county, to be dealt with according to law.

PERSONAL.

Some stir has been created in Williams[burgh] through the efforts of parties trying to c[illegible] Mr. E. B. Bundick of Secessionism. O[ne of] them has made an affidavit in relation to [a con]versation, between Mr. B. and others. [Mr.] Bundick has published a card in the Daily Times in which the following sentence occurs: "Now anybody who knows me, knows I am as good a Union man as lives."

We are pleased to announce, the venirable Rev. Christopher Rush, is recovering from his late illness, but its effects are yet seen in his feeble step and slightly tremulous voice. He preached in Zion last Sabbath, but it was painfully evident that it required a great effort on his part to do so.

Rev. E. W. Blyden of Monrovia, is now in Boston, arranging for his passage home, to Africa. We regret much that Mr. B's. visit is to be so short, and would be glad to learn that he had been induced to prolong it.

Mr. John T. Magruder of Washington, D. C. after an absence of ten years spent on the Pacific coast is now in this city, the guest of our friend Mr. J. H. Brooks.

We received last week a hasty visit from the Rev. A. N. Freeman, of Hartford, Ct. We are pleased to announce that he is in the enjoyment of his usual good health.

Rev. Amos G. Beman, passed through this city last Saturday, on his way to Greenport, L. I.

A. P. Smith will commence a tour through New Jersey, about Sept. 9th, prepared to lecture on the following subjects: The War, its Causes, Progress and probable effects: Means of Elevation, or on due notice any other subject of interest. No compensation required beyond traveling expenses. Address, immediately, A. P. Smith, Saddle River, Balgen Co., N. J.

Special Notices.

N. Y. African Society for Mutual Relief.—The members are earnestly requested to attend the meeting of the Society on Monday next, August 12th, at the old hall No. 42 Baxter Street.

It being "Election Night," the meeting will commence at 8 o'clock precisely.

J. J. ZUILLE, Sec.

MARRIED.

Johnson—Freeman.—In Williamsburg, N.Y. by Rev. Moses Manning, James Johnson of Baltimore, Md. to Miss Sarah Ann Freeman of this city.

Groomer—Coles.—In Williamsburg, L. I. on Thursday, August 1st. by Rev. Moses Manning, Morgan Groomer of Newtown, L. I. to Mrs. Frances S. Coles of Philadelphia.

Brooks—Skinner.—In this city, on Monday, July 29th, by the Rev. H. H. Garnet, John H. Brooks of Washington, D. C. to Miss Fannie Skinner of this city.

Brown—Garrett.—In Washington, D. C. On Thursday evening, August 1st, by the Rev. D. W. Moore, Alfred L. Brown to Carrie Garrett, all of Washington, D. C.

DIED.

Died—at Lascahobas, Hayti, June 2nd, Mr. William H. Carter, from Stonington, Conn. aged 40 years. He leaves a wife and one child to mourn his loss, and a large circle of acquaintance. He was ever an affectionate husband, and a kind father and died in the triumph of faith.

Died.—In Williamsburgh, L.I. of summer complaint, Rebecca, infant daughter of Rev. E. H. and Clarissa Mathews, aged 4 months.

Poyer.—In this city, July 25th, of old age, Aaron L. Poyer, aged 95 years.

Brown.—In Newark, N. J. July 29th, [illegible] Brown in the 67 year of h er age.

Amberman.—In this city, July 19th, of dropsy, Henry Amberman, aged 48 years.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE BEST DRESSING FOR THE HAIR during warm weather, is White's vegetable extract. For Sale at 19 Sullivan and 40 Grand Sts.,

BOARDING AND LODGING ON THE [illegible] Side. Mrs. Gant, can accommodate a few [illegible] and Gentlemen, at her residence 18[illegible] Suffolk [illegible] Terms very moderate.

BROWN'S POPULAR [illegible]

The undersigned takes [illegible] friends and the public [illegible] cently fitted up his SALOON [illegible] pared to furnish them with Ice Cream, Fruit, and other Delicacies.

BENJ. F. BROWN,
70 Ble[illegible]
between Broadway & Crosby St.

WA[illegible]

The Weekly Anglo-African.

"MAN MUST BE FREE!—IF NOT THROUGH LAW, WHY THEN ABOVE THE LAW."

VOL. I. NO. 3. NEW YORK, AUGUST 17, 1861. PRICE FOUR CENTS.

The Weekly Anglo-African.
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY SATURDAY,
BY ROBT. HAMILTON,
No. 48 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW YORK

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
Two Dollars per year, or Four Cents per copy, payable on delivery.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.
Six Cents a line for the first insertion, and Three Cents for each subsequent insertion.

Notices of Births, Marriages, Deaths, Public Meetings, &c., inserted for twenty five Cents, provided they do not exceed five lines; if more than that, Five Cents for each additional line.

All communications for the paper must be addressed ROBT. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman st., New York.

THE EMIGRATION QUESTION.

MR. EDITOR.—Permit me briefly to review the criticisms of a correspondent in reference to my article on emigration to Hayti, the land of promise discovered by Mr. Redpath.

The assertion that "arrangements have been made by which getting into Hayti is very easy indeed, but that getting out of Hayti is not so certain," is dogmatically pronounced "sheer nonsense," &c. A brief comparison will show whether my position is tenable or not. The passage to Hayti, we are told, is free; but those introduced at government expense (see official reply of Mr. Simon,) for three years at least, will not be permitted to leave without buying the privilege at a cost equal to that of the passage, amounting to from $18 to $25 per head. To this must be added a similar sum for a return passage. Here, then, is the difference alluded to; the emigrant may go to Hayti FREE OF EXPENSE; a return can only be effected at the heavy cost of from $38 to $50 each person merely for the permit and passage, to say nothing of incidental expenses. The wages, as paid by the government in small dollars, being about 30 cents a day, a laborer with a family of four or five persons must have about as much chance of getting away as a Georgia plantation slave.*

The effect of obtaining full possession of those land gifts (to which, by the way, my previous communication did not allude in the remotest manner,) is somewhat similar to that of the "free passage," and, working in the same suspicious manner, virtually mortgages the body of the recipient for seven consecutive years, that being the length of time the emigrant must occupy his "free gift" before the law gives him power to dispose of it. (Emigration Law, Art. 4th, Guide p. 124.)

To the question "Who can guarantee us that before one-fifth of that number (100,000) can be landed on those shores, the sentiment, if not the actual rallying cry of the natives, will be Hayti for the Haytians?" our critic, Mr. "Pennsylvania," replies by saying: "Downright absurdity!" "Mr. Smith is evidently profoundly ignorant of the causes which led to the K. N. excitement in this country, and of the difference of the Constitutions of Hayti and the United States!" Now with all deference due to superior wisdom, I take the liberty of saying Constitutions have little or nothing to do with the matter. The movement in our country adverted to, existed not by the sanction of the Constitution, but in utter disregard of the letter and spirit of that instrument. "But," continues Mr. "Pennsylvania," (evidently supposing no opposition can be manifested except through a Know Nothing society): "Numbers of our citizens (natives) banded themselves together for the purpose of putting a stop to what they considered an evil in the political system; but in Hayti no such evils either real or imaginary can possibly exist!" The evils, so termed, as can be abundantly shown by political documents, were the enjoyment of the rights of citizenship by foreigners, exercising the elective franchise, holding office, &c. If these evils, so called, cannot exist in Hayti, let me ask why not? What is it that will forbid foreigners, or emigrants, from participation in political affairs?

But, I affirm it without fear of successful contradiction, the causes of hostility to foreigners, culminating in the Know Nothing party, were only partly political. A peaceful and plodding industry, joined with economical habits, which made them successful in business, a religion differing from that of the natives as much as Romanism differs from bigoted Protestantism, their alleged "clannishness," &c., &c., these had more effect in turning against them the bitter hostility of the lower orders of one population than anything else. Can any one say that these causes, always potent with an ignorant people as the Haytian "sans culottes" are admitted to be, will not exist in Hayti? The first certainly will if promises are realised, the second the emigrants will carry with them, the third, clannishness, will result in an intensified force from settling in communities as proposed by the leaders of the movement. Such are the facts, clear and irrefutable; the inference I leave to others.

Next, after having attributed to me absurdities with a perfect looseness, all drawn from his own remarkably fertile imagination our Pennsylvanian friend, turns to climatology in which science he displays considerable skill in doing what a Pennsylvanian would probably try to do in Hayti—keep in the shade! Quoting from a widely circulated puff, he informs us with as much sang froid as possible, that during the hottest hours of the hottest season, the thermometer stands at a maximum of 98 degrees (only blood heat,) in the coolest place, i. e., in the shade; but how hot it is in the sun our cool and shady Pennsylvanian saith not! The "Guide," however, admits 120 or 121 in the sun, which is 8 or 9 degrees above fever heat, (p. 58.) Even in the winter, at Cape Haytian, in the extreme northern part of the island, from November 1st, 1860, to February 12th, 1861, the thermometer ranged in the shade from 77 to 88 degrees, a temperature equal to the hot July and August weather of this country. (Aug. Af. Emigration Organ, No. 42.) And Mr. Redpath, writing one of his "Tribune" letters from Gonaives, Feb. 7th, in the winter of '59, says:

"At 5 o'clock in the morning of last Wednesday, Feb. 3, we started from our boarding-house at Cape Haytien, our knapsacks on our backs and umbrellas in hand. A more delicious temperature than that of Hayti early in the morning and in the evening at this season of the year, it is impossible to conceive.

"But from 9 o'clock till 4, umbrellas are a necessity, and cool breezes and shady spots a decided luxury."—Visit to Hayti, Letter 4th.

Excellent farming country that "terrestrial paradise" must be! and how those "necessities" must facilitate the laborer in his operations on the free farms.

I shall waste no ink in replying to the epithets "Mr. Pennsylvania" hurls so thick and furiously from behind the mask of an assumed name, except to say that the charge of croaking might with much more propriety have been brought against his emigration friends. They are the men who are continually preaching despair in the ears of our people, who would scare us from the country with the everlasting "croak" of "we can be or do anything here;" but who, to do them justice, consider themselves capable of working miracles, and that without any great exertion, if some Government will only be kind enough to spoon-feed them.

Yours, unterrified, and firm in the faith that Slavery is not immortal, that wrong is not invincible, A. P. SMITH.

SADDLE RIVER, N. J., Aug. 5th, 1861.

P. S. The above, as near as I can recollect, with a slight addition in reference to climate, is the communication suppressed by the gag law of the organ of the Haytien Bureau, now the Pine and Palm. A postscript added to the letter asked the question, if justice required the publication of the Holly Articles, whether for the same reason it did not require the publication of the famous Redpath Letters, Visit to Hayti?
A. P. S.

* The anecdote illustrating this point which was given in a preceding communication was from Little Dorrit, not Bleak House, as a clerical error made me say.

A GLIMPSE OF AFRICA.

BY J. H. B.

It was the twenty-third day out from Norfolk, that the long wished for cry was heard, land, ho! land ho! With beating hearts all rushed to see it, and there in its quiet grandeur we beheld the far famed, but now desolate Africa. As I gazed on that noble land so fraught with historical interest, I could but feel a longing that there should have been present a worthier representative, to behold and record her beauteous aspect. We too often do this great country injustice, in writing or speaking of it. We confine ourselves to its torrid zone possessions, and mention but its deserts of burning sand, hot fevers and scorching suns. We lose sight of her garden spots, her oases; we deprive her of Egypt and all her Mediterranean coast, even her south eastern cape, and think, and speak of Africa as but a waste, a great desert of sand. What would America be thus deprived? Less than Africa for there would be left naught but sand and yellow fever, and the great and beautiful America, would shrink into the miserable beach sand of the Floridas. What would great Asia, or proud Europe be; what their aspect, where their delightful climes and charming scenery, if they were thus divested of their garments: oh! who would desire to rob them of their beautiful possessions or reduce their ancient renown? Yet we write and speak of poor Africa as wanting all these divine gifts. Do we then glory in her robbery? But as I stood gazing on those glorious mountains, I thought of her grandeur, her glory now passed away for its day. It should be excusable in me, in feeling indignation at the many robberies and injustices done this great country. Oh! is there not blended with the love of country and home, the boast of beautiful possessions? How gladdens the heart at the mention of some noted spot, or great city of its own native land. With what glowing delight is read the bright page of one's native land's history. All people and nations have looked with tender regard upon the granduer the beauty and magnificence of their native country, should the poor African, be denied this boon? Should he be kept in ignorance of his country's once great fame, or made to believe the untruths of this age?

Noble land! I will study of thee as a beautiful painting. Not thy dark shades only, but the bright and glorious union of colors that makes the beautiful whole.

We look upon Fulton as the great inventor of steam vessels, yet comparatively how feeble his efforts to the present steam floating palaces that with unimaginable speed travel over the bosom of the ocean. We nevertheless are indebted to Him for them all. His great mind conceived the idea, started the new principle, and gave origin to that improvement of which we would have known nothing but for the start he gave us. Who now can enumerate the blessings and advantages of that great discovery. Who would withhold honor from the name of this great benefactor? Let us then deal as fairly with a once great nation as we do with Fulton. Where is the mortal who could enumerate the blessings and advantages of the discovery of the science of astronomy and navigation. These two sciences alone should be enough to beget a love and reverence for the country and people of their origin. The prosperity and exalted position of the ancients are nearly all traceable to the advances of poor Africa.

And, kind reader, where will you see evidences of a greater nation or country? Take the mighty Nile—study the history of its shores—take the great cities that have survived colonies of their making, and give poor Africa her merited share of fame and glory, and thus repay her by your acknowledgements, the debt of gratitude so long withheld.

Compare her present state with countries and kingdoms of much more recent date—give her but justice and what generous and noble heart would not say, Africa should be honored, Africa must be rescued, for to her we owe our present enlightened position, our boasted civilization. We write and speak of Africa's once glorious position with a light heart and careless hand. We seldom allow ourselves the time or privilege of thinking of the future, or comparing the probable lot of our cities to the present of those of Africa.

Yet the course of human events would justify us in so doing. I cannot, therefore, as we are passing through this renowned strait (Gibraltar,) refrain from giving my thoughts to the future of the glorious and boasting cities of to-day.

The great London, Paris and New York may yet see the day of rapid decline. Wars and foes may reduce them, and as in imagination I see some lone traveler or searching historian amongst their ruins; I ask if there will be shown as great evidences of a once glorious country as is presented by the now degraded and despised Africa? Oh! may they be treated more justly and for past good services be gratefully remembered. Fare the well, noble land! Steam reality breaks in on my future contemplation of thy claims. But there shall ever be rendered in my memory thy deeds of nobleness, thy benefit to the human race. Thy name shall sound sweetly on my ear. My boast shall be to speak of thee as a whole. My prayer thy restoration of greater glory, and having the light of divine religion, mav thou be repeopled by thy legitimate race and the influence of thy genial climes spread over the world, restoring in renewed splendor thy kingdoms and thy people and make again familiar to the world the once renowned name of Africa.

THE BLACK SAXONS.

BY MRS. LYDIA MARIA CHILD.

Tyrants are but the spawn of ignorance,
Begotten by the slaves they trample on;
Who, could they win a glimmer of the light,
And see that tyranny is always weakness,
Or fear with its own bosom ill at ease,
Would laugh away in scorn, the sand-wove chain,
Which their own blindness feigned for adamant.
Wrong ever builds on quicksands; but the right,
To the firm centre lays its moveless base.
J. R. LOWELL.

The following story which is very suggestive at this crisis, is strictly true. The Southern gentleman, who visited the swamp in disguise, and heard the speeches of the passed slaves, repeated them as nearly as he could recollect, to a friend of Mrs. Child, and she committed them to writing. The incidents occurred during the war of 1812, when the probability of the British landing on our coasts was much talked of.—EDS. INDEPENDENT.

Mr. Duncan was sitting alone in his elegant furnished parlor, in the vicinity of Charleston, South Carolina. Before him lay an open volume—Thierry's History of the Norman Conquest. From the natural kindliness of his character, and democratic theories deeply imbibed in childhood, his thoughts dwelt more with a nation prostrated and kept in base subjection by the strong arm of violence, than with the renowned robbers, who seized their rich possessions, and haughtily trampled on their dearest rights.

"And so that bold and beautiful race became slaves!" thought he. "The brave and free-souled Haroldа, strong of heart and strong of arm; the fair-haired Ediths, in their queenly beauty, noble in soul as well as ancestry; these all sank to the condition of slaves."

These thoughts were passing through his mind, when a dark mulatto opened the door, and making a servile reverence, said in wheedling tones, "Would massa be so good as gib a pass to go to Methodist meeting?"

Mr. Duncan was a proverbially indulgent master, and he at once replied, "Yes, Jack, you may have a pass; but you must mind and not stay out all night."

"O, no, massa. Tom neber preach more than two hours."

Scarcely was the pass written before another servant appeared with a similar request; and presently another; and yet another. When these interruptions ceased, Mr. Duncan resumed his book, and quietly read of the oppressed Saxons, until the wish for a glass of water induced him to ring the bell. No servant obeyed the summons. With an impatient jerk of the rope, he rang a second time, muttering to himself, "What a curse it is to be waited upon by slaves! If I were dying, the lazy loons would take their own time, and come dragging their heavy heels along an hour after I was in the world of spirits. My neighbors tell me it is because I never flog them, I believe they are in the right. It is a hard case, too, to force a man to be a tyrant, whether he will or no."

A third time he rang the bell more loudly; but waited in vain for the sound of coming footsteps. Then it occurred to him that he had given every one of his slaves a pass to go to the Methodist meeting. This was instantly followed by the remembrance that the same thing had happened a few days since before.

We were then at war with Great Britain; and though Mr. Duncan often boasted the attachment of his slaves, and declared them to be the most contented and happy laborers in the world, who would not take their freedom if they could, yet by some coincidence of thought the frequency of Methodist meetings immediately suggested the common report that British troops were near the coast, and about to land in Charleston. Simultaneously came the remembrance of Big-boned Dick, who many months before had absconded from a neighboring planter, and was suspected of holding a rendezvous for runaways in the swampy depths of some dark forest. The existence of such a gang was indicated by the rapid disappearance of young corn, sweet potatoes, fat hogs, etc., from the plantations of many miles round.

"The black rascal!" exclaimed he; "if my boys are in league with him"——

The next morning he asked his slaves with assumed nonchalance whether they had a good meeting.

"O, yes, massa; bery good meeting."

"Where did you meet?"

"In the woods behind Birch Grove, massa."

The newspaper was brought, and found to contain a renewal of the report that British troops were prowling about the coast. Mr. Duncan slowly paced the room for some time, apparently studying the figures of the carpet, yet utterly unconscious whether he trod on canvas or the greensward. At length he ordered his horse and drove to the next plantation. Seeing a gang at work in the fields, he stopped; and after some questions concerning the crop, he said to one of the most intelligent, "So you had a fine meeting last night?"

"O, yes, massa, bery nice meeting."

"Where was it?"

The slave pointed far east of Birch Grove. The white man's eye followed the direction of the bondman's finger, and a deeper cloud gathered on his brow. Without comment he rode on in another direction, and with apparent indifference made similar inquiries of another gang of laborers. They pointed north of Birch Grove, and replied, "In the Hugonot woods, massa."

With increasing disquietude, he slowly turned his horse toward the city. He endeavored to conceal anxiety under a cheerful brow; for he was afraid to ask counsel, even of his most familiar friend, in a community so prone to be blinded by insane fury under the excitement of such suspicions. Having purchased a complete suit of negro clothes, and a black mask well fitted to his face, he returned home, and awaited the next request for passes to a Methodist meeting.

In a few days the sable faces again appeared before him, one after another, asking permission to hear Tom preach. The passes were promptly given, accompanied by the cool observation, "It seems to me, boys, that you are all growing wonderfully religious of late."

To which they only replied, "Ah, if massa could hear Tom preach, it make his hair stand up. Tom make everybody tink weder he hab a soul."

When the last one had departed, the master hastily assumed his disguise and hurried after them. Keeping them within sight, he followed over field and meadow, through woods and swamps. As he went on, the number of dark figures, all tending toward the same point, continually increased. Now and then some one spoke to him; but he answered briefly, and with an effort to disguise his voice. At last they arrived at one of those swamp islands, so common at the South, insulated by a broad, deep belt of water, and effectually screened from the mainland by a luxuriant growth of forest trees, matted together by a rich entanglement of vines and underwood. A large tree had been felled for a bridge; and over this dusky forms were swarming like ants into their new-made nest.

Mr. Duncan had a large share of that animal instinct called physical courage; but his heart throbbed almost audibly as he followed that dark multitude.

At the end of a rough and intricate passage there opened before him a scene of picturesque and imposing grandeur. A level space, like a vast saloon, was enclosed, by majestic trees, uniting their boughs over it in fantastic resemblance to some Gothic cathedral. And here in this lone sanctuary of nature, were assembled many hundreds of swart figures, some seated in thoughtful attitudes, others scattered in moving groups, eagerly talking together. As they glanced about, now sinking into dense shadow, and now emerging into lurid light, they seemed to the slaveholder's excited imagination like demons from the pit come to claim guilty souls. He had, however, sufficient presence of mind to observe that each one as he entered, prostrated himself till his forehead touched the ground, and rising, placed his finger on his mouth. Imitating this signal, he passed in with the throng, and seated himself behind the glare of the torches. For some time he could make out no connected meaning amid the confused buzz of voices and half-suppressed snatches of songs. But, at last, a tall man mounted the stump of a decayed tree, nearly in the center of the area, and requested silence.

"When we had our last meeting," said he, "I suppose most all of you know, that we all concluded it was best for to join the British, if so be we could get a good chance. But we didn't all agree about our masters. Some thought we should never be able to keep our freedom, without we killed our masters in the first place; others didn't like the thoughts of that; so we agreed to have another meeting to talk about it. And now, boys, if the British land here in Carolina, what shall we do with our masters?"

He sat down, and a tall, sinewy mallatto stepped into his place, exclaiming with fierce gestures, "Ravish wives and daughters before their eyes, as they have done to us! Hunt them with hounds, as they have hunted us! Shoot them down with rifles as they have shot us! Throw their carcasses to the crows, they have fattened on our bones; and then the devil take them where they never rake up fire o'nights. Who talks of mercy to our masters?"

"I do," said an aged black man, who rose up before the fiery youth, tottering as he leaned both hands on an oaken staff. I do; —because the blessed Jesus always talked of mercy. I know we have been fed like hogs, and shot at like wild beasts. Myself found the body of my likeliest boy under the tree where buckra* rifles had reached him. But thanks to the blessed Jesus, I feel it in my poor old heart to forgive them. I have been a member of a Methodist church these thirty years, and I've heard many preachers, white and black; and they all tell me Jesus said, Do good to them that do evil to you, and pray for them that spite you. Now I say let us love our enemies—let us pray for them; and when our masters flog us, and sell our piccaninnies, let us break out singing—

"You may beat upon my body,
But you cannot harm my soul:
I shall join the forty thousand by-and-by.

"You may sell my children to Georgy,
But you cannot harm their soul;
They will join the forty thousand by-and-by.

"Come, slave-trader, come in too;
The Lord's got a pardon here for you;
You shall join the forty thousand by-and-by.

"Come, poor nigger, come in too;
The Lord's got a pardon here for you;
You shall join the forty thousand by-and-by.

"My skin is black, but my soul is white;
And when we get to heaven we'll all be alike;
We shall join the forty thousand by-and-by.

That's the way to glorify the Lord."

Scarcely had the cracked voice ceased the tremulous chant in which these words were uttered, when a loud altercation commenced; some crying out vehemently for the blood of the white men, others maintaining that the old man's doctrine was right. The aged black remained leaning on his staff, and mildly replied to every outburst of fury, "but Jesus said, do good for evil."

Loud rose the din of excited voices, and the disguised slaveholder shrank deeper into the shadow.

In the midst of the confusion, an athletic, gracefully proportioned young man sprang upon the stump, and throwing off his coarse cotton garments, slowly turned round and round before the assembled multitude. Immediately all was hushed; for the light of a dozen torches, eagerly held up by fierce revengeful comrades, showed his back and shoulders deeply gashed by the whip, and still oozing with blood. In the midst of that deep silence he stopped abruptly, and with stern brevity exclaimed, "Boys! shall we not murder our masters?"

"Would you murder all?" inquired a timid voice at his right hand. "They don't all cruelise their slaves."

"There's Mr. Campbell," pleaded another, "he never had one of his boys flogged in his life. You wouldn't murder him, would you?"

"O, no, no, no," shouted many voices; "we wouldn't murder Mr. Campbell. He's always good to colored folks."

"And I wouldn't murder my master," said one of Mr. Duncan's slaves; "and I'd fight anybody that set out to murder him. I aint a-going to work for him for nothing any longer, if I can help it; but he shan't be murdered, for he's a good master."

"Call him a good master if ye like!" said the bleeding youth, with a bitter sneer in his look and tone. "I curse the word. The white men tell us God made them our masters; I say it was the devil. When they don't cut up the backs that bear their burdens; when they throw us enough of the grain we have raised to keep us strong for another harvest; when they forbear to shoot the limbs that toil to make them rich, there are fools who call them good masters. Why should they sleep on soft beds, under silken curtains, while we, whose labor bought it all, lie on the floor at the threshold, or miserably coiled up in the dirt of our own cabins? Why should I clothe my master in broadcloth and fine linen, when he knows, and I know, that he is my own brother; and I, meanwhile, have only this coarse rag to cover my aching shoulders?" He kicked the garment scornfully and added, "Down on your knees, if ye like, and thank them that ye are not flogged and shot. Of me they'll learn another lesson."

Mr. Duncan recognized in the speaker the reputed son of one of his friends, lately deceased—one of that numerous class which Southern vice is thoughtlessly raising up to be its future scourge and terror.

The high, bold forehead and flashing eye indicated an intellect too active and daring for servitude; while his fluent speech and appropriate language betrayed the fact that his highly educated parent, from some remains of instinctive feeling, had kept him near his own person during his lifetime, and thus formed his conversation on another model than the rude jargon of slaves.

His poor, ignorant listeners stood spellbound by the magic of superior mind; and at first it seemed as if he might carry the whole meeting in favor of his views. But the aged man leaning on his oaken staff still mildly spoke of the meek and blessed Jesus; and the docility of African temperament responded to his gentle words.

Then rose a man of middle age, short of stature, with a quick, roguish eye, and a spirit of knowing drollery lurking about his mouth. Rubbing his head in uncouth fashion he began: "I don't know how to speak like Bob, for I never had no chance. He says the devil made white men our masters. Now dat's a ting I've thought on a heap. Many a time I've axed myself how 'pon arth it was that jist as sure as white man and black man come togeder, de white man sure to git he foot on de black man. Sometimes I tink one ting, den I tink anoder ting; and dey all be jumbled up in my head, jest like seed in de cotton afore de put in the gin. At last I find it all out. White man always git he foot on de black man; no mistake in dat. But how he do it? I'll show you how!"

Thrusting his hand into his pocket, he took out a crumpled piece of printed paper, and smoothing it carefully on the palm of his hand, he struck it significantly with his finger and exclaimed triumphantly, "Dat's de way dey do it! Dey got de knowledge! Now it'll do no more good to rise agin our masters dan put de head in de fire and pull him out agin. When I was a boy I hear an old conjuring woman say she could conjure de devil out of anybody. I ask her why she don't conjure her massa, den; and she tell me, 'O nigger neber conjure buckra—can't do't.' But I say nigger can conjure buckra. How he do it? Get de knowledge! Dat de way. We make de sleeve wide, and fill full of de tea and de sugar ebery time we get in missis' closet. If we take half so much pains to get de knowledge, de white man take de foot off de black man. Maybe de British land, and maybe de British no land; but tell your sons to marry de free woman dat know how to read and write; and tell your gals to marry de free man dat know how to read and write; and den, by'm-by, you be de British yourselves! You want to know how I manage to get de knowledge? I tell you. I want right bad to larn to read. My old boss is the most begrudgfullest massa, and I know he won't let me learn. So when I see leetle massa wid de book, (he about six year old,) I say to him, What you call dat? He tell me dat is A. O, dat is A! So I take old newspaper, and I ax missis may I hab dis to rub my brasses? She say yes. I put it in my pocket, and by'm-by I look to see I find A; and I look at him till I know him bery well. Den I ask my young massa, What you call dat? He say dat is B. So I find him on my paper, and look at him till I know him bery well. Den I ask my young massa what C A T spell? He tell me cat. Den, after great long time I can read the newspaper. And what you tink I find dere? I read British going to land! Den I tell all de boys British going to land; and I say what yo do 'spose British land? When I stand behind massa's chair I hear him talk, and I tell all de boys what he say. Den Bob say must hab Methodist meeting, and tell massa Tom going to preach in de woods. But what you tink I did toder day? You know, Jim, massa Gubernor's boy? Well, I want mighty bad to let Jim know British going to land. But he lib ten mile off, and old boss no let me go. Well, massa Gubernor he come dine my massa's house, and I bring he horse to de gate; and I make my bow and say, massa Gubernor, how Jim do? He tell me Jim bery well. Den I ax him he Jim good boy? He say yes. Den I tell him, Jim and I leetle boy togeder, and I want mighty bad to send Jim something. He tell me Jim hab enough of eberyting. O, yes, massa Gubernor, I know you bery good massa, and Jim hab everyting he want; but when leetle boy togeder dere is always sameting here (laying his hand on his heart.) I want to send a leetle backy to Jim. I know he hab much backy he want, but Jim and I leetle boy togeder, and I want to send Jim someting. Massa Gubernor say bery well, Jack. So I gib him de backy done up in de bery bit o' newspaper dat tell British going to land! And massa Gubernor himself carry it! And massa Gubernor himself carry it!"

He clapped his hands, kicked up his heels, and turned somersets like a harlequin. These demonstrations were received with loud shouts of merriment; and it was some time before sufficient order was restored to proceed with the question under discussion.

After various scenes of fiery indignation, gentle expostulation, and boisterous mirth, it was finally decided, by a considerable majority, that in case the British landed, they would take their freedom without murdering their masters; not a few, however, went away in wrathful mood, muttering curses deep.

With thankfulness to heaven, Mr. Duncan again found himself in the open field, alone with the stars. Their glorious beauty seemed to him, that night, clothed in new and awful power. Groups of shrubbery took to themselves startling forms; and the sound of the wind among the trees was like the unsheathing of swords. Again he recurred to Saxon history, and remembered how he had thought that troubled must be the sleep of those who rule a conquered people. A new significance seemed given to Wat Tyler's address to the insurgent laborers of his day: an emphatic and most unwelcome application of his indignant question why serfs should toil unpaid, in wind and sun, that lords might sleep on down and embroider their garments with pearl.

"And these Robin Hoods and Wat Tylers were my Saxon ancestors," thought he, "Who shall so balance effects and causes as to decide what portion of my present freedom sprang from their seemingly defeated efforts? Was the place I saw to-night, in such wild and fearful beauty, like the haunts of the Saxon Robin Hood? Was not the spirit that gleamed forth as brave as theirs? And who shall calculate what even such hopeless endeavors may do for the future freedom of this dnwn-trodden race?"

These cogitations did not, so far as I ever heard, lead to the emancipation of his bondmen; but they did prevent his revealing a secret which would have brought hundreds to an immediate and voilent death. After a painful conflict between contending feelings end duties, he contented himself with advising the magistrates to forbid all meetings whatsoever among the colored people until the war was ended.

He visited Boston several years after, and told the story to a gentlemen who often repeated it in the circle of his friends. In brief outline it reached my ears. I have told it truly, with some filling up by imagination, some additional garniture of language, and the adoption of fictitious names, because I have forgotten the real ones.

---

*Buckra, is the negro term for white man.

From the Mexican Extraordinary.

MEXICO MAY BECOME A NEGRO NATION.

A certain class of people in Mexico look with satisfaction upon the civil war that is now raging in the neighboring Republic to the North. They regard it as the certain humbling of a power that threatened the nationality of Mexico, and, therefore as an omen of the secure future of this country. Let us look at this matter as it is. Let us stare facts in the face. The continuance of the civil war naturally will result in the emancipation of most of the negroes of the slave States. If the war goes on the spirit of liberty will get abroad among the slaves; but as they are not capable of offering a bold front to the superior talent of their masters, they will seek liberty by revolts and flight. Their natural asylum will be Mexico, on account of its convenience and the consideration and sympathy here enjoyed by the negro race. Besides, the climate and soil are both favorable. Here the negro can hope to have a future; while at the North he is certain to remain the servile, as both the climate and institutions of the Northern people place a barrier to his rising much above the social station he enjoys in the slave States.

If the civil war at the North continue, Mexico will assuredly be overran by the slaves from the Southern States. Let us reflect upon the consequences of an inundation of refugee slaves from the United States. The slave population of the South is four millions, something near the actual population of the republic of Mexico at the present day. Should those millions of slaves come into Mexico, they will naturally fall upon the low lands of Tehuantepec, Tamaulipis, Vera Cruz, Oajaco, Nueva Leon and Coahuila. Meeting with a cordial reception, as they are pretty certain to find, they will very soon amalgamate with the Mexican population, and at no distant day become imbued with the revolutionary and discontented spirit of the country. They will control the districts they at first settle in, and carry their aggressions upon others that attempt to coerce them, and it is not impossible they may succeed in creating a negro dynasty in Mexico.

☞ Marriageable young women are in great demand out West. A Jersey man writing from that section, to his father, says "Suppose you get our girls some new [illegible] and send them out here."

☞ A man speaking of a [illegible] West says it is a perfect [illegible] though most all the people there [illegible] ague, yet it is a great blessing [illegible] only exercise they take.

Terrible Bowie-Knife Work.

After the battle had been raging for some hours, according to the account of a Zouavian hero, he saw an immense body of Mississippians, accompanied by some (believed to be) Baltimoreans, rush furiously over the Confederate ramparts. They at once saw the conspicuous uniform of the Zouaves, and made at them. The Mississippians, after approaching near enough, sent a terrible volley from their rifles into the Zouave ranks. This done, they threw their guns aside and charged onward until each contending enemy met face to face and hand to hand in terrible combat. The Mississippians, having discarded their rifles after the first, fire fell back upon their bowie-knives. These were of huge dimensions, eighteen to twenty inches long, heavy in proportion and sharp, or two edged at the points. Attached to the handle was a lasso, some eight or ten feet in length, with one end securely wound round the wrist. My informant says, when these terrific warriors approached to within reach of their lasso, not waiting to come in bayonet range, they threw forward their bowie-knives at the Zouaves after the fashion of experienced harpooners striking at a whale. Frequently they plunged in and penetrated through a soldier's body, and were jerked out, ready to strike again, while the first victim sunk into death. On several occasions the terrible bowie-knife was transfixed in a Zouave and the Zouave's bayonet in a Mississippian, both impaled and falling together. So skillfully was this deadly instrument handled by the Mississippians that he could project it to the full lasso length, kill his victim, withdraw it again with a sudden impulse and catched the handle unerringly. If by any mischance the bowie-knife missed its aim, or fell to the earth, revolvers were next resorted to, and used with similar dexterity. The hand to hand closing in with both pistol and bowie-knife, cutting, slashing, carving, and shooting almost in the same moment was awful beyond description. Blood gushed from hundreds of wounds until, amid death, pitiful groans and appalling sights, it staunched the very earth. My Zouave champion says himself and comrades did hard fighting, stood up manfully to the murderous conflict, but never before knew what undaunted bravery and courage meant. He felt no further ambition to engage in such rencontres. Having been shot through the wrist by a revolver, after escaping the fearful Mississippi weapons, and disabled from further active participation in the struggle, he willingly retired to reap the glory won, convinced that to fight against Mississippians with bowie-knives and pistols, after receiving a volley of their sharp-cracking rifles, is no ordinary fun.

The Weekly Anglo-African.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 17, 1861.

☞ Advertisements for this paper must be accompanied by the cash.

☞ Copies of this paper can be purchased of the news-dealers everywhere.

THE WAR.

We are pleased to announce to our readers that "the work goes bravely on." Every day brings nearer the auspicious moment when the government will be obliged to decree the emancipation of the slaves. In vain does it try to elude the issue. In vain does it seek to secure the loyalty of the slave-holders of the South by returning fugitives to them. But all its efforts fall stillborn for the simple reason that God works against it, because IT WILL NOT DO RIGHT. Nay, so far is it from doing so, that it has actually forbidden its servant, the Provost Marshal of the city of Washington, to permit even the free men, who went from the North with the troops, from leaving Washington with them, unless they can produce free papers! Now as many of these men went South without such papers, of course they will be detained until they can be produced. This is another of their expedients adopted to propitiate the South, but we thank God that it will do no good. The South is honest in its deviltry. It is fighting for slavery, and it intends to make a clean sweep of the Federal Government if it can. It utterly despises the trimming and compromising course of its foes, and will set them an example of prompt and manly action if it ever gets the power. But we believe this will never be. We believe that the nation will be saved in spite of its rulers, and that liberty shall yet be proclaimed throughout the length and breadth of the land. We bid our poor oppressed brethren to take courage; you have long prayed that God would show his power in your deliverance; have faith to believe, he will do so, and you shall soon see the manifestations thereof.

When we recollect that the South is fighting foy slavery, and that the Federal Government professes not to be fighting against it, and yet has been compelled to award liberty to such slaves as are found fighting against itself, may we not exclaim with the poet,

> "God moves in a mysterious way,
> His wonders to perform."

Indeed so various are His manifestations, and in so many unanticipated ways does He make His determination in regard to the oppressed appear; that faith, unbounded faith, is all that is required of us in reference to the matter.

One cheering fact in reference to this war is that the slaves are in possession of all necessary information in regard to it. We have had the pleasure of talking with many fugitives from the South, and they all tell the same story. They pray continually for the success of the armies of the North, and long for their appearance among them.

The following is an extract of a letter from the New York Tribune, dated Welden, N. C., August 3d:—

"Were I so disposed, I might fill your columns with alarming statements upon almost every conceivable exciting topic, and fully as 'reliable,' doubtless, as the stuff of which a great deal of 'news' is made now-a-days. Whether the 'old men see visions' and the 'young men dream dreams,' and so fabricate their 'facts' out of imaginary data, I cannot tell with certainty, but presume not altogether. Of one thing I am sure: that the negroes, whose cunning and duplicity are wonderful, have a pretty fair idea of what is going on, and only await the word to work fearful mischief. Somehow or other, by some secret telegraph which cannot be detected, whatever one learns is speedily communicated to the rest. They hang about groups of whites, their countenances unutterably stolid, or grinning with stupid indifference, as if they neither heard nor understood, and catch up everything that is said. They all know of the negro Tilman and his deeds, and they recollect Fremont and John Brown. Indeed, their opportunities for getting information are vastly better than those of the poorer class of whites. So ubiquitous are the negroes in a Southern household, that neither the table, the parlor, nor the sleeping room, has any secrets from them, and they are remarkably shrewd at drawing inferences. Many masters, with infatuated and idiotic folly, have actually called their slaves together and given them long pretended 'explanations' of the pending troubles, and told them bug-bear stories of what the Abolitionist in 'Old Abe's' army would do to them if they ever got them in their clutches. But a slave is not so gullible as what is known in the South as a 'mean white man' (who may be imposed upon in this way), and he sees through a lie as well as anybody, though he has sense enough to disguise his unbelief and not 'let on' that he knows better. So ripe, already, are these pariahs of labor for revolt, that a Nat Turner would now succeed, and the miserable failure of '31 would be, in '61, an inevitable triumph. That this trying crisis of the 'institution' will pass without a Spartacus I do not believe. Meanwhile, patrol duty is diligently performed night and day, and the strictest vigilance is sedulously exercised; yet there are frequent reciprocal butcheries of whites and blacks, and continual slave escapades, some of the fugitives being caught after much trouble, but most of them eluding all search. The swamps which cover fully one-tenth part of the State, with its nearly fifty thousand square miles, afford an impenetrable covert to the runaway. I have heard of a case, near Plymouth, where a gang of negroes was accidentally discovered in a marsh, within six miles of town, some of whom had disappeared thirteen years before. Not long ago, a planter named Woodruff, living in Northampton County, near here on the railroad, was murdered by his slaves. In Bertie County, a Mr. Askew, a bachelor, fell a victim to a conspiracy of between thirty and forty negroes (as appeared by the confession of one of those implicated), who, after brutally killing him with an axe, set fire to his house, in the ashes of which his blackened remains were found next day. But I will not flood you with these horrors."

Where is Charles O'Conor?

In the present internecine strife, when the shout has gone forth "to your tents, O Israel!" when every body is forced to show hands and take sides, it would seem that Mr. Charles O'Conor, is "letting things severely alone."

His soul is with the South while his body is in New York. Looking straight at his case, the facts show him to be either a coward or a traitor. He either laks the courage to join the rebels, or remain at home giving them secret aid and comfort. There is no middle ground.

Whilst the leaders of the great democratic party north have, by voice, pen, or sword, thrown themselves into the front ranks of the defenders of the Union, the whereabouts and whatabouts of this great 'Saul among the prophets' are as much in the dark as his birth place and parentage. He lives, but gives no sign. He has no word of cheer for the Constitution and the Union, which gave fair field and free scope for the industry and will, which amounting in his case almost to genius, won his way to the very top of his profession. He has no word of cheer for his gallant countrymen who rushed to their death at Bull Run, their rude faith in the institutions which had fostered them showing in glorious contrast to his sneaking silence. He has no word of rebuke for those Southern traitors not only to the Union and Constitution and to his party, but to him. The miserable dog yet crouches and fawns upon his cruel and haughty masters.

There are two ideas of Mr. O'Conor which have been faithfully ventilated by events. First, he urged the people of the North to educate themselves into the doctrine that slavery is really a blessing to the negro, and a divine institution. Since April last Northern men have held immense mass-meetings in slave territories, in the very presence of the divine institution, and yet they "don't see" the divinity which stirs within man-stealing. On the contrary, a very hard-headed Democrat, chairman of one of the mass-meetings held at Fortress Monroe (a kind of protracted meeting by the way)—a democrat who had hitherto fell down and worshipped the "Domestic Institution," saw things so differently that he went to work and has almost succeeded in educating the government at Washington into the belief and conduct that negro slaves are MEN and WOMEN! And this may be the secret of the recall of Ben. Butler—God bless his cock'd eyes! Government has been forced to pull wool over them.

So too, the men in ranks who have composed the body of this great mass-meeting "don't see" the divinity of the institution of slavery. Their experiences and observations teach them —in spite of their prejudices—to regard negro slaves as men and brethren. And if the authorities at Washington had exerted half the vigilance against Southern traitors in their midst, half the ingenuity in detecting and punishing them, which they have exercised in preventing the fraternizing of Northern soldiers and Southern slaves, they would be in better position to-day in point of fact, and would stand higher in the estimate of good and true men!

A shame, if not a curse, will forever rest upon those who are using the entire force of the Government of the United States either to return slaves who have escaped from masters whether disloyal or not, and to prevent Northern soldiers from bringing home with them the brethren baptized with them in the field of battle! Whilst Charles O'Conor is silent, a shame on the Secretary of State who upholds his impious doctrines.

The other idea of Mr. O'Conor ventilated by events, is the natural inferiority of the negro. Let the events of this war speak on this point. Let Charles O'Conor, the learned, the eloquent, the successful, the intellectually great, socially great, politically great, professionally greatest among white men, be compared with William Tilman the ignorant, down-trodden, of common intelligence, socially a pariah, politically a non-entity, (except in the state of his adoption a plain citizen,) a common cook by profession, and—a negro! In all which makes the true man, in all which makes up the real patriot, in all which upholds the government which has fostered the one and barely protected the other, which is the greater, Charles O'Conor or William Tillman? Is there in all the earth a negro meaner than Charles O'Conor? If such could be found the Five Points would vomit him forth and the Tombs would refuse to receive him.

THE FIRST OF AUGUST

At Harlem, N. Y.—Reader were you ever at a pic nic, where the gentlemen were far less numerous than roosters in a barn yard? Well we assure you that such a sight was presented at a private pic-nic at Harlem on the 1st inst. Having heard some days previous that something of the kind was on the tapis and that Madame M of 17th street and Madame O. of 11th street, were at the head of the affair, we endeavored to secure a nice little nook at H., where we could see without being seen. This we succeeded in doing. Now we cannot make a long story of it, we cannot tell you how neatly the ladies were dressed nor to what spot they went to enjoy the pic-nic, but we are permitted to say that two of the dear creatures turned orators on the occasion. As our lady readers may desire to know what they said, we do not think that we are violating the rules of propriety in giving an epitome of each speech. Miss McQ., of Florida, having been elected president, arose and with much grace, said "Ladies and gentlemen, (there were two gentlemen present) we feel very grateful that we are permitted to assemble to celebrate this glorious day. Although we may not be under our own vine and fig tree, yet there are none who dare molest, or make us afraid. When I recollect the state from whence I came, and all the southern states, and think of the dreadful condition of our brethren and sisters there my heart sinks within me; but when I turn my eyes toward the islands of the Caribbean sea, and remember what God has done for the people there, how he has emancipated 800,000 of them from the most galling servitude, I lift my heart in gratitude to Him for these great mercies shown, and ask with you, that His power may be made manifest in our own land, and that the slave may yet go free." At the conclusion of the presidents, remarks, a splendid repast was served, to which ample justice was done. At the removal of the cloth, Mrs. O., by the request of the ladies made a few remarks, she said "It was not without much diffidence she attempted to say a word at this time, nevertheless she felt pleased in joining with them in the celebration of this glorious day." When we recollect that this day 1838, witnessed the complete enfranchisement of 800,000 human beings—that the family tie, which had long been at the caprice of white villains, was cemented that day, never more to be broken, that all the blessings of civilization were brought, for the first time, to the doors of the enslaved; truly we have great reason to rejoice that we have lived to witness these things, and to join with the enfranchised in the celebration of the act which brought such transcendant blessing in its train." These addresses were received with much applause. At the conclusion of exercises, the company sought pleasure, in roaming in the fields and visiting the observatory of Mr. Morris, and returned to their homes at twilight well satisfied with the exercises of the day.

Spy.

At New London.—Mr. Editor:—You cannot imagine how glad I am, that the "Anglo" still lives. There is nothing like having a paper of our own, in which we may have the privilege of a free discussion on all questions that may arise, that reflect on the interests of our people. May success crown your indefatigable efforts, and may the "Anglo" under your skillful management continue, as heretofore, to be the leading paper of the "colored American people." A grand celebration in honor of the British West India emancipation of 1838, came off in this city, and Groton, on the 6th. It is well-known that the 1st of August, is the day to celebrate, but it being impossible to celebrate on that day, it was deferred until the 6th. The morning being very pleasant, the people assembled at Darts Hall, New London, at nine o'clock, where prayers were offered in behalf of our oppressed land and nation. The people then proceeded to the ferry, for Groton: on their arrival at Groton, a grand procession was formed, headed by the young men's martial band, all under the direction of chief Marshall, John Morris, Esq. With the Star Spangled Banner unfurled to the breeze, the procession marched to the grove, a pleasant piece of woods, about one and a-half miles from the ferry. An incident worth relating occurred a day or two before the celebration. "A captain of one of the home guards of Groton, called on a lady member of the committee, and asked her if she thought there would be any objection on the part of the committee, to having the home guard of Groton, act as an escort on the day of our celebration. The lady told him, she did not think there would be any objection on the part of the committee, to having them march with us; but there was one thing certain, that if they were allowed to march with us, they would have to buy their own dinners. The captain absquatulated. On our arrival at the grove everybody seemed to have commenced their enjoyment for the day. A party of youngsters even took the liberty of going in bathing, before the eyes of the assembled multitude, but I can assure you they were soon routed; on seeing a gentleman approaching, carrying a long stick, a general stampede took place among them, and in five minutes from the time this individual made his appearance, there was not one to be seen. At about half-past ten o'clock the assembly was called together, and Rev. Geo. Rice, was appointed chairman. Mr. Rice, on taking his seat thanked the assembly for the position they had assigned him, and though he thought himself incapable of presiding over so vast an assembly, he should endeavor to do so to the best of his ability. Mr. Rice then introduced to the assembly, the "New London glee club" which discoursed some very fine music. After which some very eloquent speeches were made by the Rev. Messrs. Dennison and Baily of Groton, and Messrs. Hewitt and Greenman, of Mystic. After which Prof. Wm. F. Johnson, of New York, was introduced as the orator of the day. Wilbur G. Strong, Esq., of Newark, N. J., was to have delivered the oration, but owing to the non-arrival, Mr. Johnson was secured in his stead. The oration was a capital production and gave general satisfaction. Next came the dinner, and a capital one it was too. Then the war had actually commenced. If you had been present to have seen the manner in which chicken fricassee, was made to retreat, you would have thought we had some desperate "knife and fork" chargers present. The dinner over, some excellent music was discoursed by the glee club. Some of the young folks then retired to another portion of the grove, and engaged themselves in the terpsichorean art. The meeting was then adjourned. Notwithstanding the opposition the committee had to contend with, everything passed off pleasantly and they returned with the ready exclamation, Veni, Vidi, Vici.

THE EVENING.

In the evening an entertainment was given at Darts Hall, New London, at which Prof. Wm. F. Johnson, gave a lecture and exhibition by aid of the camera obscura, subject, Anti-slavery. The audience seemed much pleased with the lecture and exhibition, and signified, accordingly, with frequent applause. After the termination of the lecture and exhibition, the benches were removed, and the hall was left for the enjoyment of the young folks. Tables were bounteously spread with ice cream and refreshments, and the general appearance of things showed that the ladies, as usual had been actively engaged in preparing to entertain their guests on this jovial occasion. Allow me before closing, to say a word in reference to the ladies of whom there was a fair representation from all the adjoining towns as well as from New York and Jersey city. It would be almost impossible for me to designate to you the belle of the evening. Indeed the ladies all looked fine, but in the eyes of many fortune seemed to favor Miss P. S—n, of Norwich, Connecticut. On the approach of the small hours the company disbanded, highly delighted with the evening entertainment.

Wide Awake.

New London, August 12th, 1861.

From another Correspondent.

At Groton.—Mr. Editor:—We hail with joy, the return of the Anglo-African and I offer for its columns a brief account of the celebration which took place here on the 6th inst., to commemorate the glorious events of emancipation in the British West India Islands.

At nine o'clock according to programme, we met at the hall, designated on the New London side of the river. The audience was not large. The meeting was organized by calling Mr. J. Hall, to the chair. The object of the meeting was stated by the chairman, when remarks and prayers were offered by several persons in behalf of our enslaved land and nation. Much favor was evinced by the little band. At eleven o'clock exercises were closed and an effort was made by the marshal, to form a procession to march a short distance to the ferry, for Groton. This being entirely new in this part of Connecticut. Many young Misses took flight, fearful of being exposed by the march to the unpleasant gaz of white spectators. This peculiar feeling rendered a regular procession impracticable, but we all succeeded in reaching the boat in safety, and Groton side was gained, the company then marched to the ground selected by the committee, one mile distant a beautiful spot for the occasion. So a promiscuous and fair audience gathered in which Norwich, New London, Stonington, New York and Brooklyn, were represented. Three hours were spent in the scups, walking, chatting and such amusements as the various parties desired.

At three o'clock the meeting was called to order by electing Rev. G. Rice, of Bridgeport, to the chair. Oration by Prof. W. F. Johnson, additional speeches by the Rev. Mr. Mathews, of Groton, Rev. Mr. Dennison, of Mystic, Rev. Mr. Baily, Mr. Thomas Greenman, of Mystic Bridge, Rev. Hewit, of Yale College, who also acted as reporter for some prominent newspaper. Prof. J. J Brayton's band of colored young men of N. L., having volunteered their services, were in attendance. A vote of thanks was offered in behalf of the committee of arrangements, the band, and to employers of steamers, Commonwealth and Plymouth Rock, who actively encouraged and sustained the movement.

After the benediction, the company were supplied with a sumptuous dinner, served up by the committee. Prominent among which was Mrs. W. A. Ward of Groton assisted by Mrs. Brayton, Mrs. Dickerson, Mrs. Livingston, of Brooklyn, and Mrs. Jordon: Mr. W. A. Ward, Mr. J. Anderson, Mr. J. Brayton, Mr. J. Clark, Mr. W. Livingstone, of steamer Plymouth Rock, caterer, Mr. W. Maclin and Mr. C. Taylor, of steamer Commonwealth. The whole affair was presented in the highest possible manner. The speaking was of the highest order throughout The dinner would have served well an epicure. The day was lovely, the sun shone in radiant splendor. One white citizen went away quite delighted, speaking of the civil and excellent manner with which the whole affair was conducted. Should a celebration be set apart for this neighborhood next year, I have no doubt the gathering will be immense.

Frank Glide.

Groton, Connecticut, August 9th, 1861.

At Detroit.—The Daily Advertiser of the 2nd says:

Celebration of the Colored People.—Yesterday was observed as a general holiday by the colored people in this city, and they mostly turned out, dressed in holiday attire, to do all possible honor to the anniversary of a day so interesting to their race. In the morning the Essex was chartered for a trip to Belle Isle, where a pic-nic was held. The excursionists returned in the afternoon, when the colored military company, numbering some thirty or forty, in uniform, paraded up Woodward avenue to their armory. The balance of the party went home. In the evening the festivities were recommenced, and continued until a late hour.

At Utica.—The day was celebrated by holding a pic-nic in the grove near Forest Hill Cemetery. Those who witnessed the affair, pronounced it the gayest of the season.

At Clifton Springs, N. Y.—The celebration (says the Canandaigua Times,) was in all respects a decided success. "There was not as many out as usual upon such occasions, owing we presume in a great measure to the closeness of money matters, but enough were there to make it a pleasant affair for all who participated. The address of Mr. Johnson was a fine production, and the people were so well pleased with him that he was called out again at 3 P. M., to give them more of his eloquence. Mr. Johnson has few superiors on the stump. A ball was held in the evening, at which all seemed to enjoy themselves hugely."

At Watkins, N. Y.—The Havana Journal of the 3rd inst., says:

The colored people celebrated the 27th Anniversary of the West India Emancipation, on Thursday last, at Watkins, as per previous notice. The attendance on the part of the colored people was very small, but they were favored with a goodly number of spectators from the surrounding country. We heard a portion of the oration delivered by Frederick Douglass, with which we were highly gratified. He has but few equals as an orator.

At Leavenworth, Kansas.—The Times of the 2nd inst., contains the following:

The colored men and women of Leavenworth had an interesting celebration, at Fackler's Grove, yesterday, to commemorate the anniversary of West India emancipation. Speeches were made by Messrs. Overton, Burnham, Morris and Hanson, which are highly spoken of. A dinner closed the festivities.

Letter from Paterson.

Paterson, N. J., Aug. 9, 1861.

Mr. Editor:—The first number of your paper bearing a name endeared to us by a thousand associations, has made its appearance here, and is meeting with the favor of all our people sufficiently intelligent to appreciate a good newspaper. Long live the Anglo-African!

Our church here, I may inform you, is inactive, owing to the dull times, I suppose; that, at least, being the reason why many of the mills have stopped running. A Sunday-school however, numbering thirty-five or forty scholars, is in full blast under the careful superintendence of Mr. J. Stephens. The Librarian's duties are effectually performed by Mr. A. Wanmaker. Miss Josephine Jackson and Miss Josephine Freeland, both teachers of ability, assisted by other ladies attend to the instructions of the children.

Our day school is taught by Miss Halsted, a white lady, long and favorably known to our people in this place. The number of scholars is about forty, and the progress they are making is commensurate with the advantage enjoyed. No fault can be found with anything except irregularity of attendance, for which the parents are greatly to be blamed.

I will now and then send you a letter about doings in Paterson. But long letters except from big places like Philadelphia, or about important subjects, I consider an abomination, and wont trouble you with them.

Occasional.

Letter from Eatontown.

Eatontown, N. J. Aug 6th, 1861.

Mr. Editor:—

Alow me a space in your columns to express my joy at the re-appearance of your valuable Journal. The loss of it has been much felt by us. I pledge you my cooperation. Our quarterly meeting came off last Sabbath, more interest was manifested on this occasion than for some time past. The Rev. James Howell preached in the afternoon and evening, to crowded houses, the place being too small to seat the number in attendance. In the afternoon Rev. Thomas A. Davis, pastor in charge, baptised three infants; in the evening five persons came forward for prayer, and one was happily converted to God. On Monday evening prayer meeting was held in the church, conducted by the pastor and four others happily experienced a change of heart. Our people are quite alive to the interest of the church. A Sabbath School has been commenced again, and quite a large number of children attends. There is not any day school in this place at present. I learn there is soon to be a house erected for that purpose. Miss Benson the former teacher, who now has charge at Middletown Point, is very much missed from amongst our people.—Middletown Point is not a whit behind the age. The people of said place intend to hold a grand Fair on the third Saturday of this month at Union city, for the benefit of their church.

UNION.

A PETITION.

The following form of petition was handed us for publication by Rev. Dr. Pennington, who informs us that he will soon take measures to have it extensively circulated for signatures preparatory to the meeting of the next Congress. We are very glad to witness this movement, but we are not entirely destitute of hope that slavery may be abolished ere the assembling of Congress. We know not what a day may bring forth.

Petition.

To the Hon. the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, Free Colored citizens of these United States, believing that African Slavery as it now exists at the South, is the prime cause of the present Crisis and that permanent peace cannot be restored until said cause be removed, most respectfully petition your honorable body to take such measures, or enact such a law as may, in your wisdom seem best for the immediate abolition of African Slavery.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

Cotton and Sugar Culture in the West Indies.—Emigration to Jamaica.

To the Editor of the "Anglo-African."

Sir:—In answer to inquiries which have been made by parties desirous of settling in Jamaica I would state that when in England I had frequent interviews with proprietors of West India estates, who are anxious to promote the immigration of industrious colored Americans to the West Indies. To any parties who wish to go thither, and who would prefer Jamaica to Hayti as their future home, I have no doubt the offers made by these gentlemen would be acceptable. I would not think it advisable to divert the attention of those who have made up their minds in favor of Hayti, whose generous and hearty invitations deserve all praise, but to those who are favorable to Jamaica, the fact they will be welcome there will be gratifying.

If a sufficient number of settlers would go to either of those islands to stimulate "cotton and sugar culture," an immense impetus would be given to the cause of emancipation.

The following extracts of letters received by me on the subject will show the prevalent feeling among West Indian proprietors.

London, Dec. 19th, 1860.

"Dear Sir—Messrs. B. & Co. forward to you an extract from Mr. Chapman's letter of 24th October, offering land at a low rate to emigrants from the Southern States, and will correspond with you on the subject. Mr. Vicker, of Bell Isle estate, Westmoreland, is also willing to sell land cheap for their use, and both are willing to provide labor for any that may choose to emigrate to the respective islands of St. Vincent and Jamaica.

If a number would charter a vessel to carry them to Savannah le Mar, St. Vincent, or St. Kitts, they will be sure of finding employers. None but the steady, working class should go, except those desirous of purchasing land and becoming settlers.

I am yours, truly, R. D."

The rate of wages in Jamaica, &c., is from 28 to 40 cents "per task," as I understand, and an industrious man can accomplish two or two and a-half tasks per day. Taking the lowest of these figures, a laboring man could depend on regular employment at 50 cents per day. This with the ground which would be given for his own use, and the lodgings provided, would be equal to one dollar a day here, the difference of cost of provisions, &c., being considered. Mechanics of course command a high rate of wages.

Cotton culture is now receiving an impetus through the operations of the "Jamaica Cotton Company," to which I will again refer.

If sugar could be largely exported from the West Indies, to compete against Cuba, and cotton to rival the Southern States, slavery would receive a deadly wound in its vital point. Any inquiries on those points will be answered, and further information afforded, by addressing letters to your care. I am yours, truly,

T. BOURNE.

Letter from a Colored Sailor of the Star of the West.

To the Editor of the N. Y. Tribune.

Sir: I deem it my duty to inform my fellow-countrymen that I am once more among them, and now enjoying the air of a free country, in the land of the free and the home of the brave, and hail the Stars and Stripes with three times three. I left New York on the 12th of March, on the steamship Star of the West, bound for Brazos, a port in Texas. Arrived there after a passage of fifteen days, sailed from there on the 25th for Indianola, arrived on the 26th, laid off in the stream seven miles for three weeks. On the fourth week Captain Howes left the ship for Powder Horn. He returned to the ship on the following evening, and brought word that the Federal troops would be on board the next evening at 12 o'clock; but instead of that, the steamer Rusk brought down Confederate troops, and we were made prisoners of war, and taken to Galveston, and received there by a Confederate captain and engineer. Then started for New Orleans, and were received at Fort Butler amid cheering of soldiers and firing of guns. When we arrived in New Orleans, we were taken from the ship, under a heavy escort of infantry, to the railway station, and then forwarded to Mobile City, and from there to Montgomery, the Capital. We arrived there after three days' passage, and were received by the War Department and taken before the Hon. Jefferson Davis, and his order was to take the "two niggers" and sell them, and appropriate the money to the commonwealth. The idea of sending "free niggers" through here as prisoners of war on a parole of honor was ridiculous. I was then taken by a man named Pink Williams, transferred to his plantation; the other colored man was sold to another party in Wetumke. I staid with Williams three weeks, I then made my escape, taking with me the slave girl Sarah, placed there to watch me. I went to Mobile city, where I shipped in an English vessel bound for Liverpool, taking the girl with me. The other colored man is still held in slavery in Montgomery city. I arrived home on Saturday morning. I am willing to ship again and serve the United States.

I remain your humble servant,
Walter Eugene Murray.

Any one wishing to see me, can do so by calling at No. 169 Church street, New York city.

New York, Monday, August 12, 1861.

THE CONTRABAND QUESTION.

The following letter has just been dispatched to Gen. Butler by the Secretary of War:

Washington, August, 1861.

General:—The important question of the proper disposition to be made of fugitives from service in the States in insurrection against the Federal Government, to which you have again directed my attention, in your letter of July 20, has received my most attentive consideration. It is the desire of the President that all existing rights in all the States be fully respected and maintained. The war now prosecuted on the part of the Federal Government is a war for the Union; for the preservation of all Constitutional rights of States and the citizens of the States in the Union. Hence no question can arise as to fugitives from service within the States and Territories in which the authority of the Union is fully acknowledged. The ordinary forms of judicial proceedings must be respected by military and civil authorities alike for the enforcement of legal forms. But in the States wholly or in part under insurrectionary control, where the laws of the United States are so far opposed and resisted, that they cannot be effectually enforced, it is obvious that the rights dependent upon the execution of those laws must temporarily fail—and it is equally obvious that the rights dependent on the laws of the State within which military operations are conducted, must be necessarily subordinate to the military exigencies created by the insurrection, if not wholly forfeited by the treasonable conduct of parties claiming them. To this the general rule of right to services forms an exception. The Act of Congress, approved August 6, 1861, declares that if persons held to service shall be employed in hostility to the United States, the right to their services shall be forfeited, and such persons shall be discharged therefrom. It follows, of necessity, that no claim can be recognized by the military authority of the Union, for the services of such persons, when fugitives.

A more difficult question is presented in respect to persons escaping from the service of loyal masters. It is quite apparent that the laws of the State under which only the service of such fugitives can be claimed must needs be wholly, or almost wholly, suspended. As to the remedies by the insurrection and the military measures necessitated by it, it is equally apparent that the substitution of military for judicial measures for the enforcement of such claims must be attended by great inconvenience, embarrassments, and injuries. Under these circumstances it seems quite clear that the substantial rights of local masters are still best protected by receiving such fugitives, as well as fugitives from disloyal masters, into the service of the United States, and employing them under such organizations and such occupation as circumstances may suggest or require. Of course a record should be kept showing the name and description of the fugitives; the name and character as loyal or disloyal, of the master, and such facts as may be necessary to a correct understanding of the circumstances of each case, after tranquility shall have been restored. Upon the return of peace, Congress will doubtless properly provide for all the persons thus received into the service of the Union, and for a just compensation to loyal masters. In this way, only it would seem, can the duty and safety of the Government and the just rights of all be fully reconciled and harmonized.

You will, therefore, consider yourself instructed to govern your future action in respect to fugitives from service by the premises herein stated, and will report from time to time, and at least twice in each month, your action in the premises to this Department. You will, however, neither authorize nor permit any interference by the troops under your command with the servants of peaceful citizens in a house or field, nor will you in any way encourage such servants to leave the lawful service of their masters. Nor will you, except in cases where the public good may seem to require it, prevent the voluntary return of any fugitive to the service from which he may have escaped.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
SIMON CAMERON,
Secretary of War.

To Maj.-Gen. Butler, Commanding Department of Virginia, Fortress Monroe.

Meeting in Williamsburgh.

The Committee appointed some days ago at a meeting of the colored citizens, held in the church of Rev. Wm. J. Hodges, on Broadway, made their report last Monday evening, 12th inst., to a crowded audience (many of which was white.) The report is substantially as follows:

The committee appointed to investigate the charges made against Mr. E. B. Bundick, as to his making use of secession language, respectfully report: That in order to fully and fairly investigate said charges, they called upon the following gentlemen, in whose presence the language spoken of was used: The first gentleman upon whom your committee called was Mr. M. Wooley, the well known liquor dealer in South 7th street, who stated that he expressed in conversation with Bundick the hope that the colored citizens of the Free States would unite to form regiments of their own to aid the general government in suppressing the unjust and uncalled-for rebellion of the slave-holding Secession States. Bundick replied that he was opposed to the action of the Government, and hoped no colored man would countenance it. Bundick became very angry, said he was a Secessionist, and expressed his indignation in terms entirely unfit for your committee, out of respect to the meeting and themselves, to report. The statement of Mr. Wooley was corroborated by his son, Mr. Gilbert, Mr. John Loughran, and a Mr. Plowdan and others. Mr. Plowdan states that on his remarking that he did not like the idea of the colored men of the South aiding Secession, Bundick said, "They were right, and if he was South he would do the same." Your committee cannot believe that these statements are malicious or void of truth, but do believe that the community ought to be made aware of them, and judge whether the report as to Bundick's being a traitor is correct. The conduct of Bundick and his friends in endeavoring to prevent the report of your committee, is deemed by them as going far to confirm them in the opinion that the charges are entirely true.

The report of the committee was unanimously accepted, and the meeting passed a resolution condemning Mr. Bundick as a disgrace to the colored citizens of this city, and entirely opposite in his language and principles from them. After some desultory conversation the meeting then adjourned to next Monday evening at the same time and place. Signed,

Wm. J. Hodges, Chairman.

Aug. 13. Wm. A. Gibbs, Secretary.

CHURCH NOTICES.

St. Paul's Congregational Church, Flat Bush.—This Church appears to be in quite a prosperous condition. The building has been enlarged and now presents a good appearance. The Pastor, Rev. Geo. W. Levere, has established a Sabbath school which now numbers about 50 scholars and which he superintends himself. This evidence of success is very gratifying, and it is very evident that the pastor's hands must be sustained by a willing people, or success could not attend him.

A. M. E. Zion Church, Jersey City.—Since this society has been given into the hands of the Rev. John P. Thompson, new life seems to be imparted into the church. This gentleman is stationed at Newark, N. J., and has the oversight of the church at Jersey City. Having the assistance of Mr. W. G. Strong, he keeps the pulpit well supplied, and by this means secures the well wishes of the people. Mr. Strong is quite a favorite in the little church.

We understand that the Rev. Jas. N. Gloucester of Brooklyn, has been appointed to officiate at Shiloh Church, during the absence of the Rev. H. H. Garnet, who is expected to sail to day for England.

As Mr. Gloucester, has been officiating at the church in Troy for some time, this will be rather sad news there

THE RESCUED FUGITIVE JOHN ANDERSON.

From the Montreal "Transcript," August 9th, we learn from letters received by the Africa, that Anderson's presence in England has been made the pretext for injudicious ill-founded appeals to the philanthrophic; which have elicited remarks in the London "Anti-Slavery Reporter" of the first ult.:

The arrival of John Anderson in England demands at our hands a declaration, that the Committee of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Societies are in no way responsible for his coming. There is a prevalent impression that the contrary is the case. So far from this, however, the Committee did not, from the first, consider it desirable that he should come, and John Anderson's friends in Canada were of the same view. That, as a free man, he was at perfect liberty to visit this country, or any other, is unquestionable; but the prudence or the desirability of such a step are wholly different questions. It is only right to state, that his person was perfectly safe in Canada, for even had his pursuers felt disposed to re-arrest him, a new act of the Canadian legislature gives special power to superior authorities in all similar cases John Anderson has also himself informed us that friends came forward most generously with offers of assistance, not only in money, but a considerable quantity [we believe a hundred acres,] of land, in fee simple, so that he was in no actual necessity of leaving Canada. We regard his doing so as a great mistake. Those who have taken him by the hand can only hope to obtain help for him by converting him into an object of morbid curiosity, while the damage done to the anti-slavery cause by such an exhibition may be extreme. In his person, every right of human nature had been outraged, and he was a fit object of sympathy. His life was menaced, and we took steps which unquestionably resulted in his release; and on his arrival we offered to get up a special Committee, to make a private appeal, or a public one through the press—as that Committee might decide—with a view to obtain funds to enable him to provide for himself in future. Whatever his reasons may have been for declining our offer, we are bound to respect them. We do, however, consider it most unwise that his presence in this country should be made the pretext, by third parties, of promoting their own objects. Whatever is due to John Anderson should be done for him alone; and we may be allowed to express a hope, that the gentlemen who have apparently taken him under their protection will disconnect the effort making for him, from any and every other, even though it be suggested that the funds collected will be employed to build schools in Canada.

ARREST OF TWO NEW-BEDFORD MEN ON A CHARGE OF FITTING OUT A SLAVER.

The New Bedford, Mass., "Standard" says:

"Deputy United States Marshal S. H. Bicknell, of Boston, arrived in this city last evening, having in his possession warrants for the arrest of Mr. Albert S. Bigelow, a wholesale liquor-dealer on South Water street, and Mr. Andrew H. Potter, of the firm of A. H. Potter & Co., outfitters, also doing business on South Water street. Mr. Bicknell called upon City Marshal Terry, and made him acquainted with his business, who at once promised him his co-operation.

"At about 8 o'clock this morning Mr. Bicknell waited upon Mr. Bigelow at his place of business, and requested his presence in Boston to answer a charge of fitting out the ship Brutus, at this port, as a slaver. Mr. Bigelow announced his readiness to accede to the officer's demand, and they then proceeded to the Marshal's office. After a short tarry, Mr. Bicknell, Mr. Bigelow, and Officer Howland waited upon Mr. Potter at his store, who, upon being notified of the charge against him, also expressed his willingness to accompany the officer. All three went to Boston in the mid-day train.

"The Brutus sailed from this port August 29. 1860, being cleared by Mr. Bigelow, ostensibly for a whaling voyage, under command of Capt. E. S. Devoll, who left her off the Western Islands and returned home. At that time she was suspected, and the agent stated that she would be discharged and reloaded under the inspection of a Government officer. Her sails were unbent, but nothing more was done. After a few days, her sails were again bent, and she proceeded to sea.

"Some time since, we published a statement of a young man named Jerome Colburn, of Belchertown, who was on board the Brutus, and who stated that they succeeded in leaving the coast of Africa with 600 negroes, landing 500 of them in Cuba. The vessel was also sold in Cuba, and the crew dispersed."

ANOTHER SLAVE-TRADER IN CUSTODY.

The Boston "Traveller," has this account of another case:

"A man named John Jones, alias John Dowdall, has recently been arrested on suspicion of having been a mate of a vessel engaged in the slave-trade. About a year since, the brig Mary Frances was fitted out in New York and cleared for Wilmington, N. C., and from thence she obtained a nominal charter to the West India islands, and from thence she sailed to the coast of Africa, took on board five hundred negroes, and succeeded in landing them safe in Cuba. The master and all hands then dispersed to parts unknown.

"Recent inquiries by the United States Marshal at New York, led to the knowledge that John Jones, the mate of the vessel was in this vicinity, and with the aid of officials here he was arrested for the minor offense of serving on board the Mary Frances voluntarily when fitted out as a slaver.

"That being a bailable offence parties interested in the slave-trade sent to Boston to release him on bail, with ample sureties, but before he could be released a warrant was issued by Assistant District-Attorney Lothrop, charging him with shipping slaves, which is a capital offense. On this he was arrested, and is now in custody in this city.

"The evidence against him is said to be of the most conclusive character. It is not yet known whether he will be proceeded against here or at New York. The witnesses are at present in New York. The prisoner is about thirty-five years old, and unmarried, we believe, but has friends residing at Chelsea. He also has acquaintances in this city, among whom he has borne a good character heretofore.

"The investigations in reference to the slave-trade shows that during the past year parties in New York fitted out about one vessel a week for this purpose. Occasionally they fitted out a vessel at Boston and New Bedford. It is believed now that their trade will be wholly broken up.

STEALING SLAVES AROUND FORTRESS MONROE.

Negroes who have recently sought refuge within the Federal lines agree in representing that there are bands of kidnappers scouring the country for miles around. These land-pirates systematically steal all the able-bodied, saleable negroes they can, and run them off to the Southern markets and pocket the proceeds. This system of land-piracy has, according to representation, been carried on to a considerable extent. So that, between the flight of negroes and the stealing by the land-pirates, the owners of this species of property in this region are likely to fare badly. This fact illustrates the morals of the Rebels, and their proclivity for the slave-trade. In this section property in slaves some time since ceased to have any real value. The standard of valuation is completely broken down, and sales of slaves are not heard of. The relation of master and slave does not exist, and it involves no one in the charge of Abolitionism to predict that there is hardly any likelihood of its ever being revived. This state of things must necessarily have a radical effect in landed and every other species of property related to labor. Indeed, every other kind of property has but little more real value than that in negroes. If the lands in this part of the State are ever again culticated, it must be by free labor. Some of the finest estates in Virginia were in this part of the State. Nearly all of them are now abandoned, and running to waste, master and slave having alike fled, but generally in opposite directions.

Whenever this portion of the Old Dominion again puts on the air of thrift, it will be in other hands. It is scarcely probable that the former, or rather present proprietors will return to cultivate the soil or pursue business. The disruption of society is perfect. The surface of the country has been burnt over, so to speak, and to a certain extent literally. This, therefore, will at some time or other become a field for new settlers. The soil is excellent, the climate perfectly healthy, and there are many attractions both to the enterprising man and him who would lie at his ease. What is to follow the fact that the owners of the soil are almost wholly active participants in the rebellion, and how that fact will be made to effect titles, ownership, and proprietary interests, is a question yet to be answered. At present there is no such thing as bargain and sale, or the assertion of ownership over property of any kind. When, if ever, it will be resumed, is a question that cannot be determined now.—Correspondent of N. Y. Tribune.

SECESSION LIES.

We clip the following from the Baltimore Exchange, a violent Secession Journal:—

Our Negroes.—The quartering of large bodies of Northern troops in and around Baltimore has not been without its effect upon the "contraband" population. In every regiment which has stopped in Baltimore since the commencement of the war, there have been low, unprincipled wretches who have affiliated more with the negro than the white population, and the consequence has been that some of the most disgusting and disgraceful scenes have been enacted in the streets of our city.—Among them, a Massachusetts soldier has been seen walking along a public street at noonday, carrying an umbrella over a coal-black negro woman; soldiers have been seen embracing negro sweethearts upon the streets, and have endeavored to get them into the railway cars. Free negroes are constantly brought from the North with new regiments, and our laws in respect to their presence are neither regarded nor attempted to be enforced by those claiming authority.—Many of our negroes have become utterly contaminated by association with the creatures who are quartered here, and for the first time in the record of our State, miserable female negroes, in gaudy dresses, may be seen flaunting our thoroughfares even after midnight. Mr. Dodge surely knows that this is not allowable.

Contrabands in Luck.—Since the battle of Bull Run numerous desertions from the Federal army have taken place, and not a day passes but numbers of the runaway soldiers are to be seen in the lower counties cautiously en route for their Northern homes. They take the first opportunity for changing their dress by exchanging their uniforms for any kind of clothes, and as illustrative of this, we give the following incident:—A few days since a wealthy and prominent planter in Prince George's county on riding out to one of his fields where several of his negroes were at work, was greatly surprised to see, hard at work plowing, several men dressed in full Zouave uniforms. He had heard that slaves were to be confiscated, but had no idea that the Government was also going to confiscate his plantation.

Having a slight desire to know what had become of his negroes, he concluded to approach one of the Zouaves and make the inquiry. With this object he rode up to one of the ploughmen, when his astonishment was much increased to find that in the red breeches was one of his favorite negroes. As the master rode up the negro lifted the tasseled red cap from his head and with a broad grin, said, "Master, what does ye think of dis ere rig?" "Why, you rascal, where did you get it?" "From one of dem fellers what got so mightily scared at de Bully Run fight. I jist swapped my worse every-day suit for dis one. Dar was no gittin away from him, sir,—he fell dead in love with my linsy." Two other negroes had also changed clothes with deserters and were in full uniform.

The Tide Rising.

Read the following proceedings of the Central Club, held Tuesday evening last. At the stated meeting of this Club, held at Cooper Institute, Mr. Sinclair Tousey presided, and Mr. Oliver opened with some remarks on the following subject, which was laid over the previous evening:

Resolved, That the surest and quickest way of ending the rebellion, and establishing a permanent peace, is to declare immediate and unconditional emancipation.

Mr. Oliver proposed adding, "Wherever rebellion exists." His argument was, that the Union, with Slavery in it, was not worth preserving. But the only way of really preserving the Union, was by emancipation. For even if the South was "subjugated," Jeff. Davis and his crew woulp but return to Congress, and raise again the old question of Slavery. Congress had now the power to abolish Slavery, as the South had departed from the protection of the law. The speaker's sentiments were, that the negro had as much right to own the master, as the master his negro. As a point of fact, he stoutly denied, on the authority of his own observation, the accepted notion that white men could not live at the South, and work where negroes do.

Dr. Kennedy, of Syracuse, announced that he had found it necessary to change his platform, and he believed that the Republican party, if it intended to exist any longer, must henceforth have abolition on its platform. He had come to the conclusion that slaves must be liberated wherever they can be found. The war could not be terminated honestly on the present platform, nor would God permit it to be so terminated. All the European and civilized nations were against the United States with Slavery in it. The speaker read extracts from Lord Shaftsbury's late speech, to the effect that England could never sympathize with either of the leading political parties so long as both clung firmly to Slavery.

Dr. Gould offered a substitute more radical still, being a recommendation that President Lincoln should proclaim emancipation by martial law. This was opposed. One member denounced the Club for "eternally" passing resolutions which must eventually split the party.

After speeches by E. Webster and others the resolution was passed and the meeting adjourned.

ANGLO-AFRICAN WAR ITEMS.

A correspondent of the Albany Evening Journal, in writing of a trip to Fairfax C. H. says: "Nowhere did we find any sign of kindly recognition except from the poor slaves, who are rapidly learning, through the insane hatred of their masters, to look upon our troops as that great Army of Deliverance for which they have prayed so long. One old negro, who came to assist us in arranging our harness, which had given way, said to us, with an expression which I wish I could reproduce for you, 'We's bin lookin' for you dis long while—we knowed you was a comin'—dey cut down de trees and put 'em in de road to keep you from getting along, but I knowed you would go right over 'em.' 'Who is your master?' said I. 'Oh he's Massa Howard; he's a Major down there,'—pointing towards Fairfax—'he's a dreffil 'cessionist: he blacked a man all over with ink and put tar on his head, 'cause he voted for Lincoln down to Occoquan—but bress de Lord, I guess he's a runnin' now!' and he chuckled all over with satisfaction.

"Soon after leaving him we came upon the obstructions which he had spoken of. Immense trees had been cut down and placed on both sides of the road, making it impassable except through a small opening which could evidently be commanded by cannon, and such was its position that it could have raked our men terribly as they came up."

N. P. Willis, in a recent letter from Washington, writes: "Following my leader across the camp, I stood for a few minutes near a bevy of tall and handsome negro girls, who were selling cake and candy to the Zouaves—their large baskets and showy bandannas mingling very artistically with the fez caps and red shirts of the busy soldiers. 'Well girls,' I ventured to ask after a while, 'how do you like these strange boys?' But the reply was most significantly prompt, 'Fust rate!' said the merriest looking one in the party 'they pay!' And complimentary as this was to the Zouaves, I could not make out for a certainty who it was she intended should suffer by the comparison; though it was close to the spot where the Zouave sentry was shot from behind a tree. The girl's previous trading was probably with gentlemen who lived by taking advantage."

The Elmira (N. Y.) Gazette reports the following from Mr. S. G. Stryker of said place, one of a party of excursionists to Washington: "While at Alexandria, he saw a 'slave-pen,' on which was a sign-board and painted in large letters, 'Brooks & Co., Dealers in Slaves.' On nearing the 'pen' for closer inspection, he espied three Southern Slaveholders from South Carolina, imprisoned therein, who had been captured from the rebel camp the night previous. It was a novel sight to see slave-holders shut up in the very pen in which their slaves were confined for sale, and from all appearances they felt keenly the awkwardness of their position in thus being gazed at by the 'detested Northern Yankees.' They looked, to use the remark of one of the company, as if they could 'bite a tenpenny nail in two.' Mr. Hutchinson asked one of the prisoners a question, and was answered that he could receive no information from them. Mr. Hutchinson replied that he expected as much, as they came from a country where they had no information to spare."

The Detroit (Mich.) Advertiser in speaking of the return of the 1st Michigan regiment says: Three contrabands were brought home with the Regiment, as these articles expressed a desire to try life in a free State for a few weeks, to see if they liked it. If they find that the blessings of freedom are not what has been represented, they will return with the reorganized regiment. Of these, two were under the care of Lieutenant Throop, of Company A, and the other of Lieutenant Sanger.

A Minnesota boy, at Manassas, was rushed upon by four colored soldiers—full-blooded Africans; three were shot by Zouaves, the fourth attempted to pin him to the ground with his bayonet, which he parried, which gave a slight wound upon his thigh, and run into the ground its whole length, and, before he could extricate it, the boy shot him through the body, which was so near that the blaze of the gun set his clothes on fire.

A colored man by the name of John Bell, connected with one of the Rhode Island regiments, was arrested in Washington on the 2d inst, on the charge of assaulting a newsboy.

The Richmond (Va.) Examiner says that a colored man by the name of Dick Langborn of Lynchburg, shot one Federal soldier and knocked down another, and finally made both prisoners.

SUMMARY.

The Washington (D. C.) Star of the 7th instant says:—Yesterday morning, about six o'clock, when the guards were turning the colored prisoners into the yard to get water, one of them, William Woodward, escaped the guards by way of the aisle running into the yard, where there is a low wall, which he jumped and escaped. Mr. Fayman, the newly appointed guard, was sitting at the guard-room door, having in his charge the key of the door to the cell range. In closing the door the spring did not catch in the lock, and thus the door was left ajar. Discovering this fact, a count of the prisoners was made and one of them, this man Woodward, found to be missing. Search for him was made directly, and the guards around the city notified to intercept him. Woodward was awaiting trial for the murder of a member of the New York Seventy-ninth [Highland] Regiment. He is well known to be a most desperate fellow. His body and head have been pretty well marked in the conflict he had with the old Auxiliary Guard fifteen years ago, so that most of them could easily identify him. We hear that the guard Fayman has been dismissed, and Johnson Simonds appointed in his place.

About five years since a man named Mike Reynolds was arrested and committed to the Hudson County jail, on a charge of having committed a rape on a colored servant girl, residing in Mr. Gregory's family at Weehawken Hill. Before the trial came on, Reynolds succeeded in escaping from prison in the guise of a female. He returned a few days since, and was arrested for committing an outrageous assault and battery on Mr. Stanton and family at Washington village. Mr. Gregory hearing of his arrest has taken measures to have him tried for rape at the coming fall term of Court.

On returning from a pic-nic at Schenectady, on the 23rd ult., a little colored boy named White was standing on the track of the Troy Railroad, at the second crossing of the Aqueduct road, when the six o'clock train came along. The engineer blew his whistle, and made every effort to stop the train, but in vain. The boy did not seem to hear the whistle, and was struck by the cow-catcher, and thrown above the top of the smoke stack and instantly killed. An inquest was held on the body by Coroner Peters, and a verdict rendered in accordance with the above facts.

A colored woman at Keokuk, who had charge of a white child left by a worthless white woman, who abandoned her offspring to follow the army, sold the child, a few days ago, for $8worth of wood.

A colored boy named John Hazard, fourteen years old, was struck by a locomotive and instantly killed, between Waterloo and Geneva, on Thursday, 1st instant. The boy went to Clifton, from Waterloo on Wednesday night, and was returning when killed. It would seem that he got tired out, and laid down on the track to rest himself, with his coat as a pillow under his head. It is supposed he was struck by the locomotive while asleep.

A colored man named John Caldwell was shot and almost instantly killed on Saturday, the 20th of July in Trappe district, Maryland, by a white man named Trice, who was immediately arrested and lodged in Easton jail, to await an investigation by the Grand Jury.

Messrs. Payne and Roe, two Liberians of about eighteen years each, arrived in London on the 11th ult., from Monrovia, to be educated by the liberality of Samuel Gurney, Esq., M. P. They are promising youths, and it is expected will do much credit, in the course of time, to Liberia.

A young white woman, about twenty years old, calling herself Ann Barber, says the Port Tobacco [Md.] Times, of the first inst., was yesterday apprehended and brought before Dr. Franklin, Justice of the Peace of this village, on the charge of being in the houses of free negroes and slaves under suspicious circumstances. She gives a poor account of herself, says she knows no one in the county, is looking for employment. She was committed to jail for a further examination.

Jeff. Meads, an aged colored man, residing near Cockeysville, Md., was found on Saturday, 3rd inst., near his house. He had just returned from Baltimore, and in half an hour afterwards was found dead. He was probably better known, among a certain class of people, than any one of his color throughout Maryland, or any other Southern State, being a most successful raiser of game chickens.

Captain Avis, the jailor of John Brown was killed at the battle of Bull Run. A correspondent of the Milwaukie Sentinel, says, "I was told by a well-informed negro that while Brown was in jail, there were suspicions afloat that Captain Avis was in league with the abolitionists, and plotting to release the prisoners. Accordingly a plot was laid to try him, but he was found to be true to the South."

The Trenton (N. J.) Gazette of Aug. 10th says; "The body of an unknown colored man was found in Whitaker, James & Darrah's basin yesterday afternoon. He was about 5 feet 8 inches high, and apparently about forty years of age. Coroner Larue held an inquest on the body, and the jury rendered a verdict of accidentally drowned."

On Thursday, 8th inst., a colored seaman named Samuel Williams, was accidentally knocked overboard from the sloop Pointer of Providence, while passing Sand's Point, near the head of Long Island Sound, and although a boat was lowered, and every effort made to save him, he was lost. He was thirty-five or forty years old, and leaves a wife and several children residing on Cain street, in that city.

A runaway slave secreted himself on board the transport steamer City of New York, which arrived in Providence Friday morning 9th inst. with the wounded and disabled Rhode Islanders, from Washington. When he first showed himself, the steamer had proceeded well on her way down the Potomac. The captain promptly hailed a Philadelphia steamer bound to Washington, and put him on board, to be returned to his owner—said to be a strong Union man. Some objection was made by one or two more of the passengers on the steamer to the action of the captain, but it did not avail.

The Oconto (Wis.) Pioneer states that the body of a colored man named Pete, was found in the road a few miles above Menekaune not many days since He was formerly employed about the hotels in Fond du Lac and Oshkosh, but had recently been taken to Menomounce to do some light work, when he strayed off and died, having been unwell of late. Pete was formerly a slave. His back was literally covered with lashes, and there was a brand on his left hip of the letters "Va." He was buried the next day in the burying ground at Menomonee.

The Albany Times of the 12th inst. furnishes the following: "Some excitement exists at Kinderhook just at present. Fears are entertained of a serious riot. It is all occasioned over a squabble had among some white and black boys while in bathing, where the former threatened to drown all the negroes under nine years of age in the village. The colored people of the place have taken these threats up, and have become greatly excited ever the matter. They are greatly enraged, and parade about with a great deal of 'blood in the eye."

A colored boy named Dainson, living on Happy Alley, Baltimore, was fearfully injured about 10 o'clock on Saturday morning, by falling from a wagon at the Fell's Point market. He received a severe contusion upon the side of his head.

The cook at the Fort William Henry Hotel, Lake George, died Friday 9th inst. from hemorrhage, caused by a cut from a goblet thrown at him by a colored waiter in a quarrel.

Sheriff Wheeler of Baltimore county, has received from Governor Hicks the death warrant of Perry Kennard, who was convicted in Howard County Court, of an outrage upon Mrs. Cronine, of the twelfth district of Baltimore county. The day fixed for the execution is Friday, the 13th day of September.

The Baltimore Clipper, of August 6th, says:—On Sunday morning Mary Alice Bond, a fugitive slave, was arrested in this city and returned to her owner, John G. McCullough, Esq., living in Havre de Grace, Maryland. The fugitive had been in this city for the past two months.

The Chicago papers are discussing with warmth, editorially and by correspondents, the action of the board of education in admitting a colored person to the Normal department of the high school.

On Monday 5th inst., a colored seaman named Bruce fell from the deck of a vessel in Montreal harbor into the hold, being killed instantaneously.

Alexander Gale, of Elkton, Maryland, who was convicted at the May term of the Circuit Court of Baltimore county, of the murder of James Evans, on the 25th of November, 1859, was sentenced to be hung on the 6th of September next. Both parties were colored men.

Salt water day for Monmouth county, New Jersey, will be held at Union city. A dinner will be served at the Pic-Nic House, said place.

THE TOPHET CADETS.

Attached to the King of Dahomey's army there is a troop called "Amazon Guards." The West African "Herald" thus describes them:

"The Amazon Guards, as they have sometimes been styled, are the most extraordinary troops that we have ever heard or read of. They are 3,000 in number, all females, and display such a degree of ferocious blood-thirstiness and hardihood as to bear a greater resemblance to a host of mad tigresses than to human creatures. They utterly despise death; they show no mercy to any living being in war; they are mad after blood, and seem not to know what fear means. They are in fact a group of devils, so to speak, whose hideous wildness of manner, and the savage madness of whose demeanor in times of excitement are so appalling and inhuman, as to have led many well judging persons to opine that these dreadful creatures are periodically subjected to the influence of some species of drug which has this effect. The dress of the Amazon consists of a pair of loose trousers, and upper garment covering the breast, and a cap. They are armed with a gun, knives, and daggers; some have blunderbusses, others long elephant guns, while the remainder carry the ordinary musket. In their military exercises they display good discipline, as well as wonderful dexterity and agility."

Just Like Them!—An old woman met in the street a friend whom she had not seen for a long time.

"O, my friend:" she cried, how is it since I have seen you? Was it you or your sister that died some months ago? I saw it in the paper."

"It was my sister," replied simplicity; "we were both very sick; she died, but I was the worst."

CAMP MEETINGS.

A camp meeting will be held at Sea Grove, Rockaway Beach, L. I., commencing on the 27th day of August, and closing on the 3rd day of September. The meeting will be under the pastoral charge of Rev. Peter C. Coster, associated with Rev. H. A. Thompson, Rev. J. P. Thompson, Rev. George Washington and others.

A camp meeting will be held in Gerrys woods, Jerusalem Avenue, about four miles from Hempstead. It will commence on the 15th inst., Rev. J. Long, who is the minister in charge will be assisted by the Rev'ds. David Stevens, J. B. Trusty, M. Manning, J. M. Myers, P. C. Coster and preachers James Seaman and John Washington.

Fair from Hunters Point, to the ground 75 cents.

A camp meeting is now being held in Mickle's Woods, near Centreville, New Jersey, under the supervision of Rev. Mr. Evans, of the Colored Baptist Church of Kaighnton.

The colored people will hold a camp meeting at North Spring Grove, one mile west of Media, Pa., commencing on the 15th of August. It will be under the superintendence of the Rev. Mr. Woodyard.

DIED.

Died.—In this city, of consumption, James Tunis, aged 37 years.

Grason.—At Rochester, N.Y., on the 4th inst., Congo Grason, aged 108 years.

Special Notices.

Information Wanted in regard to Alexander or Sandy Hogan, son of Betsey Hogan. He left the service of Mr. Jenkins in Baltimore, in June, 1859, and came to the North to solicit money to purchase the freedom of his wife. He is believed to have been in Birmingham, N. Y., about five weeks ago. Skin light brown. An aged mother is anxious to ascertain his whereabouts, and will be grateful for information sent to Wm. Still, 107 North-Fifth street, Philadelphia.

Anti-slavery papers please copy. 3t.

A. P. Smith will commence a tour through New Jersey, about Sept. 9th, prepared to lecture on the following subjects: The War, its Causes, Progress and probable effects: Means of Elevation, or on due notice any other subject of interest. No compensation required beyond traveling expenses. Address, immediately, A. P. Smith, Saddle River, Bergen Co., N. J. 3t.

Rev. J. N. Gloucester, will preach Sabbath afternoon and evening, in Shilogh Presbyterian church, corner of Prince and Marion—Sermon in the evening the "Jewish Temple as rebuilt by Nehemiah" illustrative of the Spiritual Jerusalem of whom Christ is the eternal author and founder.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE ANGLO-AFRICAN MAGAZINE, BOUND.

Price.—In half Morocco $1,25; half Morocco, gilt edges, $1.50. Muslin, $1 00

CONTENTS;

Embellishment.—Portrait of Alexander Dumas.

Music.—By A. J. R. Connor.

Apology.

A Statistical View of the Colored Population of the United States, from 1790 to 850.

African American Picture Gallery.—Anon.

American Caste and Common Schools,—by J. Holland Townsend.

A Review of Slavery and the Slave Trade,—by J. W. C. Pennington

A Good Habit Recommended,—by Sarah M. Douglass.

A Chapter in the History of the African Slave Trade,—by Edward W. Blyden.

Anglo-Saxons and Anglo-Africans.—Anon.

A Word to Our People

Blake; or the Huts of America,—by Martin R. Delany.

Books &c.

Civilization—Its Dependence on Physical Circumstances.

Colored American Patriots,—by Wm. C. Nell.

Comets,—by M. R. Delany.

Citizenship—by James Mc'Cune Smith.

Claude Brindas De Salas,—Selected.

Communication from N.Y. Society for the Promotion of Education among Colored Children.

Chess.

Dumas—Alexander.

Effects of Emancipation in Jamaica, by Robert Campbell.

Fragments of Thought,—by D. A. Payne.

Fancy Sketches,—Anonymous.

Gone to God—Poetry—by Frances Ellen Watkins.

Intellectual Culture—by Robert Gordon.

In the Constitution of Man there exists a Religious Element,—by Robt. Gordon.

Lines—Poetry—by Grace A. Mapps.

Mrs. Partington and Mrs. Freshington.—Anon.

Our Greatest Want,—by Frances Ellen Watkins.

Our Duty in the Conflict,—by J. Holland Townsend.

On the Fourteenth Query of Thos. Jefferson's Notes on Virginia.

On the Personality of the First Cause,—by Robt. Gordon.

Patrick Brown's First Love.

Poetry—Anonymous.

Selected Items.

Struggles for Freedom in Jamaica—by Robert Campbell.

The Attraction of Planets—by M. R. Delany.

The German Invasion, by James M'Cune Smith

Tiffs, by Mary A. S. Cary.

The Coming Man—Poetry—by Wm. J. Wilson.

The Educational Wants of the Free Colored People, by Martin H. Freeman.

Thomas L. Jinnings.

The Teacher and his Pupil—Poetry—by Wm. J. Wilson.

Thoughts on Hayti, by James T. Holly.

The Successive Advances of Astronomy, by G. B. Vashon.

The Oberlin Wellington Rescue, by J. Mercer Langston.

The Shadows of Intemperance,—by James Fields.

The Dying Fugitive—Poetry—by Frances Ellen Watkins.

The Anglo-African and the African Slave Trade.

The Two Offers, by Frances Ellen Watkins.

The Re-opening of the Slave Trade—Anonymous.

The First Colored Convention.

The Self-Redeeming Power of the Colored Races of the World,—by J. W. C. Pennington.

The Policy that we should Pursue,—by J. Holland Townsend.

The Education of the Colored People,—by Amos Gerry Beman.

The Great Conflict requires Great Faith,—by J. W. C. Pennington.

The Outbreak in Virginia.

The Sentinel of Freedom—Poetry,—by J. Sella Martin.

The Nat Turner Insurrection.

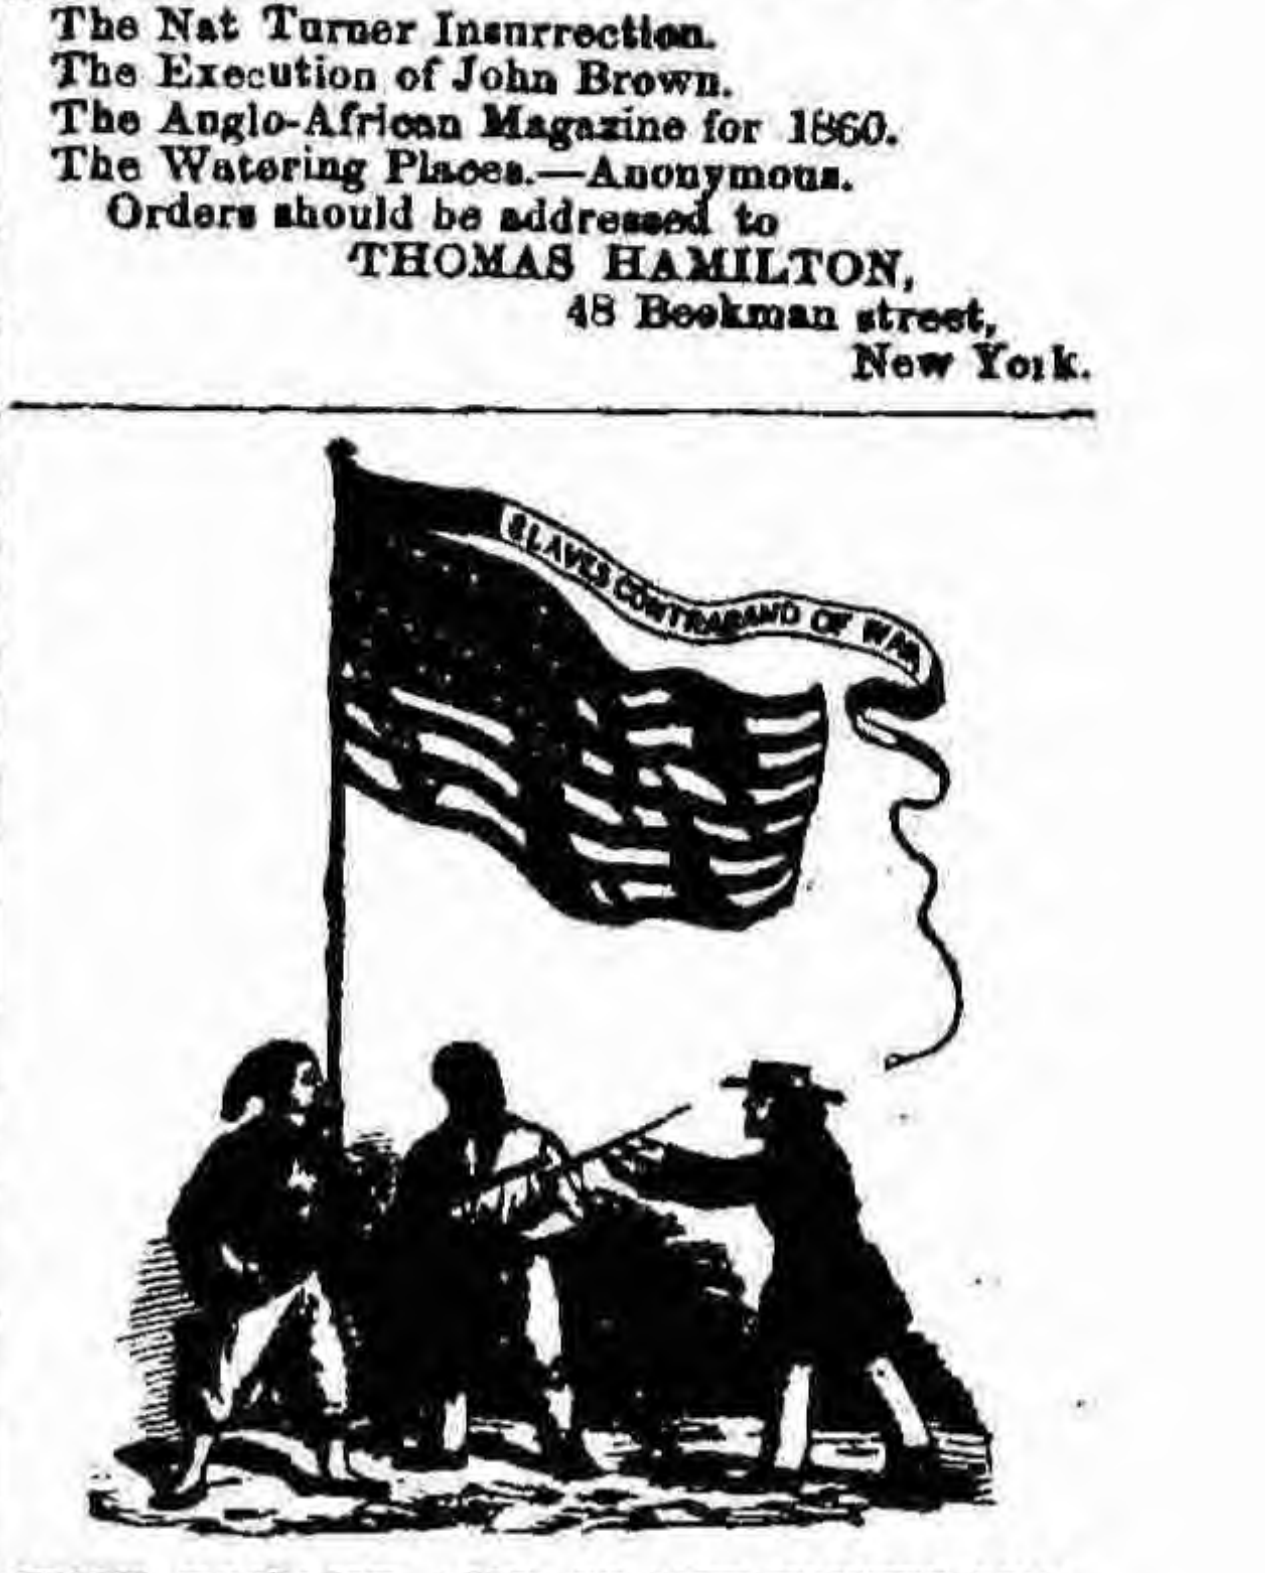
The Execution of John Brown.

The Anglo-African Magazine for 1860.

The Watering Places.—Anonymous.

Orders should be addressed to

THOMAS HAMILTON,
48 Beekman street,
New York.



THE ZOUAVE AND SLAVE ENVELOPE. Price per thousand $5; per hundred 60 cents; packages of 25 each, 20 cents.

Orders should be addressed

THOS. HAMILTON
48 Beekman Street, N. Y.

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION. THE UNdersigned respectfully announces that he is now prepared to give instruction in the Art of Singing. He will be at home at 187 Navy Street, Brooklyn, on Monday evening, and at Zion Church, N. Y., on Thursday evening, of each week. Ladies or Gentlemen desiring instruction, will please apply immediately. Singing schools taught and private instruction given on moderate terms.

3tf. ROBT. HAMILTON,

PRIVATE BOARDING. MRS. SARAH A. Tilmon, 120th st., between 3 & 4 Avs. Harlem, would most respectfully beg leave to say that she is prepared, to take and provide with comfortable rooms, a few first class boarders, on reasonable terms.

N. B. Instruction given to young Ladies in Oriental wax and hair work, Landscaping &c., For terms, apply at 70 E. 13th. St., 3tf.

NEW SAILOR'S HOME. CHARLES M. Fortes, has opened a pleasant home for Seamen, at 26 Mulberry Street, N. Y., Seamen will find this a very desirable house, as it is in a central location, and every provision made for their comfort.

Boarding by the day or week. Terms moderate. 31y

TILMON'S AGENCY. THIS IS THE oldest establishment, in this city, for colored employment. Remember we are approaching a trying winter, so that all who want to get a good home for the winter, had better apply next month: For September is the time. L. TILMON, Proprietor.

70 E. 13th, 1 door E. of 4th, Av., 3t

DENTISTRY.

BEAUTIFUL ARTIFICIAL SETS OF TEETH on gold or silver plate on the most improved style. All other Surgical operations, performed to entire satisfaction, on very moderate terms by G. H. GRICE, Surgeon Dentist.
79 Thompson St., N. Y.

MRS. E. LEONARD,
FASHIONABLE
DRESS MAKER,
25 Sullivan Street, New York.
Receives monthly the latest Paris Fashions.
3tf.

BOARDING AND LODGING

By Mrs. Mary Johnson, 120 West 20th Street, New York. This house is very pleasantly situated in a very healthy and convenient part of the city.

Boarding for Ladies,	$2,50
" " Gentleman,	3,00
Lodging per week,	75

y13t.

JAMES R. W. LEONARD,
CARD AND JOB PRINTER,
219 Centre Street, New York.

APARTMENTS TO LET. ENQUIRE AT 207 Wooster Street, N. Y. tf.

THE BEST DRESSING FOR THE HAIR during warm weather, is White's vegetable extract. For Sale at 19 Sullivan and 40 Grand Sts., 2 tf.

BOARDING AND LODGING ON THE EAST Side. Mrs. Gant, can accommodate a few Ladies and Gentlemen, at her residence 18 Suffolk, Street. Terms very moderate. a10 1y.

BROWN'S POPULAR RESORT.

The undersigned takes the privilege to inform his Friends and the public generally that as he has recently fitted up his SALOON anew, he is now prepared to furnish them with

Ice Cream, Fruit, and other Delicacies.

BENJ. F. BROWN,
70 Bleecker St.
between Broadway & Crosby St. 4t.

WARRANTED TO CURE A HEADACHE in 10 minutes, White's Vegetable extract. For sale at 55 West Broadway, and cor. Gold and Frankfort Sts. 1 tf.

Poetry.

THE POLISH PATRIOTIC HYMN.

The Times' Warsaw correspondent says—The singing of the National Hymn still continues. Indeed, though of Roman Catholic origin, and containing prayers for the dead, it has been recently sung during divine service in the churches of both Lutheran and Calvinist Protestants, and, with omissions, in the Jewish synagogues. To give you some idea of its character, I venture to send you a version of it in English—full of defects, I know, but still conveying the sense of the original. It was composed, I am told, by a Polish Bishop in the reign of Alexander I., when the Polish nation began to entertain hopes of a renewed national existence, from the clemency and liberality of the Emperor after the events of 1815. The last two stanzas are a recent addition. The music is plaintive and touching:

O! thou who didst o'er Poland oft of yore
  Cause streams of glory and of power to flow!
Who didst with Thine own shield her children guard
  From woes that else had been their overthrow—
Here at thine altar, Lord, we raise our voice to Thee;
Grant us our Country,—grant us liberty!

Thou who Thyself didst grieve o'er Poland's fall,
  Those who upheld her cause Thyself didst aid,
And who, to prove her valor to the world,
  Didst lend her brightness from each passing shade,—
Here at thine altar, Lord, we raise our voice to Thee;
Grant us our country,—grant us Liberty!

Give back to Poland all that erst was hers;
  Make fruitful all her desert fields again;
Let joy and freedom flourish here once more
  Oh, cease to punish; Lord thy wrath restrain!
Here at thine altar, Lord, we raise our voice to Thee!
  Grant us our Country,—grant us Liberty

Thou who canst break the iron rod of kings
  With but a touch of thine Almighty hand,
Confound the machinations of our foes;
  Some hope in our dark souls again command.
Here at thine altar, Lord, we raise our voice to Thee;
Grant us our Country.—grant us Liberty!

Almighty! on thy will alone depend
  The fate of empires and the lot of man;
Save us from out the bondage of our foes;
  Of Poland's sons bless thou each deed, each plan.
Here at thine altar, Lord we raise our voice to Thee.
Grant us our Country,—grant us Liberty!

Arise, O Lord, exert thy sovereign might;
  Cause battles, massacres, defeats, to cease;
In Freedom's loving bonds all peoples join
  Beneath the sceptre of thine angel, Peace!
Here at thine altar, Lord we raise our voice to Thee;
Grant us our Country,—grant us Liberty!

Almighty! by the wounds of Him who died,
  Bless all departed ones for whom we grieve;
Deign but one look on us in bondage chained,
  Vouchsafe our prayers to hear, our alms receive.
Here at thine altar, Lord, we raise our voice to Thee!
Grant us our Country.—grant us Liberty!

And now, when drowned once more in Sorrow's tears,
  For sons and brothers fall'n we lift our cry.
Who round their brows the Martyr's thorns have twined,
  And traced in blood the path of Liberty.—
Here at thine altar, Lord, we raise our voice to Thee;
Give back our Country,—give us Liberty!

MUSIC IN THE AIR.

There's music in the air,
  When the infant morn is nigh,
When faint its blush is seen,
  On the bright and laughing sky.
Many a heart's extatic sound,
  With its thrill of joy profound,
While we list enchanted there
  To the music in the air.

There's music in the air,
  When the sultry noontide beam
Reflects its golden light
  On the distant mountain stream;
When beneath some grateful shade
  Sorrow's aching head is laid;
Sweetly to the spirit there
  Comes the music in the air.

There's music in the air,
  When the gentle twilight sigh
Is lost on evening's breeze
  Its pensive beauties die;
Then, oh! then, the loved ones gone
  Wake the pure celestial song;
Angel voices greet us there
  With the music in the air.

There's music in the air,
  When the clear full moon is high,
Reflecting mellow light
  Through the earth and azure sky;
When we feel that purer joy;
  Heavenly things our thoughts employ,
As wafted from some region fair
  Comes the music in the air.

There's music in the air,
  When the chilling winds blow cold,
When freezing gales go by
  And winter's gloom unfold
When the world around is drear,
  As seen through sorrow's dimming tear,
What can then dispel each care
  Like the music in the air.

There's music in the air,
  When the heart is wrung by grief;
When no kind friend is nigh
  To give unasked relief,
Then how sweet to feel and know
  That while the murmuring breezes blow,
The heart its silent grief may share
  With the music in the air.

LOVINA REYNOLDS.

OR

THE TRAPPER TRAPPED.

BY JOHN E. DAVE.

In the year of 183– I had business in the northern part of Illinois. I had been traveling a very rough road all the day, and when night came, both myself and my horse were pretty near exhausted. The setting sun proclaimed that darkness would soon overspread the land. I had traveled a great distance without the first sign of any habitation; but now I saw between the thick foliage which grew alongside the path a distant light. I rode into the bushes, and the sight of a log cabin welcomed my eyes. I dismounted, tied my horse to a tree and approached the cabin. I knocked at the door, and no answer being returned I knocked again; this time it was answered by a man who looked more like a demon than a human being. I asked him if he could accommodate me and my horse for the night. "Certainly," said he, and he departed to look after my horse, after having asked me to walk into the house.—While he was looking after my horse, I amused myself by looking about me. The house was neat in the inside, and I suspected that other hands than his had been at work there. He presently returned and announced to me that supper would soon be ready. This was good news to me, for I was very hungry just then. I thanked him for his kindness; he then departed to get supper ready. I could not rest easy until I saw that my horse was properly taken care of; I therefore went to the stable to satisfy myself on that point. I found him in a very comfortable place, and having assured myself that he had enough to eat, returned to the house. I sat there thinking of past adventures, when the door of the room in which I sat was opened, and a young girl entered the room, bearing in her hand a note, which she, in a whisper, requested me to read. She was a beautiful girl of seventeen summers, with a countenance as blooming as a rose. I opened the letter and read as follows:

"MY UNKNOWN FRIEND:—You are not safe in this house. My father (as I am forced to call him,) intends to murder you to night. He will give you a good supper; but do not, as you value your life drink any of the wine which he will give you because it is drugged; but you can eat as much as you like of the food. Finding that he cannot drug you, he will ask you to sleep in the north chamber, which is the chamber, of death. Under the bed is a trap door, which you will see, as it has a spike in the middle. He will try to make you think I am dumb, but I am not. Beware of him. Do not go on the bed during the night.

FROM YOUR FRIEND.

She then left the room, leaving me to my own reflections. I gazed around the room, and seeing the spike in the centre, I knew that the chamber of death was directly over my head. I shuddered at the thought, and resolved to be on my guard. I sat down to study a plan not to escape, but to "bite the biter." What could be his object in letting me down in this room; sure, thought I, there must be another trap leading to the cellar. I raised the straw carpet, which covered the floor of the room, and discovered a large trap which was composed of the whole floor. I then knew his whole plan of operation. He was to remove this trap, touch the spring, and let the bed down to the cellar. I had just finished my observations when the door opened, and the host announced that supper was ready. I followed him to the kitchen, and, being very hungry, was soon engaged in discussing the quality of the venison steak, to which I did ample justice. My host commenced the conversation by informing me that his daughter was dumb; "she has been dumb since the day of her birth."

I asked him if he would honor me with his name.

"Certainly," said he "It is Zeke Mullin, and my daughter's name is Isabella. I have some very excellent wine, will you have some?"

Saying this, he went to a closet and took down a bottle of wine which he sat down on the table. I cast a look at the girl, and saw something in her looks which convinced me that this was the wine spoken of in the note. He offered me a glass of the wine."

"No, I thank you," said I, "I never drink wine.

As he returned to replace the bottle I noticed a scowl on his dark features, which told that he was disappointed.

I arose from the table much refreshed, and immediately retired to the other room. I sat there an hour, absorbed in deep thought when the door opened and my host entered. He sat down and conversed with me a long time, and seemed very sociable, notwithstanding his rough looks and coarse voice. He asked me what business I pursued. I told him I was a drover, just returned from Chicago, where I had been with a large drove of cattle, and had made a successful sale of them. I saw his eyes sparkle as I said this. He said that I was very young for a drover, but he doubted not but that I was an experienced one. I told him that by the death of my father, I had been the sole heir of his property, and had taken up his trade.

"You were very lucky to find my cabin," said he, "for there is not another cabin for twenty miles on this road; but you have found very comfortable quarters for the night, and I should like to have you stay with me as long as you please."

"I should like very much to stay with you, but my business will not let me."

I knew that he was a most consummate villain, of the deepest dye, besides being a murderer and a kidnapper. I would have finished him on the spot, but that I had a better fate in store for him. He asked me if I wished to retire. "Yes," said I, "as soon as I visit the stable." I went to the stable under pretence of seeing to my horse, but that was not my object this time. I was now satisfied that he meant to take good care of the horse, and had only to take good care of myself. Entering the stable I looked carefully in all the boxes for a piece of rope. I at last found one to suit me. It was ten feet long and of just the right thickness. I put the rope out of sight and entered the house.

My host asked me if I was armed. I told him that I was. "Will you let me examine them," said he. "Certainly," said I, and handed them to him. He examined them sometime, and asked me if I would let him show them to his daughter. I followed him to the door, which he left partly ajar, and saw him draw the bullets from my pistols. He then returned and gave me the pistols, saying, at the same time, that his daughter thought them very beautiful.

Isabella at this moment came in, bearing in her hands two lamps. She glanced at the ceiling and then at the floor. I understood what she meant. She then set the lamps on the table and retired. I now asked permission to retire, saying that I was tired with my journey; but I had another object in view. He showed me the way to my chamber, and, after bidding me good night, retired. I was in the chamber of death. I knew that I must work very quick and quiet to make my plan successful. That the girl had saved my life there was no doubt, for, had she not warned me, I should have drank the wine, and been asleep long before this—the sleep of death. Taking the cord from my bosom, I proceeded to attach it to the secret spring under the bed, so that by a single pull of the cord it would let the trap down. Having done this I proceeded to the bed, and after having rolled the clothes in such a manner as to have it look like a human being, I looked at my pistols and found the caps wet. I then loaded them again, and placed them in my vest pocket, ready for instant use. I was now prepared to bite the biter, and was very confident of success. I had not to wait long, for the girl soon entered the room. She made not the slightest noise as she came in. She said that she was glad that I was on my guard. I showed her the plan that I had made for trapping him. She shuddered at the thought, but when she thought of the wrongs she had suffered at his hands, she thought that it was no more than right that he should suffer for his dark deeds. She asked me if I meant to kill him. I told her not; but that I should deliver him to the nearest magistrate. I asked her a great many questions about her past history, but of it she remembered but little. She remembered having lived in a large town, and about a little garden, but it was so long ago she could not remember much. She knew that Zeke Mullin was not her father, but she had not tried to escape from his power, because she had no other place to go to. She said she would like to go home to her parents, if she could find them.

"I will find your home for you," said I.

"A thousand blessings upon you for those words," said the fair creature.

"Is there no token by which some clue to your parents may be obtained?"

"Yes," said she; "I have a ring which I have had for a long time; if you will wait I will get it."

She returned very soon, having in her hand a small but costly ring. I examined it very carefully, and found a small spring, which I opened, and discovered a name in very small letters. Louisa E. Reynolds was the name on the ring. At the mention of that she seemed to recall her past life. She knew that it was her own name.

In my haste to communicate the name to her I had forgotten to read the other letters on the ring. They were, "Chicago, Ill." I now assured her that I could find her parents as soon as we arrived at Chicago. I then asked her if there had been many persons murdered by Mullen? She said that there had been three to her knowledge.

"Is there any money about the house?" I asked.

"Yes," said she, "there is some in the cave near by; but do not get it until he is in confinement. I cannot stay any longer," she continued, "but I hope that when we meet again it will be under very different circumstances."

She then departed. As she went out, I saw tears stealing down her cheeks. She had been gone but a few minutes, when I heard a step upon the stairs. I crouched down behind the door so that he could not see me, for I knew that it was Zeke who was coming. He came to the door, and listened. Finding that all was still, he looked in. The bundle of clothes had done its work—seeing them, he supposed that it was his victim. He entered the room. The moon's rays shone directly upon the trap; and, as he approached the bed I could see the fiendish expression which rested upon his face. I cared not for the worst now! I only thought of the joy of Lovina's parents, when they should behold their long lost child. I had taken the precaution to throw my coat over the spring; so that he would not discover my plan, and it was well that I did so, for on looking for the spring he saw the coat, and advanced to take it up. I thought for a moment, that all was lost; but he did not discover me. He stooped down upon the trap, to remove the coat—now was the time! I pulled the rope, and the trap fell, carrying my would be murderer to the room below. I hastened down, to open the other trap, but when about half way down I met Lovina, who said that Zeke had opened the other trap, so that I might go to the cellar without stopping; and that Zeke himself, had joined his victims, in the cellar. I secured the trap in such a manner, as to leave no means of his getting out, I knew that he would have to stay there as long as the magistrate saw fit.

Leaving Lovina at the cabin, I harnessed the horse which Zeke owned, and rode to the nearest house. I knew not in which direction the nearest house lay, but I doubted not that I could soon find one. After riding about half an hour, I came to a small cabin, I knocked at the door, and after waiting some time it was opened by a woman apparently in the prime of life. I inquired for the nearest magistrate, and was told that he lived about a mile distant, down a cross road, which the woman pointed out to me.

Arriving at the magistrate's house, I found him at home, and harnessing a fresh horse, we started for Zeke Mullen's. After a smart gallop, we reached the cabin. Zeke was greatly surprised at the change that had taken place in a few hours; and on seeing the magistrate he became raving mad. He was speedily handcuffed.

During my absence Lovina had been talking with him. He had promised to give her freedom and a large amount of money, if she would release him; but Lovina was firm; money was no object compared with seeing her parents.

Henry Stephens—that was the magistrate's name—asked Lovina what had been the reason of Zeke's keeping her a prisoner; and she said that he wished to make her his wife, but that he had not yet succeeded.

I asked Lovina if she could get some supper for Mr. Stephens. She went down into the kitchen, and soon returned, saying that the supper was ready.

At the table, Mr. Stephens asked me to see the wine which Zeke had offered me. After examining it carefully for some time, he said that it was poisoned, and that had I taken it, I could not have lived an hour.

I again thanked Lovina for the service she had rendered me; and told her that I would not rest until I had found her parents.

The next morning was a glorious one, and seemed fitted for the occasion. Mr. Stephens, having the care of Zeke, conducted him to the county jail, there to await his trial for murder at the next term, and Lovina and myself started on our way to Chicago, which was about thirty miles distant. About noon we reached a farm-house, and after spending an hour in refreshing ourselves and our horses, we started again, and reached Chicago, after riding about two hours. We stopped at an inn for supper and lodgings. Obtaining a directory, I began to search for the name of Lovina's father. At length I found the name of Charles Reynolds, who resided in Harbor Street. I told Lovina of this, and she said that was her father's name. I promised to take her there next morning. She could not sleep that night; she was thinking of finding her parents, and was impatient for the meeting. Morning came, and after breakfast, we set out for Harbor street. Lovina remembered the house, and was going in without knocking, but I prevented her, telling her to be patient. I knocked, and the door was opened by a servant girl.

"Is Mrs. Reynolds within?" I asked.

"Yes," said the servant; "shall I show you to her?"

"Yes," I replied.

We were admitted to the parlor, where Mrs. Reynolds was sitting. She instantly recognized Lovina. After the excitement of the meeting had subsided, I ventured to ask, how Lovina had been stolen away. Her mother said that one day she had been sent to a store for a few things and she did not return. Supposing that she had been drowned, they caused the river to be dragged for her body, and at last had given her up for lost.

I continued at Miss Reynolds' home for a month, and during that time our friendship had ripened into love, and before the year was passed, we were married.

A few words more and I have done. Zeke Mullen paid the forfeit of his crime upon the gallows. I am now happy with my wife and children. But often when the gloom of night is gathering around us, our minds revert to the exciting scenes of the murderer's cabin, on the prairie. What accidental points often decide man's destiny for weal or woe.

Selling a Thin Horse.

A jocose Boston auctioneer was called upon one day by a country dealer from Vermont, who wished to dispose of his horse. He was one of those distinctive characters peculiar to the section, with a countenance strangely indicative of both simplicity and shrewdness.

"I say," said he, "I want to see the auctioneer that auctions off horses here on Saturday."

"I'm the individual," said the auctioneer; "what can I do for you?"

"Well I've got a horse I want to sell, provided I can get enough for him; don't want nothing more than value neither. He's a good one, though just now he's a little thin; but I reckon he ought to sell pretty smartly."

"Very good; will you have him advertised?"

"Well, I guess I don't know about that—what do you tax?"

"One dollar first insertion; fifty cents for every time after."

"That's tew dollars for three times; I reckon that you may put him in the newspaper once, stranger, and after that let him slide."

"Very good; what color is he?"

"Rather brown than otherwise."

"Is he sound?"

"Sound! Oh, sound as a dollar—shouldn't like to warrant him, though!"

"All right; I'll advertise and sell him on Saturday. Have your 'critter' at the mart by twelve o'clock."

"I jest want to tell you Mr. Auctioneer, I should like to have the animal limited at fifteen dollars, but you may let him go at five."

"Exactly; and you won't take a great deal more than is offered for him, will you?"

"Well, I'm not dispositioned to be hard, anyhow I calculate not."

Saturday came, and one dollar and a half was bid for the animal brought up by the horse dealer.

"Go on, gentlemen, I have only one dollar and a half bid for the horse; how much more do I hear? One dolllar and a half—going—going—"

"Sell him, sir, he's dying!" whispered the Vermont horse dealer into the ear of the knight of the hammer.

"Gone," shouted the auctioneer, and down went the old horse at a dollar and a half.

After the sale, the horse dealer was the first one up to the desk to settle.

"Well, I reckon it won't take long to settle up this little trade of mine about the horse," said he.

"Not long," said the clerk, "there's your account of sale; you have to pay us just fifty cents more than the horse brought."

"Political destruction!" exclaimed the Vermonter, with humorous affectation of astonishment. Then with a satisfied manner he continued, "It's cheap enough! I couldn't gin him away at no price, and it would have cost tew dollars and a half to bury him. Just a half a dollar saved.—Good morning, Mr. Auctioneer. Cheap enough!"

☞ An Irishman being asked in court for his certificate of marriage, showed a big scar on his head about the shape of a shovel, which was satisfactory.

A Woman's Adventures.

From the Chicago Times.

Harriet Colburn was charged with disorderly conduct. The particular offense was quarreling with a negro with whom she lived. There was a history attached to her case—one of those histories of real life which occasionally come to light in a Police Court, and almost surpass belief in their strange details. Twelve years ago she was the daughter of a Southern planter at Nashville, Tenn. Her mother was a Creole, but was the lawful wife of her father. At thirteen she ran away from her home with the son of a New York merchant, named Clifford, and was married to him.

Within a year she was a mother and a widow, her husband having died in California, whither she had accompanied him. She came home and returned to her father's house, where she was kindly received. She remained there a year or two, and during her stay assisted four of her father's slaves to escape, through sympathy for their desire for freedom. She married again with her father's choice. Her husband proved to be a drunkard, and she obtained a divorce from him. She married a third time, still with the consent and advice of her father, and was again deceived. Her last husband, whose name she now bears, proved her ruin. He was a Mississippi gambler, and for twelve months she accompanied him up and down the river, dressed in boy's clothes, and passing for his brother.

She finally left him, driven away by constant abuse, and threw herself upon the world for support. Her first effort was as brakesman, in which capacity she served on the Chicago and Burlington Railroad for three months. This was six weeks ago. From that she drifted into the vortex of sin, which every unprotected woman finds in a large city sooner or later. She went down hill till the lowest round of the ladder was reached. She met, accidentally, with one of the slaves whom she had aided to escape years before, and has lived with him ever since in unlawful connection. This negro is HER FATHER'S OWN SON by a slave woman, and by natural ties is her brother. There is no law, however, which sanctions that relationship.

She was intelligent, and showed by her conversation that she had seen better days. Traces of former good looks were visible, and a strong, robust frame proved that dissipation had as yet had but little effect upon her body, but her mind was, what the minds of all fallen women are, a wreck and a ruin At the early age of twenty-four, she is a shameless woman, which is the lowest of God's creatures. She was sent to Bride*well for twenty days.* She stormed a little, but the necessity was inexorable, and she went up as brazen as any of them.

Ingratitude to Parents.

An old proverb says that "a father can more easily maintain six children than six children one father." Luther relates this story:

"There was once a father who gave up everything to his children—his fields and goods—and expected that his children would support him. But after he had been some time with his son, the latter grew tired of him, and said to him: 'Father, I have had a son born this night, and there, where your arm-chair stands, the cradle must come, will you not, perhaps, go to my brother, who has a larger room?'

"After the father had been some time with his second son, he also grew tired of him, and said:—'Father, you like a warm room, and that hurts my head; won't you go to my brother, the baker?'

"The father went, and after he had been some time with the third son, he found him troublesome, and said to him: 'Father, the people run in and out here all day as if it were a pigeon house, and you can't have your noon-day sleep; would you not be better off at my sister Kate's, near the town wall?'

"The old man remarked how the wind blew, and said to himself: 'Yes, I will do so; women have softer hearts.'

"But after he had spent sometime with his daughter, she grew tired of him, and said she was always so fearful when her father went to church or anywhere else, and was obliged to descend the steep stairs, and at her sister Elisabeth's there were no stairs to descend, as she lived on the ground floor.

"For the sake of peace, the old man assented, and, went to his other daughter. But after some time she too was tired of him, and told him by a third person that her house near the water was too damp for a man who suffered with the gout, and her sister, the grave digger's wife at St. John's had much drier lodgings.

"The old man himself thought she was right, and went outside the gate to his youngest daughter Hellen. But after he had been there three days with her, her little son said to his grandfather: "Mother said yesterday to cousin Elizabeth, that there was no better chamber for you than such a one as father digs."

"These words broke the old man's heart, so that he sank back in his chair, and died in a moment."

☞ WHEN TO TAKE YOUR HAT.—Young man, a word. We want to tell you when to take your hat and be off. And mind what we offer. It is:

When you are asked to "take a drink."

When you find out that you are courting an extravagant or slovenly girl.

When you find yourself in doubtful company.

When you find that your expenses run ahead of your income.

When you are abusing the confidence of your friends.

When you think that you are a great deal wiser than older and more experienced people than yourself.

When you feel like getting trusted for a suit of clothes, because you have not the money to pay for them.

When you "wait upon a lady just for the fun of it."

When you don't perform your whole duty, and nothing but your duty.

☞ "Sancho," said a dying planter to his slave, "for your faithful services, I mean now to do you an honor, and I leave it in my will that you should be buried in our family ground!" "Ah, massa," replied Sancho, "Sancho no good to be buried; Sancho rather have de money or de freedom; besides if de devil should come in de dark to look for massa, he might mistake and take de poor negro man."

☞ Among the many anecdotes of Buena Vista one beats all others:—An Arkansas soldier, wounded, asked an Irishman to help him off the field. The latter did so by enabling him to mount, and strapping him to his horse, riding himself before. During the ride the poor Arkansian had his head shot off, unknown to his companion. Arriving at the doctor's quarters, the Irishman was asked what he wanted.

"Brought this man to have his leg dressed," he said.

"Why," replied the doctor, "his head is off."

"The bloody liar!" exclaimed Mike, looking behind him, "he tould me he was only shot in the leg."

MISCELLANEOUS.

MRS. WINSLOW'S

SOOTHING SYRUP.

Every mother should be prepared to act in the capacity of both nurse and physician to her children: she can, if she will, discharge these duties much better than any one she can employ. If she does not, she ought to know that there is a Medicine prepared by an old nurse and female physician which has stood the test of many, many years, and is the most perfect thing on earth for children teething; it also cures Wind Colic, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, and is sure to regulate the bowels. We say to every mother, do not let your own prejudices, or the prejudices of others stand in the way of the relief that will be sure—yes, absolutely sure—to follow the use of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP certainly does, as the name implies, "soothe" the little sufferer into a quiet, natural sleep, from which it awakes invigorated and refreshed. And for the cure of diseases incident to the period of teething, such as Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Wind Colic, &c., we have never seen its equal.

We have always been, and still are, opposed to the practice of drugging infants. This article has no deleterious effects whatever, and from our own experience (we speak advisedly) we have every confidence in it, and can heartily recommend it to all mothers. Take our advice—use it—and you will as strongly recommend it to others as we have to you.

When we say that MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP acts like a charm, we do but reiterate the language of every person who ever used it for their children, for all diseases incident to the period of teething, such as Dysentery and Diarrhœa, Wind Colic and Cholera Infantum. It will produce quietude and rest, relieve all suffering, and the infant will awake invigorated and refreshed, and not with the dull and stupefying effects of preparations of opium.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the excruciating pain of cutting teeth? If so, go at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately—depend upon it; there is no mistake about it. There is not a mother on earth who has ever used it who will not tell you at once that it will regulate the bowels, and give rest to the mother and relief and health to the child, operating like magic. It is perfectly safe in all cases, and pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States.

During the thirty years of unprecedented and increasing popularity of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP, innumerable "CORDIALS" and other nostrums, prepared by pretended M.D.'s, have sprung up and lived but a mushroom existence, the SOOTHING SYRUP has been constantly increasing in popularity, and become a household word, and for the health of their children, by the use of her invaluable article.

THOUSANDS OF MOTHERS THANK
MRS. WINSLOW

PRICE 20 CENTS PER BOTTLE.

For sale by
THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St., N.Y.

TIME, MONEY, AND LABOR SAVED,

BY USING

B. T. BABBITT'S

SUPERIOR FRENCH

CHEMICAL ERASIVE SOAP,

Made and improved by the ORIGINAL INVENTOR of the German and Austrian Chemical Erasive or Detersive Soap, of which the real and genuine article has, since its first introduction to the American public, been most favorably known, as the Best and Cheapest Washing Soap in the market, and with the present improvement, which is not known to any other manufacturer, we CHALLENGE THE WORLD to produce a better article.

1. One pound of it will accomplish as much as three pounds of any other soap.

2. But one quarter the time and labor are required to do the same amount of washing, as with the best of family soap.

3. It does not injure the most delicate fabric; will tend to set the colors, and wash cleaner than any other soap in use.

4. Clothes need no boiling, and but little rubbing with the hands, thus avoiding their wear upon the wash-board.

5. Paints, Grease, Tar, and stains of every description vanish as by magic, before its wonderful, searching, erasive powers.

6. It is invaluable to Machinists, Printers, Painters, and all others using Inks, Oils, etc., for washing hands; it does not chap them (like other soaps,) but will cleanse and soften the skin.

7. It may be used in hard or soft water, and adapted for use in all climates.

Put up in one pound bars, sixty bars in each box.

For sale by the bar or box by
THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman Street.

MEDICAL.

THE BEST MEDICINES IN THE WORLD!!!

The following invaluable medicines may be obtained of

THOMAS HAMILTON, 48 Beekman St.

DR. CLARKE'S

VEGETABLE SHERRY-WINE BITTERS,

Are composed of Sarsaparilla, Dock-root, Rheubarb, Thoroughwort, Dandelion, Prickly Ash, Bark, &c they should be taken not only in the Spring, but at all seasons of the year, as they operate directly on the liver, removing from it all coating of morbid matter, and restoring it to its normal action; also opening the bile ducts, causing the requisite flow of bile so essential to good health. Their influence upon the kidneys, also, is advantageously felt; at the same time they operate upon the blood, cleansing it from all impurity or taint of any kind. Humors of long standing are eradicated from the blood, thereby speedily curing Jaundice, headache, weak stomach sore eyes, nervousness, and other chronic diseases arising from impurity of the blood.

The palatableness of these bitters renders them agreeable to every one, and being composed entirely of vegetables, they may be used by all classes of people with safety.

Sold for the low price of 25 cents per pint bottle.

DR CLARKE'S

SUGAR COATED HERB PILLS.

These pills are made mostly from a valuable herb that grows on the proprietor's farm.

Warranted to cure Billous Stomach, Billous Bowels, Billous Colic, Billous Fever, and all diseases which arise from a billous state of the system viz. Jaundice, Headache, Heartburn, Sour Stomach Liver Complaint, Weak Stomach, Pain in the Stomach, Costiveness, Loss of Appetite, and a host of diseases too numerous to mention, as their number is legion.

Warranted to cure diseases peculiar to the female sex

Warranted at all times safe and efficient.

Warranted for a gentle family physic not to have an equal in America, operating without pain.

Warranted not to contain calomel, aloes, gamboge, colocynth, or other drastic poisonous drugs, which always do the system more hurt than good, and by their continued use are sure to cause a derangement of the liver, bring on costiveness, and its inevitable consequence, piles, and dyspepsia, and finally break down the constitution, and cause the victim to drag out a miserable existence. Touch not, taste not, handle not the wily poison. Your life is your own,—preserve it. Take a simple herb, sure in its effects, but safe and pleasant,—no wrenching pains, no ill effects, and made pleasant to take by a fine coat of sugar. Children love them, ladies admire them, fools and wise men cannot do without them, doctors prescribe them,—and every body takes them. Yes, every body; from the honest farmer and mechanic to the most learned philosopher. And why? Simply because they are good, excellently good; and will do you good.

PRICE, 25 CENTS PER BOX.

DR. CLARKE'S COUGH AND CROUP SYRUP.

It is the most wonderful, effective and extraordinary medicine for the lungs ever used by man, perfectly safe and pleasant to take, and gives [illegible] mediately. Thousands have been cured [illegible] and tens of thousands will be again. All [illegible] pronounce it to be the best lung remedy ever discovered. Common coughs and colds are dispelled by the use of only a few doses, and children can be cured of croup at once if taken in its first stage. Long-standing diseases require perseverance, but a cure will be guaranteed. No medicine before ever possessed such excellent healing and curative power for the lungs. It seems, with almost magic power, to dispel the most severe cases of cough and throat ail.

Vocalists and public speakers should not fail to keep a bottle on hand at all times. A small quantity taken occasionally renders the voice beautifully clear and the lungs extremely strong. Words cannot fully express the great benefit to be derived from the use of the world-renowned remedy. Delay not, but procure a bottle at once. Use it if needed, and if not, keep it till necessity requires its use, as all, sooner or later, are overtaken by some unpleasant affection of the lungs or throat.

PRICE, 25 CENTS PER BOTTLE.

BOOKS.

PUBLICATIONS FOR SALE BY
THOMAS HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE ANGLO-AFRICAN MAGAZINE. Bound,—Price—In half Morocco, $1.25; half Morocco, gilt edges, $1.50; Muslin, $1.00. CONTENTS: Embellishments—Portrait of Alexander Dumas. Music, by A. J. R. Co Articles by Bishop D. A. Payne, James M Smith, M. D., Prof. Geo. B. Vashon, Dr. Ma R. Delany, Mrs. Sarah M. Douglass, Prof. Ro Campbell, Prof. Wm. J. Wilson, Rev. J. W. Pennington, D. D., Rev. J. Theo. Holly, Mrs. Frances Ellen Watkins Harper, Prof. M. H. F man, Rev. Edward W Blyden, Rev. Robert Gordon, Prof. Chas. L. Reason, Mrs M. A. Shadd Cary, Dr. James Fields, Rev. Amos Gerry Beman, Miss Grace A. Mapps Rev. J. Sella Martin, Wm. C. [illegible], Esq., J. Mercer Langston, and J. Holland Townsend, Esq.

The Life of Captain John Brown.
The Liberator of Kansas, and the Hero of Harper's Ferry. By James Redpath. An elegant 12mo. volume of 407 pages, illustrated and embellished with a superb Steel Portrait of the Glorious Old Man. Price $1.00.

My Bondage and My Freedom.
By Frederick Douglass, One vol., 12 mo., 464 pp. Illustrated. Price $1.00, postage 22 cts.

Life of Jermain W. Loguen.
The great Underground Railroad King. Price $1.00.

The Martyrs and the Fugitive.
By the Rev. S. H. Platt. A thrilling work on slavery and the slave-trade, detailing the capture of a family in Africa by the slave dealers, their fearful journey to the coast, the horrors of the "middle passage," their sale in America, and subsequent martyrdom; the slavery of their son, his terrible sufferings and perilous escapes. Sent, postpaid, upon the receipt of 38 cts.

Twelve Years a Slave.
The Narrative of Solomon Northrup, a cit[illegible] New York, kidnapped in Washington City in [illegible] and rescued in 1853, from a cotton plantation [illegible] Red River, Louisiana. Seven Illustratio[illegible] pp. 12mo. Price $1,00, postage paid.

Our National Charters.
For the Millions. Including—1. The Fed[illegible]stitution of 1787–9. 2. The Articles of C[illegible]deration, 1787. 3. The Declaration of Indep[illegible]ce, 1776. 4. The Articles of Association, 17[illegible] W[illegible] notes showing their bearing on slavery [illegible] relative powers of the State and National Governments. Also a summary of Legal Opinions, collected from the highest authorities, is prefixed to the Constitution. An Appendix contains extracts from State Constitutions and Bills of Rights; Ordinance of 1787, excluding Slavery from the North-west Territory; also, Sentiments of the Revolutionary Fathers, &c. By mail, postage prepaid, single copy, 15 cts.; four copies, 50 cts.; nine copies $1,00.

The American Slave-Code,
In Theory and Practice: Its Distinctive Features Shown by its Statutes, Judicial Decisions, and Illustrative Facts. 430 pp., 12mo. Price 75 cts postage paid.

Unconstitutionality of Slavery.
By Lysander Spooner. In paper, 294 pp., 8vo Price 75 cts., or postage paid 86 cts.

Review of Lysander Spooner's Essay on the Unconstitutionality of Slavery.
By Wendell Phillips. Price 25 cts. Postage 5 Cts.

The Revelations of a Slave Smuggler.
Being the Autobiography of Captain Richard Drake, an African trader for fifty years, from 1807 to 1857. The work is handsomely illustrated, with graphic representations of scenes as they actually occur on the slave ships and on shore. Illustration No. 1 is a large cut, 16x23, representing a slave market on the Coast of Africa. Illustration No. 2 represents a scene in the Hold of [illegible] (middle passage). Then there is a large pl[illegible] ing views of a slave vessel between decks [illegible] tion slave-deck, regulation packing, &c. T[illegible] work is handsomely printed—contains one hundr[illegible] 8vo. pages, and is published at a price whic[illegible] it within the reach of the masses—viz: 25 [illegible] copy. When sent by mail the postage (si[illegible] must be added.

The Nat Turner Insurrection.
A full and reliable account. Copies will [illegible] to any address on the receipt of five cents.

Uncle Tom's Cabin.
By Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe. Two volumes in one. Price, $1,25.

The Kidnapped and Ransomed,
Being the personal recollections of Peter Still, and his wife, Vina, after forty years of slavery by Mrs. Kate E. R. Pickard, with an introduction by Rev. S. J. May, Illustrated. 12mo. cloth, $1,25.

Gerrit Smith in Congress.
"Slavery has no right but to die!" A work of over 400 pages, containing all his speeches delivered in Congress; also, an accurate likeness. Price, only 80 cents per copy, and postage paid.

The Dream;
Or, the true history of Dea Giles's Distillery and Dea. Jones's Brewery. By George B. Cheever, D.D. Price per single copy 10 cents, $1 per doz., or $7 per hundred.

A Summer on the Carribbean Sea.
By J. Dennis Harris. With an introduction by Geo. William Curtis. Sent by mail on receipt of $1.

A Pilgrimage to my Motherland;
An account of a journey among the Egbas and Yorubas of Central Africa, in 1859-60. By Robert Campbell, one of the Commissioners of the Niger Valley Exploring Party; late in charge of the Scientific Department of the Institute for Colored Youth, Philadelphia; and member of the International Statistical Congress, London. Price, 63 cents. When sent by mail, the postage (10 cents) must be added.

Turner's (J. A.) Cotton Planter's Manual,
Being a compilation of facts from the best authorities on the culture of cotton, its natural history, chemical analysis, trade and consumption, and embracing a history of cotton and the cotton gin. Price, $1. Postage, 15 cents.

The Manual of the Wardrobe.
100 large octavo pages, in paper, by Mrs. Pullan. Price, 25 cents. Sent, postpaid, upon receipt of the price. It comprises a thorough dissertation upon taste in dress, an explanation of the different kinds of stitches made in sewing, remarks upon the various kinds and qualities of fabrics used in the wardrobe, with complete directions for cutting and fitting all kinds of garments for women's and children's wear; the preparation of table, toilet, and bed linen. Illustrated by nearly one hundred cuts of patterns and modes.

The Weekly Anglo-African.

"MAN MUST BE FREE!—IF NOT THROUGH LAW, WHY THEN ABOVE THE LAW."

VOL. I. NO. 4. NEW YORK, AUGUST 24, 1861. PRICE FOUR CENTS.

The Weekly Anglo-African
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY SATURDAY,
BY ROBT. HAMILTON,
No. 48 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW YORK.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Two Dollars per year, or Four Cents per copy, payable on delivery.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.

Six Cents a line for the first insertion, and Three Cents for each subsequent insertion.

Notices of Births, Marriages, Deaths, Public Meetings, &c., inserted for twenty-five Cents, provided they do not exceed five lines; if more than that, Five Cents for each additional line.

All communications for the paper must be addressed ROBT. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman st., New York.

Poetry.

YIELD NOT THE RIGHT.

Yield not the Right
In Freedom's fight;
The rallying cry renew,
Ye patriots who have fought and won,
And yet the war is but begun;
Humanity in you
Still trusts; be true!

Yield not your Right
In Freedom's fight;
Our Country is not free,
While yet one soul that seeks to gain
Bare justice seeks that boon in vain;
While on our nation rests the stain—
The blighted curse, ah me!
Of Slavery.

Yield not the Right
In Freedom's fight;
Though traffic's sordid crew,
Like their base prototype of old,
May barter principle for gold;
Or like their wares be bought and sold:
An uncorrupted few
Remain still true.

Yield not the Right
In Freedom's fight;
Though craven spirits may,
In fear desert our noble stand,
While rebels, threatening fire and brand,
(Vain braggarts) the base deed demand;
Shall we like slaves obey?
Vile thought, away!

Yi[illegible]t the Right
[illegible]dom's fight,
[illegible]r motto be,
[illegible]er, while remains
[illegible] one slave in chains;
[illegible] courses in our veins;
Until, as well as we,
All men are free.

Yield not the Right
In Freedom's fight,
Should warlike hosts assail;
But let our Country's echoes swell
The cry, "To arms? the foe repel!"
Sound Freedom's pæan, Slavery's knell!
God and the Right prevail!
Freemen all hail!

"THE CONTRABANDS."

In the various camps in and about Fortress Monroe are some 900 runaways who are supplied with army rations, and to whom government is already indebted about $1000. A correspondent of the Independent who recently visited the camps is happily impressed with the respectful and ready manners of the contrabands. He writes:

"Dr. Bellows remarked—and observation agrees precisely with my own—that 'they are the pleasantest faces to be seen at the post.' I have watched them with deep interest as they filed off to their work, labored steadily through the long, hot day: a quiet respectable, industrious, but depressed folk, with far more agreeable expressions than one could ever see in a low white laboring class. Somehow there was to my eye a weird, solemn aspect about them, as they walked slowly along, as if they, the victims, had become the judges in this awful contest, or as if they were the black PARCÆ disguised among us, and spinning unknown to all the destinies of the great Republic. I think every one likes them. They are good natured as the day is long, always respectful and ready to serve, and very industrious. The little ones and the boys are full of the infinite drollery of the race, and the greatest amusement of the soldiers is in cracking jokes upon or frightening the young 'Walter Scotts' or 'Washington Irvings' or 'Pompeys' who are scattered about through the regiments. The older make capital servants, hospital help, and laborers. So far from being idle, the Sergeant who is detailed as their superintendent says that 'fifty of them will do more work in a day than a hundred of the white men he used to have.'—They do not shirk or loaf. 'It's true' he said, 'they have a kind of sacred feeling 'bout Sunday, and don't like to work that day, so the Colonel gave orders to work them as little as we could, and we don't have to do as much as the others.'

There is a 'boy' in the Quartermaster's office, about 25, a fine-looking fellow.—'Well, my boy, where did you live?' 'On the Eastern shore, (of Virginia,) sah.'—'What made you leave?' 'Cos they was goin' to take us South, sah, when this broke out. They did take some—sah, dey tink no more of s'p'rating us than if we was cow and calf!' 'But you think you do have some feeling about it?' He simply rolled his dark eye around with a kind of watery glimmer in reply. 'You see, sah, oder would hab come tew, but when you gen'l'men hab done takin' de sea here, we could't git no skiffs or such.' 'Did you know about the war?' Yes, sah—we knew all about it—we knew it was for the colored people.'

'What did your masters say about us?' 'They said how you was damned Yankees, that said you meant to free us, but you would shoot us all or sell us to de South.' 'Did you ever read the Bible?' 'No, sah, cannot read—but we done hab Bible readin' ober there till lately, and now they don't hab none.'

To another, a young fellow, I said, 'Your master was kind to you—why don't you want to go back?' 'I should like to see a massa so kind,' was his reply, 'that I'd like to go back to him!' Of another, one of our party asked, 'Were you ever whipped, Washington?' 'Yes, sah—often.' 'Why?' 'Cos massa got the power!' Another, an old man sitting in front of a fire, with the sun's rays at 90 deg. beating on his head. 'From the Eastern shore, massa—they was goin' to make me serve the batteries.' 'Yes, we'd heard all about the war—we knew it was to free de slaves—and we didn't want to go and be shot on the batt'ries by our friends.' 'Did you ever hear of John Brown, uncle?' 'Yes, sah' (with side look of uncertainty). 'They say he was a bad man, don't they?' 'Yes, massa, some say so and some says he was a good man, and died for de right—I tink he died for de colored people, sah.' 'But do they hang good men?' 'Yes, sah—some times.' 'And they once hung the best Man on the cross—didn't they? 'Yes, sah, de Life of the World,' said the old man with an expression of indescribable solemnity. We spoke of the Bible; he couldn't read, but his words of simple thankfulness that he could hear it, were most touching. 'I do so love to hear of de Lord,' he said, 'and we know afore he's come again, de colored people will not be slaves any more. There's nothing in de Bible 'bout man bein' property.' (Manifestly the Southern version of the Gospel had not reached his benighted mind.) He said they had no Bible reading in camp, but they did want it so. I felt as he spoke that no metropolitan pulpit could give half the satisfaction to the soul as the unfolding the Word of Life to these poor, ignorant, simple creatures.

I find but few of them can read. One boy said he had learned from a white boy, and his 'massa tried to raise the debble wid the boy for it, but he couldn't, cos he was white.'

Their great fear seemed to be lest they should be sent back. They said they would certainly be hung or burnt if they were. We ventured to assure them that that could never be.

The Administration or Government that would dare to send back the poor runaways who had trusted in the great causes of the war, to their merciless masters, would deserve a place with the kings of Dahomey or the corsairs of Tripoli. It would be a disgrace blacker and more damnable than even the poltroonery of the worst days of the North ever reached. No, that could not be.

It is a mighty question; and yet, on a limited scale, is solving itself at Old Point in a very satisfactory way. But how will it be when the armies have 6,000 or 60,000 instead of 600? No one yet can say. The decision of 'contraband' is only an ingenious dodge, and but a temporary expedient, for the North does not allow the possibility of the right of property in man by any general law. We can only see that the poor creatures can never be returned; that without an act of emancipation martial law frees them, for the State laws are unknown within the lines of the armies, and only martial law and United States law prevail, neither of which can recognize property in man. Wherever the Stars and Stripes float in the advancing march of our armies, they float over freemen. The Government of the United States cannot hold a slave, and the rebel has lost, during the occupation by the troops, all his local rights.

As to our brave volunteers hunting back runaway slaves, there is not a man mean and base enough to be found in the whole three hundred thousand to do it; and if there were, he would soon be drummed out of the regiment."

THE CHILD IN THE GRAVE.

BY HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSON.

There was sorrow in the house—there was sorrow in the heart; for the youngest child a little boy of four years of age, the only son, his parents present joy and future hope, was dead. Two daughters they had, indeed, older than their boy—the eldest was almost old enough to be confirmed—amiable, sweet girls they both were but the lost child is always the dearest and he was the youngest, and a son. It was a heavy trial. The sisters' sorrowed as young hearts sorrow, and were much afflicted by their parents grief; the father was weighed down by their affliction, but the mother was quite overwhelmed by the terrible blow. By night and by day had she devoted herself to her sick child, watched him, lifted him up, carried him about, done everything for him herself. She had felt as if he was a part of herself. She could not bring herself to believe that he was dead—that he should be laid in a coffin and concealed in the grave. God would not take the child from her, O no! And when he was taken, and she could no longer refuse to believe the truth, she exclaimed in her wild grief: "God has not ordained this! He has heartless agents here on earth! They do what they list—they hearken not to a mother's prayers!"

She dared in her woe, to arraign the Most High; and then came dark thoughts—thoughts of death—everlasting death—that human beings returned as earth to earth, and then all was over. Amid thoughts morbid and impious as these, there could be nothing to console her, and she sank into the darkest depths of despair.

In these hours of deepest distress she could not weep. She thought not of the young daughters, who were left to her; her husband's tears fell on her brow, but she did not look up to him—her thoughts were with her dead child recalling every reminiscence of the lost one, every syllable of his infantile prattle.

The day of the funeral came. She had not slept the night before, but toward morning she was overcome by fatigue, and sank for a short time into repose. During that time the coffin was removed into another apartment, and the cover was screwed down with as little noise as possible.

When she awoke she arose and wished to see her child. Then her husband with tears in his eyes, told her, "We have closed the coffin; it had to be done!"

"When the Almighty is so hard on me;" she exclaimed, "why should human beings be kinder?" and she burst into tears.

The coffin was carried to the grave. The inconsolable mother sat with her young daughters. She looked at them, but she did not see them, her thoughts had nothing more to do with home, she gave herself up to wretchedness, and it tossed her about as the sea tosses the ship which has lost its helmsman and its rudder. Thus passed the day of the funeral, and several days followed amid the same uniform, heavy grief. With tearful eyes and melancholy looks her afflicted family gazed at her. She did not care for what comforted them. What could they say to change the current of her mournful thoughts.

It seemed as if sleep had fled from her forever; it alone would be her best friend, strengthen her frame and recall peace to her mind. Her family persuaded her to keep her bed, and she lay there as still as if buried in sleep. One night her husband had listened to her breathing, and believing from it that she at length found repose and relief, he clasped his hands, prayed for her and them all, then sank into peaceful slumber. While sleeping soundly he did not perceive that she rose, dressed herself and softly left the room and the house, to go—whither her thoughts wandered by day and by night—to the grave that hid her child. She passed quietly through the garden, out to the fields, beyond which the road led outside of the town to the churchyard. No one saw her, and she saw no one.

It was a fine night; the stars were shining brightly, and the air was mild, although it was the first of September. She entered the church-yard and went to the little grave; it looked like one great boquet of sweet scented flowers. She threw herself down and bowed her head over the grave as if she could, through the solid earth, behold her little boy whose smiles were remembered so vividly. The affectionate expression of his eyes, even upon his sick-bed, was never to be forgotten. How speaking had not his glance been when she had bent over him and taken the little hand he was himself too weak to raise. As she had sat by his couch, so now she sat by his grave, but here her tears might flow freely over the sod that covered him.

"Wouldst thou descend to thy child?" said a voice close by.

It sounded so clear, so deep, its tones went to her heart. She looked up, and near her stood a man wrapped in a large mourning cloak, with a hood drawn over the head; but she could see the countenance under this. It was severe, yet encouraging; his eyes were bright as those of youth. "Descend to my child?" she repeated, and there was the agony of despair in her voice.

"Darest thou follow me?" asked the figure. "I am death."

She bowed her assent. Then it seemed all at once as if every star in the heavens above shone with the light of the noon. She saw the many colored flowers on the surface of the grave move like a fluttering garment. She sank and the figure threw his dark cloak around her. It became night—the night of death. She sank deeper than the spade could reach. The church-yard lay like a roof above her head.

The cloak that enveloped her glided to one side. She stood in an immense hall, whose extremities were lost in the distance. It was dusk around her; but before her stood, and in one moment was clasped to her heart, her child, who smiled on her in beauty far surpassing what he had possessed before. She uttered a cry, though it was scarcely audible, for close by, and then far away, and afterward near again came delightful music. Never before had such glorious, such blessed sounds reached her ears. They rang from the other side of the thick curtain—black as night—that separated the hall from the boundless space of eternity.

"My sweet mother! my own mother!" she heard her child exclaim. It was his well known, most-beloved voice; and kiss followed kiss in rapturous joy. At length the child pointed to the sable curtain.

"There is nothing so charming up yonder on earth, mother. Look, mother! look at them all! That is felicity!"

The mother saw nothing—nothing in the direction to which the child pointed, except darkness like that of night. She was with earthly eyes. She did not see as the child whom God had called to himself. She heard indeed, sounds—music, but she did not understand the words that were conveyed in these exquisite tones.

"I can fly now mother," said the child, "I can fly with all the other happy children, away even into the presence of God. I wish so much to go, but if you cry on as you are crying now, I cannot leave you, and yet I should be so glad to go. May I not? you will come back soon, will you not dear mother?"

"O, stay! O, stay!" she cried, "only one moment longer, let me kiss you and hold you in my arms."

And she kissed him, and held him fast: Then her name was called from above—the tones were those of piercing grief. What could they be?

"Hark," said the child, "it is my father calling on you."

And again, in a few seconds deep sobs were heard as of children weeping.

"These are my sister's voices," said the child. "Mother, you have surely not forgotten them?"

Then she remembered those who were left behind. A deep feeling of anxiety pervaded her mind, she gazed intently upon them, and spectres seemed to hover around her, she fancied that she knew some of them; they floated through the Hall of Death, on toward the dark curtain and here they vanished. Would her husband, her daughters appear there? No; their lamentations were still to be heard from above. She had nearly forgotten them for the dead.

"Mother, the bells of heaven are ringing," said the child, "now the sun is about to rise."

And an overwhelming, blinded light streamed around her. The child was gone, she felt herself lifted up. She raised her head and saw that she was lying in the church-yard upon the grave of her child. But in her dream God had become a prop to her feet and a light to the mind. She threw herself on her knees and prayed: "Forgive me, O Lord, my God, that I wish to detain an everlasting soul from the flight into eternity, and that I forgot my duties to the living thou has graciously spared to me!"

And as she uttered this prayer it appeared as if her heart felt lightened of the burden that crushed it. Then the sun broke forth in all its splendor, a little bird sang over her head, and all the church bells around began to ring the matin chimes. All seemed to have drank in faith and holiness, she acknowledged the might and the mercy of God; she remembered her duties and felt a longing to regain her home. She hurried thither, and leaning over her still sleeping husband, she awoke him with the touch of her warm lips on his cheek. Her words were those of love and consolation, and in a tone of mild resignation, she exclaimed, "God's will is the best."

Her husband and her daughters were astonished at the change in her, and her husband asked her, "where did you so suddenly acquire this strength—this pious resignation?"

And she smiled on him and her daughters as she replied, "I derived it from God by the grave of my child."

From the Watchman and Reflector.

THE SUNDERED FAMILY.

"Suppose ye that I came to give peace on earth? I tell you nay, but rather division."—LUKE 12: 51.

There was civil war in the land, and the cities of the border were rent by domestic factions, and misruled by a self-constituted police. Members of the same family frequently became opposite partisans, and a man's foes were they of his own household, but the stroke of this fearful spirit of division fell nowhere heavier than upon the Brumley family. The oldest son, Ralph, had lived long enough away from the home-roof to wear out, in a measure, the sympathies of his childhood. He was a man of earnest soul and pratical good sense, and though he still retained the political opinions of his ancestors, his Northern residence and obersvation had disciplined his heart to a manly hatred of human slavery. And now the struggle was come. The curse had festered in the land for centuries, and although two-thirds of the country had shaken loose from it long ago, the corrupt remainder continued in the same national fellowship, and by common consent all the people assumed the credit of the sin; some with a fatalistic recklessness, many under a solemn protest; and here, at last, the question came up to be settled, whether this unholy alliance should be perpetuated, and men who nurtured a system of unrighteous bondage be allowed to make laws for a country of equal rights!

There was found to be poison at the heart of the government, and treason at every court of power. The story of it ran back many years, and the discovery astonished all who read, but indignation was added to astonishment when honest men traced every secret act of treachery and official unfaithfulness to the adherents of slavery. Desparing of any further concealment, these bitter-souled partisans had rushed to the public strongholds and struck an overt blow at the government whose ruin they planned so long, and only lacked time to make sure. Forbearance was now at an end, and freemen swore upon their swords that they would no longer pay the price of peace. Ralph Brumley espoused the cause of the government, and cheerfully accepted the sacrifice it cost him. His father was a Christian and a man of clear views, and notwithstanding the surroundings that influenced his action, he could not but rejoice at the position taken by the young patriot. The old gentleman had never been a warm defender of slavery, and though he owned a few slaves himself, he took care that they should differ as little as possible from ordinary hired hands. His wife and daughter sympathized with him, but his younger son, Frederick, a lordly stripling, and a true scion of the aristocratic school, possessed all the spirit of the slave-master. When therefore, his brother Ralph joined the defenders of law and liberty, he was prompt to show his indignation by enlisting in the army of the rebels.

Now from every side the country resounded with the noise of war. In the field, fighting men mustered by hundred thousands, and at home traitor and patriot fled from each other as if the spot of a plague had appeared in their foreheads—"Five in one house divided, three against two, and two against three, the father divided against the son and the son against the father."

Georgiana, the sister of the young Brumleys, was betrothed to a lieutenant, a native of the North, but impressed, while a resident on the slavery borders, into the service of the rebels. Attempting to make his escape from his forced allegiance, he was retaken and shot. The young lady received notice of his fate in a letter from a brutal Southern official on the morning of the very day set for her marriage.

Angry words were uttered by old Mr. Brumley, and his neighbors heard them, and interpreted them to the prejudice of the traitor-cause; as a consequence, he was warned to leave the State within a certain number of days, on peril of confiscation and imprisonment.

The family were strongly attached to their homestead. The father had lived on it from his infancy; alterations and repairs at the suggestion of Mrs. Brumley had made it at last a home exactly to her mind. There she had borne and reared up her children. There one pet daughter had died, and the churchyard was in sight where she buried her. There, for thirty years, she had presided at the regular merry-makings of Hallowe'en Christmas and New Year, and there she had rejoiced at the festivities of her "silver wedding." There her favorite garden plants bloomed,

"Her early visitation and her last."

There the magnificent elm, which had numbered two centuries, spread its branches over the long dooryard-settle, and showed, half-hidden among its lower foliage, a dozen nest-like seats, wont to be inhabited on sultry days; and there friends—old-time friends—of the Brumley family, had visited them again and again, and called them happy. Sorrowful, and hopeless of ever possessing again their beloved inheritance, father, mother and daughter packed together what valuables they could secure and sought refuge in a more loyal city.

It was the evening after a day of hard fighting. The last ranks of the victorious army were just marching with rolling drums up the sides of a valley never before disturbed by sounds of battle, and all that remained of the "horrible tempest" which had raged there since noon, were the groans of wounded men by the brook at the bottom of the ravine. The troops of the government, that had gathered at the first cry, like the old Hebrews, when in their first tribal war the eleven clans rushed to avenge on Benjamin his outrage of Levi, armed to the teeth, had moved that day upon the rebel lines, and carried all before them. In a panic of guilty fear the enemy had fled,

"As the locusts of old Zion fled before God's hurricane," and terrible was the shout of the chase behind them, like the cry of the divine avengers in Hosea:

"Blow the cornet in Gibeah!
The trumpet in Ramah!
Cry out all Beth-aven!
After thee, O Benjamin!"

As the sun was setting over the valley on the farther rise of which the insurgents had made their last stand, two men on the deserted battle-field crept out from a pile of slain and dragged themselves to the little brook to drink and die; sun-burnt and begrimmed with blood and dust, they lifted their ghastly eyes to each other's faces, and then a glance at the soiled uniforms revealed to both the fact that they were enemies.

It mattered not, however, to them, for their civil war was over, and the mediator Death had set on both their foreheads the seal of perpetual armistice.

"Ha, good fellow," said one, "we're finished for this world. 'Twas a brave struggle, and by your looks, you fought well. Let's shake hands on it before we go. God only knows what good can come of countrymen shedding one another's blood." And slowly and feebly the two soldiers crawled near and clutched each other's chafed hands, in sign of fellowship, "Good-bye, comrade," said the first speaker, huskily.

"Fred!" gasped the other, as he dropped on the green bank, exhausted with his last greeting—and they knew that they were brothers.

Fred exerted his failing strength to throw water in the face of the dying warrior, and succeeded in calling him back a little to life. He held his canteen to his lips, and the wounded man drank long and eagerly.

"Bless God, my brother," whispered he, "that we can die together, if we must die. I hope you see things as I do, now. But for slavery we might have lived long and been a comfort to each other."

"May the curse of the Eternal fall on the villainous institution!" sobbed the impetuous Frederic.

"IT WILL!" said his brother. "The time has come. Last day in camp, our chaplain preached from "I came not to send peace but a sword." He told us that it wasn't God's will that good and evil should dwell together always. There was peace, he said, when the "sons of God" lived and thrived with the daughters of men, in the days of the old antediluvian glory, till sin bred a quarrel out of its own pleasure, "and the earth was filled with violence," and then the flood came and took them all away. There was peace between true religion and false religion, till Jesus Christ came and wouldn't let the alliance flourish any longer; then there was peace between true Christianity and the "scarlet beast," but the sword of the reformation came and took the wheat from among the tares, and here at home there has been peace long enough between corruption and the holy laws of liberty, and the sword of revolution is going to peirce through our own souls, that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed. O, Fred, the war is going to purify us! It will bring out secret traitors, and tell us who are our friends! It will uncover the root of the evil of the last twenty years. Give me your hand Fred—you must live and kiss my wife and children for me. Don't fight your country any more"—— He stopped, and his eyes grew glassy, and his left hand groped feebly for his knapsack. In vain Frederic offered him water, for in a moment the life was fled. They came with litters for the wounded, and found the young rebel kneeling over his charge. He muttered a few low words and fell prostrate on the bosom of his brother, and that night Ralph and Frederic Brumley went away together in a tumbrel with the dead. T. B.

South Framingham.

From the Massachusetts Teacher.

SCHOOL GOES WRONG—WHERE'S THE BLAME?

In many cases, surely, the teacher causes the school to "go wrong." This will happen so long as unsuitable persons are employed to teach.

The cure is—be wiser next year. But, paradoxical as it may seem, schools do sometimes "go wrong," simply because the teacher goes right.

In proof of this let us note some of the "wrongs," which the teacher, if fit for his work—knows ought to be righted. First, then, no sane or sensible man needs to have it proved to him, that habitual tardiness and irregularity of attendance, are evils in themselves sufficient to sap the thrift from any school. Scores of our schools are yearly crippled, and nearly worthless, from this cause. How shall this wrong be righted?

To take a case. A band of strays come lounging in, mayhap, in the midst of a recitation. The teacher asks: "Moses, why are you late?" With a prodigious longitudinal extension of the face, Moses whines out: "I come as soon as I coo-ud;" and an equally gratifying response comes from Sam, and Bill, and Mary Jane, and somebody's "dear Mehitable." I think I hear some one say—who knows all about it—why don't you demand excuses from the parents? "I can call spirits from the vasty deep," said a famous brag, of whom we read, to which, you will recollect, the shrewd rejoinder was, "But will they come when you do call for them!" "Aye, there's the rub!" Will the excuses come when called for? It is one thing to demand them, quite a different to get them. It is a mournful fact, to which every teacher of experience can bear witness, that parents are often too indifferent to the welfare of the school even to write excuses for their children. Here, then, is one reason why the school "goes wrong." The teacher cannot correct the evil, "where's the blame?"

Habitual absence is another evil equally fatal and common, and for which the parent is wholly responsible. As a general rule, the parent has no moral right to keep his children from school a single day. A term of school is like a ladder, of which each day is a round. When you have struck one-half the rounds from your child's ladder, do you expect him to climb?

Again, if the teacher is fit for his work, his constant aim will be to transform disorder and sloth into strictest order and cheerful work.

How shall this be done? "By moral suasion, of course," our wiseacre replies. But does not everybody know, that in most schools, there will always be some scholars whom persuasion and argument fail to reach; and to whom all your words, kindly or otherwise, are but "mouthfulls of spoken wind?" Such cases not unfrequently occur. Reluctantly and sorrowfully, the teacher punishes some gross offender; straightway what a fluttering in the family roost!

Down comes the enraged paternal, breathing out threatenings and slaughter, it may be, and after spewing out enough of his ire to afford temporary relief, and having frightened (?) you considerably with such phrases as—"put you through,"—"extent of the law," and the like verbal trash, away he stalks, larding his conscience with the pious reflection that he has "done the district a great service."

In vain the teacher urges, that he only demanded obedience to some reasonable regulation. Thenceforth, this man is the teacher's foe, and will do him and his school what harm he can. Of course, the school goes wrong. Where's the blame? Illustrations might be multiplied showing how schools do sometimes "go wrong" in spite of the teacher. But enough. The fact is, the school should be a "company concern," not a mill, where the teacher is hired and left to grind alone.

Parents are, equally with the teacher, responsible for a good school; and there are communities in which a really good school would scarcely be tolerated. For instance a good school cannot be kept where the rank heresy prevails, that a teacher should not chastise the scholar.

What treatment do these reformers suggest for offenders? "for it must needs be that offenders come." One offers expulsion; but, is it not better to save a limb than to amputate it? Would you set this wilful lad or that silly miss—just emerged into the awful dignity of teens—adrift, when Solomon's receipt might save them? Another very wise man thinks "a school should be made so attractive that the discipline will take care of itself." I have heard men who were doubtless partially sane talk thus; but, if as Solomon says, "much study is a weariness of the flesh," I confess myself puzzled to see how it can be so fantastically tricked out, as to become pastime for lazy boys and girls. There is much nonsense talked in relation to this matter. Hear Dr. Johnson:

"Until you can fix the degree of obstinacy of the scholar, you cannot fix the degree of severity of the master. Severity should be continued until obstinacy be subdued and negligence be cured."

When the long-looked-for Millennium dawns, I suspect corporal punishment may be properly dispensed with. But, inasmuch as that delectable period would seem to be at least several years distant, is it not, on the whole, best to follow Solomon and common sense a little longer? Let me not be misunderstood. That teacher is not fit to teach who relies mainly upon the rod to secure obedience. He should rule rather in the hearts of his scholars, than over them. He should be a kind and genial man, ever ready to speak a pleasant word to his pupils, but he shoud be an inflexible man, too, not allowing his requirements to be departed from "the ninth part of a hair," with impunity. When compelled to punish none will sorrow more than he. The moral-suasion heresy not unfrequently breeds in this wise. A school has happened to be kept without striking of a blow. It may or may not have been a good school. Suddenly the conclusion is drawn that corporal punishment is a "relic of barbarism; and that all schools can and ought to be governed by the sovereign power of love. "Lame and impotent conclusion!" Domine Sampson would say, "Prodigious!" What successful teacher has not sometimes kept a school "without striking a blow?"

The truth is, the teacher must be a man of expedients. With one end in view,—the welfare of those committed to his charge,—he must wisely vary the means of accomplishing it, according to the circumstances of the case. Committed to any special hobby of school government, he will speedily run off the track. Switches are as necessary in school economy, as in railroading. Finally, if you would have a good school, get a teacher of ability, pluck and energy, work cordially with him, and the school won't "go wrong." A. H. D.

HORSE-SHOE SUPERSTITION.

The horse-shoe was of old held to be of especial service as a security against attacks of evil spirits. This virtue may have been assigned, perhaps, by the rule of contraries, from its being a thing incompatible with the cloven foot of the evil one, or from the rude resemblance which the horse-shoe bears to the rays of glory which in ancient pictures are made to surround the heads of saints and angels: or, finally, from some notion of its purity in passing the fire. This latter supposition receives some countenance from the method resorted to for the cure of horses that had become vicious, or afflicted with any distemper which village farriery did not understand; such disease was inevitably attributed to witchcraft, and the mode of cure seems to imply the belief that the imperfect purification by fire of the shoes which the animal wore, had afforded an inlet to malevolent influences. Accordingly, the horse was led to the smithy, the door was closed and barred, the shoes were taken off and placed in the fire, and the witch or warlock was speedily under the necessity of removing the spell under which the animal suffered.

We have further proof that the efficacy of fire constituted a part of the virtues inherent in the horse-shoe, in the manner of reclaiming bewitched milk. All who have the management of a dairy know that at certain seasons of the year butter will not "come" from cream, nor milk be converted into curd, with the same ease as at others. The modern reasoners on the causes of things look upon this as being occasioned by the sort of food the cattle take; but all the farmers' wives of the last century knew perfectly well that it was the effect of nothing else but some person's evil eye, and took their measures accordingly. On the return of the milkmaids from the loaming with the milkpans upon their heads, when the foremost took down her vessel, in order to pass under the doorway, the mistress was ready to drop a horse-shoe, red hot, into the milk.

It was necessary that the ceremony should be performed at the instant when the young woman was lowering the pail, and as it was further required that no one should be aware of the good dame's intentions, the troop of milk-maids were often thrown into the utmost dismay by the sudden bubbling and hissing, and the screams of their companions more immediately concerned. The loss of the whole meal of milk was the usual consequence, to say nothing of the work created for the cooper by the crash of tumbling cogues; but these were matters of inferior importance, the future productiveness of the milk being an ample set off against any lesser mischances—and that, it need scarcely be added, was invariably secured.

A horse-shoe was commonly nailed upon the doors of the houses, but this was not at all times a sufficient protection, as in summer the cows were not driven home at night, but milked in the field, and shut up in an open enclosure. When people began to be half ashamed of superstition, instead of nailing the horse-shoe on the outside, they fixed it on the inside of the doors, both of dwelling-houses and farm offices, and in that situation it may at this day be detected in many parts of the country. Thus the devil, though not openly defied, might come to burn his fingers if he attempted an entrance.

Sailors are, or were, for the most part careful to have a horse-shoe nailed to the mizzen mast, or somewhere on deck near midships, for the protection of the vessel.

The Chinese have their tombs built in the shape of a horse-shoe, as we are informed by Capt. Hall, in his voyage to Loo Choo, which is regarded as a branch of the superstition prevalent among ourselves.

The Weekly Anglo-African.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 24, 1861.

☞ Advertisements for this paper must be accompanied by the cash.

☞ Copies of this paper can be purchased at the news-dealers everywhere.

THE RESERVE GUARD.

Colored men whose fingers tingle to pull the trigger, or clutch the knife aimed at the slaveholders in arms, will not have to wait much longer. Whether the foe attack Washington and succeed, or whether they attempt Maryland and fail, there is equal need for calling out the nation's "Reserve Guard"—the forlorn hope which will march to "Liberty or Death." In piping times of peace we blacks are branded as mere imitative animals—aping the white man. Now there is just one point in which we have never imitated the white man, on the contrary, have set him an example, which it would be well for him to be able to follow—we mean our conduct in battle. There is yet to be recorded in history the instance in which the negro has made Bull Run time, or ever fled from the field of battle. There are occurrences related in the revolutionary war in which black regiments were entirely cut up, as at Red Bank and Groton; but no instance in which they threw down their arms and fled from even a pursuing foe.

This nation knows this fact: even our bitterest reviler, the principal editor of the Times, in the darkest hour of this war spoke of the free blacks as a species of reserve guard on whose valor and devotion the country might safely rely. And we think the hour is rapidly approaching in which this reserve must be called out.

In the event of the capture of Washington, even the pur-blind administration will be able "to see" the necessity of calling upon all able-bodied men to rally to save the nation. There will be an italicised call for all men to rally. Recruiting officers will be completely oblivious of the color of a man's skin, or the texture of his hair.

And on the other hand, in the case of a repulse of the rebels, and a march into the South, the reserve guards will be equally needed. If slavery is let alone the North cannot conquer the South. It is a physical impossibility for the Northern army to conquer master and slave united, which means masters and slaves armed.

The slave will put no faith in the white man's army; but they would put faith in an army composed in part of black regiments. There is no concealing the fact that in marching into Virginia or any of the seceded states, our army marches into a hostile country, in which every means will be used to impede their way and cut them off. To subjugate the South, while all the inhabitants are hostile would require two millions of men at least, which is more than the North can spare. But, to subjugate the South, with [illegible] is easy work for the troops already in the field. The government is awaking to this fact, and in a few months will welcome black regiments; because with such, they are sure of the cooperation of the slaves, whom it will be their business to set free, arm, and organize.

The staid government paper, the National Republican, speaking of the supposed intention of the rebels to cross the Potomac for the purpose of invading Lower Maryland, says, according to the Evening Post:—

> "That a rising of the negroes is much more probable than a demonstration by the secessionists, and threatens a forcible emancipation if the slaveholders of that region do not remain loyal."

Hurrah for EASTERN SHORE! Eastern Shore, Maryland. Who among us does not know some brave and desperate hard handed man or woman who have sprung from Eastern Shore. We will risk our life on the assertion that there can be raised in twenty four hours, and drilled and equipped in as many days, two regiments of men on Eastern Shore, who will march on a bee-line thence to New Orleans, whip any rebels who may dare face them, and squelch out the rebellion entirely!

But these regiments could not be raised without the presence and countenance of the reserve guard, composed in part of Eastern Shore men, now in the North.

If then, the time is manifestly approaching for the enlistment of the reserve guard, it is well that the guard itself shall be ready. They do not require much drill—only one-half what the people on the other side of the blanket have had; we only require to be taught how to move in column or otherwise. But there is another sort of preparation. Let us be prepared to fight, and ready to fight when we are assured what we are fighting for. On the ground of the highest patriotism alone, let us go forth to battle—not to save the government as it was, but to uphold it as it ought to be. Let no black hand lift a musket, or draw a sword, unless it be for immediate emancipation. It would be false to the white men of this land if we aided them on any other conditions. To aid them in putting down rebellion, while slavery is upheld, is nothing other than to help them tie the rope around their own necks and handing the end to Jeff. Davis, & Co.

The safety of the people is the supreme law: and this people can only be saved by doing away with the slave system henceforth and forever. The position which we recommend to our people therefore is one upheld by the soundest sense and highest patriotism. We live in solemn times: let us live up to them, and, if need be die for that great cause to defend which it has pleased God to call us into existence.

THE WAR—ANOTHER STEP TOWARDS ITS SUPPRESSION.

Perhaps there is no one act of the slave-holding government of the South that better manifests its madness than that of their leaders in expelling all persons from the South who do not sympathise with, or take an active part in their outrages. Davis' proclamation gives them forty days in which to make their exit. Now the effects of this act may easily be seen: if these people are driven out, they cannot take their slaves with them, and hence they lose all title to them, the Federal Constitution having no clause in it for the return of such slaves—it can only return fugitives. This act will have another very beneficial effect; it will greatly simplify the duties of the general government. Heretofore one of the main difficulties has been the presence of Unionists in the enemy's country, and the duty of so acting as to do them as little damage as possible; but this act relieves it of all such necessity. Hereafter whenever it sees a head it may hit it, well-knowing it to be that of an enemy. Hereafter there need be no return of fugitives because their masters are Union men. Hereafter oaths of allegiance and a discharge may be dispensed with, because the men who are driven from the South will not be satisfied with anything short of an active participation in the war, that they may regain their lost homes, and bring swift vengeance upon their enemies and their country's foes. Now the fact that this has been brought about by the action of the madmen of the South themselves is most wonderful. Surely they must be doomed to destruction if our government is honest in the prosecution of the war.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE SABBATH SCHOOL PIC NIC of the Union (15th Street) Church, took place on Thursday, August 8. Owing to the increased interest in the excursions of this school, the board of teachers found it necessary to make more extensive preparations, so there was added the handsome barge Cleveland. The weather was quite unfavorable, however, upon the arrival of between two and three hundred persons, the teachers determined to risk the weather, and pushed off up the river to Yonkers. The strong and rather cold breeze gave life and zest to the sports of jumping the rope, marching, singing, &c., which was well kept up on the double-decked barge.

There were also two fine refreshment tables, well loaded with the good things necessary for the occasion, which were sold at very moderate prices. Arriving at Yonkers the dock was literally blockaded with vehicles of almost every conceivable kind, and a brisk business immediately commenced. Great haste for Fairy Grove was manifest in every movement. The hurrying train of conveyances had not proceeded far before a lively and stirring scene occurred. One of the large wagons crowded with passengers broke down and at once emptied the whole of its contents into the street, but through kind Providence no one was hurt except the owner of the wagon, who suffered severely—for having already collected the current cash from each passenger when his wheel came off, and as he had not gone far and could not go any further each one demanded his money. To this he readily assented, but it would be vain to say he was not wounded. Arriving at the Grove all was life and glee. The lively sport of the Sabbath School children and their innocent glee seemed to have in it a magic spell, for their teachers, their parents, and all parties present seemed to be inspired with the spirit of youth. There was present a number of young men who had been to the seat of war and had returned safe. Some of them had been attached to this school and of course their presence was particularly agreeable to the teachers and to their early associates. One of the features of this Sabbath school excursion worthy of notice is this: that after the sporting and playing, jumping and singing, &c., there always comes on a spontaneous concert of singing religious hymns. This takes place in the large saloon. Locked arms and marching round, all parties join in the singing, the sound of which, at a distance, would remind the hearer of a camp meeting. There was no religious service after leaving the school-room in the morning—except at the dinner-table, which Mr. and Mrs. Griffin, proprietors, had provided for sixteen persons according to arrangement. At 2 o'clock, dinner being ready, the teachers repaired to the dining-room. The Pastor, Rev. Richard Wilson, was invited to take the head of the table, and the special officers of the school took their seats on either side. P. S. Porter, Superintendent, Ellen Lake, Female Directoress and Treasurer, Nathaniel Lake, assistant Superintendent, Ellen P. Anderson, Female Assistant, and the rest of the teachers in turn. When all had taken their place, the Pastor addressed the throne of grace in an impressive manner, and then the good things provided received special attention.

That table was, perhaps, the most important point of the whole excursion as it was the connection between the present generation and the one just coming after, for the teachers are of different ages, from silvery grey down to sweet sixteen—amongst whom are some promising young misses who have grown up in the school and have been promoted to the teacher's board, and are making themselves useful. The dinner being over, the Pastor pronounced a benediction.

A large number of persons came up in the cars through the day to join in the festivities and came down with the school in the afternoon, which took pleasant leave of Yonkers about 5 o'clock, arriving safe in New York a little before night, after enjoying as pleasant a time as heart could wish. The Superintendent showed me a letter from Mr. Wm. Anderson, one of the teachers of this school, who is now on board of the U.S. ship St. Louis in the Gulf of Mexico, sent to Mrs. Anderson his wife, who is also a teacher, from which the following is an extract:—

"On the 6th inst., we discovered something coming from the direction of the shore, about three or four o'clock in the afternoon, many were the conjectures as to what it meant. The Huntsville which is with us on the blockade and keeps her steam up all the time, soon got under way and bore down upon it to see what she was. All hands were anxious to see what the boat contained.—The U. S. Steamer Huntsville came up with it in due time and found it to be a boat or rather a box with three colored men in having made their escape from bondage and from the servitude of the rebels. When the boat came along side the Huntsville, the whole crew rushed to the side to see what and who they were and to assist them to get on board. As soon as they learned that they escaped from the rebels they gave a loud huzza! and seemed to be as glad as the fugitives were themselves, they took them and clothed and gave them some food of which they were without four days. The three men were filled with joy for their escape was a narrow one, but one of great risk. After they got on board, their boat was hoisted on board the Steamer for the general inspection of the officers and crew. This boat although roughly put together exhibited great ingenuity, the material used in the building was some pieces of veneered wood, supposed to be a portion of the cabin of the charred hull and pieces of plank which they hid in for two days and one night. Their tools were an old jack knife and a piece of iron to drive the nails. The rebels a few days ago had set on fire the above mentioned ship. After they got their boat built they launched her, put in it about two barrels of sand and a large peice of iron for ballast: Two of them are bricklayers; one of the bricklayers is quite an intelligent man, he stated that he had been employed in building a house for the Cabinet of Jeff. Davis, in the Capital of the Southern Confederacy. The first Lieutenant of the Huntsville asked him if he should send him back how would he act? he pointed to the Stars and Stripes at the peak and exclaimed "that flag will not allow you to do so:" Tears involuntarily filled the eyes of Doctor Barclay; the man was willing to come under, and fight for a flag under which he has been oppressed, yet showing a love for it his master never knew or had. The sails used for their boat were the curtains from the lighthouse on Sand Island.

Rev. Henry Ward Beecher at Home.

To know and estimate great men correctly, we must see them at home. For the last fourteen years I have known the subject of these lines as a man greatly distinguished for learning, philanthropy, eloquence and wit; but had often heard him spoken of as exceedingly difficult of approach by the less favored and gifted brethren of his own profession. But in the face of these expressions, and acting under my rule never to agree that a man ought to be hung until he is tried and condemned, I resolved to see him, and then say on. Accordingly, Saturday afternoon, April 13th, 1861, at 4 o'clock, I called at his residence. Going up the steps two fine boys about ten and twelve years old, and "twice as natural as life," came within a hair of elbowing me until I grasped the bell-pull. The boys looking me full in the face, I said "Is your father in?" (for they were so decidedly Beecher that I felt perfectly safe to venture such a question.) The answer was, "Yes, sir, walk in." I had scarcely passed the lintels of the night-door when I saw a middle aged lady whose firm but open countenance evinced that for the sake of God and humanity her mind and heart were daily freighted with the interests of her family. This noble woman I booked in my mind as Mrs. B. By her side stood a venerable saint whose well-spent life I thought might have been justly counted by eighty-five winters. Not with words, but in silence (to my mind the most sacred eloquence) he appeared to be invoking a parting blessing on children and grand-children. I was instantly reminded of Solomon's golden description of Christ's Trophy, in whose presence I felt very small. "The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the ways of righteousness." I was invited into the parlor. Mr. B. occupied a chair in front of a sofa containing two gentlemen of learning and high position, with whom he seemed much engaged; his hands placed on his knees, his face just enough flushed to indicate fine health, his very hair continually floundering about, gave signs of much intellectual vigor. The whole mental batteries seemed to be assuming position for action on the coming Sabbath morning. Done with the graduates of Andover, he turned to SPES. The first full view that I obtained of his countenance convinced me that Mr. B.'s universal and most admirable success was in some degree owing to his consciousness that God had made him the driver of an immortal engine, composed of the most happy association of moral sensibility, physical courage and mental endowments. Mr. B. is certainly very peculiar in that he makes no effort either to exhibit or suppress his greatness. My dress was different from what the members of my profession generally wear. I think his impression was that I looked slightly rough for a minister. Though my settled conviction on this subject in regard to Rev. B. is that he believes it is the man who adorns the clothes; not the clothes that adorn the man. My business with him was very important, though this interview was not intended by either to be final in regard to the subject upon which we met. He gave me many of the sharpest ingenious looks which I ever received during one interview from a created being. I said but little, because I thought my cause safer in the hands of a man who reads as he runs, resting on its own merits. To my agreeable surprise he said he was ready and most happy whenever the time arrived to give his influence and aid to the object which I presented.

SPES.

Letter From New London.

New London, Aug. 19, 1861.

MR. EDITOR:

Having a little leisure time I thought I would improve it by sending you a few items of interest from this city. Since my last, much has transpired which might interest some of your readers, but as my time is very much limited, I must be as brief as possible.

Several of our celebration visitors are still in the city, enjoying themselves in the best possible manner. Our esteemed friend, Mr. John Peterson, of New York, made a flying visit to our city last Friday from Norwich, where I understand he is sojourning for the present. The first company of volunteers recently attached to the 2nd Connecticut regiment, arrived home on the 8th inst.; they brought with them three "contrabands," who are now in this city. I understand there is a project in contemplation of effecting a colored Methodist Church organization in this city. As to the result of this undertaking it is impossible for me to say. There seems to be a great deal of opposition on the part of the people. The people have always been worshipping in white churches, and seem rather opposed to separating from them now. Although I am not of that persuasion myself, I should be glad if they succeeded in establishing a church in this city. A social party was given in this city on the evening of the 14th by some of our enterprising young men. It was a capital affair, and thoroughly eclipsed anything previously given in this vicinity. Having received a cordial invitation to be present, I proceeded to the hall at an early hour, where I found everything progressing finely, a la beau monde. There was a larger attendance of ladies and gentlemen than on any previous occasion. Everything here was harmony—excellent music, cheerful faces, and pretty girls. The ladies all looked sweet, and notwithstanding the short time I spent in the hall, I experienced a great deal of pleasure. Everything passed off pleasantly, not the least thing occurred to mar the pleasure of the occasion. The committee deserve great credit for the able manner in which every thing was conducted. Miss F—— E——s, of Norwich, was undoubtedly the belle, notwithstanding the gay manner in which the ladies were all attired. The company dispersed about 3 o'clock, A. M. the next morning, much elated at the manner in which they were entertained.

WIDE AWAKE.

Letter from New Bedford.

New Bedford, Mass., Aug. 12th, '61.

MR. EDITOR.

I congratulate you on becoming a mouthpiece through your new series of the Anglo African, for our people in these United States. It has been a sore thing to the Anglo-Africans of this city to be without a paper edited by one of our own race. We were much disappointed at the sudden transformation of the previous Anglo into an emigration paper, whose principles are to use every effort to transport us from the so called land of Freedom to the wild Pine and Palm of Hayti; nevertheless, as it has had a few columns now and then somewhat interesting to us we continued to take it for a while, but alas the editor announced to us in a way of his own that no discussions on the Pines and Palms of Hayti, would be printed in his Pine and Palm of Boston. If the scheme was a just one would it not bear inspection by any and all? I answer that it would; but as it would not bear the inspection of men who were to decide whether they would emigrate to the Pines and Palms of foreign countries or not I concluded it was a money making scheme combined with a desire to clear the Northern States of colored men. I wish to ask what is the greatest desire of the slave's friend? Answer: to keep his slaves at home unmolested. What is the next greatest? Answer: to rid the Northern States of Free colored men so that in a case of emergency the North cannot call upon them to assist her in the present struggle, neither can they (the colored men of the North,) incite their slaves to insurrection. Then if the emigration scheme is to clear the North of colored men it surely must be in conjunction with the "Bloodsuckers" of the South. So colored men beware of all schemes to get us out of the way, for ere long the shackles of the oppressed must be severed, and the fiendish slaveholders reap what they have been sowing for many years. Though it may look gloomy now, our prospects grow brighter and brighter. If these remarks are an intrusion on your valuable sheet pardon me, but your paper is hailed with so much joy that it would seem to me amiss if I did not inform you of its welcome here. Among the visitors at Salem Church yesterday from Brooklyn, were Mr. Isaac H. Hunter, Jr., and Lady, Miss Addie M. Hamilton, Mrs. Newton and others whose names we could not learn. Prof. T. S. Boston is also stopping here at present. Rev. Alex Crummell lately from Africa, preached in Salem Baptist Church yesterday afternoon, his sermon was highly appreciated by the congregation, he having given also some very interesting details of his missionary labors in that country. On Tuesday evening he will lecture on Africa, after which there will be a collection in the vestry of Salem Church which no doubt will be a fine affair and of which I will furnish you an account.

WYCOFF.

DEATH'S DOINGS.

Departed this life, in this city, July 12, Wright Seaman, aged 72 years. Mr. Seaman was born in the State of Connecticut, but removed to this city about 45 years ago, and resided here till the day of his death. Having been afflicted for a long time, death came not suddenly upon him. The standing of Mr. Seaman in this community will be understood, when we state that he was employed in one place for 40 years.

REV. RICHARD YOUNG CLIFT.—This gentleman died in this city, August 10th, of consumption, aged 37 years 11 months and 9 days. He joined the A. M. E. Bethel Church in 2nd Street, about 20 years ago. He was first licensed to preach and was afterwards ordained in this church. He has been an Elder in the church about 13 years, and has been appointed to many different stations during that time. He died in full hope of a blessed immortality.

Gen. Fremont on Fugitive Slaves.

HEADQUARTERS WESTERN DEPARTMENT,
ST. LOUIS, Aug. 10, 1861.

To SAML. L. GLOVER, Esq.—Sir: I am instructed by Major-General Fremont to say to you in reference to the two slaves that were taken from certain "Union men" in the north-western portion of the State, by Col. Turchin of the 19th Indiana Volunteers, that portion of the State being then and now in a state of insurrection, the slaves having been brought to this city with the regiment, afterwards detained in the Arsenal, and afterwards escaped beyond recovery; and most of the circumstances occurring before their arrival in this city, that he would suggest to the claimants of the slaves, that they prove their claim and the fair value of the slaves, as well as their own position as open, active friends of the General Government, having all properly affirmed to before some legal authority, that said documents be transmitted to him, when he will forward them to the Government at Washington, with his recommendation that the claim be paid. And he further desires me to say that he cannot consent that this should be considered as a precedent for the settlement of similar cases where the circumstances may materially differ.

Very respectfully,
E. W. DAVIS, Capt. and Sec.

Annual Conference of the A. M. E. Zion Church—Allegheny District.

The thirteenth annual session of this body convened in the Mission Church, Avery street, Allegheny, Pa., on the 27th ult.—Rt. Rev. Peter Ross, Superintendent of the Third District, presiding, assisted by Rt. Rev. Joseph J. Clinton, Superintendent of the First District. Conference opened with singing, "And are we yet alive," and the usual services.

In addition to the transaction of other business the following reports were received and adopted from the Committee on Education:

We your Committee deem the subject of education one of importance; next to religion it is the great lever in the Christian church. The success of the church depends greatly upon a thoroughly educated and pious ministry. Therefore,

Resolved, That this Conference deem the subject of education an important one, and we will do all that is in our power to promote an active, pious and intelligent ministry.

Resolved, That the several ministers be directed to be found often in their own study, in the lecture room, in the Sabbath and day schools.

Resolved, That each minister set apart an evening during each week, in their several charges, for the purpose of giving lectures upon intellectual topics.

Resolved, That the ministers, where they have the opportunity, attend Preachers' Association.

Resolved, That it shall be the duty of each minister to establish Sabbath Schools in their several circuits, or stations where they have not been organized.

Resolved, That in the examination of candidates yearly, we will not give our vote for the ordination of unqualified men, and we trust that our Superintendent will not set apart any for Holy orders who are in any way unqualified.

From the Committee on Temperance:

WHEREAS, we are as much as ever convinced of the necessity of strenuous efforts for the suppression of intemperance, especially at this period when the excited state of our country is producing an alarming increase of said evil; and, whereas, there is no evil more to be feared than this which undermines religion and morality, destroying whole families, and spreading desolation over the land; therefore,

Resolved 1st. That it is the duty of each member of the church to see that the discipline of this church is carried out upon this subject.

2d. That we respectfully, but earnestly, request each elder to preach a sermon upon the subject at least once a quarter.

On motion the report was adopted.

The following persons were elected officers of the Literary Association for the ensuing year:

President—Rt. Rev. J. J. Clinton; Vice President—Rev. S. T. Scott; Recording Secretary—D. B. Matthews; Corresponding Secretary—Wm. Johnson; Treasurer—I. J. Whiten.

The following are the appointments for the ensuing year:

Stations—Mission Church, Allegheny City, Isaac J. Whiten; St. Louis and Chicago Mission, D. B. Matthews, in his charge, H. L. Newburn.

Circuits—John Wesley Church, Pittsburg, Washington and Waynesburg, Charles Wright; New Castle, Bridgewater, Sewickley, Darlington and Hookstown, Nelson Williams; Brownsville, Uniontown, Connellsville and George's Creek, Wm. Johnson; Lewistown, Huntingdon and Milroy, Prince G. Laws; Hollidaysburg, Bedford, Johnstown, Indiana and Blairsville, S. T. Scott; in his charge, Wm. Hamilton.

Missions—Salem, Alliance, Lima, Cleveland and Ravenna, Joseph Armstrong; oversight to be supplied; Cincinnati and Mount Pleasant, Peter B. Tollman.

Transfer—Thomas James, transferred to the Genesee District.

The Superintendent appointed the following persons to write essays and present them at the next Annual Conference.

Church History, D. B. Matthews. Church Discipline, I. J. Whiten. The Bible, Wm. Johnson. Morals, Nelson Williams. Natural History, S. T. Scott. Temperance, P. B. Fulman. Superannuated Preachers, C. Wright. Missionary Enterprise, Jos. Armstrong. The Power of Prayer, Wm. Hamilton. Self-knowledge, P. G. Laws.

The Conference adjourned to meet on the fourth Saturday in July, 1862, at the Mission Church, Allegheny City, Pa.

Owing to part of the report having been miscarried, we are unable to give in full the proceedings of this body, but will if the missing portion comes to hand.

The Fugitives at Fortress Monroe.

We call attention to the following lengthy but interesting letter from the special correspondent of the Cincinnati "Gazette." There are one or two ideas in it with which we cannot agree, nevertheless we ask our readers to give it an attentive perusal:

FORTRESS MONROE, Aug. 11.

WALKS AND TALKS AMONG THE "CONTRABANDS"—THE AFRICAN SLAVE IN THE LIGHT OF HIS OWN TESTIMONY.

The assemblage of 1,000 slaves in and around Fortress Monroe, representing collectively all degrees of character and capacity common to the race, and the great mass of whom would never under other circumstances have attempted an escape from Slavery—the whole now awaiting the decision of the Federal Government as to their future status, and placed in a position the most favorable for obtaining their unbiased, unbought, and unintimidated testimony upon the vital questions agitating the public mind in relation to them—presents a new and interesting spectacle in our history, and a phase of the great social problem which may well arrest the attention and excite the deep concern of all classes of our countrymen. Those who flippantly talk about "letting the nigger alone" and want the agitation of the Slavery question stopped, take a very narrow and superficial view of the providences of God as well as the constitution of human nature. The Creator never intended that Slavery or any other evil should be "let alone," and he has so constituted us that we must agitate that which the promptings of reason and justice teach us is wrong. This agitation can no more be stopped than the course of the winds or tides can be changed, for the necessity for it is implanted deep in our common natures, and must go on until the institution is either abolished or brought into the course of extinction within the earliest practicable period. Progress is the law of our being; and though we may seem to stand still or retrograde at times, in the grand cycles of ages, the great movement of humanity has ever been and still is onward toward a higher and nobler civilization. No better evidence could be afforded of a national pause or retrograde than the cessation of the agitation of the Slavery question; and it should be the hope of every friend of his kind, that be the consequences what they may, it may never cease to be agitated until there is nothing of it left to agitate.

The history of the past clearly shows that as we advance in knowledge and intelligence, and the sentiment of justice, and a clearer perception of the right become developed in men slavery grows more abhorrent in all its features. Thus the anti-slavery feeling has been steadily and rapidly on the increase throughout the Free States since the foundation of our Government, and will in time become so universal that future generations will look back with astonishment upon the fact that, in this our day, any considerable number of men could have been found to advocate its extension and perpetuity.

It seems to me that either a systematic course of deception has been pursued by the Southern people in their representations to those of the North as to the condition, feelings, and capacities of the slave, or that habit, prejudice, and self-interest have blinded them to the truth. The latter supposition is doubtless the fairest in the general; and allowance should also be made for the deception under which they themselves are to some extent laboring, ignorance on the part of the slave of any better state, and a sense of his own interest and welfare in his present one, operating to induce him to conceal any aspirations in that direction. But reason, justice, science, analogy—a rational view of the purposes of God, and our knowledge of the nature of man, as founded upon all past history, observation, and experience—alike teach us that he was created to be free; that freedom is an indispensable condition of the proper development of the faculties with which his Creator has endowed him; and that the theory that Slavery is the normal state of any race is false and inhuman, and a libel upon the Author of our being.

Since my arrival here I have embraced every opportunity of endeavoring to satisfy myself upon some of the leading points concerning which such wide differences exist, so far as might be done from the testimony of the slaves themselves, from actual observation of them, and from careful inquiry into their real opinions and feelings; and, as I before remarked, the circumstances were never before so favorable for obtaining these as are here presented, freedom of intercourse being unrestrained and their expression untrammeled by either fear or favor, and the position in which they are placed being peculiarly calculated to afford us a fair and reliable test as to the truth or falsity of the various doctrines prevalent, so far as they are competent by word or deed to settle them—and I don't know that any of our wise men are more so. Furthermore, the average of intelligence and capacity here represented may be regarded as furnishing a standard fairly applicable to the race throughout the country, the apparent mental inferiority and weaker aspiration for liberty, if such there be, in the plantation negroes of the extreme South, being attributable to their more isolated existence, more careful exclusion from the light of knowledge, greater ignorance, and deeper degradation, rather than to any native difference.

Without going into the detail of conversations which extended to nearly or quite a hundred of them, the evidence, in my humble judgment, goes to establish the following facts and conclusions clearly and incontrovertibly:

1. When asked if they prefer freedom, with all the chances and uncertainties of self dependence, to slavery, with a certainty of support, their answers were invariably and without exception in the affirmative. This applies equally to children old enough to begin to think and to the aged and infirm, as well as to those in the prime of life. As a rule I found the strength of this desire, other things being equal, (for of course it was modified more or less by the kind of masters they happen to have had and the treatment they had received) to be in proportion to intelligence and capacity. Many of them, who acknowledged having had as good masters as they could wish, still said they would rather die than to be sent back into slavery. Nor did I find that they had any fanciful notion about living without work or enjoying easier times in a state of freedom than in one of slavery. They said they expected to work, and were willing to do so; many of them that they liked to work and could not be contented otherwise—a palpable and self-evident truth, for nature so constituted us all that we cannot be happy without occupation.

2. I am told by those under whose direction they are, and my own observations bears it out, that they work as willingly and efficiently, and perform as great an amount as white laborers, while they are much better adapted by nature, as every one knows, to endure the intense heat of the climate. Their native element is a Southern temperature, and if they were free, necessity, interest, and preference alike would induce the great body of them to remain where they are, or gradually emigrate further Southward if inviting regions were held out to them, instead of overrunning the North, as many persons suppose. The laws of supply and demand would regulate their movements just as they do those of other races, and as long as their labor continued to be in demand at the South, they would of course remain there and follow the pursuits to which they are accustomed.

I saw no indications of the negro laziness which so many contend is characteristic of them, and hence that they require masters to make them work. I believe the reverse to be the truth. But admitting such to be the case in servitude, it only proves that as with all the rest of mankind industry is quickened by the stimulus of necessity and self-interest, and that uncompensated labor does not afford that stimulus.

3. While it is an admitted fact that nature has constituted the negro the intellectual inferior of the white man, I failed to discover anything to lend the shadow of confirmation to the oft repeated assertion that these people are incapable of taking care of themselves or earning their own livelihood. On the contrary, they exhibit upon the average a degree of native intelligence, and quickness and aptitude for learning, wholly inconsistent with this theory. It is not to be expected, of course, except by those who recognize no power of development and progress in humanity, that, having been brought up in abject servitude, deprived as far as possible of all opportunities of information, and accustomed to depend wholly upon others, they should at once exhibit those self-sustaining qualities which education, habit, and circumstance have given the white man. But under like conditions and in proportion to their endowments, they are just as capable of acquiring those qualities of supporting, elevating, and improving themselves and of attaining happiness and prosperity in their appropriate sphere. If I mistake not, there is no class of people in the North among whom there are fewer beggars or dependants upon public charity than the negro population. But conceding that they would be no better off, or that they would be even worse off, as freemen than slaves, does the value of freedom consist wholly in what we eat, drink and wear? And yet this is the sum total of the shallow, grovelling and beggarly philosophy which plants itself upon this argument.

4. They have a pretty correct idea, and I think had before they came within the Fedral lines, what this war is about. Like many others, I was laboring under a different impression, but I am inclined now to believe it is erroneous with regard to the great mass of them throughout the South. They understand the question at issue better than we have given them credit for. They do not regard the war as for the abolition of slavery, but with the prophetic instinct with which we are all gifted, there is a vague foreshadowing in their minds that it will finally lead to that. They seem to have no definite idea as to what the Federal Government is going to do with them, at least, if they have any, they do not express it. They apparently rest in implicit confidence that the result, whatever it may be, will be for the best, and await it without any visible anxiety or uneasiness. But their sympathies are all with the Government. I found this also evinced in a very marked degree on my return from Centreville the day after the defeat near Manassas. I met a number of them on the road, and an air of sympathy, sorrow, and dejection was plainly discernible on every countenance. And every one expressed their regret at our defeat when I asked them how they felt about it, and said such was the universal sentiment among them all.

5 There is a general idea prevailing at the North that the negroes of the thickly settled slave districts of the South will take advantage of this war to rise against the whites, and this is relied upon as an element of weakness in the enemy. Such are the views undoubtedly entertained by our leading statesmen, by the Administration, and by our commanding Generals, as evidenced by the several proclamations announcing a determination to crush out all insurrections; although this policy is manifestly rapidly on the wane as the war progresses. Its effect has been to give us greater confidence in our success and an underestimate of the strength of our opponents, thus weakening our efforts and increasing the probabilities of a long conflict. Now, although heretofore holding this opinion, somehow or other a closer insight into the negro character, as well as the tenor of his own evidence, has essentially changed my views and led me to think that this belief is totally fallacious. I apprehend the fact to be that slaves in all the districts where they are in sufficient numbers to justify the possibility of a successful insurrection, are so accustomed to subordination, are under such strict guard and discipline, possess so little of the boldness, daring, and self reliance necessary for such a movement, and are withal so harmless in disposition, that the occurrence of such an event is exceedingly improbable, if not impossible. The time may come, should slavery continue to exist, when the crowding of it together and forcing out of the white element may give it the explosive character, but the latter forms too large a component part at present, even where the disproportion seems to be the greatest. The prevalence of this belief in an impending insurrection is pregnant with mischief to us, for the reason before mentioned, and I half suspect that it is a part of the policy of the Secessionists to encourage it for this very purpose, since there is obviously an advantage to them in so doing. In nearly or quite every case where real fears of an insurrection have existed, (and heretofore these have always been of a local and not general character,) I am satisfied they have sprung from the heated and distempered imaginations of certain nervous and excitable people, such as are to be found in every community. So complete is the habit of subordination and obedience to which these slaves are trained, that very few of them now in and about Fortress Monroe left their homes until their masters had not only forsaken them, in their alarm at the approach of the Federal troops, but until they were either starved out or were brought by our advance within the Federal lines. Many of their masters, unable to make any disposition of them, in the exigency, told them to do the best they could for themselves; still most of them remained until necessity drove them to leave. Now having tasted the sweets of liberty, nothing could induce them voluntarily to return.

But habit had grown so [illegible] as to render it a second nature, stronger for a time than the first, and under the want of the development of the capacity for thinking and acting for themselves, even the love of liberty failed to rise superior to it. The sooner we banish all idea of a negro insurrection, the better for us, and the sooner will this rebellion be put down. The truth is, the slaves of the seceded States constitute at this time a powerful element in favor of the rebels, by enabling them to turn out a greater proportion of the white population to carry on the struggle, while the slaves perform the agricultural operations, and every slave of a Secessionist in those States capable of doing any species of labor, whether his master be an active or passive participant in the rebellion, furnishes aid and comfort to the enemy, and is contraband in the light of property, and should be treated as such by the Government. No distinction can properly, or should be, made between those who perform the usual home labor and those who work on the fortifications, for all alike furnish the enemy aid and comfort. Time will demonstrate this view to be the correct one.

The current of events is rapidly forcing to an issue the momentous question whether human Slavery or this Government freighted, as it is, with the best hopes of man, shall be held as the more sacred; whether, assuming that this gigantic and iniquitous rebellion will be suppressed, the cause of it, and of all our present woes—all claim to its protection having been forfeited by the seceded States, and outside of them the difficulties to be met being of comparatively easy solution—shall be allowed to remain, to the peril of our future stability, peace, prosperity, greatness, and territorial unity, which are of infinitely more importance and value to us than all the money ever invested in human flesh. While we may survive the bitter fruits of its first bearing, if we leave the tree standing its roots and branches will spread and it will ultimately produce another and larger crop. Its seeds were sown in crime, and its growth has been nourished at the expense of all the national virtues. Slavery is now, as it ever has been, true to itself. It has strictly fulfilled the course of nature, and will continue to do so despite all human enactments. In the results now before us, we are paying the penalty which inevitably sooner or later attaches to all violations of the moral law, either with nations or individuals. And so long as we persist in violating them, we must expect to pay that penalty. If Slavery is right, it is consistent with the freest and most perfect form of Government, and the highest progress in man; if it is wrong, it must ultimately perish or that Government must become a despotism and that progress cease. To this end time works its way with fixed and unalterable certainty. The longer the existence and the greater the magnitude of the evil, the heavier the account which it will accumulate against us, the settlement of which cannot be escaped. But if Slavery is right, why did God implant in the breast of every human being the instinct for liberty? For it dwells in the humblest slave as well as in the most favored white man, and grows and expands with a knowledge of its object. The highest appreciation of liberty is only compatible with the highest intelligence, but educate and elevate the slave, and just in that proportion will he learn to value this inestimable and God-given right. Does weak and impotent man assume that the ordinances of heaven contradict themselves? And must he set at defiance the great truth that all human beings, whatever their color, are endowed with infinite capacities, and capable of infinite progression? And must any race forever be deprived of exercising this divine prerogative? How [illegible] be the moral sense of a people who have adopted as the standard of their faith, upon whose sacrificial altar the freedom of speech and of thought, and even the rights of conscience, must be offered up, under the severest pains and penalties, the miserable and impious dogma that that system is divine which allows human beings to be bought and sold as cattle, separates husbands, wives, and children, deprives them of the privilege of even learning to read and write, drives them to the field in droves, works them under an overseer and the lash, houses them indiscriminately in dark and narrow pens, and doles out to them at certain intervals the same never-varying allowance of the coarsest food and raiment; a system, in short, whose security lies in the ignorance and degradation of its subjects, and which forever debars them of the hope of bettering their condition, and whose tendency is to crush out the Promethean spark with which every human soul has been touched from Heaven, and which was born to kindle and expand only in the glorious atmosphere of freedom. And is it not manifest, so far as we can now read the signs of the future, that their final disenthralment, and the vindication of the eternal principles of justice, must come from a source independent of that where this hopeless infatuation and moral death prevail?

J. G.

PROBABILITIES OF SLAVE INSURRECTIONS IN VIRGINIA.

From the New York Tribune.

CINCINNATI, O., Aug. 14, 1861.

The probabilities of negro insurrection are not more anxiously canvassed in the North than they are painfully apprehended in the South. Before giving the special advices that I have on this topic from the South, I will say that Southerners do not much apprehend at any time a general and concerted uprising of the slaves. In a long residence in Eastern Virginia, I have never heard any one express a fear that there might be possible a blow of the slaves throughout the South for their liberty. One alarm, and only one, I remember in my boyhood; it turned out to be a panic with but little foundation, though while it lasted it was terrific to witness the pallor and agony of the neighborhood. But the excitement at the time was entirely local, and there seemed to be no suspicion that there was any State movement or even one involving slaves outside of a county. It will be remembered that even in the Nat Turner insurrection, the largest ever known in the South, the suspicion did not go beyond a section of the State, and the evidence did not, in the end, justify even that. By this I mean that the experience of the Slave States has furnished reason to believe that "no general and concerted insurrection in the South will ever take place." Beside the obvious reasons arising from the usual inability of slaves to write or correspond, the difficulty of traveling to any great distance, the liabilities of those found in any kind of conference, the absence of the pecuniary and other means of conducting important affairs, the impossibility of any slave being absent for any length of time without its being noticed—beside these, there are some reasons arising from the temperament and character of the African race itself which would prevent it. They are an extremely cautious people. Reckless to the last extreme when roused, they are until then wary and not self-reliant. To this it may be added that in every group of any great size that could be got together, some one would be likely to prove an informer. Much of this has been the result of plantation training; for, of course, it would little consist with the exigencies of the farm or household for tale-bearing to be taught and preached as anything but a virtue. Whenever a group of whisperers get together each one has a temptation to gain high favor by betraying the rest. It is not saying anything against the race itself to say that, without being entirely conscious of its criminalty, the Southern negro is very apt to be treacherous. And here allow me the episodic reflection that the closing paragraph of the Secretary of War's late order to Gen. Butler concerning fugitives, namely, that they should not, except in cases where the public good seemed to require it, be prevented from voluntarily returning to the service from which they have escaped, seems to me fraught with disaster. The rebels allege that they paid $100,000 for some intelligence from Washington; if the above order from the Secretary is carried out, the next piece of information will not cost them so much. Indeed, there is reason to think that the plaintive melody "Carry me back to Ole Virginny" has already been the cover of some shrewd plans. It is absolutely certain to my mind that no negro would ever wish to return, but with some ulterior design, to the certain punishment for examples sake, which his penitence would not, in one case of the hundred avert.

But to resume: these considerations, and especially the impossibility of trusting any large number of negroes without great risk of detection, a thing plainly seen by both Turner and Denmark Veasey, is likely to prevent any simultaneous or concerted insurrection throughout the Southern States, and indeed in any one State. But insurrections in various neighborhoods, which may spread like conflagrations, are not only possible but at this moment threatened through many portions of the South. Your North Carolina correspondent has given you the indications in that State. From the Cotton States I have a bit of information which I cannot give, save so far as it informs you that the negroes of the plantations, cotton and sugar, are keenly alive to some of the issues involved in the present war. The reason why I do not give you this item is that it would defeat a plan on the part of the negroes, which, while not involving the loss of a single life, contemplates a stroke of poetic justice so grand that history will applaud it as a vindication of the wisdom and humanity of that race. This I will not do. But I propose to mention two points of Virginia where there is now a very feverish state of both negroes and whites—the causes of which are significant.

Virginia, like Tennessee, is divided into three parts—Eastern, Middle, Piedmont and valley, and Western. In the last there are very few negroes. In the Piedmont country, both sides of the Blue Ridge, embracing the line of Manassas, there are great many negroes, but very [illegible] slave labor than in Eastern Virginia. [illegible] traveler through that region will [illegible] groups and families of [illegible] but most frequently will see as many or more whites than negroes at work in the field. This has seemed to me a change of late years, and one chiefly attributable to the settlements of Northern men throughout the valley, and in London, Fairfax, Prince William, and in Fauquier Counties. Their thrift with free labor has excited a competition which slave labor is unequal to, and gradually more and more whites have been introduced into the farm. There is also nothing in the soil and climate of these regions which particularly invites slave labor. And yet the census shows no diminution of the slaves in the piedmont. It is because this has become the great human harvest-field for the plantations of the far South. The piedmont is the slave-trader's chief bailiwick. Vast sums of money are made here by regular and systematic slave breeding for the Southern market. This, as you may at once infer, makes the yoke of this region hard and galling. Year by year parents watch the growth of their children knowing that they cannot be used at home, that there, each will be only another mouth to feed and back to clothe, knowing that as soon as the year of noblest promise and strength comes only to make their eternal severance more sure. Now, this is a source of immediate gains to many complacent men of the piedmont, no doubt; Slavery is always good at clutching the advantage of the hour: not good at apprehending the advantage of the years: the results is that there is all through the piedmont, and especially about Manassas, and about Warrenton, a most discontented, muttering, and inflammable negro population. If John Brown had made his appearance here, instead of in the region where the slave-yoke is perhaps lightest, he would have had more to help him than the arsenal whose locality seems to have decided him.

Now, I have reason to know that the negroes of this region have of late given cause for the most feverish anxiety. Some of this may be born of the cowardice which conscience makes, for there is scarcely a slave that could not confront his master with a grievance which, between whites, would justify homicide; but imagination must be but a small part of the apprehension. I learn that many of the largest slaveholders near the Junction informed Gov. Letcher that he could not have an army too early there for internal reasons, and that they still more dread the departure of Beauregard from their vicinity. That the negroes have any plot formed in this region, I cannot find, and very much doubt. Fear is cunning, and, in this region, the well-known reasons for rebellion have made Fear chronic, so that the whites have sharpened eyes. But there is no doubt that where our army has advanced and occupied the country, there have been indications of a rebellious and angry feeling of slaves toward the masters which our own reporters have forborne, with insufficient reason, as it seems to me, to publish.

A common error may here be corrected. It is generally supposed that the negroes on the cotton and sugar plantations of the far South are more degraded, ignorant, and obtuse, that they are also less posted in public matters, and consequently that there is less chance of insurrection among them, than among the slaves of the Border States. This is an utter mistake. It has for many generations been the invariable custom to send to these Southern plantations every negro of the Border States who at any time shows a desire for freedom, or who has run away and been arrested—it being supposed that the number of overseers necessary on those plantations makes it unimportant whether the slave is restive or otherwise. The consequence is that there has been a gradual accumulation in the far South of the most inflammable and intelligent negroes; and any serious insurrection will be much more apt to come from them than from their more comfortable Border-State comrades. Only the imminent danger has prevented it thus far; and even this perpetual vigilance has not prevented many threatening scenes.

It was not a hundred miles from where the Rebel Army is now encamped that I once went to visit an old Virginia friend. We had known each other in boyhood. He had married and settled down on a farm well stocked with negroes. He then invited me to visit him—not without mentioning that he had heard of my un-Virginian heresies on the Slavery question; but he wrote, "that subject we can sink in the river Styx." I went, and found him pleasantly environed, and happy. Old times were talked of. In the evening, when we sat talking of the old school-scenes, his beautiful bride sitting near, Slavery not yet distantly alluded to, nor in all our thoughts, a groan was heard outside the door, and the exclamation: "O my God!" The husband started—the young wife was out of the door in an instant. There was a noise—a moaning voice replying to an eager, quick one; what they said, undistinguishable. Presently the door of the parlor was burst open, disclosing in the hall, sitting on the floor with her head on a chair, and sobbing violently, a light mulatto woman. The young wife of my friend stood before us, pale as a sheet, and deeply stirred. Scarcely for her tremendous emotion, could she inform us of the trouble, which was that the husband of Fanny, the mulatto girl, had been sold South, and been taken off that day without even being allowed to come over to this neighboring estate and see his wife. But never, never can I forget the emotion and the voice with which my friend's young wife uttered her whole heart. She held up the whole system as an accursed, God-defying system; if by lifting her finger she could set every slave in America free, that moment she would do it, and there would be no more white throats cut than ought to be. In vain the husband reminded her that they were not alone; erect as a sunbeam, full of electric wrath, this Pythoness stood before me, and warned me that I could never hate Slavery too much. And so she went on, with an eloquence that Phillips would envy, until the pallor was overborne by a suffusion, and the flush came with a rain of tears, and she went to kneel with the poor, broken heart in the hall. The husband closed the door on the scene; but you may judge that we did not "sink that subject in the river Styx" that night.

I do most earnestly declare, as one born and reared in slaveholding Virginia, that such scenes are by no means rare in any part of that State. I am convinced that those apologists in the North who have defended Slavery are either grossly ignorant of what they speak of, or utter hypocrites. A [illegible] and two gentlemen, [illegible] the boat, supporting on either side a light mulatto man, who seemed gasping for life. This young man had run away from his owner, and was closely pursued. When he found that he must be caught, his master and master's son being close upon him, the mulatto drew out a knife, and deliberately cut his own throat. He soon died. Dr. Dewey himself related this to me, and since that day I have heard or read no word from that eloquent minister except in reprobation of Slavery. O si sic omnes!

But I must not omit to speak of signs and tokens in another region of country, the only other in which I have heard of recent apprehensions. This is in the regions of the Rappahannock, and chiefly in the counties of Spottsyvania and Stafford (the latter being the county in which Acquia is located.) About six years ago, on a large fine estate called Chatham, just across the river from Fredericksburgh, lived an old lady, who had inherited from her husband, Judge Coalter, this large estate of land and negroes. She was a very benevolent old lady, and very kind to her numerous slaves. About six years ago she died, and, as she had always promised them, left a will emancipating all her slaves. The form of manumission, however was unfortunate; it was that these slaves should be free if they should so choose, or else should select their masters from some of her numerous relatives.

Some time after the old lady's death, a shrewd lawyer whispered in the ear of one Horace Lacy, heir-at-law (by marriage) of Mrs. Coalter, that he could own the Chatham negroes if he would, since, by the laws of Virginia, negroes were chattels, and had not the right to choose in anything. No will could empower them to choose whether they would be free or not. Lacy (who now, by the way, is an officer in the rebel army, in Virginia,) was nowise averse to this plan, and really succeeded in annulling the provisions of the will, thus cheating some forty or fifty negroes and their issue out of their liberty. This case excited a vast deal of attention in Lacy's neighborhood, and there was enough feeling against the proceeding, even among the whites, to carry the case in their behalf before the Court of Appeals. But there, also, it was decided in Lacy's favor—only one member of the Court, Judge Moncure, dissenting, who brought in a minority opinion of great power, whose only defect was that the Slave Code of Virginia was not up to it. This matter, casting down at one fell blow, as it did, a hope that Mrs. Coalter had held up before her slaves for many years, produced a tremendous sensation among them and their families, to purchase which, and carry them to the Free States, many of them had made provision. Nothing else was talked of. At length, Lacy got frightened at what he had done, and, suspecting that some of them might revenge themselves upon him, he sold many of them to the Far South. But this only increased the anger and agitation among the slaves, and some of the slaveholders in that neighborhood bitterly accused Lacy of having injured the entire slave population of that region.

In the last few months their complaint has been justified. The negroes have to be most carefully watched. The screw was given one turn too much, and now a general feeling of distrust prevails in that region of country. I have not been able to obtain the history of the last few weeks from this vicinity, but have reason to suspect that a plan of insurrection was discovered there early in June, originating among some of the negroes not far from the Chatham estate.

I have always been convinced that these insurrections throughout the South would prevail just in the proportion that its local patrols must become decimated by the war, and look to a period when our Government shall have to inaugurate some system of emancipation as an act of mercy to the whites of the South, and for the purpose of controlling elements otherwise uncontrollable and destructive.

ARGUS.

OUTRAGEOUS.—There are some 35,000 free colored people in Baltimore, by far more law abiding generally than the same number of white people in the same condition in life. Their loyalty to the Federal Government is not doubted even by the Rebels themselves. And yet the Provost Marshal has issued an order requiring all colored people to be out of the streets after half-past 10 o'clock at night, on pain of being arrested by the police and confined in the Station-House. This requirement is the source of much inconvenience, not only to the colored people themselves, but to their employers. It is hoped that Gen. Dix will rescind this order, in view of its needlessness. The laws for the regulation of colored people are quite stringent enough.—Cor. of N. Y. Tribune.

A SLAVE STRIKING HIS MASTER.—The Paris (Ky.) Citizen, of Friday last says:—

We regret to learn that Mr. John B. Kennedy, of our country, was struck over the head several times with a piece of rail, early yesterday morning, by one of his negro men, fracturing his skull. The particulars of the affray we have been unable to obtain. Mr. Kennedy is very dangerously injured. He is one of our most respected and worthy citizens, and a most kind and indulgent master. The boy, by name Preston, attempted the life of his master about two years ago, we understand, and is an impudent and refractory slave. He immediately made his escape, but a number of men are in hot pursuit. What a pity it is that Preston had not Prest-on, until he had finished the job.—[ED. ANGLO-AFRICAN.

SUICIDE.—John McCarty, a colored man, committed suicide in Holden, last Monday, by cutting his throat with a common pocket knife, severing the windpipe and barely escaping the main arteries. He afterwards stabbed himself twice in the abdomen. McCarty has lived in Princeton for the last four or five years, and was visiting Holden on a fishing excursion. He was a man of intemperate habits, and was, no doubt, suffering under an attack of the delirium tremens at the time.—Barre, Mass., "Gazette," Aug. 16th, 1861.

THE WAR AND THE SLAVES.—The Toronto (Canada) Globe closes an article under the above heading with the following words:

"We should have thought the stern lesson given at Bull Run would have convinced Mr. Lincoln that this rebellion is not to be suppressed by appealing in any way whatever to the reason of the men in arms against the Government. The fact that the Washington Cabinet hesitates to take decisive measures for the manumission of the slaves, is to them a confession of weakness. They cannot see it in any other light. They cannot understand how an enemy with whom they are waging a most deadly war, should hesitate about employing the most efficient means to crush them. Whether they will or not, despite the efforts of politicians, and despite the much lauded constitution too, the war is resolving itself surely into a contest for the suppression of slavery. To that complexion it must come. And the sooner the fact is recognized, the sooner will an end be put to the deplorable contest now being waged.

ANGLO-AFRICAN WAR ITEMS.

The Charleston papers say: "The colored residents of this city can challenge comparison with their class, in any city or town, in loyalty or devotion to the cause of the South. Many of them individually, and without ostentation, have been contributing liberally, and on Wednesday evening, the 7th instant, a very large meeting was held by them, and a Committee appointed to provide for more efficient aid. The proceedings of the meeting will appear in results hereafter to be reported."

The Richmond "Enquirer" says a gentleman who was at Manassas on Tuesday morning, the 2nd instant, saw a negro man belonging to an Alabama officer, march a Zouave into camp. The negro, a short, thick-set fellow, had two guns on his shoulder and drove his prisoner before him. The Zouave was a pert looking fellow, and wore his arm in a sling in consequence of his wound.

At a war meeting held at Erie, Pa., last week,—M. B. Lowry, Esq., an influential citizen of that place suggested, says the Erie "Dispatch," as a means to stop the war, "that government should furnish every negro who produced his master's scalp, with one hundred and sixty acres of land."

SUMMARY.

In the police reports of the St. Louis Republican appears the following:

The Recorder wears a melancholy look, and we are not surprised. Neither are we surprised that he was this morning so lost to cheerfulness that he never smiled when the case of W. L. G. Tompkins was called (Wm. Lloyd Garrison, in full, we infer.) Mr. Tompkins had been on a "brief" bender, and seemed to have no realizing sense of the circumstances that surrounded him, for immediately upon being called up, he cleared his throat and to the astonishment of all, sang in a rapid manner as follows:

John Brown's bones hang dangling in the air,
John Brown's bones hang dangling in the air,
John Brown's bones hang dangling in the air,
And his soul's marching on!
Glory, halle-hallelujah,
Glory, halle-hallelujah,
Glory, halle-hallelujah,
And his soul's marching on!

"Imagine," said Mr. Tompkins, looking towards the Recorder, after he had concluded his song and before that worthy officer could check him in his mad career—"Imagine, if you please, the spectacle—the melancholy spectacle which would be presented—of beholding the bones of that noble martyr, swinging lazily, yet mysteriously and solemnly, underneath the gibbet, being all the while ceaselessly kept in motion to the tune of 'Soft and Gentle Summer Zephyrs.'"

"Order," cried the Recorder, sternly, when Mr. Tompkins had reached this point in his remarks. "Mr. Marshal, place the defendant in close confinement."

The Port Tobacco (Md.) "Times" of the 8th inst., says:

On Thursday of last week Dr. A. J. Smoot, finding some fault with his foreman at "Green Spot," gave him a slight scolding and ordered him off to his work. Instead of going to the point indicated by the Doctor, he took his axe in his hand and started for the woods. The Doctor thinking the negro was decoying him, did not follow, but next day returned to Green Spot with an intention of chastising the negro. Having a gun in his hand he called the negro up and questioned him about his yesterday's conduct, for which he appeared to be sorry and very humbly apologized to his master. The Doctor felt perfectly satisfied and at once abandoned the idea of flogging him. He then sat his gun down and turned around to walk off, when the negro seized the gun and aiming a deadly blow at the Doctor's head shivered the gun to pieces. The Doctor fell from the effects of the blow, when the negro ran off, and has not since been heard from. The Doctor is not hurt further than a severe scalp wound. The negro's name is Harry Young.

The same paper gives the two following items:

On Wednesday night, the 31st ult., while the jailor was preparing a room for a new comer, a negro belonging to Dr. A. J. Smoot made good his escape through the outer door, forcing himself immediately by the jailor, who gave him chase, but was unable to overtake the fellow. This negro had been committed but a few days before as a runaway.

The girl, Anna Barber, who was arrested last week, on a charge of being in free negro houses under suspicious circumstances, as mentioned in our last issue, was yesterday brought up for a hearing. There appeared no charge against her and she was accordingly discharged from custody. A purse of several dollars was made up for her by our citizens and her fare paid to Washington, whither she was desirous of going. She left Port Tobacco yesterday morning.

On Monday last a colored woman named Caroline Hawkins was secretly delivered of a child in the house of Mr. William Smith, on Lumley street, where she had for some time resided. In consequence of appearances which presented themselves Smith's suspicions became aroused and led him to summon Dr. Augusta, who soon after arrived and examined the woman. She admitted that she had given birth to a child and pointed out its dead body where it was concealed beneath the mattrass on which she then lay. Smith being under the impression that a fearful crime had been committed, gave information to the police, and Coroner Hallowell was also notified in order that an inquest might be held. The jurors concluded their labors at a late hour on Tuesday night, after hearing the evidence of a number of witnesses. Smith and his wife and others who were examined, gave it as their opinion that Hawkins had been pregnant, and stated that she denied that such was the case, Dr. Arnold and Dr. Augusta, who made an examination of the body of the infant, testified that in their judgment it was born alive. After a careful examination the jury returned a verdict of "wilful murder" against the woman, who during the inquiry was kept under the surveillance of the police. As soon as she is sufficiently recovered from her illness she will be removed to the jail. In the meantime she will be detained in charge of policemen detailed for that purpose. The object of committing the shocking crime with which she stands charged was evidently to conceal her shame, Hawkins having lost her husband some years since.—Toronto Leader.

MEMENTOS OF JOHN BROWN.—A correspondent of the Brookville (Pa.), Jeffersonian, writing from Charlestown, Va., the place where John Brown was executed, says:—

It is strange to see to what an extent the morbid curiosity of men will lead them to; crowds were assembled this morning on the spot where the gallows were erected; some were taking stones or pebbles, and finally some persons told them he was hung off a locust tree, which was about three rods from the right place. The tree was soon cut up with knives, and each man carried off a twig, a piece of bark, or a piece of the wood of the tree, and when I left, but a little more cutting would let the tree measure its length on the ground. The next place of Brown notoriety was the jail. To this place we went where we found persons going in and coming out. As we arrived the crowd made the discovery that an old pine table was the one on which Brown wrote his last letter. Immediately knives were in requisition, and chips began to fly from the table into men's pockets, after which they viewed the cell, etc. In regard to the splinters, I would say that a number of the table chips will find their way to Brookville.

A colored boy, named James Lewis, while bathing in the pond of William Hartshorne, Esq., near Freehold, New Jersey, on Sunday, the fourth instant, was accidentally drowned. He was swimming, with a plank as a support, when by some means the plank slipped from under him, and being unable to regain it, he perished before assistance could reach him.

The Washington, [D. C.,] "Star" of the 15th says: Wm. Woodward, who escaped from jail a short time since, where he was confined on the charge of murdering a soldier of the Seventy-ninth New York Highland Regiment, was captured yesterday by county constable John W. Gross, of Georgetown. That officer got the impression that Woodward was concealed in "Louseneck," which we will state, for the information of our readers, is that part of Washington county lying between the Tenallytown road and Rock Creek, and yesterday started to look for him. After a considerable search, he found the notorious "Bill" concealed in the stable of Mrs. Curran, on Rock Creek, north of Georgetown, and secured him and brought him back to jail, where he—the officer—received the reward of $50 offered for the apprehension of the escaped prisoner. It seems that Woodward, since his escape, has been hiding in the woods along Rock Creek, and only concealed himself when he found the officer on his track. After making his escape from the jail, he wounded himself in the thigh when he was getting over a fence, and he is still suffering from that injury. Woodward says he escaped by raising the door-latch from the inside, which can be done by inserting a knife or spoon into the latch cover. He has tried the same plan upon every guard for eight or ten days, but failed every time, the door being locked until then.

In the St. Paul (Min.) Pioneer, of August 2nd, we find the following item:

Two men James Lawrence and Mr. Churchill, residing on Bottineau prairie, were shot on Tuesday night, by a negro man named Norflet Orford, who also lived on the prairie. Lawrence was shot in the forehead, and Churchill on the back of his head. They were found dead by the neighbors in front of the negro's house. It is stated that the deceased had some difficulty with the negro about some hay, and went over to his house to talk the matter over, and that was the last that was seen of them alive. The negro fled and it was supposed that he would make for St. Paul. The whole neighborhood turned out to hunt him, and some five or six came down here, but were unsuccessful in finding him. If he is caught it is feared that he would be lynched, the feeling is so bitter against him. Lawrence and Churchill were respectable farmers, and much esteemed by their neighbors. The negro was also a farmer of considerable property.

A colored girl named Francis Blackson, was shot by a colored boy named Wm. Bartley at Duck Creek near Smyrna, Delaware, on the 9th inst. It seems there has been a difficulty existing between them for some time—the boy accusing her of "lying on him." On the day above mentioned Bill was at the house for something to eat, which, being furnished by the girl, she commenced plagueing him. He became enraged, and told her he would shoot her if she didn't stop, and left the house. She followed him to the door, when he drew a revolver and fired, the ball taking effect in her left arm, above the elbow. It was extracted by Dr. Hirons. Her arms were folded across her breast at the time, which saved her life, perhaps. Bill is represented as being a desperate fellow. The Constables have been on the lookout for him.

DROWNED.—A colored man named Richard Winfield, was found in the river, at Columbus, O., on Saturday, 10th inst. He had been in the employ of Jacob Zollinger, for some years. The verdict of the coroner's inquest was, accidental drowning.

Colonel Montgomery arrived in Leavenworth on the 2d instant, to secure arms and equipments for his regiment. At night he made a speech to a large audience and gave a history of the Kansas troubles, all of which he saw and part of which he was, vindicating the course of himself and those who acted with him. He stated, according to a report in the "Times," that one man had been hung by his followers for pursuing slaves on Kansas soil, and that they would not permit slave-catching in their neighborhood. He referred to the war and to slavery, and intimated pretty strongly that one ought to do away with the other, discussing the question of the abolition of slavery, and replying to many of the arguments against it.

John Johnson (colored), employed by Thomas White, of West Chester, as a teamster, was run over on the 10th inst., in Wilmington, Del., and had one of his legs considerably injured. He was hauling a large mill-shaft, when he attempted to get off the shafts, on which he was riding, when his foot slipped and he fell, the fore wheel of the wagon passing over one leg above the knee. It is thought by the physician that his leg is not broken, but somewhat splintered.

A colored woman, named Anna Spencer, wife of the late Rev. Peter Spencer, who resided at the corner of Tenth and French streets, Wilmington, Del., for the last fifty years, died on Saturday, the 10th inst., who was aged 102 years. She experienced good health until a short time previous to her disease.

A colored man named Frank Johnson, son-in-law to Jenny Dix, was dreadfully torn by a dog, on the 14th instant, at Albany. The animal seized Johnson by the left forearm, and sunk his teeth deep into the flesh. The wounds inflicted are of a serious nature. The injured man was conveyed to the office of Dr. Smith, where his wounds were dressed.

On the 14th instant, a colored boy, named Calvin Thomas, aged thirteen years, in attempting to jump off a car, on the Reading Railroad train, near the Columbia bridge, fell, and the wheels passing over his legs crushed them in a shocking manner. The unfortunate boy was conveyed to the Penn Hospital, where he died about half-past seven o'clock in the evening.

James Brown, a colored man, committed suicide on 12th inst., at Indianapolis, taking three ounces of laudanum. Brown had been recently with one of the Indiana regiments in the capacity of cook, and had returned in a despondent condition on account it is supposed, of the fix his country was in.

A colored woman named Julia Hill, was arrested on the 13th inst., at Baltimore, upon the charge of harboring a runaway slave, the property of Mr. James Logue, No. 249 Eutaw street. She was taken before Justice Logan, who committed her to jail.

EXCITEMENT IN LEXINGTON MARKET.—Some excitement was raised in the Lexington market yesterday morning, by a colored boy named Abe, who sells wrapping paper in the market, being knocked down by Mr. L. A. Lell, huckster in the market. It appears that Abe, who is nearly stone blind, is in the habit of using very profane language when he is spoken to, and has been taken to task several times for so doing. In this case he ran against a lady, and turned around and struck her, when Mr. Lell remonstrated with him, whereupon he used very insulting language to him, and was knocked down by Mr. L. They were both taken before Justice Logan, who held Lell to keep the peace, and committed Abe in default of payment of the fine—but afterwards released him in consideration of his affliction, with an admonition to be more circumspect in his language.—Baltimore "Clipper," Aug. 17th, 1861.

True eloquence consists in saying all that is necessary, and nothing more.

CAMP MEETINGS,

AT JERUSALEM, L. I. MR. EDITOR:—A grand union camp meeting was held at the above named place on the 18th. I visited it, and found everything in a very commendable condition. The Rev. J. Long has charge of the camp, and is assisted by the following named preachers, together with others whose names I did not learn: J. M. Myers, P. C. Costar, and J. Washington.

At half-past 10 o'clock, A. M., the Rev. Mr. Myers preached a very eloquent sermon. His text may be found in Genesis, 7th chap. ver. 8. ! At half-past 2, P. M., the Rev. Mr. Long addressed the assemblage from the text "For unto us a child is born," &c., 9th chap. 6th ver. Isiah.

At 4 o'clock the Rev. P. C. Costar preached. His text may be found in Acts, 16th chap., and at the 30th verse.

The sermons were all very fine, and commanded the undivided attention of the vast audience. Everything passed off very pleasantly. The Rev. Mr. Washington was to preach in the evening, but I could not stay to hear him. There was about 2500 persons present.

J. A. T.

P. S.—A camp meeting will be held on the old camping ground, Flushing, commencing on the 22d inst., Rev. J. M. Myers, pastor in charge.

MARRIED.

REMSEN—GAVERN.—In Williamsburgh, on Wednesday August 14th, 1861, by Rev. Jas. Hamilton, Henry Remsen of Newtown, L.I. to Miss Mary M. Gavern, of Ridgewood, L.I.

BOWMAN—DOUGHTY.—In New York city, on Sunday evening 18th inst., by Rev. Wm. J. Alston, Mr. Richard Bowman to Mrs. Mary Doughty, both of New York city.

THOMAS—PERKINS.—In Newport, R. I., on Monday Aug. 19th, by Rev. Geo. A. Rue, T. C. Thomas to Miss Louisa Perkins.

DIED.

THATCHER.—In New Canaan, Aug. 3d, Nelson Thatcher, formerly of Danbury, aged 57 years.

CORNISH.—In Philadelphia, Aug. 2nd, Sarah, eldest daughter of James and Mary Cornish, aged 23 years.

LEE.—Mrs. Sarah Maria Lee, wife of Alex. Lee, departed this life on Sunday the 18th inst., at 10 o'clock, A. M., after a lingering illness of 19 months and 11 days, which she bore with Christian fortitude, aged 44 years and 7 months. She became a member of Zion's M. E. Church, Williamsburgh, when under the [illegible] Rev. Edward Matthews, in 1857, and has been a faithful and constant member [illegible] illness, and while ill she received the [illegible] per a number of times.

Her funeral took place on Tuesday, [illegible] from her late residence, 288 South 4th [illegible] attended by a large concourse of friends and acquaintances. The Rev. M. Manning preached the Sermon from the 116th Psalm and 15th verse, "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

Dear sister sleep in quietude.

"Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly,
While the nearer waters roll;
While the tempest still is high.
Hide me, O my Saviour, hide,
'Till the storm of life is past;
Safe into thy haven guide,
O receive my soul at last."

[illegible] M.

Special Notices.

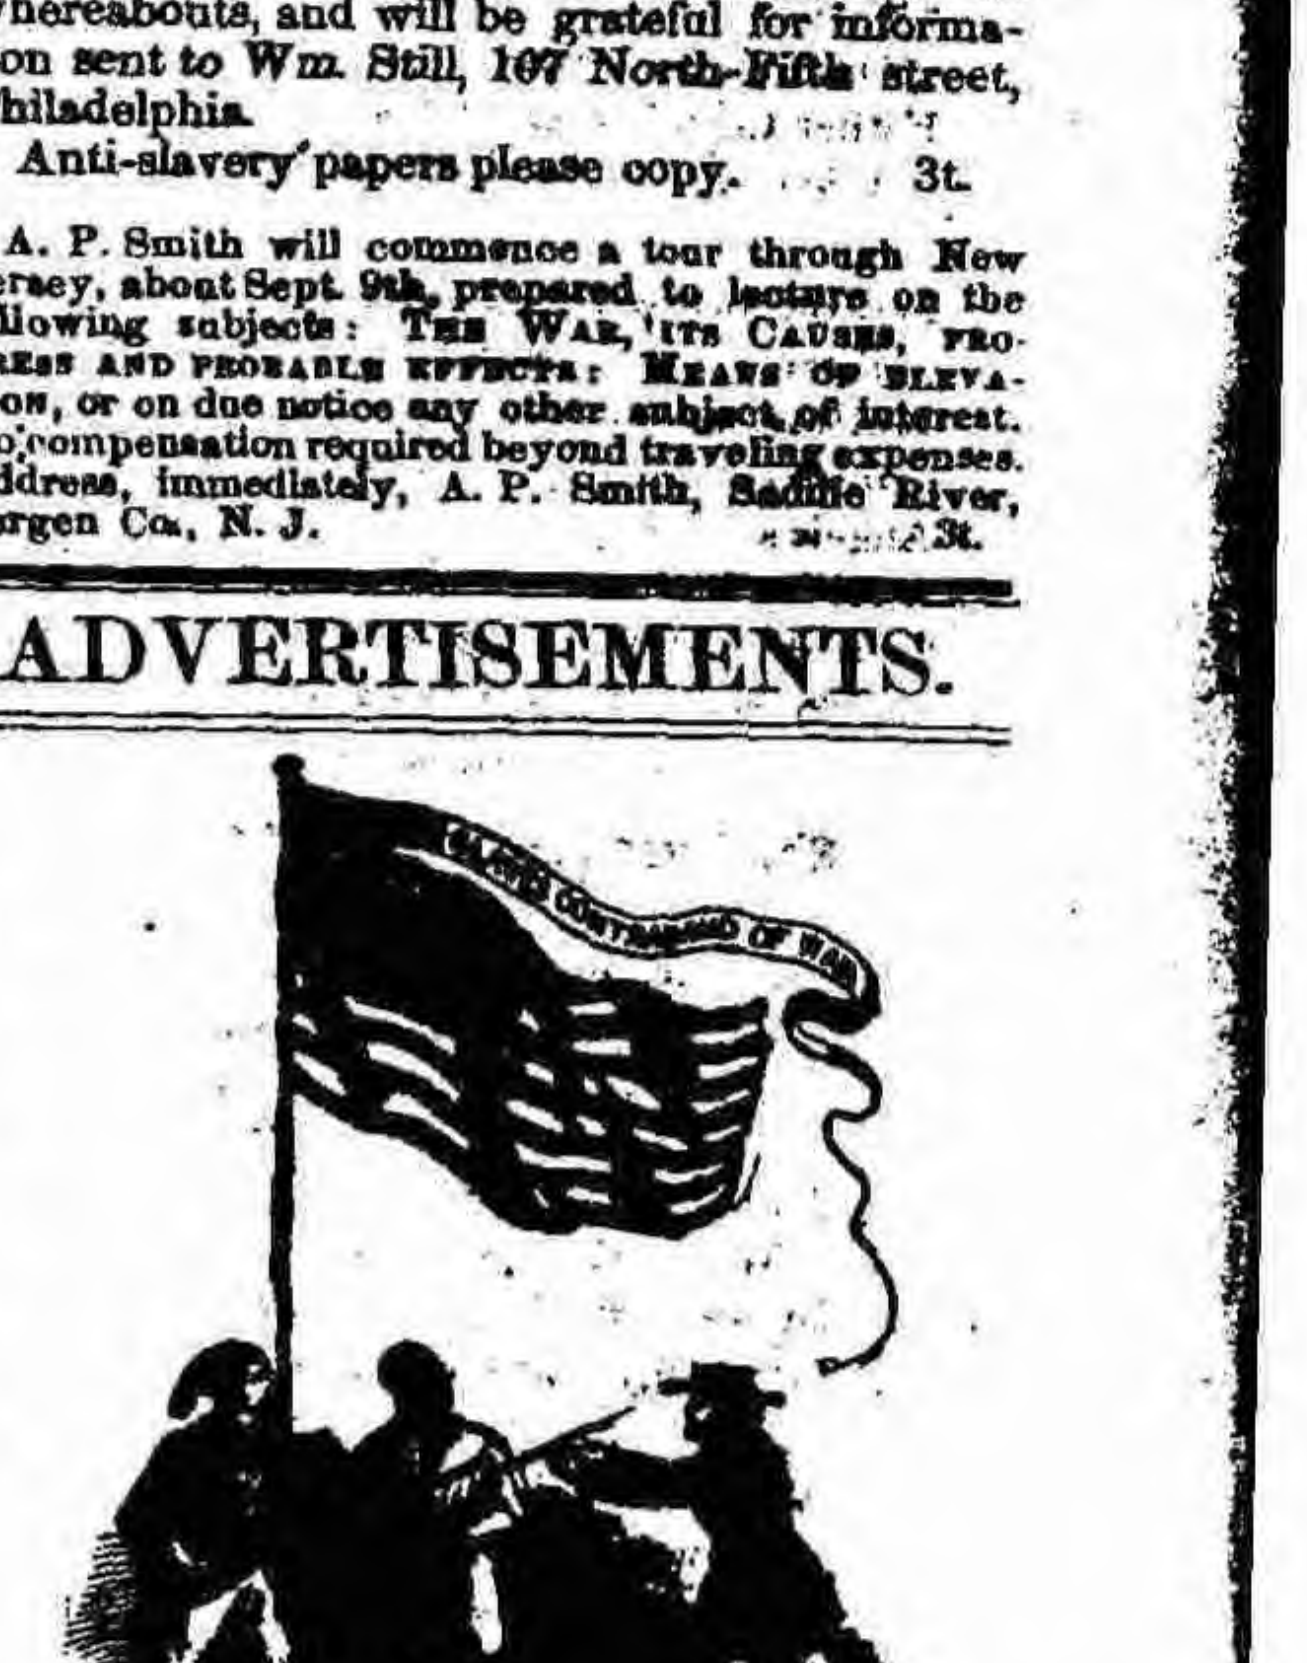
The Members and Congregation of Seventh Avenue Presbyterian Church will celebrate the birth-day of their Pastor, in the Lecture Room of said church, on Monday evening, Sept. [illegible], 1861, at 8 o'clock, by a Festival. Admittance 25 cts.

INFORMATION WANTED in regard to Alexander or Sandy Hogan, son of Betsey Hogan. He left the service of Mr. Jenkins in Baltimore, in June, 1859, and came to the North to solicit money to purchase the freedom of his wife. He is believed to have been in Birmingham, N. Y., about five weeks ago. Skin light brown. An aged mother is anxious to ascertain his whereabouts, and will be grateful for information sent to Wm. Still, 107 North-Fifth street, Philadelphia.

Anti-slavery papers please copy. 3t.

A. P. Smith will commence a tour through New Jersey, about Sept. 9th, prepared to lecture on the following subjects: THE WAR, ITS CAUSES, PROGRESS AND PROBABLE EFFECTS: MEANS OF ELEVATION, or on due notice any other subject of interest. No compensation required beyond traveling expenses. Address, immediately, A. P. Smith, Saddle River, Bergen Co., N. J. 3t.

ADVERTISEMENTS.



THE ZOUAVE AND SLAVE ENVELOPE, Price per thousand $5; per hundred 60 cents; packages of 25 each, 20 cents.

Orders should be addressed

THOS. HAMILTON
48 Beekman Street, N. Y.

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION. THE UNDERSIGNED respectfully announces that he is now prepared to give instruction in the ART OF SINGING. He will be at home at 187 Navy Street, Brooklyn, on MONDAY EVENING, and at ZION CHURCH, N. Y., on THURSDAY EVENING, of each week. Ladies or Gentlemen desiring instruction, will please apply immediately. Singing schools taught and private instruction given on moderate terms.

3tf. ROBT. HAMILTON,

PRIVATE BOARDING. MRS. SARAH A. Tilmon, 120th st., between 3 & 4 Avs. Harlem, would most respectfully beg leave to say that she is prepared, to take and provide with comfortable rooms, a few first class boarders, on reasonable terms.

N. B. Instruction given to young Ladies in Oriental wax and hair work, Landscaping &c., For terms, apply at 70 E. 13th. St., 3tf.

NEW SAILOR'S HOME. CHARLES M. FORTES, has opened a pleasant home for Seamen, at 26 MULBERRY STREET, N. Y., Seamen will find this a very desirable house, as it is in a central location, and every provision made for their comfort.

Boarding by the day or week. Terms moderate. 31y

TILMON'S AGENCY. THIS IS THE oldest establishment, in this city, for colored employment. Remember we are approaching a trying winter, so that all who want to get a good home for the winter, had better apply next month: For September is the time. L. TILMON, Proprietor.

70 E. 13th, 1 door E. of 4th, Av., 3t

MRS. E. CLAKE, IS HAPPY TO ANNOUNCE to her friends and the public, that she has opened her new BOARDING HOUSE, and will be very thankful for their patronage, at No. 66 SULLIVAN STREET, NEW YORK. 4-1t

DENTISTRY.

BEAUTIFUL ARTIFICIAL SETS OF TEETH on gold or silver plate on the most improved style. All other Surgical operations, performed to entire satisfaction, on very moderate terms by G. H. GRICE, Surgeon Dentist.

79 Thompson St., N. Y.

MRS. E. LEONARD,
FASHIONABLE
DRESS MAKER,
25 SULLIVAN STREET, NEW YORK.
Receives monthly the latest Paris Fashions.
3tf.

BOARDING AND LODGING

By [illegible] West 30th Street, New York. This house is very pleasantly situated in a very healthy and convenient part of the city.

Boarding for Ladies,	$3,50
" " Gentlemen,	3,00
Lodging per week,	75

y13t.

JAMES R. W. LEONARD,
CARD AND JOB PRINTER,
219 CENTRE STREET, NEW YORK.

APARTMENTS TO LET. ENQUIRE AT 207 Wooster Street, N. Y. tf.

THE BEST DRESSING FOR THE HAIR during warm weather, is White's vegetable extract. For Sale at 19 Sullivan and 40 Grand Sts., 2 tf.

BOARDING AND LODGING ON THE EAST Side. Mrs. Gant, can accommodate a few Ladies and Gentlemen, at her residence 183 Suffolk, Street. Terms very moderate. a10 1y.

BROWN'S POPULAR RESORT.

The undersigned takes the privilege to inform his Friends and the public generally that as he has recently fitted up his SALOON anew, he is now prepared to furnish them with

Ice Cream, Fruit, and other Delicacies.

BENJ. F. BROWN,
70 Bleecker St.
between Broadway & Crosby St. 4t.

WARRANTED TO CURE A HEADACHE in 10 minutes, White's Vegetable extract. For sale at 56 West Broadway, and cor. Gold and Frankfort Sts. 1 tf.

Poetry.

THE DAWN OF REDEMPTION.

BY JAMES G. CLARK.

See them go forth like the floods to the ocean.
Gathering might from each tide mountain and glen.
Wilder and deeper the tide of devotion
Rolls up to God from the bosoms of men.
Here the great multitude, mingling in chorus,
Groan as they gaze from their crimes to the sky,
"Father the midnight of death gathers o'er us,
When will the dawn of redemption draw nigh?"

"Look on us wanderers, sinful and lowly,
Struggling with grief and temptation, below,
Thine is the goodness o'er everything holy,
Thine is the mercy to pity our woe,—
Thine is the power to cleanse and restore us
Spotless and pure as the angels on high.
Father the midnight of death gathers o'er us,
When will the dawn of redemption drawn nigh?"

Gray hair and golden youth, matron and maiden,
Lovers of mammon and followers of fame,
All with the same solemn burden are laden,
Lifting their souls to that One Mighty Name,
"Wild is the pathway that surges before us,
On the broad waters the black shadows lie,
Father the midnight of death gathers o'er us.
When will the dawn of redemption draw nigh?"

Lo! the vast depth of futurity's ocean
Heaves with Jehovah's mysterious breath!
Mortals press on—while the deep is in motion,
Jesus is walking the waters of death;
Angels are mingling with men in the chorus,
Rising like incense from earth to the sky,
"Father, the billows grow brighter before us,
Heaven, with its mansions eternal draw nigh?"

Shall we know Each Other There.

When we hear the music ringing
Through the bright celestial dome,
When sweet angels voices singing,
Gladly bid us welcome home
To the land of ancient story,
Where the spirit knows no care,
In the land of light and glory,
"Shall we know each other there?"

When the holy angels meet us,
As we go to join their band,
Shall we know the friends that greet us,
In the glorious spirit land?
Shall we see their black eyes shining
On us as in days of yore?
Shall we feel their dear arms twining
Fondly round us, as before?

Yes, my earth-worn soul rejoices,
And my weary heart grows light,
For the thrilling angel voices,
And the angel faces bright,
That shall welcome us in heaven,
Are the loved of long ago,
And to them 'tis kindly given
Thus their mortal friends to know.

Oh! ye weary, sad and lone ones,
Droop not, faint not by the way;
Ye shall join the loved and lost ones
In the land of perfect day.
Harp strings touched by angel fingers,
Murmur in my raptured ear.
Evermore their sweet tone lingers—
"We shall know each other there.,,

The Weakest Point of the South.

But the weakest of all the weak points of the South, as it was from the beginning and as it will be to the end of time, is Slavery. The slaves in Virginia are treated with greater rigor now than they formerly were; the ferociousness engendered by war will render still more fierce the brutal instincts of the Southern overseer and slavedealer. The sauciness and independence of the colored man increases in proportion as he approaches the boundaries of freedom He is less docile in North than in South Carolina; in Virginia he becomes more and more restless; this restlessness increases in Washington and expands itself into sauciness in Baltimore; into positive impertinence in Philadelphia, until in the highest ranges of freedom in Massachusetts it develops itself into an absolute capacity for the useful enjoyment of liberty. The want of money in Virginia fearfully increases the restlessness of the slave, as he constantly trembles for fear of being separated from his wife and children, and of being sold at auction and converted into cash by his needy owner.

The consciousness of this gigantic weakness, and the monstrous fear and cupidities which cluster around it, play an ominous part in the hatred of the Yankee. The ladies of the South look forward with horror to the day, when they will have, like other women, to live by their own honest industry, or by that of their husbands and fathers. Beneath that glow of indignation which frowns upon the Northern invader, lurks the hideous sense of self and pelf, and the brilliant eyes of those beautiful planters' daughters are flashed into wild fury by a womanly intuition of the real cause of the war; by a prescience of the day which shall strike down the planters' whip, and by loosening the fetters of the slave, deprive them of their lady-like ease, and compel the father and husband and brother to do, as the men in the North do, work for their living, and cease to keep their fellow-men in bondage. In connection with this formidable enemy of the South, I cannot forbear quoting the remark of a shrewd Virginian politician. He said: "Our purpose is distinct. We fight for the integrity and independence of our soil; for our national independence. Our object is tangible; but that of the North is not. The North fights for an abstraction. It fights for the restoration of a Union which has ceased to exist, and which can never be restored except by force of arms. Europe understands this and will recognize us, were it only to put an end to the civil war, and to put an end to the destruction of prosperity which must react upon her own prosperity. Europe sees no object in the Northern war, as at present waged against us; but if the North were to make the war a downright war for the abolition of Slavery, the prejudices of the Old world against that institution would militate against us, retard recognition, and, above all, it would inspire the Northern army with a moral foundation for the prosecution of the war."—Correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune.

APPALLING PHENOMENA AT SEA.

Old sailors accustomed to ocean life within the tropics, have many startling stories to tell of dangers incurred from sudden and unlooked for tempest, but we have never read anything quite equal to the following description of a storm by a volcanic eruption. It is given as a true narrative in the "Western Christian Advocate," by D. C. Wright, and we suppose therefore, is reliable:

It was a night of pitchy darkness. At four bells in the first watch and not a breath of air was moving, and the drenched sails, wet by the afternoon and evening rains, hung heavily from the yards, or flapped against the masts and rigging as the ship rolled lazily on the long leaden swells of the Pacific Ocean. A number of days passed without an observation of the sun or stars, and they had to run by "dead reckoning," and were not, therefore, sure of their latitude or longitude. They might be nearer danger than they thought. The captain had gone below at eight bells, but feeling troubled about the portentous appearance of the weather, was unable to sleep, and was on deck again, walking nervously fore and aft, now looking on this side and then on the other side of the quarter-deck, looking anxiously out into the darkness, then aft, then at the compass, then at the barometer which hung in the cabin gangway. Round and round went the ship, heedless of her helm, and the mercury told the same tale it had told hours before. In vain did the eyes of anxious men peer into the darkness; only inky blackness met their straining gaze everywhere. Thus matters stood till six bells, when the mercury began to fall suddenly. The quick jerking voice of the captain was then heard.

"Mr. Smally you may take in the light sails."

"Ay, ay, sir;" and stepping to the mainmast he called out, "For'ard there," and was immediately answered, "For'ard sir." "Stand by the top-gallant and the flying jib halyards."

In a moment he heard the report, "Ready sir."

"Let go the halyards and clew down; let go the sheets and clew up; that'll do; now jump up and furl them; be lively lads."

While this was going on the captain took another look at the barometer, and found the mercury going down fast. Thoroughly aroused now, he caught his speaking-trumpet from the beckets and sung out, "Hold on there; down from aloft, every man of you; call all hands." Down came the men again. "All hands ahoy," was called with great strength of voice at both the cabin and the forecastle gangways, and then followed one of those scenes which defies such description as would make it intelligible to a landsman, but which any sailor readily understands. The top-sails were close reefed, a reef taken in the mainsail, the jib, and flying-jib, and all the light sails were furled, and the ship made ready for the expected gale. But yet no breath of air had been felt moving, while an unnatural stillness and heaviness of the atmosphere was observed by all. Several of the seamen saw a purple streak suddenly appear right ahead of the ship, and called out, "Here it comes sir."

"Where?" said the captain.

"Right ahead, sir."

"Hard a port your helm."

"Brace round the yards."

"Ay, ay sir."

The yards were braced round, and the ship was got ready to receive the expected blast on the larboard track. That dreadful streak of clouds grew almost crimson; and and there was heard, what they thought was the heavy roar of the gale, and every man seemed to hold his breath awaiting the shock. Good men and courageous sailors were on that ship's deck but they shrunk from the terrible onslaught like frightened children. When God speaks in those fearful storms. His voice is awful to the ear, and many a strong man has quailed before it. And the storm itself is scarcely more trying to one's nerves than the moment before it strikes, while the men wait in dreadful suspense.

Thus those men waited until the minutes lengthened into hours, and the only change perceptible was in the deepening color of that lowering cloud of crimson light. At length eight bells told that four o'clock had arrived, daylight was looked for as those men in the ship with Paul looked for it when they "wished for day." But the struggling light of day seemed only to reveal the thickness of the darkness to the wondering vision. Just at daylight their ears were stunned with successive quick reports, louder than whole broadsides from a hundred-gun ship; the whole heavens were lighted up with fiery red light; the ocean was stirred from her profound depth; great waves, without any visible cause, ran in the most awful commotion, now striking together and throwing the white foam high in the air, then parting, to meet again in fearful embrace as before; a school of sperm whales ran athwart the ship's bows, making every exertion to escape from the strangely troubled water: within a few cable lengths of the ship an immense column of water was thrown mast-head high, and fell back again with a roar like Niagara; a deep mournful noise like the echo of thunder among mountain caverns, was constantly heard, and none could tell whence it came; the noble ship was tossed and shaken like a plaything—"Great God, have mercy upon us!" cried officers and men. "What is this? What is next? Is it the day of judgment?" The royal Psalmist described them accurately. "They reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man, and are at their wit's end."

Soon the mystery was solved, when right before their eyes, about one league from them, there arose the rough sides of a mountain out of the yielding water and reared its head high in the air; then from its summit flames burst forth, and melted lava ran like a river down the declivity, and fell like a cascade of flame into the seething ocean. It was a birth-throe of nature, and an island was born which was miles in circumference.

Two years afterwards I sailed right over that place, but the placid waters gave no intimation that an island had been there; yet no man had said that he saw the death and burial of that land whose birth I have thus chronicled. "They that go down to the sea in ships that do business in the great waters; these see the works of the Lord, and His wonders in the deep."

☞ Prosperity is no just scale; adversity is the only balance to weigh friends in.

A REMINISCENCE OF A LITTLE BIT OF CHURCH HISTORY, AND ITS SEQUEL.

A few years ago, when the minions of James Buchanan, aided by that weak old man to the extent of his official power, were endeavoring to force the infamous Lecompton measures through Congress, and when the men who are now in rebellion to the government were striving to force slavery upon the people of Kansas, and sowing the wind that has since ripened into the whirlwind which is now being harvested, a brave and God-fearing young minister occupied the pulpit of the aristocratic Church of the Epiphany, Fifteenth and Chestnut street. The Rev. Dudley A. Tyng, deeming it to be his duty to denounce national crime and offenses against the religion of humanity, even though they were committed in the cause of slavery, preached a sermon upon "Our Country's Troubles," during which he committed the then unpardonable offense of telling the simple truth. The sermon caused a great sensation, and excited the ire of the eminent doughfaces of the congregation. One very respectable member of the vestry stood up in his pew and denounced the sermon and its author during its delivery, and another, who had then a large interest in the peculiar institution, put himself at the head of a faction to drive the brave young minister from his pulpit. This same pious slaveholder (Pierce Butler) afterward sold out to the highest bidder his stock of black chattels, and subsequent to the sale he bid for a cheap reputation for generosity by giving each chattel a bright new quarter as his or her share of the thirty pieces he or she had "brought" under the hammer. The pious slave-dealer and his party prevailed, and Dudley A. Tyng was driven from his pulpit for daring to tell the truth. The Rev. William Otis Prentiss of South Carolina, a holder of slaves and a warm admirer of the institution, was chosen as his successor, and he preached kid-gloved-and-knock-softly-religion to his hearers, taking good care to smother the truth, when it was in danger of giving offense to the highly respectable portion of the congregation who did not follow the brave Tyng to the Church of the Covenant, which he founded, but which he did not long adorn, having met with a sad accident that resulted in his untimely death.

There have been many political sermons preached, not only in the Church of the Epiphany, but in all the other churches of the city and the country, since the night when poor Dudley Tyng had the courage to tell the truth to the aristocratic slave-dealer of twenty-five-cent-piece dispensing memory. On last Sunday night a scene was witnessed in this very Church of the Epiphany that brought back to the memory of Dudley Tyng's martyrdom, and which seems almost providential in its retributive character.

Mr. Prentiss some time since returned to his native South Carolina, and Mr. Cracraft, the present rector, was his successor. On last Sunday evening, at the close of his sermon, Mr. Cracraft referred to the fact that during the present week he had paid a visit to the city of Washington, and while there he had ascertained that among the rebel prisoners taken at the battle of Bull Run, the Sunday previous, by a Connecticut regiment, was a young South Carolinian officer, who proved to be a son of the identical Rev. Mr. Prentiss. Mr. Cracraft continued his remarks by declaring that he wished the reverend father of the young traitor was in the same safe keeping, for he (Mr. Cracraft,) had obtained, while at the seat of government, the most complete and incontrovertible evidence that while he (Mr. Prentiss,) was occupying the pulpit of the Epiphany, in Philadelphia, he was in correspondence with Southern traitors, and that he was actively engaged in plotting treason against the government. Mr. Cracraft did not mince words, nor did he spare traitors or those who sympathize with them. Mr. Cracraft, although occupying the same pulpit from which poor Tyng was ejected for doing what he conceived to be a solemn duty, but a few years since, can now speak the simple truth fearlessly. The day of manly truckling to smooth-tongued treason has gone by, and the wounded spirit of Dudley Tyng would have been appeased had it been present in his old Church on last Sunday night, and known the history of the events which have taken place since it winged its way upward from the mangled form of its earthly receptacle.—Philadelphia Dispatch.

OUR FAT CONTRIBUTOR IN THE HOME GUARD.

The moment the flag was threatened large bodies of men were called upon to rally in its defence. Being a large bodied man, I rallied, and enrolled myself with the Home Guards. The drill is very severe on me this hot weather, although I am constantly allowed an attendant with a fan and a pitcher of ice water.

I am constantly reminded that one of the first requirements of a soldier is to throw out his chest and draw in his stomach. Having been burned out several times while occupying rooms in an attic, throwing out my chest, but by what system of practice could I ever hope to draw in my stomach? I can't "dress up"—it's no use of trying. If my vest buttons are in line I am far in the rear, and if I toe the mark a fearful bulge indicates my position. (There is no room for argument in regard to my sentiments—everybody can see at a glance where I stand.) One evening we had a new drill sergeant who was near-sighted Running his eyes down the line, he exclaimed sharply:

"What is that man doing in the ranks with a bass drum?"

He pointed at me, but I hadn't any drum—it was the surplus stomach that I couldn't draw in.

I am the butt of numberless jokes, as you may well suppose. They have got a story in the Guards that when I first heard the command, "Order Arms!" I dropped my musket and taking out my note-book began to draw an order on the Governor for what arms I wanted. They say I ordered Winan's steam gun, with a pair of Dahlgren howitzers for the arms! Base fabricators! My ambition never extended beyond a rifled cannon, and they knew it.

Although in respect to size I belong to the "heaviest," my preference is for the light infantry service. My knapsack is marked light infantry. One evening the spectators seemed convulsed about something, and my comrades tittered by platoons whenever my back was turned. It was all a mystery to me until I laid off my knapsack. Some wretch had erased two final letters, and I had been parading all the evening labelled LIGHT INFANT. The above is one of the thousand annoyances to which I am subjected, and nothing but my consuming patriotism could ever induce me to submit to it. I rallied at the call of my country, and am not to be put out by the rallying of my comrades.

I overheard a spectator inquire of the drill sergeant one day:

"Do you drill the whole of him at once?"

"No," he returned, in an awful whisper, "I drill him by squads!"

I would have drilled him if I had a bayonet.

Specifications have been published in regard to my uniform, and contractors advertised for. The making will be let out to the lowest responsible bidder. In case the Guards are ordered to take the field, a special commissary will be detailed to supply my rations. That reminds me of a harrowing incident. On last drill night an old farmer, who dropped in to see us drill, took me aside, and said he wanted to sell me a yoke of powerful oxen.

"My ancient agriculturalist," said I, smiling at his simplicity, "I have no use for oxen."

"Perhaps not at present," quoth he, "but if you go to the war you will want them."

"For what?" said I, considerably annoyed.

"Want 'em to draw your rations!"

The Guards paid me a delicate compliment at the last meeting. They elected me "Child of the Regiment," with rank of Corpulant, and the pay of chief "Blowyer." I was offering my thanks in a neat and appropriate speech, when a reporter who was present assured me it was no use—he had the whole thing in type, speech and all, and I could read it in the evening paper. He said they had kept a neat and appropriate speech standing in type continually. I got his views and held my peace.

Yours for the Union, including the Stars, also the Stripes,
FAT CONTRIBUTOR.

Cleveland Plaindealer..

HOW TO AVOID THE DANGER OF LIGHTNING.—During thunder storms, persons in houses should sit or lie in some place as far distant as possible from the chimney, and the most exposed part of the walls—the middle of the room if it is large, is the safest locality. Sailors on the sea should keep as far from the masts as possible, and farmers in the fields should never seek shelter under trees. Horizontal strokes of lightning sometimes take place and several persons have been struck while sitting at an open window during thunder storms. Every window of a room in which persons are sitting, in such cases should be closed; a flash of the fluid, which would pass through an open window into an apartment, will be conducted down through the floor and wall to the earth if the window is shut.

FERGUSON'S IDEA OF A SPIRIT.—Mr. Ferguson was a tailor, and being married, was, of course, henpecked. All married tailors are. One day he excited the wrath of Mrs. F., who assailed him with a broomstick, and would have battered him had he not run under the bed. The broomstick was too short to reach him, and he gathered courage.

"Mr. Ferguson," said irate womanhood, "come out from under that bed."

"Mrs. Ferguson," replied he with firmness, "I will not come out from under this bed."

"Mr. F., if you know what is good for you, come out from under that bed."

"Mrs. F., threats are useless; so long as I have the spirit of a man, I will not come out from under this bed."

BARNEY DUGAN, you swear positively that you saw the prisoner stab the woman in the fracas?"

"Sur?"

"You swear that you saw the prisoner stab the woman in the fracas?" repeated the alderman.

"No sur I did not say that at all yer honor."

"What, you a moment ago not only said but swore to it. Will you repeat now what you did see?"

"Yes sur, I will. I saw Tim, there, stab the ould woman with a carving knife in the stummick, but a devil a bit did I see him stab her in the fracas, yer honor?"

THE wife of a poor English laborer was breathing her last wishes. "I say, William, you'll see the old sow don't kill her young ones?" "Ay, ay' wife, set thee good." "And I say, William, you'll see Lizzie goes to school regular?" "Ay, ay, wife, set thee good." "And I say, William, you'll see that Tommy's breeches are mended against he goes to school again?" "Ay, ay, wife, set thee good." "And I say, William, you'll see that I am laid proper in the yard?" William grew impatient, "Now never thee mind them things, wife; I'll see to them all; you just go on with your dying."

A BITE—While walking down B——— street, last Sunday evening, "the subscriber" came up with two boys, aged respectively ten and fifteen years. The younger one carried an apple in his hand, and the elder one was using all his eloquence to obtain "just one bite of it."

"Well," said the younger one, finally, "I'll give you jes' one bite; but don't you take more'n jes' one bite."

The larger boy took the apple, opened a mouth that would have been creditable to a hundred-and-fifty-pound catfish, leaving a very small share on the other side.

"Jim," said the little one, looking up at the operation with astonishment, "you take the apple, and gave me the bite!"

THE editor of one of the down-east papers gives an account of his once having for many years been haunted by a lounger, who sat there so long that when he died his shadow was found fixed upon the wall.

A PRUDENT man advised his servant to put by his money for a rainy day. In a few weeks, the master inquired how much of his wages he had saved. "Faith, none at all," said he; "it rained yesterday, and it all went."

A FARMER living on the line of the Troy and Boston Railroad stopped a passenger train, on Thursday last, by waving his hat. "What's the matter?" screamed the engineer. "Matter!" said the farmer, "nothing as I know of." "Then what did you swing your hat for?" said the engineer. "O lord!" said the farmer, "why I was only fanning myself."

CONSIDERATE.—In a village not a hundred miles from Cork, a medical gentleman was one night disturbed by repeated tappings at his door, and on getting up found a laboring man soliciting his immediate attendance for his wife.

"Have you been long here?" asked the doctor.

"Indeed I have," answered Pat.

"But why didn't you ring the night-bell?"

"Och, because I was afraid of disturbing your honor!"

VALUABLE VOICE.—A seedy looking fellow, out a knees, shoulders and elbows, was sounding his voice and running it up and down, putting in all the semi-demi quavers and crochets from A to Z.

"What do you think of that, old boy, eh?" said the man of voice to a fusty old cock, looking at him very closely, "I can make anything out of my voice."

"Can you?" said the old fellow; "well, then I would try and make a pair of boots and breeches out of it, if I were you."

The fellow mizzled.

NO SUPPER EATER.—"Reflect, my brethren," exhorted a chaplain, "that whosoever falls this day in battle, sups to-night in Paradise." The fight began, the ranks wavered, the chaplain took to his heels, when a soldier reproachfully referred him to the promised supper in Paradise. "True, my son, true," said the chaplain, "but I never eat supper."

A COTEMPORARY describing a dance at a country village in his neighborhood, said: "The gorgeous strings of glass beads glistened on the heaving bosoms of the village belles, like polished rubies resting on the delicate surface of warm apple-dumplings!" Did you ever?

VERY CONSCIENTIOUS.—"I sells peppermints on Sunday," said an old lady who kept a candy shop, "because they carries them to church and keeps awake to hear the sermon; but if you wants pickled limes, you must come on week days. Theyr'e secular commodities."

☞ At a hotel table one day, one boarder remarked to his neighbor: "This must be a very healthy place for chickens!"

"Why?" asked the other.

"Because I have never seen any dead ones about."

A live Yankee being awakened by the captain of a steamboat with the announcement that he musn't occupy his berth with his boots on, replied, 'Oh, the buggs won't hurt 'em, I guess: they are an old pair, let 'em rip.'

"O, Johnny, I'm shocked to see you playing with your top, you should leave toys at home on Sunday." Johnny,—"Then why do you come out with your hoops?"

Mrs. Partington says that the only way to prevent steamboat explosions is to make the enginner "bile their water on shore." In her opinion, all the "bustin' is done by cooking the steam on board."

The chairman of a political meeting, seeing a rowdy who was raising his arm to throw a rotten egg at him, bawled out, "Sir, your motion is out of order."

MISCELLANEOUS.

MRS. WINSLOW'S

SOOTHING SYRUP.

Every mother should be prepared to act in the capacity of both nurse and physician to her children: she can, if she will, discharge these duties much better than any one she can employ. If she does not, she ought to know that there is a Medicine prepared by an old nurse and female physician which has stood the test of many, many years, and is the most perfect thing on earth for children teething; it also cures Wind Colic, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, and is sure to regulate the bowels. We say to every mother, do not let your own prejudices, or the prejudices of others stand in the way of the relief that will be sure—yes, absolutely sure—to follow the use of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP certainly does, as the name implies, "soothe" the little sufferer into a quiet, natural sleep, from which it awakes invigorated and refreshed. And for the cure of diseases incident to the period of teething, such as Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Wind Colic, &c., we have never seen its equal.

We have always been, and still are, opposed to the practice of drugging infants. This article has no deleterious effects whatever, and from our own experience (we speak advisedly) we have every confidence in it, and can heartily recommend it to all mothers. Take our advice—use it—and you will as strongly recommend it to others as we have to you.

When we say that MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP acts like a charm, we do but reiterate the language of every person who ever used it for their children, for all diseases incident to the period of teething, such as Dysentery and Diarrhœa, Wind Colic and Cholera Infantum. It will produce quietude and rest, relieve all suffering, and the infant will awake invigorated and refreshed, and not with the dull and stupefying effects of preparations of opium.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the excruciating pain of cutting teeth? If so, go at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately—depend upon it; there is no mistake about it. There is not a mother on earth who has ever used it who will not tell you at once that it will regulate the bowels, and give rest to the mother and relief and health to the child, operating like magic. It is perfectly safe in all cases, and pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States.

During the thirty years of unprecedented and increasing popularity of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP, innumerable "CORDIALS" and other nostrums, prepared by pretended M.D.'s, have sprung up and lived but a mushroom existence, the SOOTHING SYRUP has been constantly increasing in popularity, and become a household word, and for the health of their children, by the use of her invaluable article.

THOUSANDS OF MOTHERS THANK
MRS. WINSLOW

PRICE 20 CENTS PER BOTTLE.

For sale by
THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St., N.Y.

[illegible] MONEY, AND LABOR [illegible]

BY USING

B. T. BABBITT'S

SUPERIOR [illegible]

CHEMICAL ERASIVE SOAP.

Made and improved by the Original Inventor of the German and Austrian Chemical Erasive or Detersive Soap, of which the real and genuine article has, since its first introduction to the American public, been most favorably known, as the Best and Cheapest Washing Soap in the market, and with the present improvement, which is not known to any other manufacturer, we CHALLENGE THE WORLD to produce a better article.

1. One pound of it will accomplish as much as three pounds of any other soap.

2. But one quarter the time and labor are required to do the same amount of washing, as with the best of family soap.

3. It does not injure the most delicate fabric; will tend to set the colors, and wash cleaner than any other soap in use.

4. Clothes need no boiling, and but little rubbing with the hands, thus avoiding their wear upon the wash-board.

5. Paints, Grease, Tar, and stains of every description vanish as by magic, before its wonderful, searching, erasive powers.

6. It is invaluable to Machinists, Printers, Painters, and all others using Inks, Oils, etc. for washing hands; it does not chap them (like other soaps,) but will cleanse and soften the skin.

7. It may be used in hard or soft water, and is adapted for use in all climates.

Put up in one pound bars, sixty bars in each box.

☞For sale by the bar or box by

THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman Street.

MEDICAL.

THE BEST MEDICINES IN THE WORLD!!!

The following invaluable medicines may be obtained of

THOMAS HAMILTON, 48 Beekman St.

DR. CLARKE'S

VEGETABLE SHERRY-WINE BITTERS,

Are composed of Sarsaparilla, Dock-root, Rheubarb, Thoroughwort, Dandelion, Prickly Ash, Bark, &c. they should be taken not only in the Spring, but at all seasons of the year, as they operate directly on the liver, removing from it all coating of morbid matter, and restoring it to its normal action; also opening the bile ducts, causing the requisite flow of bile so essential to good health. Their influence upon the kidneys, also, is advantageously felt; at the same time they operate upon the blood, cleansing it from all impurity or taint of any kind. Humors of long standing are eradicated from the blood, thereby speedily curing Jaundice, headache, weak stomach, sore eyes, nervousness, and other chronic diseases arising from impurity of the blood.

The palatableness of these bitters renders them agreeable to every one, and being composed entirely of vegetables, they may be used by all classes of people with safety.

Sold for the low price of 25 cents per pint bottle.

DR. CLARKE'S

SUGAR-COATED HERB PILLS.

These pills are made mostly from a valuable herb hat grows on the proprietor's farm.

Warranted to cure Bilious Stomach, Bilious Bowels, Bilious Colic, Bilious Fever, and all diseases which arise from a bilious state of the system viz. Jaundice, Headache, Heartburn, Sour Stomach Liver Complaint, Weak Stomach, Pain in the Stomach, Costiveness, Loss of Appetite, and a host, of diseases too numerous to mention, as their number is legion.

Warranted to cure diseases peculiar to the female sex

Warranted at all times safe and efficient.

Warranted for a gentle family physic not to have an equal in America, operating without pain.

Warranted not to contain calomel, aloes, gamboge colocynth, or other drastic poisonous drugs, which always do the system more hurt than good, and by their continued use are sure to cause a derangement of the liver, bring on costiveness, and its inevitable consequence, piles, and dyspepsia, and finally break down the constitution, and cause the victim to drag out a miserable existence. Touch not, taste not, handle not the wily poison. Your life is your own,—preserve it. Take a simple herb, sure in its effects, but safe and pleasant,—no wrenching pains, no ill effects, and made pleasant to take by a fine coat of sugar. Children love them, ladies admire them, fools and wise men cannot do without them, doctors prescribe them,—and every body takes them. Yes, every body; from the honest farmer and mechanic to the most learned philosopher. And why? Simply because they are good, excellently good; and will do you good.

PRICE, 25 CENTS PER BOX.

DR. CLARKE'S COUGH AND CROUP SYRUP.

It is the most wonderful, effective and extraordinary medicine for the lungs ever used by man. It is perfectly safe and pleasant to take, and gives relief immediately. Thousands have been cured by its use, and tens of thousands will be again. All who use it pronounce it to be the best lung remedy ever discovered. Common coughs and colds are dispelled by the use of only a few doses, and children can be cured of croup at once, if taken in its first stage. Long-standing diseases require perseverance, but a cure will be guaranteed No medicine before ever possessed such excellent healing and curative power for the lungs. It seems, with almost magic power, to dispel the most severe cases of cough and throat ail.

Vocalists and public speakers should not fail to keep a bottle on hand at all times. A small quantity taken occasionally renders the voice beautifully clear and the lungs extremely strong. Words cannot fully express the great benefit to be derived from the use of the world-renowned remedy. Delay not, but procure a bottle at once. Use it if needed, and if not, keep it till necessity requires its use, as all, sooner or later, are overtaken by some unpleasant affection of the lungs or throat.

PRICE, 25 CENTS PER BOTTLE.

BOOKS.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE ANGLO-AFRICAN MAGAZINE, BOUND.

PRICE.—In half Morocco $1,25; half Morocco, gilt edges, $1.50. Muslin, $1.00

CONTENTS:

EMBELLISHMENT.—Portrait of Alexander Dumas.
MUSIC.—By A. J. R. Connor.
Apology.
A Statistical View of the Colored Population of the United States, from 1790 to 1850.
African American Picture Gallery.—Anon.
American Caste and Common Schools,—by J. Holland Townsend.
A Review of Slavery and the Slave Trade,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
A Good Habit Recommended,—by Sarah M. Douglass.
A Chapter in the History of the African Slave Trade,—by Edward W. Blyden.
Anglo-Saxons and Anglo-Africans.—Anon.
A Word to Our People.
Blake; or the Huts of America,—by Martin R. Delany.
Books &c.
Civilization—Its Dependence on Physical Circumstances.
Colored American Patriots,—by Wm. C. Nell.
Comets,—by M. R. Delany.
Citizenship—by James McCune Smith.
Claude Brihndas De Salas,—Selected.
Communication from N. Y. Society for the Promotion of Education among Colored Children.
Chess.
Dumas—Alexander.
Effects of Emancipation in Jamaica, by Robert Campbell.
Fragments of Thought,—by D. A. Payne.
Fancy Sketches,—Anonymous.
Gone to God—Poetry—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
Intellectual Culture—by Robert Gordon.
In the Constitution of Man there exists a Religious Element,—by Robt. Gordon.
Lines—Poetry—by Grace A. Mapps.
Mrs. Partington and Mrs. Freshington.—Anon
Our Greatest Want,—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
Our Duty in the Conflict,—by J. Holland Townsend.
On the Fourteenth Query of Thos. Jefferson's [illegible] Virginia.
[illegible] Personality of the First Cause,—by [illegible]
[illegible] Brown's First Love.
[illegible] Anonymous.
[illegible] Freedom in Jamaica—by Robert [illegible]
The [illegible] of Planets—by M. R. Delany.
The German Invasion, by James M'Cune Smith
Tilda, by Mary [illegible] Cary.
[illegible] Coming [illegible]—by Wm. J. Wilson.
The Educational Wants of the Free Colored People, by Martin H. [illegible]
Thomas L. Jinnings.
The Teacher and his Pupil—Poetry—by Wm. J. Wilson.
Thoughts on Hayti, by James T. Holly.
The Successive Advances of Astronomy, by G. B. Vashon.
The Oberlin Wellington Rescue, by J. M. Langston.
[illegible] Shadows of Intemperance,—by [illegible]
The Dying Fugitive—Poetry—by Frances [illegible]
The Anglo-African and the African Slave Trade.
The Two Offers, by Frances Ellen Watkins.
The Reopening of the Slave Trade—Anonymous.
The First Colored Convention.
The Self-Redeeming Power of the Colored Races of the World,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
The Policy that we should Pursue,—by J. Holland Townsend.
The Education of the Colored People,—by Amos Gerry Beman.
The Great Conflict requires Great Faith,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
The Outbreak in Virginia.
The Sentinel of Freedom—Poetry,—by J. Sella Martin.
The Nat Turner Insurrection.
The Execution of John Brown.
The Anglo-African Magazine for 1860.
The Watering [illegible]—Anonymous.

Orders should be addressed to
THOMAS HAMILTON,
48 Beekman street,
New York.

PUBLICATIONS FOR SALE BY
THOMAS HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE ANGLO-AFRICAN MAGAZINE. Bound,—Price—In half Morocco, $1 25; half Morocco, gilt edges, $1.50; Muslin, $1.00. CONTENTS: Embellishments—Portrait of Alexander Dumas. Music by A. J. R. Conner. Articles by Bishop D. A. Payne, James M'Cune Smith, M. D., Prof. Geo. B. Vashon, Dr. Martin, R. Delany, Mrs. Sarah M. Douglass, Prof. Robert Campbell, Prof. Wm. J. Wilson, Rev. J. W. C. Pennington, D. D., Rev. J. Theo. Holly, Mrs. Frances Ellen Watkins Harper, Prof. M. H. Freeman, Rev. Edward W. Blyden, Rev. Robert Gorden, Prof. Chas. L. Reason, Mrs. M. A. Shadd Cary, Dr. James Fields, Rev. Amos Gerry Beman, Miss Grace A. Mapps, Rev. J. Sella Martin, Wm. C. [illegible], Esq. J. Mercer Langston, and J. Holland Townsend, Esq.

The Life of Captain John Brown.
The Liberator of Kansas, and the Hero of Harper's Ferry. By James Redpath. An elegant 12mo. volume of 480 pages, illustrated and embellished with a superb Steel Portrait of the Glorious Old Man. Price $1.00.

My Bondage and My Freedom.
By Fredrick Douglass. One vol., 12 mo., 464 pp. Illustrated. Price $1.00, postage 22 cts.

Life of Jermain W. Loguen.
The great Underground Railroad King. Price $1.00.

Th Martyrs and the Fugitive.
By the Rev. S H. Platt. A thrilling work on slavery and the slave-trade, detailing the capture of a family in Africa by the slave-dealers, their fearful journey to the coast, the horrors of the "middle passage," their sale in America, and subsequent martyrdom; the slavery of their son, his terrible sufferings and perilous escapes. Sent, postpaid, upon the receipt of 38 cts.

Twelve Years a Slave.
The Narrative of Solomon Northrup, a citizen of New York, kidnapped in Washington City in 1841 and rescued in 1853, from a cotton plantation near Red River, Louisiana. Seven Illustrations, 336 pp. 12mo. Price $1,00, postage paid.

Our National Charters.
For the Millions. Includin[illegible] stitution of 1787-9. 2. T[illegible] tion. 1787. 3. The Decla[illegible] 1776. 4. The Articles of [illegible] notes showing their bea[illegible] relative powers of the Sta[illegible] ments. Also a summary [illegible] ions, collected from the highest au[illegible] is prefixed to the Constitution. An Appendix contains extracts from State Constitutions and Bills of Rights; Ordinance of 1787, excluding Slavery from the Northwest Territory; also, Sentiments of the Revolutionary Fathers, &c. By mail, postage prepaid, single copy, 15 cts.; four copies, 50 cts.; nine copies $1,00.

The American Slave-Code,
In Theory and Practice: Its Distinctive Features Shown by its Statutes, Judicial Decisions, and Illustrative Facts. 430 pp., 12mo. Price 75 cts postage paid.

Unconstitutionality of Slavery.
By Lysander Spooner. In paper, 294 pp., 8vo Price 75 cts., or postage paid 86 cts.

Review of Lysander Spooner's Essay on the Unconstitutionality of Slavery.
By Wendell Phillips. Price 25 cts. Postage 5 Cts.

The Revelations of a Slave Smuggler.
Being the Autobiography of Captain Richard Drake, an African trader for fifty years, from 1807 to 1857. The work is handsomely illustrated, with graphic representations of scenes as they actually occur on the slave ships and on shore. Illustration No. 1 is a large cut, 16x13, representing a slave market on the Coast of Africa. Illustration No. 2 represents a scene in the Hold of a Slaver (middle passage). Then there is a large plate, giving views of a slave vessel between decks, regulation slave-deck, regulation packing, &c. The work is handsomely printed—contains one hundred large 8vo. pages, and is published at a price which places it within the reach of the masses—viz: 25 cents a copy. When sent by mail the postage (six cents must be added.

The Nat Turner Insurrection.
A full and reliable account. Copies will be sent to any address on the receipt of five cents.

Uncle Tom's Cabin.
By Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe. Two volumes in one. Price, $1,25.

The Kidnapped and Ransomed,
Being the personal recollections of Peter Still, and, his wife, Vina, after forty years of slavery by Mrs. Kate E. R. Pickard, with an introduction by Rev. S. J. May, Illustrated. 12mo. cloth, $1,25.

Gerrit Smith in Congress.
"Slavery has no right but to die!" A work of over 400 pages, containing all his speeches delivered in Congress; also, an accurate likeness. Price, only 80 cents per copy, and postage paid.

The Dream;
Or, the true history of Dea Giles's Distillery and Dea. Jones's Brewery. By George B. Cheever, D.D. Price per single copy 10 cents, $1 per doz., or $7 per hundred.

A Summer on the Carribbean Sea.
By J. [illegible] Harris. With an introduction by Geo. William Curtis. Sent by mail on receipt of $1.

A Pilgrimage to my Motherland;
An account of a journey among the Egbas and Yorubas of Central Africa, in 1859-60. By Robert Campbell, one of the Commissioners of the Niger Valley Exploring Party; late in charge of the Scientific Department of the Institute for Colored Youth, Philadelphia; and member of the International Statistical Congress, London. Price, 63 cents. When sent by mail, the postage (10 cents) must be added.

Turner's (J. A.) Cotton Planter's Manual,
Being a compilation of facts from the best authorities on the culture of cotton, its natural history, chemical analysis, trade and consumption, and embracing a history of cotton and the cotton gin. Price, $1. Postage, 15 cents.

The Manual of the Wardrobe.
60 large octavo pages, in paper, by Mrs. Pullan. Price, 25 cents. Sent, postpaid, upon receipt of the price. It comprises a thorough dissertation upon taste in dress, an explanation of the different kinds of stitches made in sewing, remarks upon the various kinds and qualities of fabrics used in the wardrobe, with complete directions for cutting and fitting all kinds of garments for women's and children's wear; the preparation of table, toilet, and bed linen. Illustrated by nearly one hundred cuts of patterns and modes.

The Weekly Anglo-African.

"MAN MUST BE FREE—IF NOT THROUGH LAW, WHY THEN ABOVE THE LAW."

VOL. I. NO. 5. NEW YORK, AUGUST 31, 1861. PRICE FOUR CENTS.

The Weekly Anglo-African.

IS PUBLISHED
EVERY SATURDAY,
BY ROBT. HAMILTON,
No. 48 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW YORK.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Two Dollars per year, or Four Cents per copy, payable on delivery.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.

Six Cents a line for the first insertion, and Three Cents for each subsequent insertion.

Notices of Births, Marriages, Deaths, Public Meetings, &c., inserted for twenty-five Cents, provided they do not exceed five lines; if more than that, Five Cents for each additional line.

All communications for the paper must be addressed ROBT. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman st., New York.

Poetry.

For the Anglo African.

THE SIGNS.

Shout to the winds of heaven
Babylon at length shall fall;
The fiat hath been given,
And mighty watchers call
"The time is come! her galling yoke
From off creation's neck is broke!"

Toussaint L'Ouverture,
With myriad unseen bands,
Has made destruction sure;
And naught shall stay their hands
Till thro' all lands, o'er every sea,
Shall roll the tidings, "Man is free!"

Great Wilberforce hath risen,
With hosts of lesser name,
And the damned slave-pen prison
Is sheeted in its flame—
And men of power have learned at length
The prowess of Jehovah's strength.

Can ye not read the signs?
The "Year of Jubilee,"
Is written in the lines
That tell of destiny!
And though a million hosts oppose,
Freedom shall break her banded foes.

I hear from Heaven a voice,
"The dead are blest, who die,
From henceforth,"—man whose choice
Is "Death or Liberty!"
Ring forth the tocsin to the world,
"No Slavery!" is the flag unfurled.

Creeping with stealthy tread
The sycophants of place
Have copious torrents shed,
And the red blood must trace
The steps of those whose pride of power
Forgot the cry of misery's hour.

That cry hath reached the ear
Of God Almighty's wrath,
His scathing bolts now sere
Along the battle's path,
Till one vast shout for Liberty,
Shall ring the knell of Slavery.

COTTON CULTURE IN JAMAICA.

The following article, though rather lengthy, will well repay an attentive perusal, as it shows how persistent and worthy of success are the efforts of the British cotton manufacturers to emancipate themselves from their dependence on the South.

JAMAICA COTTON COMPANY'S MEETING AT BRISTOL.

From the London "Christian Cabinet," July 31st, 1861.

A meeting was recently held at Albion Chambers, Bristol, in connexion with the furtherance of the movement for cotton cultivation in Jamaica. Mr. S. Bourne, of London, secretary of the Jamaica Cotton Company, was present to give details, including some interesting information just received, and samples of cotton grown on the island and elsewhere were laid on the table for inspection and comparison. Several influential gentlemen of the city were present; Mr. R. Charleton occupied the chair.

The Chairman in his introductory observations, said it was not needful, he presumed, in the present company to make any observation on the great moral importance of this movement in its bearing on the slavery question; they would all of them be greatly interested and feel that it was a cause for thankfulness to have it put into their hands, in any degree to help forward so very important an object as the eventual abolition of slavery; and it was believed by gentlemen who had investigated the matter that the cultivation of cotton, by free labor in our own colonies, or in other parts of the world where free labor was obtainable, together with the other essential requisites for the growth of this material, was essential to the commercial prosperity of this country, and that the cultivation of cotton may be regarded as a source of free commercial pursuit, and at the same time the other object may be promoted largely. He felt that though he had been supposed to take a good deal of interest in the matter, and did desire to cherish a feeling of lively interest in it, he was not prepared to go into details, but would call upon

Mr. Stephen Bourne, who said, If a man went to America, and was desirous of cultivating 1,000 acres of land, he must first lay out £25,000 or £30,000 in the purchase of slaves, which he must maintain and clothe, making allowance for wear and tear; he must build houses for them, or pay for their lodging and medical attendance; and altogether it was proved as a matter of fact that every slave cost about £50 a year to purchase and maintain, while at that moment the company was employing able-bodied laborers at the rate of £20 a year. Therefore, if they got the same to work for £20 a year in the West Indies which in America must cost £50 a year, it was clear that there was a large margin for profit in the former over the latter place. The samples of cotton on the table were grown all in Jamaica, and picked about three months since from trees, several of which had been planted since 1850 or 1851, and some much earlier. At that time an attempt was made to revive cotton cultivation. It was set aside for the moment, for no other reason than that the cholera prevailed everywhere to such an extent as to paralyze the whole people; and just as the crop was ready for cutting the laboring population all over the island were attending to the sick and dying, and unwilling to stir from their houses, except to resort to the high mountains to escape the pestilence. Many of the trees, however, that were then planted are still to be met with in the abandoned plantations, and from some of them the cotton now produced has been picked and sent to the Jamaica Cotton Company. It has been examined by several eminent cotton spinners and brokers, and some of it valued as high as 1s. 3d. per lb., and all at a price that would be remunerative to growers. An experienced planter, the agent of the company for the Eastern district of Jamaica, calculates that an acre of land properly cultivated will bear 800 trees, and that each tree gives 1 lb. of clean cotton per annum on an average of years; and so long does the plant, when kept free from weeds and brush, and occasionally pruned, continue to bear, that a gentleman in Jamaica, on whose veracity we can entirely rely, assured us that trees are now bearing cotton on an estate in Manchester (that is the centre of the island) which were planted forty years ago. If the land planted with cotton seed was deeply ploughed and drained, there can be no doubt that the quality of the cotton would be improved, and the quantity much increased. The chief objection that has been raised to the general cultivation of cotton in Jamaica is that it is difficult to obtain laborers; that even the sugar growers and manufacturers complain that they cannot grow as much as they desire for want of more laborers. Not only is this statement questioned by many competent and experienced persons on the spot, who affirm that any one who can find money to pay for labor, who treats his laborers fairly, and who is willing to give a remuneration proportioned to the profits on labor, never wants laborers; but it must be obvious to any one who will take the trouble to look back and calculate a little that, since 15,000 persons are sufficient to grow and manufacture nearly as much again sugar as is now exported from Jamaica, there must be very many of the 330,000 for whom the people of England gave compensation, who are not thus employed; and that, although for want of suitable occupation great numbers of them can only live by cultivating small freeholds which they have purchased, or lands they have leased from the landowners, such persons, to the number (as it has been computed) of at least 130,000, might obtain a better living by growing cotton either for hire or on their own account than they can do by merely cultivating provisions, which they often find it difficult to sell, especially when they live, as thousands of them do, far, very far away from the towns, only in which purchasers to any extent are to be found. Now, the Jamaica Cotton Company do not propose to take one single hand from the cane, or coffee, or pimento fields, neither do they propose to raise unduly the cost of labor, but to find suitable, healthy, and profitable employment for those who do not now labor for hire or in the production of any exportable produce, and thus to enable them to rise to the proper position of free men and women, to become consumers of those articles of convenience, or comfort which are enjoyed by persons of the same rank in Europe, and to defray the necessary cost of education and religious instruction. The Americans calculate that a man, woman, and boy or girl, aided by a small plough and a horse or mule, will cultivate fifteen acres of cotton and two acres of provisions in the course of the year, and that where the land requires to be ploughed and planted every year, because the frost kills the plant in the winter, and prevents its ever coming to maturity, and therefore full bearing. It cannot be too much, therefore to calculate on five acres as the proper quantity of land to be cultivated for cotton and provisions in a year by each person; and if we suppose there are 130,000 persons in Jamaica who may be induced by the offer of light employment, fair wages, and constant employment, under kind and considerate employers, who would try to raise them morally, socially, and religiously, as well as to enable them to live and rear their offspring, then it will follow that 650,000 acres of land now lying waste, and, therefore, wholly unproductive to the owners, might be made to yield, at the rate of 600 lbs. or one and a half bales per acre, nearly a million bales of cotton every year, and that of the precise kind of which our cotton manufacturers will very soon be in the very utmost need. This kind of cotton has never yet been cultivated in any considerable quantity either in India or Africa, and though it may be raised in future years, it cannot be looked to as a provision for wants which must be felt before the end of the present year. That which we propose then, is to set an example in Jamaica, which may induce the proprietors of land in that island to form such arrangements with capitalists and skilful and energetic persons as may speedily lead to the general cultivation of cotton there. What it might be imprudent or impracticable for one or two men to do or attempt, two or three hundred may do with little inconvenience or risk, and on the principles of limited liability, the sum of £4,000 has been already subscribed by gentlemen of the highest respectability, who form this company, such as the Governor of Barbadoes Rear-Admiral Sir C. Elliot, late Governor of Trinidad, the Lord-lieutenant of Somersetshire, Lord Portman, Major General Henry Goodwyn, Mr. Fowler, and Mr. Glyn, M. P., the London Bankers, the Messrs. S. Gurney, the worthy sons and followers in every work of philanthrophy and benevolence of the late Samuel and Joseph John Gurney, Messrs. Bazles, M. P., Thomas Clegg, Thomas Emmott, J. and P. Coats, William Jackson, and Charles Ogden, the eminent cotton spinners of Lancashire and Paisley, with Robert Charleton, Joshua Wilson, George Miller, Charles Beavington, and many others of equal worth and respectability. At the head of this little band stands the venerable Brougham, who may be regarded as the champion of the great cause of African civilization and freedom.

Mr. Bourne read a letter from an experienced gentleman, to prove that there would be a deficiency in the American supply of cotton, and that the article could be grown in our own colonies. Mr. Bourne thought cotton could be grown in Jamaica, and delivered in Bristol for four and a half pence per pound, and said when they heard what Mr. Vickers would say of the value of that cotton, they would see that there was a very large margin for profit. Under the circumstances he could not but think that the opulent gentlemen present who had been devoted for years to the promotion of the cause of freedom would be glad of the opportunity of associating themselves with such an object and with such a company as he had explained to them.

The Chairman thought the company's great object should be to cultivate a portion of land in Jamaica to furnish an example of what really was required—of what the cultivation ought to be, and how the process in its various departments was to be managed, that the squatters might be induced to cultivate cotton, and so in an important degree to supply the demand which existed for it in this country.

Mr. Bourne said they wanted not merely to employ the squatters but the great proprietors of land there, who had hitherto invested their capital in growing sugar because it was profitable, but if they saw that cotton was equally profitable they would turn their attention to that also. They did not want to make Jamaica exclusively a cotton field, but there were thousands or a million of acres of land there the first in the world for cotton.

Mr. Vickers, of the Great Western Cotton Works, said he had examined and valued the samples of cotton on the table, and compared them with other cottons that he had purchased and worked, and others which had been sent to him for valuation. He would say at once that, supposing Mr. Bourne's statement as to the cost of bringing it to Bristol to be correct, a very large margin of profit indeed would remain to the importers of that cotton. The value of the fourteen samples ranged from ten pence to two shillings per pound, the latter a most beautiful sample. All the cotton came under the class Jamaica cotton, and there was a great variety. Some of it was particularly silky and long, of good color, and so very strong that one could not break the fabric. He thought that statement would be sufficient to enable them to judge whether the scheme would be a profitable investment. There was a great variety in the cotton, and on that account it would be more generally adapted for common and general use. The color of the cotton could not be surpassed in the world; it was beautifully white in general, and that was a great recommendation for the high class yarns. So fully impressed was he with the feasibility of the scheme, that he would be very glad to take the number of shares that he had mentioned to Mr. Bourne.

The chairman remarked that he was authorised in stating that Messrs. W. D. and H. O. Wills took great interest in the matter.

Mr. W. Terrell said that being a native of Jamaica, and having been there for many years of his life, he could corroborate most of Mr. Bourne's statement by his own experience. He expressed his opinion that the laborers of Jamaica were more particularly adapted for cotton cultivation than any other labor, and more likely to adapt themselves. The touch of the negroes, particularly the women, was especially adapted to cotton picking, in which children also might be employed. He had no doubt that from the Southern States of America there would be a great desire evinced on the part of many of the better portions of the negro population to emigrate, and he thought that if the company put itself in communication with Canada and other places, which those negroes are first likely to reach, a large influx of a superior population to Jamaica would result. His own experience of the higher grades of slaves in the Southern States of America told him that they were a superior class of men; indeed, some of them were educated, and some nearly white, and he felt sure that these would readily embrace the opportunity of placing themselves in a higher position than they could possibly occupy in Canada or the Northern States. Mr. Terrell expressed his opinion that a fibre which grew plentifully in Jamaica might be substituted for hemp and jute, and also for paper making. He should be glad to render his aid.

Mr. Bourne said that as many laborers as were required in Jamaica had been promised from Canada and the States at moderate wages.

Mr. Thomas asked if the matter had been put before the Manchester people?

Mr. Bourne replied that it had been, and while they gave a helping hand they preferred to concentrate their energies on India and Africa, considering that these would prove the best markets for their manufactured goods, forgetting that when the land in the West Indies was got into cultivation there would be an influx of laborers and a good demand for such articles.

The Rev. W. James asked if some degree of education and cultivation were not required to fit the people for their work.

Mr. Bourne said there was, and that was the need there was of three or four successful examples of cultivation in different parts.

The Rev. W. James said many persons from England would be induced to go to Jamaica if estates could be remuneratively managed, and thus would be obtained what was wanted, a respectable class of white Christian people who would show that labor is not a thing to be disliked or frowned upon, but that men were honorable in proportion as they worked and strove to do their duty in that station of life in which it had pleased God to place them. He would be happy to lend any influence in his power.

After some conversation Mr. Thomas, who stated he was influenced solely by philanthropic motives, proposed the first resolution (which, with others, was adopted, and will be found in our advertising columns). He thought that this country should have more than one market to go to for the raw material. We at present stood in a very critical position, because if the American war should be carried on to a very large extent, which he was afraid it would be, though he hoped it would not, the cultivation must fall very short; and what would they think of themselves, if they did not make some little effort when they saw 4,000,000 of people employed in cotton manufactures in this country? What fearful consequences would come if, from want of the raw material for carrying on the work, a couple of millions of people were thrown out of employment! What would become of the country he could hardly conceive. The manufacturers of the North had kept their eyes shut a great deal too long in depending for supplies on one country. He felt that with good management this could be made a profitable concern, and was satisfied that free labor would beat slave labor. After one or two observations Mr. Thomas concluded by proposing the resolution.

Mr. Tanner seconded it.

Mr. Terrell proposed the second resolution, urging that the company should act as a factor for the surrounding districts and encourage the growth of cotton all over the land.

Mr. Bourne said the company had offered to assist the small landowners who assisted themselves.

THE OLD MAN'S STORY.

I shall never forget the commencement of the temperance reform. I was a child at the time, of some ten years of age. Our home had every comfort, and my parents idolized me, their child. Wine was often on the table, and both my father and mother frequently gave it to me in the bottom of the glass.

One Sunday, at church, a startling announcement was made to our people. I knew nothing of its purport, but there was much whispering among the men. The pastor said that on the next evening there would be a meeting, and an address upon the evils of intemperance in the use of alcoholic drinks. He expressed himself ignorant of the object of the meeting, and could not say what course it would be best to pursue in the matter.

The subject of the meeting came up at our table after the service, and I questioned my father about it with all the curious eagerness of a child. The whispers and words which had been dropped in my hearing clothed the whole affair with a great mystery to learn the strange thing.

My father merely said it was some scheme to unite state and church.

The night came, and groups of people gathered on the tavern steps, and I heard the jest and the laugh, and saw drunken men reeling out of the bar-room. I urged my father to let me go; but he at first refused. Finally, thinking it would be an innocent gratification of my curiosity, he put on his hat, and we passed across the green to the church. I remember well how the people appeared as they came in, seeming to wonder what kind of an exhibition was to come off.

In the corner was the tavern-keeper, and around him a number of friends.

For an hour the people of the place continued to come in, until there was a fair house full. All were curiously watching the door, wondering what would appear next. The pastor stole in, and took a seat behind a pillar under the gallery, as if doubtful of the propriety of being in church at all.

Two men finally came in, and went to the altar, and took their seats. All eyes were fixed upon them, and a general stillness pervaded the house.

The men were unlike in appearance, one being short, thick set in build, the other tall and well formed. The younger had the manner and dress of a clergyman, a full round face, and a quiet, good-natured look, as he leisurely looked around the audience.

But my childish interests were all in the old man. His broad, deep chest, and unusual height, looked giant-like as he strode up the aisle. His hair was white, his brow was deeply seamed with furrows, and around his handsome mouth lines of calm and touching sadness. His eyes were black and restless, and kindled as the tavern-keeper uttered a low jest aloud. His lips were compressed, and a crimson flush came and went over his pale cheek. One arm was off above the elbow, and there was also a wide scar over the right eye.

The younger finally arose and stated the object of the meeting, and asked if there was a clergyman present to open with a prayer.

Our pastor kept his seat, and the speaker himself made a short prayer, and then made a short address, at the conclusion calling upon any one present to make remarks.

The pastor arose under the gallery, and attacked the positions of the speaker, using the arguments so often heard, and concluded by denouncing those engaged in the new movement as meddlesome fanatics, who wished to break up the time-honored usages of good society, and injure the business of respectable men. At the conclusion of his remarks, the tavern-keeper and his friends got up a cheer, and the current of feeling was evidently against the strangers and their plan.

While the pastor was speaking, the old man arose, fixed his dark eye upon him, and leaned forward to hear every word.

As the pastor took his seat, the old man arose, his tall form towering in its symmetry, and his chest swelling as he inhaled his breath through his thin dilating nostrils. To me, at that time, there was something awe-inspiring and grand in the appearance of the old man, as he stood with his full eye upon the audience, his teeth shut hard, and a silence like that of death all through the house.

He bent his gaze upon the tavern-keeper, and that peculiar eye lingered and kindled for more than half a minute.

The scar grew red on his forehead, and beneath the heavy eyebrows his eyes glittered and glowed as those of a serpent. The tavern-keeper quailed before that searching glance, and I felt relieved when the old man withdrew his gaze. For a moment he seemed lost in thought, and then in a low tremulous tone commenced. There was a depth in that voice, a thrilling pathos and sweetness, which riveted every heart in the house before the first period was rounded. My father's attention had become fixed on the speaker with an interest which I had never before seen him exhibit. I can but briefly remember the substance of what the old man said, though the scene is as vivid before me as any I ever saw.

"My friends! I am a stranger in your village, and I trust I may call you friends. A new star has arisen and there is hope in the dark night which hangs like a pall of gloom over our country."

With a thrilling depth of voice the speaker continued:

"Oh God, Thou who lookest with compassion upon the suffering of earth's children, I thank thee that a brazen serpent has been lifted, upon which the drunkard can look and be healed; that a beacon has burst out upon the darkness which surrounded him, which shall guide back to honor and Heaven the bruised and wearied wanderer."

It is strange what power there is in some voices. The speaker was slow and measured, but a tear trembled in every word, and before I knew why, a tear dropped upon my hand, followed by others, like raindrops. The old man brushed one from his own eyes, and continued:

"Men and Christians! You have just heard that I am a vagrant and fanatic. I am not. As God knoweth my own sad heart, I came here to do good. Hear me and be just.

"I am an old man, standing alone at the end of life's journey. There is a deep sorrow in my heart and tears in my eyes. I have journeyed over a dark and beaconless ocean, and all life's hopes have been wrecked; I am without friends, home or kindred upon earth, and look with longing to the rest of the night of earth, without friends, kindred or home. It was not so once."

No one could withstand the touching pathos of the old man. I saw a tear trembling on the lid of my father's eye, and I no longer felt ashamed, as I had before, of my own.

"No, my friends, it was not so once. Away over the dark waves that have wrecked my hopes there is the light of happiness and home. I reach convulsively for the shrines of the household idols."

The old man seemed looking away through fancy upon some bright vision, his lips apart and his finger extended. I involuntarily turned in the direction where it was pointed, dreading to see some shadow invoked by its magic movements.

"I once had a mother; with her old heart crushed with sorrow she went down to her grave. I once had a wife, as fair, angel-hearted a creature as ever smiled in an earthly home; her eyes as mild as a summer sky, and her heart as faithful and true as ever guarded and cherished a husband's love. Her blue eyes grew dim as the floods of sorrow washed away their brightness. I once had a brave and beautiful boy, but he was driven out from the ruins of his home, and my heart yearns to know if he yet lives. I once had a babe, a sweet tender blossom, but my hand destroyed it, and it liveth with One who loves children.

"Do not be startled friends; I am not a murderer, in the common acceptation of the term. Yet there is a light in my evening sky. A spirit mother rejoices over the return of her prodigal son. The wife smiles upon him who again turns back to virtue and honor. The child-angel visits me at nightfall, and I feel the hallowing touch of a tiny palm upon my feverish cheek. My brave boy, if he lives, would forgive the sorrowing old man for the treatment which drove him into the world, and the blow that maimed him for life. God forgive me for the ruin I have brought upon me and mine."

He again wiped a tear from his eye. My father watched him with a strange interest, and a countenance usually pale, as if excited by some strong emotion.

"I was a fanatic, and madly followed the malign light which led me to ruin. I was a fanatic when I sacrificed my wife, children, happiness and home to the accursed demon of the bowl. I once adored the gentle being whom I had injured so deeply.

I was a drunkard. From respectability and influence I plunged into degradation and poverty. I dragged my family down with me. For years I saw her cheek pale, and her step grow weary. I left her alone amid the wreck of her home idols, and rioted at the tavern. She never complained, yet she and her children were hungry for bread.

One New Year's night I returned late to my home. She was yet up, and shivering over the coals. I demanded food, but she burst into tears and told us there was none. I fiercely ordered her to get some. She turned her eyes sadly upon me, the tears falling fast from her pale cheeks. At this moment the child in the cradle awoke, and sent up a famishing wail, startling the despairing mother like a serpent's sting.

"We have no food James—have had none for several days. I have nothing for the babe. My once kind husband, must we starve?"

That sad, pleading face, and those streaming eyes, and the feeble wail of the child maddened me, and I—yes I struck her a fierce blow in the face, and she fell forward upon the hearth. The furies of hell boiled in my bosom, and with deeper intensity as I felt I had committed a wrong. I had never struck Mary before, but now some terrible impulse bore me on, and I stopped as well as I could in my drunken state and clinched both hands in her hair.

"God of mercy, James!" exclaimed my wife, as she looked upon my fiendish countenance, "you will not kill us—you will not kill us—you will not harm Willie," and she sprang to the cradle and grasped him in her embrace. I caught her again by the hair, and dragged her to the door, and as I lifted the latch, the wind burst in with a cloud of snow. With a wild laugh I closed the door, and turned the button, her pleading moans mingling with the wail of the blast and the sharp cry of the babe. But my work was not complete.

I turned to the little bed where lay my elder son, and snatched him from his slumbers, and against his half wakened struggles opened the door and thrust him out. In the agony of fear he called to me by the name I was no longer fit to bear, and locked his fingers into my side pocket. I could not wrench that frenzied grasp away, and with the coolness of a devil as I was, shut the door against its arm, and with a knife severed it at the wrist."

The speaker ceased a moment and buried his face in his hands as if to shut out some fearful dream, and his deep chest heaved like a storm-swept sea. My father had arisen from his seat and was leaning forward, his countenance bloodless, and large drops standing out upon his brow. Chills crept back to my young heart, and I wished that I was at home. The old man looked up, and I never have since beheld such mortal agony pictured upon a human face as there was on his.

"It was morning when I awoke, and the storm had ceased, but the cold was intense. I first secured a drink of water, and then looked to the accustomed place for Mary. As I missed her, for the first time a sense of some horrible nightmare began to dawn upon my wandering mind. I thought I had had a fearful dream, but I involuntarily opened the outside door with a shuddering dread. As the door opened the snow burst in, followed by the fall of something across the threshold, scattering the snow, and striking the floor with a sharp, bad sound. My blood shot like red-hot arrows through my veins, and I rubbed my eyes to shut out the sight. It was—it—O God, how horrible! it was my own injured Mary and her babe frozen to ice! The ever true mother had bowed herself over the child, to shield it, her own person stark and bare to the storm. She had placed her hair over the face of the child, and the sleet had frozen it to the white cheek. The frost was white in its half opened eyes and upon its tiny fingers. I know not what became of my brave boy."

Again the old man bowed his head and wept, and all that were in the house wept with him. My father sobbed like a child. In tones of low and heart-broken paths, the old man concluded.

"I was arrested, and for four long months raved in delirium. I awoke, was sentenced to prison for ten years, but no tortures could have been like those I endured within my own bosom. O, God, no—I am not a fanatic. I wish to injure no one. But while I live, let me strive to warn others not to enter the dark path which has been so dark and fearful to me."

The old man sat down, but a spell as deep as that wrought by any wizard's breath, rested upon the audience. Hearts could have been heard in their beating, and tears could have been seen to fall. The old man then asked the people to sign the pledge. My father leaped from his seat and snatched at it eagerly. I had followed him, and as he hesitated a moment with the pen in the ink, a tear fell from the old man's eye on the paper.

"Sign it, sign it, young man. Angels would sign it. I would write my name there ten thousand times in blood if it would bring back my loved and lost ones."

My father wrote "Mortimer Hudson." The old man looked, wiped his tearful eyes, and looked again, his face alternately flushed with a red and deathlike paleness.

"It is, no, it cannot be—yet how strange," muttered the old man. "Pardon me, sir, but that was the name of my brave boy."

My father trembled, and held up the left arm from which the hand had been severed.

They looked for a moment at each other's eyes, both reeled and gasped—

"My own injured son."

"My father!"

They fell upon each other's necks and wept until it seemed that their souls would grow and mingle into one. There was weeping in the church, and sad faces around me.

"Let me thank God for this great blessing which has gladdened my guilt-burdened soul," exclaimed the old man, and kneeling down he poured out his heart in one of the most melting prayers I ever heard. The spell was then broken, and all eagerly signed the pledge, slowly going to their homes as if loth to leave the spot.

The old man is dead, but the lesson he taught his grandchild on his knee, as his sun went down without a cloud, will never be forgotten. His fanaticism has lost none of its fire in my manhood's heart.

"SHE WORKS FOR A LIVING."

Commend us to the girl of whom it is said, "She works for a living." In her we are always sure to find the elements of a woman—a real lady. True we are not prepared to see a mincing step, a haughty lip, a fashionable dress, or hear a string of splendid nonsense about the balls and young men, the new novels and the next party—no, no; but we are prepared to hear the sound words of good sense, language becoming women, a neat dress, mild brow, and to witness movements that would not disgrace an angel.

You, who are looking for wives and companions, turn from the fashionable, lazy, haughty girls, and select from those who work for a living, and never—our word for it—and never will you repent your choice. You want a good substantial friend, and not a doll; a help mate, and not a help eat; a counsellor, and not a simpleton. You may not be able to carry a piano into the house, but you can buy a spinning wheel, or a set of knitting needles. If you cannot buy every new novel, you may be able to take some valuable paper. If you cannot buy a ball ticket for the ball, you can visit some afflicted neighbor.

Be careful, then, where you look for companions, and whom you choose. We know many a foolish man, who, instead of choosing an industrious and prudent woman for a wife, took one from the fashionable stock, and is now lamenting his folly in dust and ashes. He ran into the fire with his eyes wide open, and who but himself is to blame?

The time was when the ladies went a visiting and took their work with them. This is the reason why we had such excellent mothers. How singular would a gay woman look, in a fashionable circle, darning her father's stockings, or carding wool to spin? Would not her companions laugh at her? And yet such woman would be a prize for somebody. Blessed is the man who chooses his wife from despised girls who "work for their living."

THE CRISIS.

A phonographic report of the celebrated speech on the "Crisis," the text of which is, by universal consent, allowed to be—

"OR ANY OTHER MAN."

The speaker said; "Ahum-m-m! Fellorcitizens,—I have been called upon this evenin' to appear before you for—for that is, I have been requested to appear upon the—the scaffold this evenin', for the purpose of elucidatin to you the all absorbin' subjec' which am now agitatin' the—the certainly I hav. [cheers] Ahum-m-m! but to return to our subjec'; as I was about to remark previously, beforehand. What's our country comin' to? That's what I'd like to know myself. Look at the great congregated conundrex of this glorious Union, just look at it.—Does any body see it? Certainly, that's just what's the matter. Ahum-m-m! but to return to our subject. Look at our great American eagle, the glorious emblem of our liberty—just look at me. [Here the speaker's voice was drowned by continued shouting and applause.] What are you going to do with that ere bird? Look at 'em as he flies from the cloud-capped summick of the Licherdee mountains to the terriffic abyss of the Goshwallican avenue, an flutters his tail feathers an' sez, in the sweet language of the apostle Paul, in his pistle to the Egyptians, when he said "root hog or die."

That's what's the matter. (Enthusiastic cheering.) Ahum-m-m! but to return to our subjec'; look at our—look at our—look—at our—that's what I'd like to know Look at our newspapers—just look at 'em; can't pick up one without readin' something in it—that's what's the matter. What did I see there?

(With empressment.) Provisions has riz.—What's the consequence? Coffee and molasses had a fight. What's the consequence agin?—Molasses got licked, an' coffee had to settle down on its own grounds. (Applause.) That's just what's the matter—or any other man. (Cheers.) Ahem-m-m but to return to our subjec'. Look at our soldiers, just look at 'em Does any body see 'em? Do they march forth to battle in time of peace, an' an' get shot in the neck? Certainly they do; that's just what's the matter or any other man. (Cries of 'good') Ahum-m-m! but to return to our subjec'. Look at our sailors! look at 'em. Do they not! Certainly they do. Do they sail out on the briny ocean, where the roarin' billows flumigate, an' where the devourin elepants open their jaws for 'em, and lay down in their warm hammocks, and sleep? Certainly they do—or any other man. (A voice 'certainly.') Ahum-m-m! look at our firemen. Ah those boys, just look at 'em. Do they not at the dead of night, when the clock proclaims the hour of midnight, an' when the barometer is 47 0 below Cicero; Do they not rush forth to the scene of conflagration, an'—an' get drunk? Certainly they do, an' that's just what's the matter of me—or any other man. But to return to our subject. Now, what does the great an' glorious Constitushum say? Certainly it does that's just what it sez? (Sensation.) What did Patrick Henry Jackson say? Did he not say that each and every one should stand on his own ground, and did he not lay his hand upon his heart and say with a clear conscience that he was a paper doll with a glass eye?' Certainly he did—or any other man."

The speaker retired amid thunders of applause.

The person who fails to understand the "subjec' which am agitatin'," after perusing; such a lucid explanation as that is, must be intellectually poor indeed!

The Weekly Anglo-African.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 31, 1861.

☞ Advertisements for this paper must be accompanied by the cash.

☞ Copies of this paper can be purchased of the news-dealers everywhere.

CHANGES.

If there be any characteristic difference between whites and blacks in our land it consists in this: the one class looks at difficulties with an eye to triumph over them; the other, to bemoan them. If we think over, for a moment, the most eloquent appeals of our orators, their great points are complaints against prejudice and oppression, or a vivid deliniation of the wrongs we labor under rather than fight against.

Events are rapidly taking away the occasion for such oratory, for the oppressions under which we have labored so long are not only diminishing so far as we are concerned, but are being turned against our great foes, the slaveocracy and its upholders.

Some of these changes are so striking that the very description of them seems fabulous. Our Northern army has carried something into slavedom besides muskets and sabres; they have carried ideas along, and we believe, planted them where nothing but tobacco and slavery impudence flourished before.

We all know that in the bad-old-times a colored person from the North could only go to Virginia by steamship, as somebody's slave, and had to be "shipped" as a chattel. Now colored men from the North have gone down to Virginia by steam, looking very like soldiers, shipped as men.

A year ago, if a colored man was beset by a white in the streets of Washington, he was forced to receive punishment without appeal; and any attempt at resentment would have been severely chastised by local law. We saw a statement the other day of a Washington blood, insulting a Northern man of color at mid-day and receiving a prompt knock down from the assailed: certain horrified policemen of the Capital rushed in to seize the Northerner when they were prevented by certain Northern ideas in the shape of a squad and ultimately a company or two of Massachusetts soldiers. We believe there were two several parties utterly thunderstruck at this incident; first the knock-down-ee, who had never dreamed of a negro striking him, and second the police officers, with whom it was gospel truth that a black man striking a white should at least have his hand cut off according to law.

We all remember the bad-old-times when the Union used to get out of order, and when black coment was required to hold it together. It was the custom then to hunt up some panting fugitive in New York, Boston or Philadelphia, to carry him before a United States Commissioner, pass him through certain forms of so-called law, and then march him down South in the care of a brace or two of well armed United States Marshals. But now PRESTO! what a change! The same Union is in danger, but distinguished white men, great in wealth or eminent in civic office, are snatched from their beds at midnight and without the form of a trial are hurried from slavedom NORTH, and placed under lock and key in the grim walls of Fort Lafayette!

Only think of it! MR. BERRET the mayor of Washington who distinguished his inauguration by reviving and putting in force certain obsolete and barbarous laws against the free people of color, is dragged (with far less ceremony than if he had been black) from his soft voluptuous couch and snatched off with rail-road speed to a Northern prison before he could say oh! We can only say of the administration, as the boys say "bully for you!"

Then PIERCE BUTLER the magnificent—born with a golden spoon in his mouth, the heir to a thousand slaves in South Carolina, who won Fanny Kemble by his boquets and his wealth, and lost her by his relative imbecility—Pierce Butler, the magnificent, who outshone all Philadelphia with his gorgeous displays—Pierce Butler, the sale of whose thralls, as described by a Tribune reporter, sent a thrill of horror through all the Christian world, by exploding at a flash all the cunningly woven romance of the patriarchal system—this Pierce Butler in the very midst of his splendor is seized like a felon and hurried to the same prison. Verily, James Hamlet, John Bolding, Sims, and Long, your wrongs are avenged!

But the strangest travestie of all is at Old Point Comfort, in the neighborhood of Fortress Monroe. Every summer solstice until the present, the sunny South had > "Gathered there

> Her beauty and her chivalry."

The cream of the cream of slaveocracy steeped in the felicities of the great domestic institution. They had, in their voluptuous ease and beautified enjoyment their scores of slaves

> "To fan them when they slept and tremble > when they waked!"

and

> "All the wealth that millions bought and sold" > could "bring" was theirs. But
> "Woe is me Alhambra!"

What a change does this summer solstice bring! A few weeks ago some visitors at Fortress Monroe inquired of the General in command, "what are you doing now-a-days, general?" to which bluff Ben. Butler replied. "keeping a negro boarding-house for government."

> "The lights have fled the garlands dead
> And all but he (Mr. Coon) departed."

Sly Ben. Butler! He did not tell the whole truth. We copy from a morning paper's correspondent the following "doings" at Fortress Monroe, which shows pretty conclusively that the Massachusetts brigadier is teaching the contrabands how to give their former tyrants "su'thin' warm," instead of the juleps and cobblers formerly administered.

Writing from Fortress Monroe, Aug. 23d the reporter says:—

"Yesterday took place the first experimental firing of the great Union gun. Its weight is 52,005 pounds, extreme length 16 feet; length of bore 13 feet 11 inches; diameter of bore 12 inches, rifled. Solid shot weighing 423 pounds, shell 352 pounds."

All things being ready, the process of loading the gun was commenced. Sergeant Welch at the head of his black battalion of gunners had already cleared the decks, wheeled the monster so that his guage was over the waters, and arranged the platform or staging on which the men could stand and be up even with the muzzle. First, the swab, which two men insert, cleans the interior; then comes a man with a red flannel bag, filled with powder, on his shoulder; it is the cartridge; and the ramrod, worked by four men, sends it home. Then comes the process of getting the shot to its place, a mass of mettle that four men carry with difficulty. It is rolled into an iron cradle or wide strap, looped with a rope, through which a piece of strong wood, several feet long, is inserted. Thus slung, the men tug the shot up the steps of the platform, some ten feet high, at the mouth of the gun another lift brings it on a level, and it is slid into the muzzle and pushed to its place. The gun is then elevated by means of an iron bar, the gun being nicely balanced on its trunnions. The priming wire performs its office, the fuse is inserted, and the lanyard is attached. Then Lieut Baylor, who, though everything has been done under his minutest inspection, has moved about more like a modest spectator than the responsible director, gives warning that the gun has never before been fired, and moves a short distance in the rear, in which he is imitated by the others. The men who are to calculate the flight of the shot are at their table. The flag is up. The man with the lanyard retires to its extreme length. "Ready," says Sergeant Welch. Lieut. Baylor gives the word: "Ready—fire!" A terrific crash, a sheet of flame, and the trembling of the earth follow. At the same time there is a screech and a scream caused by the shot, a black mass which you can see, in its flight, yelling like an infuriated devil let loose from the infernal regions. We count the seconds, and watch to see the shot strike. A column of water away off on the bay shoots up to the height of a ship's mast. The elevation of the gun was but ten degrees, little more than blank shot, consequently the distance was not great, say two miles, the time of flight fifteen seconds. The terrible engine, the echoes of whose thunders have scarcely yet died away over the waters and along the shore, whose breath, a dark sulphurous cloud, floats before the wind—the thing which we would naturally associate with the idea of a glowing fiery monster, the embodiment of all the furies is next the object of attention. It is as passive as anything can be. The sergeant pats familiarly its massive breech, the smoke curls slowly from the mouth of the chamber from which the 420-pound shot has just been vomited, and for the instant it is difficult to reconcile the crash, the flame, the trembling earth and the screech, with the thing that neither trembles nor glows nor makes other sign of its truly awful and almost supernatural endowments."

A NOBLE PROPOSITION.

ROBERT HAMILTON Esq.,

Dear Sir:—I congratulate you at the appearance once more of the Anglo-African,—a paper that gained, for the time it existed, more prestige than any other that had preceded it.

Now sir, the glorious question is, "Shall it live? I call it glorious, from the immense importance of the hour that is now upon us.

It will live if we bring our patriotism, our love for the truth, not to a boiling, but a moderate heat. Let each brother and sister, father and child, do what they can—take stock in it at a fair premium. The premium to be paid in Hallalujahs when its work as a Journal for Freedom is over.

Sir, I propose to unite with some in investing Five Dollars to begin with; what will others answer? I propose no plan upon which it is to be paid, but leave that to your better judgment—but I suppose you need the money as soon as you can get it, I therefore pay immediately. Now who will be the next customer,—if not for five, for four—for three—for two—for one! for fifty cents? Keep in remembrance, friends, that this stock pays glorious in premiums, however small be the investment. Yet you must still remember, that greater the investment, more glorious the premium!

Now sir, I believe I have said enough; perhaps more than enough—for, after all, all that is requisite is but for the people to know your need, and they are ready to nobly respond.

Yours in behalf of the good cause,

J. N. GLOUCESTER.

AMUSEMENTS.

PIC-NIC AT PATERSON, N. J.—The Sunday School connected with the Zion Church, of Paterson, held their annual Pic-Nic on Friday, the 16th instant. Everything, we are informed, passed off in the most satisfactory manner. The weather was favorable, the attendance good, the tables bountiful, and the exercise generally creditable to all concerned.

A Pic-Nic and Disturbance.

The Sabbath School attached to Rev. Chas. B. Ray's Church, gave a Pic-Nic at Fort Lee on the 28th inst. The affair passed off very pleasantly with the exception of a disturbance caused by some Fire Zouaves, who insisted upon dancing with the young ladies present—and I am sorry to state some of the young ladies thought it quite an honor to dance with a drunken soldier. The ruffians chased the entire party to the ferry, and the captain hearing their threats should not have allowed them on the boat as he might have known that it gave them an opportunity to continue the fight. Much praise is due Mr. Charles A. Reason, in managing to preserve order among the affrighted ladies. Though injured himself, he remained on the boat until he had seen every lady off safe. I understand that Messrs. Louis Delsart, Edward Hayes, and John Gall, were injured in the affray.

A. E. PATRICK.

PIC NIC.

On the 22d of August the Sabbath School connected with the colored Congregational Church, under the pastoral charge of Rev. J. E. Carter, of South Hampton, L. I. held their annual gathering at Three Mile Bay, a fine and beautiful place about four miles from the village. The assembly, to the number of about one hundred and fifty, assembled beneath some fine old trees at 10 o'clock, A. M., and after very appropriate singing by the school, prayer was offered by Rev. A. Posey, of Sag Harbor, followed by addresses by Rev. Mr. Carter, Geo. B. Brown, Esq., of Sag Harbor (an old and efficient friend of colored people and anxious for their improvement), Rev. Amos G. Beman, of New Haven, Conn., and Rev. Mr. Trimble.

Everything was done to make the occasion one of joy and gladness, and the effort was crowned with success. We do not say anything of the speaking; but the friends were richly provided with the "creature comforts," and all showed "that some things can be done as well as others."

An interesting meeting was held and interspersed with speaking and singing by the children in the evening at the North school-house in the village, which was attended, notwithstanding the rain, with as many as the building could hold. Much good we trust was done, and hope that the success of this effort will encourage the friends to hold on "the even tenor of their way, in the march of improvement.

A FRIEND.

LETTER FROM REV. W. P. NEWMAN.

Chatham, Canada West, Aug. 21, 1861.

Editor of the Anglo African,—My dear sir,—You would have had the promised line from me before this date, but for sickness. The very sudden change in the weather here, from hot to cold, has affected me, as I feared it would one coming from the tropics. I have not been able to accept but a few of the many invitations to address our people on the subject of emigration to the West Indies. What little I have been able to say of it has convinced many of the folly of going to Hayti, and they have given up the idea.

I thank you for the publication of the few lines, in your valuable paper, I addressed to you respecting Mr. Redpath and his slander. I have to regret the imperfection of the document. It was written late at night, when I was tired out, and just a few hours before leaving your city, and I had not the "Pine and Palm" before me. I have replied to Mr. Redpath more particularly in the "Planet," of this place, of the 13th inst., a copy of which I herewith send you. Make use of it.

Many of your friends are rejoicing at the re-appearance of the much loved "Anglo-African." May it ever live to do the work of our afflicted people! It is needed, and must be sustained.

We have some excitement here on the American question. Some people are fearing a war between England and the United States. They dread the results of it on Canada. If it comes, our wronged people here will fight the oppressors like dare devils. They are desiring the conflict. True, they are not content to live here, because of the prejudice of the white people against them, yet they are determined to defend the British Crown to the last.

The most of them who are land owners would sell and go to Jamaica, could they sell their property for any thing like what it is worth, and many who have no means with which to go, would go could they obtain them.

Generally, our people, I think, have ceased to progress in this country. They are discouraged. May the Lord help them! The more intelligent of them are feeling deeply for posterity. They see but little hope for it, from the Northern and Southern Government. "They have more hope, however, from the South than North.

There is nothing of much real interest in these parts to write about. The colored school system here did not work very well, and many of our best people will not allow their children to enter them. Mrs. M. A. Cary is still working on in behalf of her school in this town. I hope she may not be forgotten by our friends. Let her have aid to relieve her school property from embarrassment.

Rev. Thomas Hughes, of Dresden, is also hard at it to make his school what it ought to be. It is not a colored school—white and black in common attend it. He had a large Pic-Nic for the school on the sixth instant. White and colored speakers mingled for the first time. As the school was the result of our humble efforts, I had the honor of being one of the speakers.

It was a pleasant affair and did good. We are afflicted with the troubles of our Methodist brethren here with regard to who is the proper "Bishop of Canada," in the African E. Church, Bishop Nazrey or Green. I hope it may be settled without a law suit.

"The Union Camp Meeting" folks are having a fine time of it a few miles from this town. There were some four thousand persons present last Sabbath. It seems a meeting of all denominations. There were many of the "Roughs" in attendance. I hope good will result, but I think the time might be better spent for the advancement of the good cause. But all are free, and I rejoice in the fact—God is the Judge. May he bless the efforts! It is truly rejoicing to learn that the churches of the different denominations of our people have enjoyed precious revivals of religion of late, and that many dear souls have been added to them. May they have more of such blessed seasons.

We are watching the war of your country with deep interest. General Butler is now the favorite of all the army officers among us. Bad luck to the hypocrites! As ministers and people we don't know whether to pray for Jeff. Davis or Lincoln. Our prayers, like our eyes, begin to turn Southward.

Yours for the right,

W. P. NEWMAN.

Important Letter from New Haven.

New Haven has but little to say this week. News is scarce in this quiet region; times are dull, and money is hard to reach. The present urgent demand for troops at Washington has, however, created some activity among those who are qualified to enlist. But we are not of that number, for we are not permitted to fight under the "Star-Spangled Banner" for the maintenance of "the Union, the Constitution, and the Laws."

On Saturday last the remains of Col. Farnham, of the New York Fire Zouaves, attended by his family and friends, and several committees from New York companies, arrived here from New York city, and was received at the depot by the several military and fire companies of the city, and escorted to the New Haven Cemetery for interment. The funeral services were performed at the grave by the Rev. Dr. Beardsley and the Rev. Prof. Harwood. Throngs of spectators attended the solemn scene, and among them a respectable and respectful intermixture of that class of people who have no rights which white men are bound to respect. I honor the memory of every man who has fell fighting for liberty; but I could trample on the ashes of every one who falls fighting to perpetuate slavery.

Later accounts have been received from the New Haven colony at Port-au-Prince, from which we have the sad intelligence of the death of Mr. John P. Anthony, and Mrs. Holly, mother of the Rev. James Theodore Holly. Mr. Anthony's aged father and mother accompanied him to Hayti. They are also both dead. The letter which brought the account of these deaths also stated that the Rev. Mr. Holly was lying very ill. There has been much sickness and many deaths in this colony.

The Rev. Mr. Berry of St. Luke's Church, is delivering a series of very interesting discourses to the young on Sunday evenings. Last Sunday evening was delivered the third of the series; the house was filled with a highly respectable and intelligent audience, white and colored, evincing the most marked attention to the subject of the speaker throughout. These Sunday evening discourses are delivered by special request of the young. I will send you for the next "Anglo" a report of part of one of these discourses.

NEW HAVEN.

Letter from Rev. J. W. Loguen.

MR. EDITOR:—I thank you for sending to me my old and welcome friend, the WEEKLY ANGLO-AFRICAN. I cannot express my feelings of pleasure on seeing that dear sheet once more.

I think there never was a time when we as people needed a weekly paper as we do at this time—yes, one that will attend to our interest in this country honestly and decidedly as that able, faithful and fearless "Douglass Monthly" does, for if ever there was a paper devoted to any cause, that paper is and always has been.

We want a weekly, and every man of us should take it in these fearfully interesting times. God is carrying on a war with this guilty nation, that they may know that He has not forgotten us, and his justice would not sleep forever. The cry of these poor ones has entered his ear, and his "arm is not shortened that it may not save, nor his ear heavy that he may not hear." This nation has been setting traps to catch men long enough, it has at last caught itself, and I thank God for it. Think of the sufferings we have endured, the hellish outrages on us as a people which have been committed. Our people are deeply interested in this war and are doing much, and are ready to do much more than the Government is willing to have them do. But without a faithful organ like the Anglo-African sustained by us, the world would not know the fact. God bless you in your work, my brother. I will do what I can to sustain you and your paper.

Yours for liberty,

J. W. LOGUEN.

Syracuse, N. Y., Aug. 22, 1861.

What Europeans Think of our Treatment of the Hero Tillman.

The Paris correspondent of the New York "Tribune," writes as follows:

Speaking of the military marine reminds me: Two weeks or so ago the French war transport steamer, the Ariege, left Toulon for Senegal, having aboard, as honorary passenger guest, Ben-el-Mogohdad, Chevalier of the Legion of Honor. B. M. dines at the officers' table. He is black as your hat, is Mogohdad, Knight of the Legion of Honor, the Senegal Negro Chief much honored of the French Government. And Steward Tillman, the bloody, bold, and resolute restorer, against fearful hostile odds, of our country's flag to its topmast hight? What have we done with him, we freedom-loving, humanitarian, wisely politic Northern folks, with whose struggles against the slave power of the South, the London "Times" shamefully refuses to sympathize? Mr. Lincoln cannot put the red ribbon of the Legion of Honor in the button-hole of the sailor's jacket as Louis Napoleon would instanter; he cannot give him a pension, as Victoria would—Victoria, of whose newly instituted order of Knighthood nine merchantably dark-colored East Indians are fellows with the first and noblest English whites. But do we mess with Tillman? Would Lieutenant-Colonel Emory touch the heroic dark vindicator of the geelorious stars and stripes with his finger-tips? Would the proprietor of St. Bobolinks give Tillman a garret-room in that palatial hotel? Would the patriotic rough suffer Tillman to ride with him in a Bowery omnibus? Is Tillman feted by the Common Councilmen and fair ladies and engine companies and Barnum and newspaper reporters and Didsbury and the General Jenkins—as Jenny Lind, or Japanese Tommy, or the titular Avenger of Ellsworth, or excellent Hungarian Ujhazy, or Blondin, or the Prince of Wales, or the Great Eastern, or the Atlantic Telegraph, or Mary Taylor was feted? Is the first hero that crops out in the current annals of American naval history, presented with the freedom of the city in a snuff-box, is he a citizen even, let alone fellow-citizens? Pity for Tillman's material comfort and high honorable recognition, that he is not the oppressed subject of some effete European monarch, the decorated, pensioned victim of some European despotism, rather than a taxed, non-voting, almost non-human nigger native of happy, proud Columbia, the chosen land of the [white] free and home of the [white] brave!

Such interrogative and ejaculatory comment on Tillman's case is European, not mine. I trust that I understand our institutions, Northern and Southern, and distinguish their finely shaded, deep, dark differences, which French observers think are only superficial, cutaneous. There is Victor Hugo, for instance, the first of French poets living or dead. I should wonder if he wrote Tillman's poem—raising up Tillman's name from that little schooner's bloody deck as he raised up John Brown's name from that poor Virginia gallows into the high overshining light of immortal poesy. And you could not induce this Victor Hugo to attach a line of his cheapest prose to most of our gallant (they are all gallant) white colonels—from Col. Emory up or down. Queer, these Europeans are.

What the Slaves Think of Fremont.

It will be generally recollected that shortly after the election in 1856, the Tennessee papers gave accounts of a threatened insurrection among the slaves of a portion of the State, and that the insurrection was induced by the supposition prevalent among the blacks that Fremont was coming up the river backed by a large army, for the purpose of liberating all the slaves. The exact details of this insurrectionary movement were never fully published; but it was known that many slaves were summarily tried and found guilty, some being executed and others being sent further South.

From well-authenticated sources, it is ascertained that the superstition of 1856 has been revived; that the presence of Fremont at the head of the Western forces is already known to the negroes, and that his reappearance is hailed as a sure precursor of their liberation. This feeling has spread rapidly within the last month, and it is attracting great attention and exciting much alarm among the whites of those districts where there is a large proportion of slaves. My informant assures me that once the name of Fremont is connected with any victory over the rebels, or that he is known to be in the State of Tennessee or Mississippi, the negroes will at once rise in rebellion. It is said that the fear of this danger at their own thresholds induced the rebels to take the offensive in Missouri, and to keep the battle-field as far as possible from the eager and watching negroes.

THE COLORED PEOPLE OF CANADA AND THE WAR.

The Toronto "Globe" declares that the National Government has thus far dealt too tenderly with slaveholders. It says:

"There have been latterly, however, some indications of a coming down from this gingerly regard for the sanctity of the peculiar institution of the Southern rebels, and on the strength of these institutions, John Brown, Jr., has thrown himself into the contest. In a letter addressed to some friend in Chatham, C. W., explaining why he could not be with them to celebrate the 1st of August, he says: 'Since the defeat of our army at Manassas, I have enlisted for the war, believing that the contest between the North and the South is now, substantially, one between freedom and slavery. Until now I have refrained from engaging in this war, from the conviction that the Government would do nothing in behalf of the slave; but the people here are the Government, and they are now demanding, in unmistakable terms, the removal of the cause of our troubles.'

After some remarks about the Haytian emigration scheme, he says: 'Another work is now before me; before it is ended I trust the opportunity will be afforded to the colored man to vindicate himself even here. In view of this prospect, will not every true man among you prepare to engage in the work whenever the military services of colored men are accepted by the Government of the United States, which I believe soon will be? You need not be surprised if our Government should soon accept colored regiments. Please do tell all you can to organize and drill in anticipation of such an event.'

If this idea should be realized, says the 'Globe,' it would show some disposition on the part of the North to making the war one of freedom against slavery, and to such a war the colored people of Canada would doubtless contribute many stout hearts and strong arms to assist in striking the oppressor's yoke from off the necks of their kinsfolk in the South."

Kidnapping of a "White Man" in Illinois.

From the Quincey (Ill.) Republican of Aug. 17th.

Some two months ago it will be remembered that a citizen of this city, named William Rolen, was induced by Mr. James Minieare to go into Missouri to convey an insane woman to St. Catherines, Mo., and that on reaching Hudson, he was seized, ironed, and carried off into slavery on the pretence that he "owed service and labor" to a Missourian named Cannon. Rollen returned to this city on Saturday, and his statement will at least be interesting.

He was taken and lodged in jail, where he has been about eight weeks, a man who enjoyed freedom for the last eighteen years not being supposed to be able to reconcile himself easily to the charms of slavery. At the end of that time (or a few days before) Mr. Minieare (as Rolen states) came over to Missouri, visited him in prison, brought with him the number of a house and lot owned by Rolen in this city, had a deed written, and told Rolen he could be released from jail on condition that he would convey this property to Mr. Cannon (the master) and in addition solemnly pledge himself to do faithful "service and labor" to Cannon for three years, he then to be emancipated. Seeing no other way to secure his liberty Rolen assented, was liberated and set to work—worked one day and a half for "old massa," borrowed some provisions one morning and a butcher knife, and decamped for Quincy, not much expecting to reach it, but did nevertheless after a week of travel by night and of concealment by day, Mr. Menieare having preceded him a few days.

Rolen learned while in jail, through Cannon's son, that the Clerk of Boone Co. received a letter from Minieare inquiring whether a man named Cannon resided in that section, and that on receiving an affirmative answer Cannon himself soon received a letter from Mr. M. stating that his slave, Rolen, was here, and between the two a plan was agreed upon for his capture, which resulted successfully as already known.

These accounts, of course, all come through Rolen. If untrue they place Minieare in an exceedingly disagreeable light. His own action may determine to some extent their truth or falsity. As Rolen has passed here for many years as a white man, is white, has voted the Democratic ticket, and sat on juries as other white men do, if his "old mars" chooses to come here to re-arrest him, he may have an exceedingly trying time of it, not only to overcome the legal disabilities of the case, but he may have trouble with Rolen himself, who avows himself now to be prepared with the requisite tools for such emergencies. As for Mr. Minieare, one of whose letters the public has already been favored with, we shall let him rest for a day or two until we see another letter from him, or until we know what a day or two will bring forth.

Mr. Minieare was arrested on Monday, charged with being accessory to the kidnapping of William Rolen before and after the fact. The case came off at two P. M., before Justice Ricker, McGindley and Duff, assisted by Mr. Warren, appearing for the people, and Messrs. Wheat and Marcey for the prisoner. The trial excited so much interest that an adjournment was had to the County Court Room, and a termination was not reached until after ten o'clock at night.

The evidence was substantially what we have already published, and went to show a conspiracy against the liberty of Rolen. He was asked by Minieare to go into Missouri, and was then seized and imprisoned. The alleged master's son admitted to Rolen that a knowledge of Rolen's whereabouts was gained through Minieare, accompanied with the statement that the Quincy people wanted him (the master) to take Rolen away. He also stated that his father had paid Minieare for his services in securing his return. While Rolen was in prison, Minieare came to him with a deed of Rolen's little property in this city, ready drawn in the master's favor, tendered him his freedom on executing it and promising three years of servitude, and threatened him with dire calamities if he came back to Quincy. Mr. W. F. Pitney of the Adams County Clerk's Office testified that Mr. Minieare had had this deed recorded there which clinches that transaction.

The case was so clear that Justice Ricker without hesitation held the prisoner to bail to the sum of one thousand dollars, Mr. A. C. Marsh becoming his bondsman. If convicted, the punishment will be a pretty long residence in the Penitentiary, the amusement of kidnapping white men not being regarded with favor by our Courts or people.

Messrs. McGindley and Duff have already filed a bill in Chancery, to set aside the deed of Rolen's property, in which they will no doubt be successful. Some nice, if not new law points affecting slavery, are likely to grow out of the question in case the alleged master should attempt to prove Rolen a slave, and in case our late United States Supreme Court decisions are respected. The energy and kindly spirit manifested by the attorneys for the people to vindicate the wrongs of an oppressed man are worthy of especial commendation.

It may be mentioned as a curious incident of the case, that all the parties to it are Democrats. Rolen himself has always been a Democrat; Mr. Minieare is a Democrat office-holder, Justice Ricker is a Democrat, and every one of the attorneys whose names have been mentioned, is of the same faith. This, of course, has no bearing on its merits, but it divests it of all possibility of being a "Black Republican conspiracy," as our philanthropic friend of the "Herald" would be apt to charge in high party times.

The bail demanded, it strikes us, is extremely moderate, considering that the crime charged is the enslavement and pecuniary ruin of a free white man with a family depending on him for support. However, we presume it is satisfactory, as we hear no complaint.

NEWS FROM LIBERIA, W. A.

By recent arrivals, we have received copies of the Liberia "Herald" to June 19, and letters of a later date. We are pleased to announce the safe arrival in that country of Mr. C. O. Luca and lady, Mr. Peter Downing and lady, Mr. J. M. Luca and Miss Nancy Poulson. We clip the following from the "Herald."

THE RECAPTIVES PER "NIGHTINGALE."

These unfortunate people who were captured off the Congo about the 25th of last April and landed here the 8th of May, having very generally recovered from the dreadful effects of the passage here, were all apprenticed to the most reliable of our citizens at the last session of the Probate court; thus the initiatory step toward fitting them for the duties of citizenship has been taken, and the recaptives are now doing finely.

On another page will be found the reports of Doctors Moore and Laing, who were the physicians in charge of the recaptives during their stay in this place and Careysburg immediately preceding their being apprenticed.

At the time these people arrived they were in the most wretched condition; never have we seen more horrifying pictures of human wretchedness and suffering. They were all that Dr. Moore calls them, walking skeletons.

The fact that these unfortunate people were shipped in a worse condition than usual, accounts for their suffering before and after they reached here.

Lieutenant Guthrie, prize officer in command of the Nightingale, states that the re-captives had been in barracoon about three months previous to shipping them by the slaver; that they had been poorly fed, and their stock of provisions had been nearly exhausted, so nearly so that the slaver was obliged to take them that week or not at all.—That the re-captives were in a literal state of starvation, and general sickness prevailed when they were shipped.

These statements of lieutenant Guthrie are corroborated by the fact, that during the twelve days passage of the prize ship to this port 166 of the re-captives died—making fourteen deaths daily.

The great wonder is, that instead of the list of mortality, as exhibited by the reports of doctors Moore and Laing, the whole of these people had not died, considering the circumstances under which they were shipped and brought here.

This mortality, when compared with previous re-captives, rates favorably, and upon calculation will be found to be no less than that of those sent out in the Niagara, in 1858, or those sent from Florida, U. S. during last year, taking the whole time.

Our Careysburg Correspondent says: "Our town is now as healthy as can be expected at this season of the year. No sickness at all of note.

Our farmers are doing well in the soil—300 to 400 acres under cultivation, with encouraging prospects of much more."

We are pleased to learn that some of the agriculturists of Careysburg have expectations of contributing to our representation in the "International Fair."

Arrangements are making for celebrating the 26th of July. Hon. J. H. Paxton has accepted the invitation of the committee of arrangements to deliver the National Oration, John R. Freeman, Esq. reads the Declaration of Independence.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH FAIR.—Arrangements are making by the Ladies of the Episcopal church of this place for holding a Fair, to come off some time in July, the proceeds of which are to be appropriated toward completing the church building started some time ago, in this city, for that denomination, and which has been for a time suspended from a want of funds that had been expected from the United States.

The bark "Daylight," Captain Alexander cleared from Palmas, May 4th, with a cargo of African produce for Liverpool.

The "Daylight" carried 22 hogsheads of Sugar, 30 puncheons of Molasses, produce of the St. Paul's river, 45,000 gallons of Palm-Oil, 68 tons of Camwood.

NEW MUSIC.—Mr. C. O. Luca, assisted by Mrs. J. M. Luca, gave his first concert at the M. E. Seminary Building, Thursday evening, 13th inst.

The performance on the Piano by Mr. Luca was grand, skilful and scientific. Mrs. Luca's singing, with grace and elegance, caped the climax, and rendered the exercise highly delightful.

ATTENTION.—The captains and commanders of each company in the different settlements of New Georgia, Caldwell, Virginia, Clay Ashland, Louisiana, White Plains, Millsburg, Harrisburg, and Careysburg are hereby commanded to enrol every male citizen from the age of sixteen to fifty, and to present the same to the next Court Martial.

By order of the commander-in-chief,
B. A. J. K. ANDERSON,
Adjutant 1st. Reg.

Mr. E. J. Roye with his brig the "E. N. Roye" has just arrived from the Gold coast, Bonny and the Calabars—Mr. Roye has a rich cargo in which are nearly three tons of Ivory of the fist quality—Mr. Roye leaves soon for Liverpool.

Death of Chas. S. Eato.

We regret to announce the death of this estimable young man, in Liberia, W. A. He had had several attacks of the fever, all of which he survived, but being somewhat of a politician he was in the habit of attending evening meetings, and the excitement consequent to it brought on an attack of the brain fever from which he never recovered. His employers, Messrs. Johnson, Turpin & Dunbar, in a letter to his uncle, E. V. Clark, Esq., say: "We need not assure you how deeply we regret his loss. His services were so valuable to us that it will be impossible to have them replaced. His unassuming manners and correct deportment won for him hosts of friends."

A. M. E. ZION CAMP MEETING AT PORT RICHMOND S. I.—We visited this camp on Sunday last, (25 inst.) and found every thing in order. The Revd. Messrs. Colman and others, offiated on the occasion. The exercises attracted a good deal of attention and appeared to be highly satisfactory to all concerned. The number in attendance was not very large, but was highly respectable. About half the assemblage was composed of whites who conducted themselves in a very creditable manner.

IMPORTANT FROM HAYTI.

From The Boston Traveler.

For some time apprehensions have been expressed that preparations were making by the blacks of Hayti to overthrow what they call the "Mulatto Government" of the island, the latter class being the most intelligent and wealthy inhabitants of the republic, though in a great minority in regard to numbers. President Geffrard is nearly black, but the mulatto element has considerable control in his councils, and his ministry, as a general thing, are classed as leaning in the same direction.

The caste feeling of the blacks of Hayti is stronger against the mulatto than even the pure white, and it has been evident for some time that an attempt at overthrow of the Government would take place at an early day. The malcontents had their headquarters at the capital, but the trading blacks are constitutionaly timid, and in their various revolutions the fierce mahogany cutters in the vicinity of Aux Cayes, Jeremie, and other places, are summoned to the work of overthrow. These are mostly ignorant blacks, who are ready for any work that promises increased pay or plunder. The conspiracy, according to advices received in this city from Aux Cayes, Jeremie, &c., as late as the 8th instant, had been discovered by Government, and, at Aux Cayes several arrests had been made of conspirators, who would probably be shot.

No disposition is manifested to change the government of the island again from a Republic to an Empire, but the rebels seek to place in the Presidential chair Solomons, late Prime Minister under the Emperor Soulouque, who is a most ardent hater of white and mulatto. For the present conspiracy has been checked by the arrests that have been made, but letters from unprejudiced sources express the opinion that the blacks will, ere long, carry out their designs. Among other plans to satisfy the people, it has been proposed to change all of the Cabinet but one, in order to introduce into it a larger share of the black element.

The general feeling in Hayti seems to be that as the war in the United States will not result in the general emancipation of the slaves, the sooner it is settled the better, for it interfears greatly with the prosperity of the island.

From St. Domingo, intelligence comes that the inhabitants are reconciled to the Spanish Government, as it gives them stability in the place of continued rebellions and revolutions.

A Slave Saving a whole Regiment by prayer.

We should not be surprised to learn that the price of praying slaves had gone up since the following incident was made public. Its narration appears in a late number of the Richmond (Va.) Examiner. The writer in speaking of a visit to the colored Methodist church of that city, says:

Rev. Mr. Nolly, the pastor, preached from Prov. iii: 6, an appropriate sermon. The following incident of the battle of Manassas was told to his colored hearers with a simplicity becoming his audience, and evidently affecting them deeply,—

He said that there are many facts and incidents connected with our late victory at Manassas which show that the hand of the Lord was directed on that occasion. But that which will strike you most forcibly, is the following. You remember, that there was a pious servant connected with the Washington Artillery, from the city of New Orleans, which was quartered near this city several weeks before they proceeded to the field of battle. You remember how fervently he prayed that the Lord would protect his company when they might go into the field, and "give them the victory." You remember how earnestly he begged an interest in your prayers, to the same effect.

This company was engaged in that battle on Sunday last. They were in the thickest of the fight. But of the six hundred of which they were composed, only one lost his life! Surely the prayers of this pious servant, in connection with yours and thousands of others, were heard in securing the Divine interposition on that occasion; and it is proper that we all unite in grateful acknowledgment of it.

SAD INTELLIGENCE FROM HAYTI.

It will be seen by our New Haven letter that death is making havoc in the New Haven colony in Hayti. Many valuable citizens have fallen, whose names we have not yet received, but our readers will deeply regret to find recorded that of Mr. John P. Anthony. Mr. Anthony has been long known as a valuable citizen both in Brooklyn and New Haven, and it is in these cities where his death will be the most deeply mourned. We offer our condolence to the afflicted families of those who have fallen. May the fact that they met death while in search of that liberty denied them in this country be a consolation in this hour of their distress.

It will be seen by the letter, that the Rev. J. Theo. Holly lies very ill, and we learn through another channel that Mrs. Holly has become insane.

BARNUM'S "WHAT IS IT."

The N. Y. correspondent of the Taunton, Mass., Gazette furnishes the following in that paper of Aug. 22nd:

Let me premise by saying that I have great respect for Barnum as a force. He has that earnestness of character without which men never accomplish great deeds. I have no doubt that if he is about to catch a stickleback to put into one of his acquaria—or aequariums, as he prefers to call them—he throws into the act the whole power of his energy and talent, as if it were a Joyce Heth or a Woolly Horse. It is this that makes his greatness. Had he not been a showman and a humbug by profession, he would have been at the head of his calling in any other walk of life in which it might have happened to him to be thrown. It is difficult to come in contact with him without being impressed and even overawed by his genius. I remember a case in point. He has had, and may have now for aught I know, a nondescript in his Museum, which he is pleased to call a "What is it?" This creature was, perhaps is, trotted about and grins and capers to the wonderment of visitors, while one of Barnum's assistants relates at great length, and with great solemnity, how it was taken by some traveler in Africa, and the only reasonable conclusion that he arrived at in regard to it, is that it is the veritable and hitherto undiscovered link between the man and monkey.

Now the "What is it?" is an idiot negro child, and this is the way I happen to know what every body else has long suspected.

A friend of mine who has traveled much in Africa, and has penetrated where no other white man has ever been, was one day told, nearly two years ago, that there was on exhibition in a shed in an obscure part of the town, a very curious specimen of the native African, which the showman said was sent to this country by the celebrated traveler Dr. Livingstone, and that he ought to see it.

My friend immediately made a visit to the obscure shed, somewhere on the East River.

He found a little negro idiot, which his familiarity with native African tribes assured him could not have been born in that country. He indignantly accused the showman of that deception, and convinced him that he, at least, could not be taken in by such an imposture. The man at length acknowledged that the child was born in New Jersey, but as he was a hideous dwarf and idiotic, he thought he could make a show of it enhancing its value as a curiosity by pretending it was a native African. He added, naively, "we must all live somehow," though my friend did not seem to be much impressed with the truth of that remark.

A few weeks later the wonderful "What is it?" was advertised at Barnum's. My friend, the traveler, called to see this second remarkable creature caught in the wilds of Africa. He found his young acquaintance from New Jersey, late of the obscure shed on the East River.

Not many days thereafter I happened to hear the great showman expatiating on this last accession to the curiosities of his museum. I repeated to him in my blandest way the little facts I have just related, the most important of which I know that he knew, and he knew that I knew that he knew, adding, "Had I not better make a paragraph about it, for the morning paper, Mr. Barnum?" The great man looked down upon me benignantly and smilingly, "better not!" said he. The audacity of his genius so overcome and impressed me that from that day to this I have never mentioned the story, except in private circles. I have no doubt I disappointed him, for had I come out with my little paragraph it would have given him an opportunity for a new advertisement, including several affidavits from the man of whom he procured the young African, the man who snatched him from the arms of his maternal parent, a female Gorilla, and the captain of the ship who brought him over.

GREAT EXCITEMENT IN CIRCLEVILLE.—On Monday morning last our community were started by the announcement that a party of negroes had attempted to violate the person of a German lady of this place which caused great excitement, and in the course of an hour or so a large crowd had assembled. About half past nine o'clock, one of the negroes supposed to have been engaged in the outrageous act, was arrested, and while on the way to the jail with him, the crowd followed, with the cry of "lynch him," &c., but the Mayor placed himself between the crowd and the negro and succeeded in lodging him safely in jail, where he now remains.

A number of negroes were arrested during the day. In the evening a crowd assembled and started for "Brartown," with the determination of "cleaning out" the "colored population," but not finding any negroes there, they started for "Smoky Row," and entered a house there, but before they had time to do anything, the Mayor, Marshal and some citizens arrived and succeeded in getting the crowd to leave. The crowd then started and proceeded up Pickaway street until they arrived at the house occupied by BOB RANDOLPH, where they made some threats, and expressed the desire to "have one nigger anyhow." A gun was then fired from the back part of the house, and an old citizen of this place, by the name of BOWERS, was shot in the head. The wound is not mortal, and he will get well. The crowd then commenced throwing stones against the house, and some rushed up and broke the door in and set fire to the bed clothes, and in a few minutes the whole building was in a blaze. About this time a heavy rain came up, which saved the houses near by. The house and all its contents were burned up. The crowd then dispersed for the night. On Tuesday morning some of them again assembled and lingered around the corners all day. About noon one of the crowd notified the negroe barbers that they "must shut up shop, as he was not going to allow any more negroes in town." About five or six o'clok in the evening, the crowd had increased, when a difficulty arose between one of the crowd and one of the citizens, who desired to have the "fuss" stopped, which resulted in the arrest of the first, and the quieting of the crowd. On Wednesday it was reported that the mob intended to attack the negroes again, and the Mayor increased his police force, and if they had attempted the work again there would, in all probability have been some bloody work, as the Mayor had determined that it must be stopped.—Everything is quiet now.—"Circleville (O.) Herald" of Aug. 16th.

SUMMARY.

RECALL OF THE AMERICAN SQUADRON.—We learn, says the "Liberia Herald" of June 19, that the steam vessels composing the United States squadron on this (West Africa) coast have been called home. Owing to the difficulties now in the United States, their services are required at home. These vessels are the Sumpter, Mohican, and Mystic. This fact reduplicates our regret at the present state of United States affairs. The recall of the first American squadron that has ever merited any consideration of efficiency since these squadrons have been coming to the coast, and a time, too, when it is operating so eminently successfully in suppressing the slave trade, is to be greatly regretted, as much in the general, as the cause of its recall.

The Chicago Journal of the 20th inst., says:

A few days ago we mentioned a small child having been accidentally run over, and its head scalped, by one of the State street cars. Samuel Wadsworth, (colored,) parent of the child has commenced suit in the Circuit Court against the Railway Company for injuries sustained by his child, laying the damages at the exceedingly moderate sum of $5,000.

The Philadelphia Inquirer says that a decree has been entered in the United States District Court in the case of the schooner Enchantress, awarding salvage, in the sum of $1,500, to the crew of the U. S. vessel Albatross, and also decreeing that the negro cook, Jacob Garrison, who by jumping overboard, gave the alarm, thus causing the recapture, should come in, the same as one of the crew of the Albatross for proportionate share of salvage. Restitution of the schooner to the owners was likewise decreed.

The Baltimore Clipper of the 19th inst., contains the following item:

William Taylor and Washington Johnson, two slaves belonging to R. Younger, were arrested on Saturday charged with attempting to run away from their master. They were committed to jail by Justice Logan for safe keeping.

A private letter from St. Mary's county, Maryland, to the editors of the Intelligencer, says: "There is quite a rush to our shore of the blacks from Virginia. On Tuesday morning last a batteau, in which there were ten likely negroes, was stranded on Cornfield Point. They got safe to land, and were taken up by the neighborhood patrol, and last night, I believe, they were sent back to Virginia.

In the proceedings of the Providence [R. I.] Common Council appears the following:

Mr. Davis presented the petition of John Banks and others, praying the City Council to "remove the last remaining relics of slavery and barbarism in Rhode Island," by amending the school ordinances so as to secure the admittance of children without regard to color to the public schools. The Council by a vote of 6 to 13 refused to refer the petition to the Committee on Education and then unanimously laid it on the table.

GEN. LANE AND SLVERY.—Gen. Lane answered at Leavenworth on the 15th inst and in an address to the citizens said: "Kansas has a glorious reputation; it must be sustained. We will not refrain from marching Union armies into Slave States for fear of injuring their institution. He was the last man in the world to catch slaves for traitors. The institution of Slavery will perish with the march of the Union army, and thank God it is so!" He wouldn't march into Missouri or Arkansas to destroy Slavery, but he wouldn't object to seeing a Union army marching in, and an army of saves marching out. If Slavery perishes the fault is with its friends. We have to choose between our Government and a military despotism based on Slavery.

ARREST OF A NOTED SLAVE DEALER.—J. A. Machaso, residing at No. 33 Saint Mark's Place, was arrested on Wednesday last by Marshals Sheehan and Lee, for being engaged in the slave trade. He has perhaps excelled all others of the class in this city in this business. Among the slavers that he outfitted are the Montauk, the Brutus, the Triton, the Kate, the W. R. Kibbee, and the Mary Frances. He owns the Kate, and had an interest in the others. He is a Spaniard, about fifty years of age, and one of the oldest, wealthiest and most successful slave dealers in New York.

He was brought before Commissioner Henry for examination, and held to $5,000 bail, in default of which he was sent to the Tombs.

At Los Angelos, Cal., on the 29th of June, a colored man by the name of Franklin Marsh shot another colored man named John Brandon. The occurrence took place at the house of a quadroon named Peppers.

A colored man by the name of Brooks living in Southac St., Boston, was thrown from a wagon in Cambridge St. and slightly injured.

ANOTHER RUNAWAY.—Robert Connier, a servant for a term of years of Henry C. Mackall, Esq., of this county, absconded Sunday last. He hired a horse and carriage of Mr. F. Bradbury, of this town, and proceeded in company with several other colored people to a negro camp meeting, held in Rigby's woods, Lancaster county, Pa., but did not return. The horse and carriage was found hitched in the woods somewhere in the neighborhood, and brought home by Mr. Bradbury on Tuesday. This is another evidence of the activity of abolition emmissaries in the vicinity. A better servant or a more kind and indulgent master were no where to be found.—Elkton (Md.,) "Democrat," Aug. 17th, 1861.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial, writing from Gen. Bank's department says:

"The number of negroes who have escaped to the army of this department is inconsiderable, compared with the number (900) now within Gen. Butler's lines, but they are every day increasing, and the least disposition manifested to treat them as humanity suggests, would soon swell the aggregate to thousands. Whether they shall be still further advanced and made actively as well as passively the instruments of putting down the rebellion, will depend mainly upon the rebels themselves. Whatever the sympathies of the North may be, it is quite certain her people do not propose a contest in which negroes shall be used exclusively for the benefit of the aggressive party; and if the Confederate Government see proper to arm *negroe regiments, it will not be long in dis*covering that negro will fight negro. I have conversed with a number of officers, now of this division, who were participants in the battle of Manassas, and they assure me that they did see armed companies of blacks in the engagement; and though many of them have been as life-long conservatives as Gen. Butler, they have arrived at conclusions as to what should be done for us in advance of notions loosely floating about in the anti-slavery atmosphere of the North. The logic of muskets in the hands of Southern chattels, to be turned perhaps, against them, produces conversion not less sudden than radical, and forces home convictions of policy that may hereafter be generally shared by the people of the loyal States. If the rebels choose to inaugurate such a war policy, they must abide its consequences without grumbling!

The Providence correspondent of the New Bedford Mercury gives the following:

"Wade Hampton is said to have gone to battle attended by a favorite slave—Reynolds is attended by an African likewise; a huge, doublefisted, brawny Ethiopian stevedore, known by the familiar cognomen of Jim Reeder. Wherever is seen the form of the Captain, there also looms the dark outline of the still darker and redoubtable Jim. A story is related of this African, which is too good to be lost. When the 1st Regiment went, Reeder went as servant to Reynolds, then a Lieutenant; as the steamer neared the Virginia shore, going round Cape Charles, a wag asked Jim to show his free papers. The features of the swarthy Hannibal settled into an unconquerable, stubborn expression, the huge knotted hands went into the secret depths of his regimentals and flashed out, quick as lightning, grasping like death a brace of ugly revolvers. 'Massa, dem's my papers.' The wag was demolished."

A correspondent of the Springfield Republican writes from Washington:

"Finally, our informant reports the conduct of the slaves brought into communication with our army as excellent. Wherever opportunity has offered, they have deserted en masse, and having rendered valuable service as spies, and no instance is known of their having proved faithless to their trusts; it mattered little whether their owners were Union men or secessionists, they all quit service as soon as an opportunity offered. A Union man in the vicinity of Alexandria whose property had been protected by the army, came into camp one day with a statement that it was of no use to try to keep any "niggers" in the vicinity of the army. Even old Aunt Elsie," said he, "who is over seventy years old, who has nursed me and my children, and who neither does nor can work any longer—even she left me this morning."

A correspondent of the Milwaukie (Wis.) Sentinel, writing from Baltimore, says:

While tarrying here, a little incident occurred, occasioning some excitement. A poor specimen of humanity belonging to Company C, went down town and brought up a policeman, to arrest some fugitive slaves which he alleged had been stolen by men of the regiment. His object seemed to be to re-enslave a poor fellow who had run away from Virginia, and after securing his liberty, had been employed as a servant in Company C, but his machinations failed, as the policemen were unable to find that or any other negro. A storm of hisses greeted the fellow who had made this attempt at re-enslaving a negro, as the majority of the men of the regiment wished it to be understood that they did not go South, either to steal or hunt negroes.

The Boston Pilot has an interesting letter from the camp of the Ninth Massachusetts regiment, Col. Cass, now in Washington, in which the writer says: "Father Scully is working wonderfully among us. He is very popular among the men, and is extremely zealous for their spiritual welfare. We had mass on the 4th of July, and regularly every Sunday. We have a young neophyte among us. Our worthy chaplain procured a colored boy for his servant, who is very interesting. He was baptized, and is now being instructed in the doctrines of the Catholic faith."

The Frederick (Md.,) "Examiner" of the 21st inst. contains the following:

One day last week, a gentleman of Urbana district visited the camp of General Banks at Sandy Hook, in pursuit of a fugitive slave, who was believed to have sought concealment there. The gentleman met a courteous reception and every facility to prosecute his object was afforded him. At length his search proved successful, and he was permitted, without hinderance or molestation, to reclaim the fugitive and take him back to his master.

The "Baltimore Clipper" of August 22, says:

On Tuesday night, Captain Nones, of the cutter Forward, now anchored off Fort Carroll, captured two negroes in a canoe, who were endeavoring to escape from their masters. One of the negroes belongs to Mr. Dunnock, on Wiggins' Neck, and the other to Samuel Knign, of the same place. The negroes were placed on board of the cutter, and will be returned to their masters as soon as circumstances will permit.

The Baltimore Clipper of August 24th says:

On Thursday afternoon a colored woman named Sarah Collins, residing at No. 253 East Orleans street, died under circumstances which look as though the woman had been foully dealt with. On Wednesday her husband beat her in an outrageous manner—first choking her and then knocking her down. While she lay insensible upon the floor the monster placed both of his knees upon her breast and dealt her several blows in the face and on the neck. She had been in a delicate situation for several days previous, and it was thought that her death was hastened by the beating which she received. Coroner Hall being apprized of the affair ordered the arrest of the husband yesterday, who was confined in the Eastern station house until a jury of inquest empanelled by Coroner Hall investigated. Several witnesses were examined, some of whom testified to the brutal treatment of the husband; but upon the body of the woman being examined by a competent physician, it became evident that her death was caused by natural causes. The jury therefore rendered their verdict accordingly. Upon the rendition of the verdict the accused was liberated. On the following day Rebecca Williams and Mary Ann Cole, colored, were arrested, charged with stealing a quantity of jewelry, the property of the colored woman Collins, mentioned above. Upon the death of the woman Collins, the above accused parties conceived the idea that she would have no further use for the jewelry, and, acting upon this supposition, they began ransacking bureau drawers and trunks, and appropriated to their use several ear-rings and breastpins. They were locked up in the Eastern station house to await an examination.

The Wheeling [Va.] Intelligencer is responsible for the following:

About a week ago a farmer living a short distance southeast of the city employed a gentleman of African extraction to work in a harvest field. The work being done, the colored gentleman was paid in bank notes which he found some difficulty in passing at par in Ohio. He called upon his employer with a complaint that he could not get the money off, and was told by the former that he had no other and that the negro must rest content. A night or two afterwards some hundred or more sheaves of wheat mysteriously departed from one of the farmer's fields, and he has since been unable to get a sight either of the wheat or the negro, and he very reasonably supposes that the negro took the wheat. But how he managed to carry off such an immense quantity, and what disposition he made of it, is a mystery. There were no wagon tracks near the field, and no evidence that the wheat had been removed by any other means than by hand. The undertaking was a most Herculean one and was most adroitly performed.

Mary Pelham and Oliver Fitzgerald were stabbed by a girl of ill repute, named Josephine Russell, on the evening of the 13th inst., at Cincinnati. Josephine was crossing the yard of Mrs. Pelham to get into a house of ill fame near by, at which Mrs Pelham remonstrated. This incensed Josephine, and drawing a knife with a blade five or six inches in length, she made a cut at Mrs. Pelham, plunging the knife into her left side. Afterward she stabbed Fitzgerald in the arm, the blade of the knife passing clean through his arm. Information being brought to officers Renshaw and Williams that a woman had been stabbing a man, they went to the house of Mrs. Underhill, and found Josephine hid away in a closet, her hoops, which projected, exposing her hiding-place, and arrested her.

The Cincinnati Gazette of the 2nd says:

The colored people of this city celebrated the twenty-seventh anniversary of West Indian Emancipation yesterday. In the morning a meeting of the colored Sabbath Schools was held in Zion Church, at which appropriate addresses were made by several persons. In the afternoon, addresses were delivered at Allen Chapel by Rev. H. H. White, Rev. Rufus Conrad, and Mr. John P. Sampson, and in the evening, service was held in the Baker Street Church, Rev. G. Graham officiating.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The following is from the Philadelphia Inquirer of 19th inst.:

A camp meeting of our colored citizens has been in progress since Thursday last, in a wood near Media, and will be continued till next Thursday evening. Preaching takes place half past ten every morning, at three in the afternoon, and at eight o'clock every evening. The presiding minister is the Rev. Caleb Woodward, of the Bethel colored Methodist Church, corner Sixth and Lombard streets, assisted by several other colored preachers. An assemblage of about two thousand people collected there yesterday afternoon. They were chiefly white, and comprised visitors from this city, families of neighboring farmers, and sojourners in country boarding houses of the vicinity. Many well-dressed ladies and gentlemen were present.

Camp meetings have to a great extent lost their religious character during past years, and the scenes of ecstatic frenzy formerly exhibited by enthusiasts are rarely now observed. Visitors frequent them to see and to be seen. If the preaching possesses interest it is listened to, if not, attention is paid to the eatables and drinkables abundantly for sale around, or rural walks are indulged in. The few coming from motives of duty, who attend each of the daily services, often remain at night on the ground, and for their accommodation boarding tents are provided, containing beds and dining tables. We noticed at least a dozen of these, headed, "Union Church Boarding Tent," "Thornburg Boarding Tent," &c. The fare is very plain, and the board $1 a day, 38 cts being charged for a single dinner, and 25 cts for each other meal. It was our lot yesterday to hear, for the first time, the Rev. Caleb Woodward, whose exhortations being rather stoically received by the colored elect, he branched off upon politics, and without touching upon slavery, made a speech which was remarkable for pith, humor and eloquence. The Reverend gentleman then made a statement of his church liabilities, and closed with a request for money. Mr. Austin Stewart, a colored man from Canandaigua, New York State, will lecture, this evening, at eight o'clock, upon slavery, detailing his escape from it, and his experiences in the South of that much lauded institution.

A Camp Meeting is now being held at Highspire, near Harrisburg, Pa.

MR. EDITOR:—A camp meeting commenced last Friday, 22nd instant, at Herriman's Woods near Flushing, under the charge of Rev. J. M. Myers. I visited the ground last Sabbath and had the pleasure of hearing fine sermons from Rev. Messrs. P. C. Coster, John Washington, J. Long, J. M. Myers, James Seamen, Lewis Jackson and Joseph Chappell, the local preacher. The audiences were quite large, but smaller than they would have been had not the boat engaged by the Committee to bring visitors from New York and other points, broken down on the previous day (Saturday.) Good order prevailed on the Camp ground, but on the avenues leading to it, rowdyism was rampant. J. A. T.

A Camp Meeting will be held in a grove near the village of Franklin, Pa., commencing on Thursday, the 12th of September next, and continue until the following Sabbath evening. The religious exercises on the occasion will be conducted by brother William Livingston, of Orange County, but recently of the Southern states.

The members of Zion Church, Johnstown, New York, commenced a Camp Meeting on the 22nd instant, at Simmon's Grove, near the Fonda plank road. Rev. George Bosely, pastor of said church has charge of the meeting.

A Camp Meeting is advertised to be held in a grove near Stillwater, Pa., commencing Sept. 12, and continuing until the following Sabbath, inclusive.

PERSONAL.

We find the following statement going the rounds of the newspapers:

Merriam, one of John Brown's confederates at Harper's Ferry, had been drummed off the Island of Hayti, and returned to the States. He was endeavoring to raise money to get up an insurrection among the slaves of the Southern States, but President Geffrard fearing a complication with the American Government, ordered him to leave the island.

The Ashtabula Sentinel says:

We understand that John Brown, Jr.—if as it is expected he obtains authority from the War Department, for the equipment and transportation—will raise a Company of one hundred picked men accustomed to the use of the rifle, to serve the United States during the war, with Col. Montgomery in the brigade of Gen. James H. Lane of Kansas.

At a meeting of the Board of Education of Pittsburg, Pa., held on the 13th inst., Prof. Geo. B. Vashon was elected principal of the colored school, Miss Emily Burr, assistant, and Mrs. Sarah Ellsbury, janitress.

Cheny Bartlett, a colored woman, aged one hundred years, died in St. Louis last week.

Mr. Jordan has been appointed a porter in the Mint establishment at San Francisco, California.

Mr. Anderson of Monrovia, arrived in this city a few days since bringing with him 14 casks and 5 barrels of Liberia sugar, also 8 casks of Liberia molasses.

MARRIED.

DUMPSON—REED.—In Williamsburg, L. I., on Sunday evening, August 25th, by Rev. James Hamilton, William H. Dumpson, of Brookville, N. Y., to Miss Irene A. Reed, of Williamsburg.

JOHNSON—LEWIS.—In Greenport, L. I., by Rev. A. G. Beman, Levi Johnson of Poughkeepsie, to Georgiana Lewis, of Riverhead.

DIED.

EATO.—In Monrovia, Liberia, recently, Charles S. Eato, second son of the late Rev. Timothy Eato of this city, aged 20 years and 2 months.

Special Notices.

THE PROPOSED NEW BOOK OF MARTYRS.

For the above work, the undersigned would state, in answer to numerous inquiries, that he wishes to collect full and accurate accounts of all cases of abuse growing out of SLAVERY, of the loss of time, property and life, whether among whites, Indians, or blacks. He is not particular as to the length of the articles, for, when we come to the publication, it may be best to abridge some statements, but the original communications will be carefully preserved and placed in some historical collection for preservation and reference. Whatever will serve to illustrate or add interest to the statements, such as photographs or engravings, or autographs of the persons, or maps and plans of the localities named, will be thankfully received and carefully preserved. If the case has been published in the papers, or in pamphlets or books, please make reference to them or forward them. Names of persons, places, and dates, which, if divulged would involve the parties in difficulty, may be withheld in the communication. Let every one send on what he or she may have to communicate as early as possible. We shall feel greatly obliged to Editors who will copy this advertisement and give it a favorable notice, and all who will promptly respond to this call will receive our hearty thanks.

Address L. G. OLMSTEAD, New York.

I. O. of G. S. and D. of S.
Office of the National Grand Secretary,
165 Fulton St., Brooklyn, Aug. 23, 1861.

At the Annual meeting of the National Grand Lodge, held August 21st, in the city of Newark, the N. G. Sire in the chair, the reports of the Grand Sire and Grand Secretary having been referred to a committee, said committee offered the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Resolved, That we, the officers and representatives of the National Grand Lodge, declare the election of the officers of the Eastern District Grand Lodge, held July 17th, to be legal, and we approve of the action of the N. G. Sire in sustaining the Eastern District Grand Lodge and its officers.

Resolved, That we acknowledge Bro. Moses B. Coss as the Grand Chief, and Sister Mary E. Hall as the Grand Presiding Daughter of the aforesaid Grand Lodge, for the ensuing year.

CHAS. A. GUINAND, N. G. Sec.

A Grand Festival will be given in the Third Baptist Church, Williamsburg, Rev. James Hamilton, pastor, on Thursday evening, September 5th, the proceeds of which will go to assist the trustees in discharging their pecuniary obligations to the pastor. There will be a few fancy articles for sale, prepared by the ladies for the occasion. Tickets, 25 cents. Children, half price.

Letters or newspapers for Hayti or Jamaica will be promptly forwarded if left with Mr. N. R. Aabby, at Lewis & Co.'s store, 24 South Street, New York.

I. O. of G. S. and D. of S.
Office of the R. W. G. Sec.,
No. 70 Grove St., N. Y.

The officers and members of the Eastern District Grand Lodge will please to take notice that the regular quarterly meeting of the above named G. S. will be held on Wednesday evening, Sept. 11th, at 8 o'clock, at the Metropolitan Assembly Rooms, 178 Prince St. Subordinate lodges will therefore cause their representatives to be present. By order of the R. W. G. Chief.

MOSES B. COSS.
JOHN R. PORTER G. S.

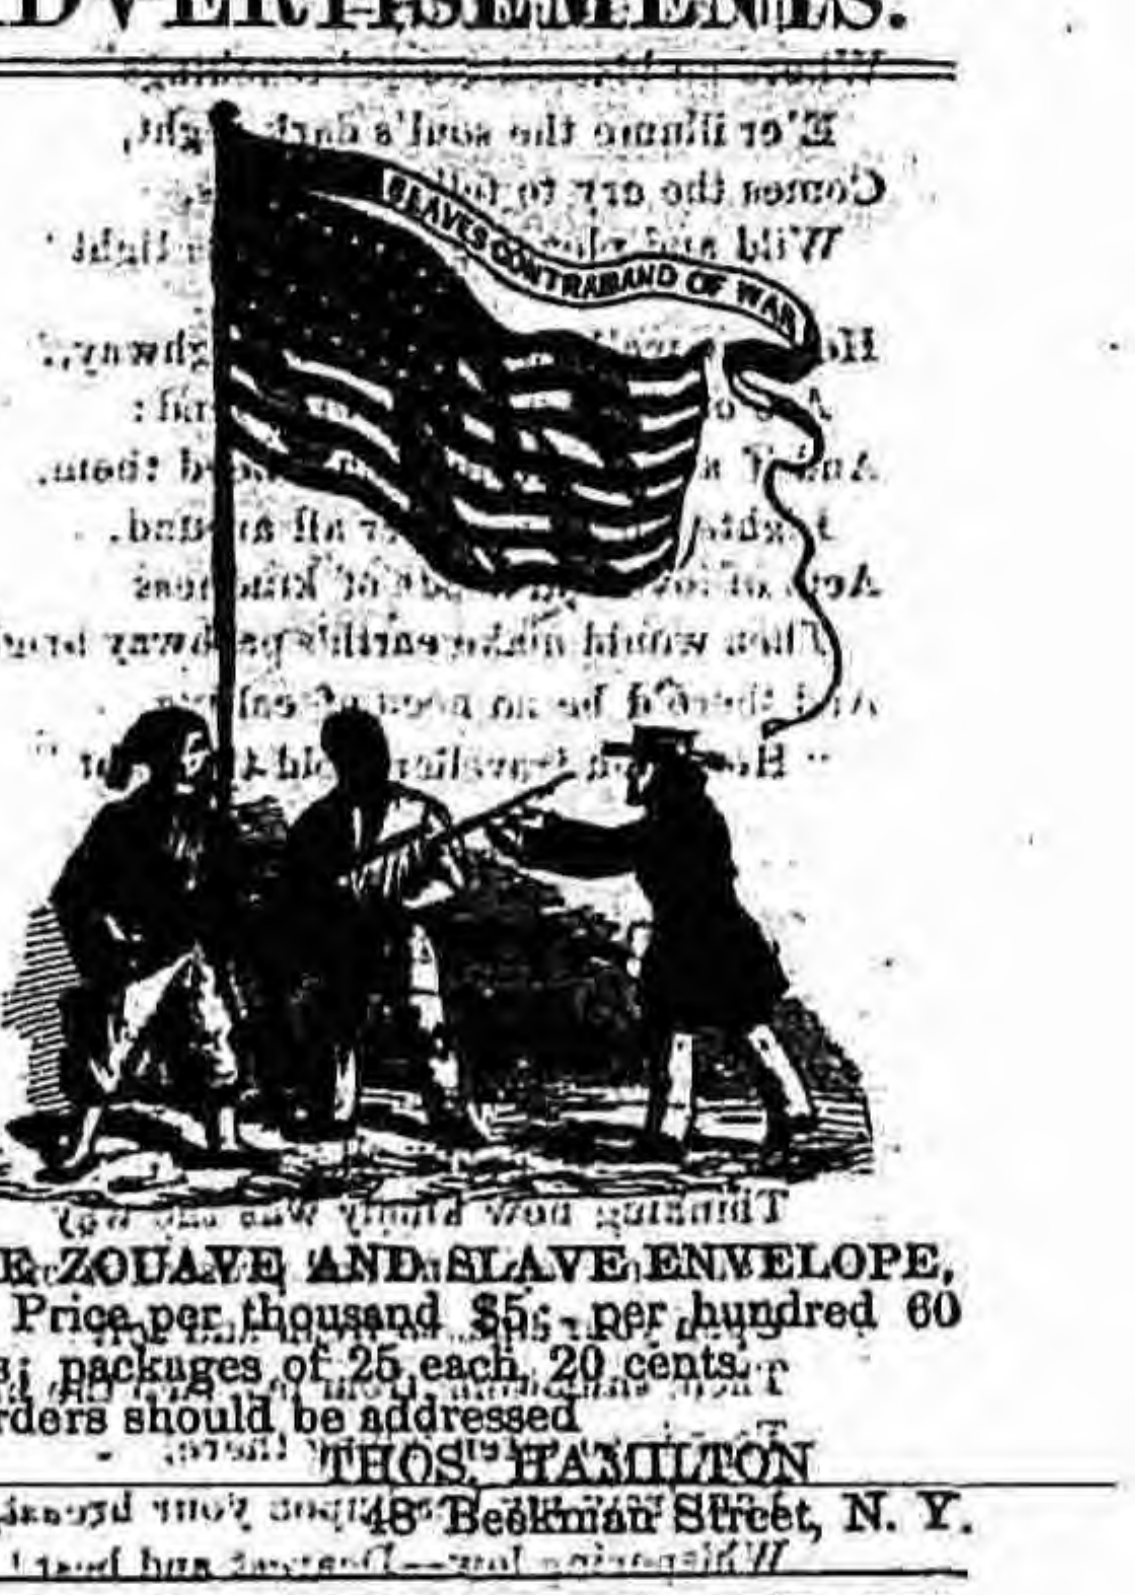
The Members and Congregation of Seventh Avenue Presbyterian Church will celebrate the birth-day of their Pastor, in the Lecture-room of said church, on Monday evening, Sept. 2d, 1861, at 8 o'clock, by a Festival. Admittance 25 cts.

INFORMATION WANTED in regard to Alexander or Sandy Hogan, son of Betsey Hogan. He left the service of Mr. Jenkins in Baltimore, in June, 1859, and came to the North to solicit money to purchase the freedom of his wife. He is believed to have been in Birmingham, N. Y., about five weeks ago. Skin light brown. An aged mother is anxious to ascertain his whereabouts, and will be grateful for information sent to Wm. Still, 107 North Fifth street, Philadelphia.

Anti-slavery papers please copy. 3t.

A. P. Smith will commence a tour through New Jersey, about Sept 9th, prepared to lecture on the following subjects: THE WAR, ITS CAUSES, PROGRESS AND PROBABLE EFFECTS; MEANS OF ELEVATION, or on due notice any other subject of interest. No compensation required beyond traveling expenses. Address, immediately, A. P. Smith, Saddle River, Bergen Co., N. J. 3t.

ADVERTISEMENTS.



THE ZOUAVE AND SLAVE ENVELOPE,
Price per thousand $5; per hundred 60 cnts; packages of 25 each, 20 cents.
Orders should be addressed
THOS. HAMILTON
48 Beekman Street, N. Y.

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION.—THE UNdersigned respectfully announces that he is now prepared to give instruction in the ART OF SINGING. He will be at home, at 187 Navy Street, Brooklyn, on MONDAY EVENING, and at ZION CHURCH, N. Y., on THURSDAY EVENING, of each week. Ladies or Gentlemen desiring instruction, will please apply immediately. Singing schools taught and private instruction given on moderate terms.
3tf. ROBT. HAMILTON,

PRIVATE BOARDING. MRS. SARAH A. Tilmon, 120th st., between 3 & 4 Avs. Harlem, would most respectfully beg leave to say that she is prepared, to take and provide with comfortable rooms, a few first class boarders, on reasonable terms.
N. B. Instruction given to young Ladies in Oriental wax and hair work, Landscaping &c., For terms, apply at 70 E. 13th. St. 3tf.

NEW SAILOR'S HOME. CHARLES M. FORTES, has opened a pleasant home for Seamen, at 26 MULBERRY STREET, N. Y. Seamen will find this a very desirable house, as it is in a central location, and every provision made for their comfort.
Boarding by the day or week. Terms moderate. 3ly

TILMON'S AGENCY. THIS IS THE oldest establishment, in this city, for colored employment. Remember we are approaching a trying winter, so that all who want to get a good home for the winter, had better apply next month. For September is the time. L. TILMON, Proprietor.
70 E. 13th, 1 door E. of 4th Av. 3t

WANTED AT TILMAN'S AGENCY, NO. 70 East 13th Street, one door east of 4th Ave., first class colored help, and none else. Cooks, house-workers, chambermaids, waitresses, and laundresses, coachmen, waiters, &c. Now is the time; fall is near, and good help wanted for city and country. 5-4t

MRS. E. CLAKE, IS HAPPY TO ANnounce to her friends and the public, that she has opened her new BOARDING HOUSE, and will be very thankful for their patronage, at No. 66 SULLIVAN STREET, NEW YORK. 4-1t

DENTISTRY.
BEAUTIFUL ARTIFICIAL SETS OF TEETH on gold or silver plate on the most improved style. All other Surgical operations, performed to entire satisfaction on very moderate terms by G. H. GRICE, Surgeon Dentist,
79 Thompson St., N. Y.

MRS. E. LEONARD
FASHIONABLE
DRESS MAKER,
25 SULLIVAN STREET, NEW YORK.
Receives monthly the latest Paris Fashions. 3tf.

BOARDING AND LODGING
BY MRS. MARY JOHNSON, 120 West 20th Street, New York. This house is very pleasantly situated in a very healthy and convenient part of the city.
Boarding for Ladies, $2,50
Gentleman, 3,00
Lodging per week, 75
y13t.

JAMES R. W. LEONARD,
CARD AND JOB PRINTER,
219 CENTRE STREET, NEW YORK.

APARTMENTS TO LET. ENQUIRE AT 207 Wooster Street, N. Y. tf.

THE BEST DRESSING FOR THE HAIR during warm weather is White's vegetable extract. For Sale at 19 Sullivan and 40 Grand Sts. 2 tf.

BOARDING AND LODGING ON THE EAST Side. Mrs. Gant, can accommodate a few Ladies and Gentlemen, at her residence 182 Suffolk Street. Terms very moderate. 3tf.

BROWN'S POPULAR RESORT.
The undersigned takes the privilege to inform his Friends and the public generally, that as he has recently fitted up his SALOON, anew, he is now prepared to furnish them with
Ice Cream, Fruit, and other Delicacies.
BENJ. F. BROWN, 70 Bleecker St between Broadway & Crosby St. 4t.

WARRANTED TO CURE A HEADACHE in 10 minutes, White's Vegetable extract. For sale at 55 West Broadway, and cor. Gold and Frankfort Sts. 1 tf.

Poetry.

HOLD THE LIGHT.

BY KATE HARRINGTON

Ho! thou traveller on life's highway,
Moving carelessly along—
Pausing not to watch the shadows
Lowering o'er the mighty throng!
Stand aside, and mark how feebly
Some are struggling in the fight.
Turning on thee wistful glances—
Begging thee to hold the light!

Look! upon thy right a brother
Wanders blindly from the way:
And upon thy left a sister,
Frail and erring, turns astray.
One kind word, perchance may save them—
Guide their wayward steps aright:
Canst thou, then, withhold thy counsel?
No! but fly and hold the light!

Hark! a feeble wail of sorrow
Bursts from the advancing throng:
And a little child is groping
Through the darkness, deep and long:
'Tis a timid orphan, shivering
'Neath misfortune's withering blight:
Friends, home, love, are all denied her;
Oh! in pity, hold the light!

Not alone from heathen darkness,
Where the pagan bows the knee,
Worshipping his brazen image
With a blind idolatry—
Where no blessed Gospel teachings
E'er illume the soul's dark night,
Comes the cry to fellow mortals,
Wild and pleading, "Hold the light!"

Here, as well, in life's broad highway,
Are benighted wanderers found:
And if all the strong would heed them,
Lights would glimmer all around.
Acts of love and deeds of kindness
Then would make earth's pathway bright,
And there'd be no need of calling,
"Ho! thou traveller, hold the light."

I DREAMED OF YOU.

I dreamed of you the other night
A little dream, and yet so bright,
It made me happy all the day,
Thinking how kindly was the way
You took my hand and pressed it oft
Upon your lips so fresh and soft;
Then, smoothing from my face the hair
That is so often falling there,
You drew my head upon your breast,
Whispering low—Dearest and best!
'Twas but a dream, a simple dream,
And yet, so life-like did it seem,
I shall treasure it ah! long and well,
Far, far away in memory's cell.

THE FORCE OF FEAR.

At the close of the winter of 1825–6, about dusk in the afternoon, just as the wealthy dealers in the Palais Royal at Paris were about lighting their lamps and putting up their shutters, (the practice of the major part of them at nightfall,) a well-known money-changer sat behind his counter alone, surrounded by massive heaps of silver and gold, the glittering and sterling currency of all the kingdoms of Europe. He had well-nigh closed his operations for the day, and was enjoying in anticipation the prospect of a good dinner. Between the easy chair upon which he reclined in perfect satisfaction, and the door which opened into the north side of the immense quadrangle of which the splendid edifice above mentioned is composed, arose a stout wire partition, reaching nearly to the ceiling, and resting upon the counter, which traversed the whole length of the room. Thus he was effectually cut off from all possibility of unfriendly contact from any of his occasional visitors; while a small sliding board that ran in and out under the wire partition, served as the medium of his peculiar commerce. Upon this he received every coin, note, or draft presented for change; and having first carefully examined it, returned its value by the same conveyance, in the coin of France, or indeed of any country required. Behind him was a door communicating with his domestic chambers, and in the middle of the counter was another, the upper part of which formed a portion of the wire partition above described.

The denizen of this little chamber had already closed his outer shutters, and was just on the point of locking up his doors, and retiring to his rest, when two young men entered. They were evidently Italians, from their costume and peculiar dialect. Had it been earlier in the day, when there would have been sufficient light to have discerned their features and expression, it is probable that our merchant would have defeated their plans, for he was well skilled in detecting the tokens of fraud or design in the human countenance. But they had chosen their time too appropriately. One of them advanced toward the counter, for change in French coin for an English sovereign, which he laid upon the sliding board, and passed through the wire partition. The money changer rose immediately, and having ascertained that the coin was genuine, returned its proper equivalent by the customary mode of transfer. The Italians turned as if to leave the apartment, when he who had received the money suddenly dropped the silver, as though accidentally, upon the floor. As it was now nearly dark, it was scarcely to be expected that they could find the whole of the pieces without the assistance of a light. This the unconconscious merchant hastened to supply; and unlocking, without suspicion, the door of the partition between them, stooped with a candle over the floor, in search of the lost coin. In this position the unfortunate man was immediately assailed with repeated stabs from a poniard, and he at length fell, after a few feeble and ineffectual struggles, senseless, and apparently lifeless, at the feet of his assassins.

A considerable time elapsed ere, by the fortuitous entrance of a stranger, he was discovered in this dreadful situation; when it was found that the assassins, having first helped themselves to an almost incredible amount of money, had fled, without anything being left by which a clue might have been obtained to their retreat.

The unfortunate victim of their rapacity and cruelty was, however, not dead. Strange as it may appear, although he had received upward of twenty wounds, several of which plainly showed that the dagger had been driven to the very hilt, he survived, and in a few months after, was again to be seen in his long accustomed place at the changer's board. In vain had the most diligent search been made by the military police of Paris for the perpetrators of this detestable deed. The villains had eluded all inquiry and investigation, and would, in all probability, have escaped undiscovered with their booty, but for a mutually cherished distrust of each other. Upon the first complete success of their plan, the question arose, how to dispose of their enormous plunder, amounting to more than a hundred thousand pounds. Fearful of the researches of the police, they dared not retain it at their lodgings. To trust a third party with their secret was not to be thought of. At length, after long and anxious deliberation, they agreed to conceal the money outside the barriers of Paris, until they should have concocted some safe plan for transporting it to their own country. This they accordingly did, burying the treasure under a tree, about a mile from the Barriere d'Enfer. But they were still as far as ever from a mutual understanding. When they separated, on any pretence, each returned to the spot which contained the stolen treasure, where, of course, he was sure to find the other. Suspicion, thus formed and fed, soon grew into dislike and hatred, until at length, each loathing the sight of the other, they agreed finally to divide the booty, and then eternally to separate, each to the pursuit of his own gratification. It then became necessary to carry the whole of the money home to their lodgings in Paris, in order that it might, according their notions be equitably divided.

The reader must here be reminded that there exists in Paris a law relative to wines and spirituous liquors, which allows them to be retailed at a much lower price without the barriers than that at which they are sold within the walls of the city. This law has given rise, among the lower orders of people, to frequent attempts at smuggling liquors in bladders concealed about their persons, often in their hats. The penalty for the offence was so high that it was very rarely enforced, and practically it was very seldom, indeed, that the actual loss incurred by the offending party was anything more than the paltry venture, which he was generally permitted to abandon, making the best use of his heels to escape any further punishment. The gens-d'armes planted at different barriers generally made a prey of the potables which they captured, and were consequently interested in keeping a good lookout for offenders. It was this vigilance that led to the discovery of the robbers; for, not being able to devise any better plan for the removal of the money, than that of secreting it about their persons, they attempted thus to carry out their object. But as one of them, heavily encumbered with the golden spoils, was passing through the Barriere d'Enfer, one of the soldier police who was on duty as sentinel, suspecting, from his appearance and hesitating gait, that he carried smuggled liquors in his hat, suddenly stepped behind him and struck it from his head with his halberd. What was his astonishment to behold, instead of the expected bladder of wine or spirits, several small bags of gold and rolls of English bank notes! The confusion and prevarication of the wretch, who made vain and frantic attempts to recover the property, betrayed his guilt, and he was immediately taken into custody, together with his companion, who, following at a very short distance, was unhesitatingly pointed out by his cowardly and bewildered companion as the owner of the money. No time was lost in conveying intelligence of their capture to their unfortunate victim, who immediately identified the notes as his own property, and at the first view of the assassins swore distinctly to the persons of both—to the elder, as having repeatedly stabbed him; and to the younger, as his companion and coadjutor.

The criminals were in due course of time tried, fully convicted, and, as was to be expected, sentenced to death by the guillotine; but, owing to some technical informality in the proceedings, the doom of the law could not be carried into execution until the sentence of the court had been confirmed upon appeal. This delay afforded time and opportunity for some meddling or interested individual—either moved by the desire of making a cruel experiment, or else by the hope of obtaining a reversal of the capital sentence against the prisoners—to work upon the feelings of the unfortunate money changer. A few days after the sentence of death had been pronounced, the unhappy victim received a letter from an unknown hand, mysteriously worded, and setting forth, in expressions that seemed to him fearfully prophetic, that the thread of his own destiny was indissolubly united with that of his condemned assassins. It was evidently out of their power to take away his life; and it was equally out of his power to survive them, die by the sentence of the law, or how or when they might; it became clear—so argued this intermeddler—that the same moment which saw the termination of their lives, would inevitably be the last of his own. To fortify his arguments, the letter writer referred to certain mystic symbols in the heavens. Now, though the poor man could understand nothing of the trumpery diagrams which were set forth as illustrating the truth of the fatal warning thus conveyed to him, and though his friends universally laughed at the trick as a bare-faced attempt of some anonymous imposter to rob justice of her due, it nevertheless made a deep impression upon his mind. Ignorant of everything only what related immediately to his own money getting profession, he had a blind and undefined awe of what he termed the supernatural sciences, and he inwardly thanked the kind monitor who had given him at least a chance of redeeming his days.

He immediately set about making application to the judges, in order to get the decree of death changed into a sentence to the galleys for life. He was equally surprised and distressed to find that they treated his petition with contempt, and ridiculed his fears. So far from granting his request, after repeated solicitations, they commanded him in a peremptory manner to appear no more before them. Driven almost to despair, he resolved on petitioning the king; and after much expense and toil, he at length succeeded in obtaining an audience of Charles X. All was in vain. A crime so enormous, committed with such cool deliberation, left no opening for the plea of mercy; every effort he made, only served to strengthen the resolution of the authorities to execute judgment. Finding all his efforts in vain, he appeared to resign himself desparingly to his fate. Deprived of all relish even for gain, he took to his bed, and languished in hopeless misery, and as the time for the execution of the criminals approached, lapsed more and more into terror and dismay.

It was on a sultry afternoon, in the beginning of June, 1826, that the writer of this brief narrative—then a not too thoughtful lad, in search of employment in Paris—hurried, together with a party of sight-seeing English workmen, to the Place de Greve to witness the execution of the two assassins of the money changer. Under the rays of an almost insupportable sun, an immense crowd had congregated around the guillotine; it was not without considerable exertion, and a bribe of some small amount, that standing places were at length obtained within a few paces of the dreadful instrument, upon the flat top of the low wall which divides the ample area of the Place de Greve from the river Seine.

Precisely at four o'clock the somber cavalcade approached. Seated upon a bench in a long cart, between two priests, sat the wretched victims of retributive justice. The crucifix was incessantly exhibited to their view, and presented to their lips to be kissed, by their ghostly attendants. After a few minutes of silent and horrible preparation, the elder advanced upon the platform of the guillotine. With livid aspect and quivering lips, he gazed around in unutterable agony upon the sea of human faces; then lifting his haggard eyes to heaven, he demanded pardon of God and the people, for the violation of the great prerogative of the former and the social rights of the latter, and besought most earnestly the mercy of the Judge into whose presence he was about to enter. In less than two minutes both he and his companion were headless corpses, and in a quarter of an hour no vestige, save a few remains of sawdust, was left of the terrible drama that had been enacted. Soon, however, a confused murmur pervaded that crowd—a report that the victim of cruelty and avarice had realized the dread presentiment of his own mind, and justified the prediction contained in the anonymous letter he had received. On inquiry, this was found to be true. As the signal rung out for execution, the unhappy man, whom twenty-two stabs of the dagger had failed to kill, expired in a paroxysm of terror—adding one more to the many examples already upon record, of the fatal force of fear upon an excited imagination.

THE AMERICAN CHURCHES AND SLAVERY.

(From the "London Christian Cabinet July 31st.)

On Sunday morning, the 21st inst. a sermon was preached at the Independent Chapel, Woolwich [the Rev. Mr. Gill's], by the Rev. Edward Matthews, of America, from Psalm lxxxix. 15, 16—"Blessed is the people that know the joyful sound; they shall walk, O Lord, in the light of thy countenance. In thy name shall they rejoice all the day, and in thy righteousness shall they be exalted."

In one part of the discourse the preacher was showing that a consciousness of Divine approval was inseperable from obedience to divine law, and observed, by way of illustration, that both in Virginia and Kentucky he had met with those who claimed a "right divine" to buy and sell their fellow-men. In the northern part of Kentucky there was a church of 200 members, eight of whom were slaveholders. They permitted him to preach in their pulpit against slavery, and he pointed out that slavery trampled on the ten commandments, counteracted every grace of the Spirit, and made war with every attribute of God. At the close, as the audience passed out, he gave them anti-slavery tracts. One of them refused to take a tract. The members of the church stated that he sold a slave to the slave-traders on the very day he united with the Church.

In another place he had been preaching against the lawfulness of taking the price of a slave, it being the "price of blood." A hearer who had sold a slave resolved to give to the slave the money obtained by the sale. So he sought him out, and after giving the money, inquired what his prospects were. "Sir," he replied, "I have obtained my liberty, but my wife is a slave, and my two daughters have just been sold. All that I had in the world I offered to redeem them, but it was refused, and the man who sold them is a member of the same church as my wife, and the church said he had a right to sell them."

At Frankfort the capital of Kentucky, there is a large colored church. No white person unites with it. The pastor is a colored man and a slave. On visiting their chapel, and being requested to preach, he consented, though the only white person present. The law usually prohibits a white minister from preaching to the black unless true white persons are present to report him if he preaches against slavery. The pastor was absent, but, another colored minister was present to supply his place. Before preaching the visitor inquired his name. "My right name," he replied, "is Wilkinson, but I am a slave and am often called Eperton, the name of the family that own me. Having paid forty pounds towards my freedom, I shall be free on paying fifty pounds more. This promise had been made to me. As soon, however, as I am free I must leave Kentucky; but as my wife and children are slaves, I am resolved not to leave. I will remain, and suffer whatever punishment may be inflicted upon me." "On hearing this statement," said Mr. Matthews, "and seeing him much affected, I rose and commenced the service, gave out a hymn, read a chapter, and prayed, asking that every yoke might be broken, and every slave go free. Oh! that you could have heard the response, from every part of the chapel, you could never have forgotten it."

Those who claim to have peace like a river, and righteousness like the waves of the sea, and yet trample on the laws of Christ, are not to be believed. The religion of the slaveholders does not sanctify, and therefore cannot save them. It is leading them blindfold to perdition.

Having given these illustrations, Mr. Matthew passed to consider other points in the text, and concluded his sermon, which occupied an hour in the delivery.

In the afternoon, Mr. Matthew related tales of slave life to the Sunday-school and young people. On the 23rd he lectured at Enoc Chapel, Chatham, "On the causes of the War in America, and the approaching downfall of slavery." The Rev. John Bennett in the chair. On Sunday afternoon, the 27th, he related tales of slave-life to the Baptist, Wesleyan, and Independent Sunday-schools at the Independent Chapel, Hereford. The chapel was filled in every part.

GEN. LEE'S NEGRO QUARTERS.

Rev. G. Haven thus reports in the Advocate, a visit to Gen. Lee's Slave Establishment:

An old gray-headed negro, dressed in a neat black suit, sat on one of the door sills. I looked in and found a cellar some six feet deep, into which some broken steps descended. I asked him if those were his quarters. He replied in the affirmative. "Had you no floor?" "Yes, I had one; but the rats trouble me so I took it up." "How long have you lived here?" "Several years." "Alone?" "Since my wife died." "Do you find it comfortable down there?" "O yes, pretty comfortable." I looked down. There was an excuse for a bed in one corner, an old broken bit of a stove, a little table with a dish or two, candle ends, etc., on it, a broken chair, an axe, and a billet or two of wood, and the common earthen floor of a cellar; high up out of reach was a dirty window. Here was another proof of the old-fashioned notions that rule this region. An old man of nearly if not more than fourscore years, modest, neat, courteous, living in a cellar, and in as much worse condition as any pauper I ever saw as a pauper's is worse than a prince's. My ears have been stuffed since I came here with the superior condition of the slaves to the free blacks. I have visited two of the grandest estates of this region, the Carrolton Manor and Arlington Heights. I have entered more than one of the free blacks' humble cottages, and I must say my eyes saw only filth and misery in the one, in the other neatness, self-respect, poverty, but pride also; yes, good reader, pride! Why shouldn't these scions of a mighty race have some of their haughty fathers' feelings? I remember entering one of the humblest of these huts at the Relay. The floor was as white as a Dutch dame's the morning after washing day. Near the door stood an old trunk, the gift probably of some primeval mistress—perhaps Noah's wife's to Canaan's, her granddaughter-in-law, and the first female slave. (Vide Dr. Smith and other very learned proslavery commentators, passim.) I never saw a cleaner house than that humble Christian's. The yard was swept as nice as the floor. Yet her husband had been a slave, and was then of that poor despised company of free blacks whom so many here are ready to lift up their heel against. have seen no slaves' quarters to compare I with these bits of free soil.

I left the old man so tenderly cared for by those whom he has served so long, after commending him to Him who was as despised and rejected of men, and who had not even a damp cellar wherein to lay his head. Crossing to the opposite buldings, I saw a comely quadroon or octoroon washing. The floor was on her room, and half a dozen lively chattels on the floor. The breed is rather interesting in its adolescent state. Young lambs, and pigs, and dogs, and kittens have long been favorites of the farm. I dont think any of them superior to the younglings of this species of property. I may be losing my Northern prejudice and becoming Southernized; they all say I would if I stayed here a while; this may be a sign of the transmutation. I found myself enjoying the gambols of these brown lambkins. It is really a fine looking creature. Curly locks quite too long for a lamb's or a negro's; large, laughing eyes; brown but well-cut features, much more closely resembling a Caucasian's than the ape's or gorilla's, to which they are said to be allied fine turned legs, and neat little feet whose hollow did not make a very great hole in the ground as they went capering about the house and the yard—these are some of the characteristics of this king of beasts.

I asked the mother, (dam perhaps I ought to say,) madam somebody will some time say,) "Who do you belong to?" "Mrs. Lee." "Are you a member of the church?" "Yes, the Baptist." "How many children have you?" (Pardon me for using the word children. She talked and acted so much like a Christian mother I didn't like to say "young ones.") "Seven." "Do you expect to be free?" "Yes, sir; in about a year our time is up." "Do you want to be free?" "Yes, sir, I do." "What for?" "Because I do." Didn't that reason show the woman as much as the babooness. Not being acquainted with the latter's method of reasoning I cannot be sure, but it struck me as a very familiar and conclusive answer. I bid her good bye, a thing I never did a Northern animal, and threw some parting smiles at the jolly little contrabands, who are to be transformed in a year or so from creatures that are appointed as meat for man (Genesis ix. 3,) into beings made in the likeness of God.

H.

Camp Andrew, Baltimore, July 17, 1861.

POWER OF A WORD.

Wendel Phillips, Esq., in his lectures last winter, before the Parent Washington Society told the following story:

A mother, on the green hills of Vermont stood at the garden-gate, holding by her right hand a son sixteen years old, mad with love of the sea. "Edward," said she, "they tell me that the great temptation of the seamen's life is drink. Promise me before you quit your mother's hand that you never will drink." Said he—for he told me the story—"I gave her the promise. I went the broad globe over, Calcutta, the Mediterranean, San Francisco, the Cape of Good Hope, and during forty years, whenever I saw a glass filled with sparkling liquor, my mother's form by the garden-gate on the hillside of Vermont, rose up before me, and to-day, at sixty, my lips are innocent of the taste of liquor."

Was not that sweet evidence of the power of a single word? And yet it was but half; "for" said he, "yesterday there came into my counting room a young man of forty, and asked me, 'Do you know me?' 'No,' said I. 'I was brought once,' said he to my informant, 'drunk into your presence on shipboard; you were a passenger; the captain kicked me aside; you took me into your berth, kept me there until I had slept off the intoxication, and then you asked me if I had a mother. I said never that I knew of; I never had heard a mother's voice. You told me of yours at the garden-gate; and to-day, twenty years later, I am master of one of the finest packets in New York, and I came to ask you to come and see me."

How far back that little candle throws its beam, the mother's word on the green hillside of Vermont! God be thanked for the almighty power of a single word.

A "Colored" Incident.—The Battle Creek (Mich.) Journal relates the following: "On Monday night last, about nine o'clock, several citizens were gathered together near Parker's hat store, discussing the deplorable defeat and terrible destruction of the Federal forces at or near Manassas Junction. Of course, each had his criticism to offer, and his suggestion of plans by which that defeat might have been avoided. On the outside of the crowd stood one of our most industrious, frugal and thrifty colored citizens, listening intently to the conversation. Presently, one of the company turned to him, calling him by name and said:—

"Are you going to fight for the government of the United States?"

"Yes, on certain condition," he responded.

"What are those conditions?"

"That the government and the people of the country shall recognize me as a man and not as a chattel—an article of merchandise. And," he said, "you have thirty thousand men, with strong arms and brave hearts, to aid you in this death struggle, if you will give to it that righteous purpose which it is impossible to divest it of, with any sort of regard to its cause."

No reply was made. The eloquence and force of the rejoinder of him who then stood before them, whose brain, bones and muscles were at one time the property of one of those probably who is now seeking to overthrow the government, is commended to all.

At a Conference meeting, held somewhere in the northern part of our State during the great revival season of '58, were present, among others, Brother Brown—a weak, shy, but good man, considerably "forehanded," and a childless widower—and Sister Ames, a strong-minded spinster somewhat loud of voice and fluent of speech, who, report said, was not averse to the thought of securing the control of Brother Brown and his fine house and farm. In due course of proceeding Brother Brown was called on to relate his experience. As usual, he was humble and slow of speech; "he had very little to say—could not speak to the edification of his brethren and sisters—the time would be better occupied by others. For his part, he felt that it became him to be silent, and that his place was behind the door of the sanctuary." And he sat down, and Sister Ames was soon after called on to speak. She too was humble and subdued; had little to say, and that in a low tone; and concluded by remarking that she felt that "her place was to sit behind the door with Brother Brown." Not even the solemnity of the occasion could prevent the meaning smile that ran round that circle of grave faces.

Scene in a Hotel.—Stranger—Say, have you a good strong porter about the house?

Clerk (eagerly.)—Yes, we have the strongest one in the State.

Stranger—Is he intelligent?

Clerk—Oh! yes, quite intelligent for a porter, we think.

Stranger—One point more. Do you consider him fearless—that is, bold, courageous?

Clerk—As for that matter, I know he is; he would not be afraid of the devil himself.

Stranger—Now Mr. Clerk, if your porter is intelligent enough to find room No. 17, fearless enough to enter, and is strong enough to get my trunk away from the bedbugs, I would like to have him bring it down.

Didn't want an Appetite.—The Mountain (Cal.) Democrat is responsible for the following:

A dissipated candidate called for an "eye-opener" in the Orleans Hotel, Sacramento. The bar-keeper speedily completed a cocktail, and was topping it off with absynth. "What's that?—what's that?" demanded the man outside the counter. "It's absynth, sir, it will give you a good appetite." "Appetite! take that stuff out; take it out! I don't want no appetite—what's a feller want of an appetite when he hain't got money enough to pay for his breakfast?"

At an examination at the College of Surgeons, a candidate was asked by Abernethy, "What would you do if a man was blown up with powder?"

"Wait until he came down!" he coolly replied.

"True," replied Abernethy: "and suppose I should kick you for such an impertinent reply, what muscles would I put in motion?"

"The flexors and extensors of my arms; for I would knock you down immediately!"

He received a diploma,

MISCELLANEOUS.

MRS. WINSLOW'S

SOOTHING SYRUP.

Every mother should be prepared to act in the capacity of both nurse and physician to her children; she can, if she will, discharge these duties much better than any one she can employ. If she does not, she ought to know that there is a Medicine prepared by an old nurse and female physician which has stood the test of many, many years, and is the most perfect thing on earth for children teething; it also cures Wind Colic, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, and is sure to regulate the bowels. We say to every mother, do not let your own prejudices, or the prejudices of others stand in the way of the relief that will be sure—yes, absolutely sure—to follow the use of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP certainly does, as the name implies, "soothe" the little sufferer into a quiet, natural sleep, from which it awakes invigorated and refreshed. And for the cure of diseases incident to the period of teething, such as Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Wind Colic, &c., we have never seen its equal.

We have always been, and still are, opposed to the practice of drugging infants. This article has no deleterious effects whatever, and from our own experience (we speak advisedly) we have every confidence in it, and can heartily recommend it to all mothers. Take our advice—use it—and you will as strongly recommend it to others as we have to you.

When we say that MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP acts like a charm, we do but reiterate the language of every person who ever used it for their children, for all diseases incident to the period of teething, such as Dysentery and Diarrhœa, Wind Colic and Cholera Infantum. It will produce quietude and rest, relieve all suffering, and the infant will awake invigorated and refreshed, and not with the dull and stupefying effects of preparations of opium.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the excruciating pain of cutting teeth? If so, go at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately—depend upon it; there is no mistake about it. There is not a mother on earth who has ever used it who will not tell you at once that it will regulate the bowels, and give rest to the mother and relief and health to the child, operating like magic. It is perfectly safe in all cases, and pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States.

During the thirty years of unprecedented and increasing popularity of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP, innumerable "Cordials" and other nostrums, prepared by pretended M.D.'s, have sprung up and lived but a mushroom existence, the SOOTHING SYRUP has been constantly increasing in popularity, and become a household word, and for the health of their children, by the use of her invaluable article.

THOUSANDS OF MOTHERS THANK
MRS. WINSLOW

PRICE 20 CENTS PER BOTTLE.

For sale by

THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St., N.Y.

TIME, MONEY, AND LABOR SAVED,
BY USING
B. T. BABBITT'S
SUPERIOR FRENCH
CHEMICAL ERASIVE SOAP,

Made and improved by the Original Inventor of the German and Austrian Chemical Erasive or Detersive Soap, of which the real and genuine article has, since its first introduction to the American public, been most favorably known, as the Best and Cheapest Washing Soap in the market, and with the present improvement, which is not known to any other manufacturer, we Challenge the World to produce a better article.

1. One pound of it will accomplish as much as three pounds of any other soap.

2. But one quarter the time and labor are required to do the same amount of washing, as with the best of family soap.

3. It does not injure the most delicate fabric; will tend to set the colors, and wash cleaner than any other soap in use.

4. Clothes need no boiling, and but little rubbing with the hands, thus avoiding their wear upon the wash-board.

5. Paints, Grease, Tar, and stains of every description vanish as by magic, before its wonderful, searching, erasive powers.

6. It is invaluable to Machinists, Printers, Painters, and all others using Inks, Oils, etc. for washing hands; it does not chap them (like other soaps,) but will cleanse and soften the skin.

7. It may be used in hard or soft water, and is adapted for use in all climates.

Put up in one pound bars, sixty bars in each ox.

For sale by the bar or box by

THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman Street.

MEDICAL.

THE BEST MEDICINES IN THE WORLD!!!

The following invaluable medicines may be obtained of

THOMAS HAMILTON, 48 Beekman St.

DR. CLARKE'S
VEGETABLE SHERRY-WINE BITTERS,

Are composed of Sarsaparilla, Dock-root, Rheubarb, Thoroughwort, Dandelion, Prickly Ash, Bark, &c. they should be taken not only in the Spring, but at all seasons of the year, as they operate directly on the liver, removing from it all coating of morbid matter, and restoring it to its normal action; also opening the bile ducts, causing the requisite flow of bile so essential to good health. Their influence upon the kidneys, also, is advantageously felt; at the same time they operate upon the blood, cleansing it from all impurity or taint of any kind. Humors of long standing are eradicated from the blood, thereby speedily curing jaundice, headache, weak stomach, sore eyes, nervousness, and other chronic diseases arising from impurity of the blood.

The palatableness of these bitters renders them agreeable to every one, and being composed entirely of vegetables, they may be used by all classes of people with safety.

Sold for the low price of 25 cents per pint bottle.

DR. CLARKE'S
SUGAR-COATED HERB PILLS.

These pills are made mostly from a valuable herb hat grows on the proprietor's farm.

Warranted to cure Bilious Stomach, Bilious Bowels, Bilious Colic, Bilious Fever, and all diseases which arise from a bilious state of the system viz, Jaundice, Headache, Heartburn, Sour Stomach Liver Complaint, Weak Stomach, Pain in the Stomach, Costiveness, Loss of Appetite, and a host, of diseases too numerous to mention, as their number is legion.

Warranted to cure diseases peculiar to the female sex

Warranted at all times safe and efficient.

Waranted for a gentle family physic not to have an equral in America, operating without pain.

Warranted not to contain calomel, aloes, gamboge colocynth, or other drastic poisonous drugs, which always do the system more hurt than good, and by their continued use are sure to cause a derangemen of the liver, bring on costiveness, and its inevitable consequence, piles, and dyspepsia, and finally break down the constitution, and cause the victim to drag out a miserable existance. Touch not, taste not, handle not the wily poison. Your life is your own,—preserve it. Take a simple herb, sure in its effects, but safe and pleasant,—no wrenching pains, no il effects, and made pleasant to take by a fine coat o sugar. Children love them, ladies admire them, fools and wise men cannot do without them, doctors prescribe them,—and every body takes them. Yes, every body; from the honest farmer and mechanic to the most learned philosopher. And why? Simply because they are good, excellently good; and will do you good.

PRICE, 25 CENTS PER BOX.

DR. CLARKE'S COUGH AND CROUP SYRUP.

It is the most wonderful, effective and extraordinary medicine for the lungs ever used by man. It is perfectly safe and pleasant to take, and gives relief immediately. Thousands have been cured by its use, and tens of thousands will be again. All who use it pronounce it to be the best lung remedy ever discovered. Common coughs and colds are dispelled by the use of only a few doses, and children can be cured of croup at once if taken in its first stage. Long-standing diseases require perseverance, but a cure will be guaranteed. No medicine before ever possessed such excellent healing and curative power for the lungs. It seems, with almost magic power, to dispel the most severe cases of cough and throat all.

Vocalists and public speakers should not fail to keep a bottle on hand at all times. A small quantity taken occasionally renders the voice beautifully clear and the lungs extremely strong. Words cannot fully express the great benefit to be derived from the use of the world-renowned remedy. Delay not, but procure a bottle at once. Use it if needed, and if not, keep it till necessity requires its use, as all, sooner or later, are overtaken by some unpleasant affection of the lungs or throat.

Price, 25 Cents per Bottle.

BOOKS.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE ANGLO-AFRICAN MAGAZINE, BOUND.

Price.—In half Morocco $1,25; half Morocco, gilt edges, $1,50. Muslin, $1.00

CONTENTS;

Embellishment.—Portrait of Alexander Dumas.
Music.—By A. J. R. Connor.
Apology.
A Statistical View of the Colored Population of the United States, from 1790 to 1850.
African American Picture Gallery.—Anon.
American Caste and Common Schools,—by J. Holland Townsend.
A Review of Slavery and the Slave Trade,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
A Good Habit Recommended,—by Sarah M. Douglass.
A Chapter in the History of the African Slave Trade,—by Edward W. Blyden.
Anglo-Saxons and Anglo-Africans.—Anon.
A Word to Our People.
Blake; or the Huts of America,—by Martin R. Delany.
Books &c.
Civilization—Its Dependence on Physical Circumstances.
Colored American Patriots,—by Wm. C. Nell.
Comets,—by M. R. Delany.
Citizenship,—by James Mc'Cune Smith.
Claude Brindas De Salas,—Selected.
Communication from N. Y. Society for the Promotion of Education among Colored Children.
Chess.
Dumas,—Alexander.
Effects of Emancipation in Jamaica, by Robert Campbell.
Fragments of Thought,—by D. A. Payne.
Fancy Sketches,—Anonymous.
Gone to God—Poetry—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
Intellectual Culture,—by Robert Gordon.
In the Constitution of Man there exists a Religious Element,—by Robt. Gordon.
Lines—Poetry—by Grace A. Mapps.
Mrs. Partington and Mrs. Freshington.—Anon
Our Greatest Want,—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
Our Duty in the Conflict,—by J. Holland Townsend.
On the Fourteenth Query of Thos. Jefferson's Notes on Virginia.
On the Personality of the First Cause,—by Robt. Gordon.
Patrick Brown's First Love.
Poetry—Anonymous.
Selected Items.
Struggles for Freedom in Jamaica—by Robert Campbell.
The Attraction of Planets—by M. R. Delany
The German Invasion, by James M'Cune Smith
Trifles, by Mary A. S. Cary.
The Coming Man—Poetry—by Wm. J. Wilson.
The Educational Wants of the Free Colored People, by Martin H. Freeman.
Thomas L. Jinnings.
The Teacher and his Pupil—Poetry—by Wm. J. Wilson.
Thoughts on Hayti, by James T. Holly.
The Successive Advances of Astronomy, by G. B. Vashon.
The Oberlin Wellington Rescue, by J. Mercer Langston.
The Shadows of Intemperance,—by James Fields.
The Dying Fugitive—Poetry—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
The Anglo-African and the African Slave Trade.
The Two Offers, by Frances Ellen Watkins.
The Re-opening of the Slave Trade—Anonymous.
The First Colored Convention.
The Self-Redeeming Power of the Colored Races of the World,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
The Policy that we should Pursue,—by J. Holland Townsend.
The Education of the Colored People,—by Amos Gerry Beman.
The Great Conflict requires Great Faith,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
The Outbreak in Virginia.
The Sentinel of Freedom—Poetry,—by J. Sella Martin.
The Nat Turner Insurrection.
The Execution of John Brown.
The Anglo-African Magazine for 1860
The Watering Places.—Anonymous.

Orders should be addressed to
THOMAS HAMILTON,
48 Beekman street,
New York.

PUBLICATIONS FOR SALE BY
THOMAS HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE ANGLO-AFRICAN MAGAZINE. Bound,—Price—In half Morocco, $1.25; half Morocco, gilt edges, $1.50; Muslin, $1.00. Contents: Embellishments—Portrait of Alexander Dumas. Music, by A. J. R. Conner Articles by Bishop D. A. Payne, James M'Cune Smith, M. D., Prof. Geo. B. Vashon, Dr. Martin, R. Delany, Mrs. Sarah M. Douglass, Prof. Robert Campbell, Prof. Wm. J. Wilson, Rev. J. W. C. Pennington, D. D., Rev. J. Theo. Holly, Mrs. Frances Ellen Watkins Harper, Prof. M. H. Freeman, Rev. Edward W Blyden, Rev. Robert Gordon, Prof. Chas. L. Reason, Mrs M. A. Shadd Cary, Dr. James Fields, Rev. Amos Gerry Beman, Miss Grace A. Mapps Rev. J. Sella Martin, Wm. C. [illegible] Esq. J. Mercer Langston, and J. Holland Townsend. Esq.,

The Life of Captain John Brown.
The Liberator of Kansas, and the Hero of Harper's Ferry. By James Redpath. An elegant 12mo. volume of 400 pages, illustrated and embellished with a superb Steel Portrait of the Glorious Old Man. Price $1.00.

My Bondage and My Freedom.
By Fredrick Douglass, One vol., 12 mo., 464 pp. Illustrated. Price $1.00, postage 22 cts.

Life of Jermain W. Loguen.
The great Underground Railroad King. Price $1.00.

Th Martyrs and the Fugitive.
By the Rev. S. H. Platt. A thrilling work on slavery and the slave trade, detailing the capture of a family in Africa by the Slave-dealers, their fearful journey to the coast, the horrors of the "middle passage," their sale in America, and subsequent martyrdom; the slavery of their son, his terrible sufferings and perilous escapes. Sent, postpaid, upon the receipt of 38 cts.

Twelve Years a Slave.
The Narrative of Solomon Northrup, a citizen of New York, kidnapped in Washington City in 1841 and rescued in 1853, from a cotton plantation near Red River, Louisiana. Seven Illustrations, 336 pp. 12mo. Price $1,00, postage paid.

Our National Charters.
For the Millions. Including—1. The Federal Constitution of 1787–9. 2. The Articles of Confederation. 1787. 3. The Declaration of Independence, 1776. 4. The Articles of Association, 1775. With notes showing their bearing on slavery, and the relative powers of the State and National Governments. Also a summary of Legal Opinions, collected from the highest authorities, is prefixed to the Constitution. An Appendix contains extracts from State Constitutions and Bills of Rights; Ordinance of 1787, excluding Slavery from the Northwest Territory; also, Sentiments of the Revolutionary Fathers, &c. By mail, postage prepaid, single copy, 15 cts.; four copies, 50 cts.; nine copies $1,00.

The American Slave-Code.
In Theory and Practice: Its Distinctive Features Shown by its Statutes, Judicial Decisions, and Illustrative Facts. 430 pp., 12mo. Price 75 cts postage paid.

Unconstitutionality of Slavery.
By Lysander Spooner. In paper, 294 pp., 8vo Price 75 cts., or postage paid 86 cts.

Review of Lysander Spooner's Essay on the Unconstitutionality of Slavery.
By Wendell Phillips. Price 25 cts. Postage 5 Cts.

The Revelations of a Slave Smuggler.
Being the Autobiography of Captain Richard Drake, an African trader for fifty years, from 1807 to 1857. The work is handsomely illustrated, with graphic representations of scenes as they actually occur on the slave ships and on shore. Illustration No. 1 is a large cut, 16x23, representing a slave market on the Coast of Africa. Illustration No. 2 represents a scene in the Hold of a Slaver (middle passage). Then there is a large plate, giving views of a slave vessel betwen decks, regulation slave-deck, regulation packing, &c. The work is handsomely printed—contains one hundred large 8vo. pages, and is published at a price which places it within the reach of the masses—viz: 25 cents a copy. When sent by mail the postage (six cents must be added.

The Nat Turner Insurrection.
A full and reliable account. Copies will be sent to any address on the receipt of five cents.

Uncle Tom's Cabin.
By Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe. Two volumes in one. Price, $1,25.

The Kidnapped and Ransomed,
Being the personal recollections of Peter Still, and, his wife, Vina, after forty years of slavery by Mrs. Kate E. R. Pickard, with an introduction by Rev. S. J. May, Illustrated. 12mo. cloth, $1,25.

Gerrit Smith in Congress.
"Slavery has no right but to die!" A work of over 400 pages, containing all his speeches delivered in Congress; also, an accurate likeness. Price, only 80 cents per copy, and postage paid.

The Dream;
Or, the true history of Dea Giles's Distillery and Dea. Jones's Brewery. By George B. Cheever, D.D. Price per single copy 10 cents, $1 per doz., or $7 per hundred.

A Summer on the Carribbean Sea.
By J. Dennis Harris. With an introduction by Geo. William Curtis. Sent by mail on receipt of $1.

A Pilgrimage to my Motherland;
An account of a journey among the Egbas and Yorubas of Central Africa, in 1859-60. By Robert Campbell, one of the Commissioners of the Niger Valley Exploring Party; late in charge of the Scientific Department of the Institute for Colored Youth, Philadelphia; and member of the International Statistical Congress, London. Price, 63 cents. When sent by mail, the postage (10 cents) must be added.

Turner's (J. A.) Cotton Planter's Manual,
Being a compilation of facts from the best authorities on the culture of cotton, its natural history, chemical analysis, trade and consumption, and embracing a history of cotton and the cotton gin. Price, $1. Postage, 15 cents.

The Manual of the Wardrobe.
90 large octavo pages, in paper, by Mrs. Pullan. Price, 25 cents. Sent, postpaid, upon receipt of the price. It comprises a thorough dissertation upon taste in dress, an explanation of the different kinds of stitches made in sewing, remarks upon the various kinds and qualities of fabrics used in the wardrobe, with complete directions for cutting and fitting all kinds of garments for women's and children's wear; the preparation of table, toilet, and bed linen. Illustrated by nearly one hundred cuts of patterns and modes.

The Weekly Anglo-African.

"MAN MUST BE FREE!—IF NOT THROUGH LAW, WHY THEN ABOVE THE [illegible]

VOL. I. NO. 6. NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 7, 1861. PRICE [illegible]

The Weekly Anglo-African
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY SATURDAY,
BY ROBT. HAMILTON,
No. 48 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW YORK.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
Two Dollars per year, or Four Cents per copy, payable on delivery.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.
Six Cents a line for the first insertion, and Three Cents for each subsequent insertion.
Notices of Births, Marriages, Deaths, Public Meetings, &c., inserted for twenty-five Cents, provided they do not exceed five lines; if more than that, Five Cents for each additional line.
All communications for the paper must be addressed ROBT. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman st., New York.

Poetry.

MY CHILDREN.

They sleep; athwart my white
Moon-marbled casement, with her solemn mein,
Silently watching o'er their rest serene,
Gazeth the star-eyed Night.

My girl, sedate or wild,
By turns as playful as a summer breeze,
Or grave as Night or star-lit Southern seas,
Serene, strange woman-child!

My boy, my trembling star!
The whitest lamb in April's tenderest fold,
The bluest flower-bell in the shadiest wold
His gentle emblems are.

They are but two, and all
My lonely heart's arithmetic is done
When these are counted, High and Holy One,
O hear my trembling call!

I ask not wealth nor fame
For these, my jewels. Diadem and wreath
Soothe not the aching brow that throbs beneath,
Nor cool its fevered flame.

I ask not length of life,
Nor earthly honors. Weary are the ways
The gifted tread; unsafe the world's best praise
And keen its strife.

I ask not that to me
Thou spare them, though they dearer, dearer be
Than rain to deserts, sunshine to the sea,
Or spring flowers to the bee.

But kneeling at their feet,
While smiles, like summer light on shaded streams,
Are glancing from her glad and sinless dreams,
I would my prayer repeat.

In that alluring land.
The Future, where amid green, stately bowers,
Ornate with proud and crimson flowers,
Pleasure, with smooth, white hand.

Beckons the young away
From glen and hill-side to her banquet fair,
Sin, the grim she-wolf, croucheth in her lair,
Ready to seize her prey.

The bright and purpling bloom
Of Night-shade and Acanthus cannot hide
The charred and bleaching bones that are denied
Taper, and chrism, and tomb!

Lord, in this midnight hour,
I bring my lambs to thee. O, by thy truth,
Thy mercy, save them from th' envenomed tooth,
And tempting poison-flowers!

O, Crucified and Crowned,
Keep us! We have no shield, no guide but Thee!
Let sorrow come—let Hope's last blossom be
By Grief's dark deluge drowned;

But lead by Thine hand,
O gentlest Shepherd, till we rest beside,
The still, dear waters in the pastures wide
Of Thine our Sinless Lamb.

BROOKLYN PAPERS—No. 1.

MR. EDITOR,

Having spent over forty years of my life in this country, and the greater part of that period in the largest cities in the Union, I am prepared to state, as the result of careful observation, that Brooklyn offers as great, if not much greater advantages for improving the temporal, the social and intellectual condition of colored men as any place in this broad land. New York, like many of our older cities, is comparatively worn out, so that the chief means they now retain for improving consists in descending to a depth which must seriously endanger health; or ascending to a height too near Heaven for our present state. This necessity affords ample room for the investment of capitalists, and a broad canvas on which the retiring banker or merchant may exhibit with pride the fruits of past energies and toils. This over growth of New York, has thrown in unequalled haste, the thousand and one tenement houses incommoding from ten to forty families each, injuring beyond description the social habits of thousands of wives and mothers, and demoralizing millions of precious children. I trust nearly all American philanthropists who have devoted time, and invested large sums of money in this style of buildings, will agree with me that the objects contemplated by such investments have utterly failed.

Brooklyn is different. She has ample city area, with suburbs as extensive as they are beautiful. By giving thirty minutes ride from any of her ferries, lots are absolutely cheap. Were it not for our love of ease and pleasure, her railroad convenience for reaching any and almost every part of the city might be considered a nuisance. In our next paper we shall endeavor to show that the forecast and prudence of many colored families confirm all that is here claimed for Brooklyn. She is not only in advance of many of her sister cities of the North, in that she has banished all proscription from her public conveniences, but thereby gives strong evidence of approximating real evangelical Christianity.

The moral and social obligations of the colored people of Brooklyn appear to be very much increased by the fact that in proportion to their numbers, as compared with the colored inhabitants of many other large cities, God hath given them rare advantages. SPES.

THE PRISONER'S CHILD.

It was early morning.

"Is this the way to ———?"

"Yes," roughly replied a brown-faced countryman and passed on.

It was afternoon. The child was somewhat fragile in her appearance. Her bonnet was of broken straw, her shoes were much torn, the sun played hotly on her forehead. She walked on and on an hour longer.

"Is this the way to ——?"

"Yes, little girl; but what are you going there for?"

The child passed on, her lip quivering, but not designing to answer the pleasant faced old man, who had stopped the jogging of his horse to note her hurried manner, and who liked that little face, anxious, and sad as its expression was.

The dew was fallen. Katy had almost fallen too.

A rough stone by the way embedded in moss, received her tired little frame. She looked so wearied and aged, sitting there, her tangled hair falling on the hands that were clasped over her face! By the shaking of her frame, the tears were coming too, and she was bravely trying to hold them back.

"Why! what is this dear little girl doing here?"

This exclamation came from a pair of eager young lips.

"A curiosity, I declare!" exclaimed a harsher voice; and Katy, looking up suddenly, cowered away from the sight of the pretty young girl and her agreeable companion.

"What are you doing here, little girl?" asked Nell Maywood, moving a little nearer to the frightened child.

"Going to ———," said Katy, with a frightened way.

"Did you ever, George! this child is going to ———; why it's ten miles off. Child, did you know it was so far off?

Katy shook her head, and wiped away the hot and heavy tears.

"Why, yes, poor little goose? What are you going there for? Have you had your supper?"

Katy shook her head.

"Have you had your dinner?"

Again the child shook her head.

"Nor breakfast? Why, George, the the poor little thing must be almost starved?"

"I should think so," mechanically replied her brother, just recovering from a yawn, and showing signs of sympathy.

"Look here; what's your name?"

"Katy."

"Well, Katy, you must come up to the house and get something to eat. Going to ——— on foot! dear me how ridiculous! Follow me, Katy, and we'll take good care of you, to-night, somehow, and see about your going to ———, to-morrow."

Katy followed. What a glorious vision burst upon her view; the palace house, the rocks reddening in the low western sun; the shining river, the signs of luxuriousness to be seen on every hand.

They walked up a wide avenue, elms and oaks threw their pleasant branches on each side; here and there a flower bush might be seen; vines grew around the noble pillars, twisting up to the glittering windows.

"Susan, give this child a good supper: she's hungry, and tired, too, I suppose; after that I will see what can be done for her."

Susan wore a mild face; she looked pleasantly down at the poor tired, little one, and taking her hand, which trembled now, led her into the kitchen.

Meanwhile, her story, or that brief part of it which we know, was being told in the drawing-room. The sylph-like figure in white, lounging gracefully in the midst of delicate cushions, accompanied her narrative by expressive gestures, and now and then a little laugh.

"I should like to know what she is going to ——— for," she said, leaning languidly back. "We must get her up something to wear; a bonnet, a pair of shoes and then maybe, we can manage to have her carried some way, if her errand is of any importance. Oh, what an odd looking little thing!"

"What is that, my daughter?"

"Oh, papa, you are coming back!"

"Why, I was talking about a mite of a child; she can't be more than ten, if that. I saw her out here, sitting on a moss rock, the most forlorn object. She said she was going to ———."

"I met her on my way, too," said the pleasant faced old man. "She asked me about it and I would have stopped her, but she trudged on. Where is she now? It was noon when I saw her."

"In the kitchen, papa. Susan is taking good care of her, I expect, and when she has had a hearty supper, we will talk with her."

A gay trio of young girls came in. The needle work was laid aside, the gas burned brightly and music and mirth banished all thoughts of care. Suddenly Nell Maywood remembered the little odd figure, and clapping her hands, cried, "Oh, I've something to show you, girls!" and disappeared."

Susan was picking gooseberries near the pantry, in the kitchen.

"Where is the child, Susy!" asked Nell Maywood.

Susan placed her pan down, held her apron up to catch the stems of the berries, and walked deliberately to the door.

"Why, she was here some time after supper. I turned and came in; she was sitting there, looking up—at the stars I expect. I thought she was a mighty quiet child, but she's deep, deep, Miss Nelly. She's gone? Let me see, there ain't any silver about—I should be afraid she'd took something, they're rightly artful."

"Why, didn't you tell her she might stay all night!" Nell Maywood was peeping here and there, to spy her, if possible.

"Yes, I did, Miss Nell, and told her what a good bed there was over the woodshed; but she looked strange out of them large eyes of hers, and never seemed to hear."

"The poor child is in trouble," said Nell, quite sorrowfully, that she could not further relieve her necessities.

"I'd have given her something to wear, we should have sent her to ——; but perhaps she will come again; if so, will you send her to me."

"If she do, I will, Miss," answered Susan, going into the gooseberries again.

But little Katty did did not come back. She had been watching her opportunity to get off, and had already been gone for some time. She slept in an open field—crawled into some hay. She would have walked all night, if she dared, but she was afraid of the darkness.

* * * * * *

"Mr. Warder, there's a queer case over at my house," said a bluff-looking fellow, meeting one of the officers of ——— Prison. "We found her last night in some-out-of-the-way place, and nothing would do but my wife must take her in. We can't find out her name except that its Katy, and I think she wants to see somebody in the prison; we can't get anything out of her, where she come from, or anything at all about it."

"Bring her over here," said Mr. Warder, "my wife wants a little girl to help her with the housework—maybe she's just the one that will suit."

"So Katy stood trembling more than ever, in a few moments in the presence of Mr. Warder. Katy was a pretty child; her large blue eyes wore the expression of intense melancholy; her hair had been combed and curled, and somebody had put a good pair of shoes on her feet the day before.

"Well, my little girl," said Mr. Warder, kindly, for he was prepossessed in her favor, "where have you come from."

"London," said the child faintly.

The men looked at each other incredulously.

Do you mean to say that you have come to ——— from London on foot?"

"Yes, sir."

"And what have you come for?"

"To see my father!" the child burst forth with one great sob, and for a moment her little frame was shaken with a tempest of feeling.

"And who is your father?" asked Mr. Warder kindly.

"He is Mr. Lloyd," said the child, as soon as she could speak from the rushing sobs.

Mr. Warder looked at the jailor.

"Lloyd! there are three Lloys here—Jim, Blondy, and Dick," said the jailor.

"They may not be their proper name," responded Mr. Warder.

"Just so," said the jailor, "but I can try 'em all. Little one, was your father's name Jim?"

The child nodded her head, or they thought she did; she was all convulsed by the reaction brought on by the sudden termination of her journey.

"If it's Jim, he's a bad one," said the jailor in a low voice; "he's in irons this morning for 'tempting to break jail; he don't deserve a little gal as looks like that one, the villain! Come child."

He took Katy's shaking hand; with the other she dashed away the tears as fast as they fell. It frightened her almost into calmness to see the ponderous door at which the jailor applied the great key; and the stillness of the long stone passages, the dimness thrown over all, the constant succession of bars, and bleak, black walls were terrible to a sensitive mind like hers. How the tread of the jailor and the tread of Mr. Warder behind him, echoed through the gloom and space! It was, in truth, a great tomb through which they moved—a tomb in which were confined human hearts, whose throbs could almost be heard in the awful stillness. On they went, now through this passage way. Everything spoke of crime, of fierce passions subdued and held in stern control.

They turned and went up stairs, the jailor holding the sacred hand close to his side with a tender clasp, Mr. Warder following. Another tramp, and at last they came to a stand still. Slowly the figure of a man with a harsh, hair-covered face appeared.

"Here's your little girl come to see you," said the jailor.

"Little girl! hem! you're green," said the man in gruff accents. "I've got no little girl or you wouldn't catch me here."

"Father!" said the childish voice. It sounded so sweet, so childish in that terrible prison. But as the scowling face came closer to the bars the child laid her head quickly on the jailor's arm, half sobbing "it wasn't him."

"We will try the next one." He walked further on, and spoke more pleasantly this time.

"Well, Blondy, here is little Katy; don't you want to see her?"

"Little Katy"—there was a long pause. "I had a Katy once—not a little Katy; I broke her heart; God pity me! Go on, it can't be for me."

Again the sweet voice rung out "Father?" The prisoner came up close to the bars; a youthful face, framed with light wavy hair—a face in which the blue eyes looked innocent—a face that seemed a sin to couple with the foul deed—gazed out. It saw the child's earnest, pleading, tearful eyes. A dark expression rolled like a wave across his brow; a groan came up from his bosom, and with a low moan, he staggered against his bed, crying, "Take her away; I can't stand the sight of anything that's pure like that!"

Katy had hidden her face a second time, and she feebly cried, "It isn't him," so they kept on to a third cell.

"Jim, here's a little girl—little Katy, your daughter—wants to see you."

A stupid "What?" came from the bed; the man had probably just awakened.

"Your little daughter."

There was a sound of rattling irons that made the child shiver. Dimly appeared the face and outlines of a well made man, the countenance handsome but evil. He seemed not to comprehend; but, as fast as his chains would permit him, he came forward and looked out at the anxious face below. It was almost too much for the child. With a loud convulsive cry, she exclaimed "Father! father!" and fell nearly senseless against the jailor.

"Katy!" exclaimed the man, and there was a nervous twitching about the muscles of the mouth, "What in Heaven's name has brought you here!"

The jailor was calling the child to consciousness.

"Shall we let her come in the cell?" asked Mr. Warder.

Jim was dashing his hand across his face. A smothered "yes" issued from his lips. They opened the ponderous door and put the child within. Her arms were outstretched, his were wide open, and they came together with a clanking sound, about the form of that poor little child.

"Oh, father!"

"Oh, Katy, Katy!"

And then there was a quiet crying. By and by the man lifted the little head whose glossy curls were falling on his shoulder—and oh! what a sharp rattle of the chains smote on the ear—and looked her in the face. After a moment's irresolution, he kissed her, and then his head fell under her earnest loving look.

"Katy, what made you come?"

"I wanted to see you, father," and the head was on his shoulder again.

"How did you come, Katy? Never mind the noise, they are locking up; they will be here again and let you out; how did you come Katy?"

"I walked here."

"From London, child?"

"Yes, father!"

There was not the slightest sound, save that of the chains, as he strained her closer to his bosom.

"And how did you leave—her—Katy—your mother?"

The question was fearfully asked but not responded to. He gazed eagerly in the child's face; her lip was quivering.

"Katy, tell me quick!"

"She died, father!"

A groan, a terrible groan followed. The convict's head fell on the lap of his child, and he wept with strong cries. The jailor and governor said that they never saw a sight so woeful. And the child tried to comfort him, till his strength seemed to be gone, and his sobs were like gasps.

"Oh, Katy, when did she die? Oh, my poor May! my poor girl!"

"Ever so long. I think—ever so many weeks," replied the child; but she told me to come and see you, and comfort you."

"Oh, God! this is hard! She always forgave me."

"She told me to pray for you, too; she told me to ask would you be real good after you came out, and meet her in Heaven?"

"In Heaven! In Heaven," groaned the man giving way again to his agony. The child was angel guided. Her soft touch was better for his soul's good than the stripes and chains. He had been hardened; her little love had melted down the adamant, had found the lock-up good of his nature; and she had sent her sweet smiles through its prison door. Long he sat there, his head in the lap of his beautiful quiet child. None dare disturb him, the jailor and governor walked to and fro.

"Father, when you come out I'll take care of you."

He, lifted his head; his eyes, red with weeping, were fixed on her face.

"Mother said I might."

"God's blessing on you my angel child, you may save your miserable father."

"I will save you father."

The governor cleared his throat; the jailor spoke roughly to one of the prisoners—it was to hide his emotion.

"You had better come now," he said, going to the cell.

"Katy, you must go, [illegible] come again, my child."

"Can't I stay?"

"No, dear, [illegible] me again."

They took her [illegible] she sobbed very [illegible] room stood a [illegible]

"I have come for the little [illegible] "She must go home with me. I'll take good care of her. I've heard her story, and when her father comes out, if he's a mind to behave himself, I'll give him plenty to do. Besides [illegible] Maywood stroked her hair, and said pityingly, "Poor child! poor child!"

"Reader, ten miles from ——— there is a little cottage, occupied by a laboring man and his only daughter. Little Katy is fulfilling the command of her dying mother. She is taking care of her father, and he, thank God is taking care of himself. Men respect him, God has forgiven him.

THE RESTORED.

"God is everywhere! His words [illegible] all our hearts. He is on the battle-field and in all our homes. Praise be to his holy name.

It was in the wilds of Wissahickon on the day of battle, as the noon-day sun [illegible] through the thickly clustered leaves, [illegible] two men met in conflict, near the [illegible] which rose like the rocks of some [illegible] world, at least a hundred feet above the waters of the Wissahickon.

The man with the dark brown face, and dark grey eye flushed with deadly light, and muscular form, clad in the blue frock of the Revolution, is a Continental named Warren.

The other, with long black hair, drooping along his cadaverous face, is clad in the half military costume of a Tory refugee. This is the murderer of Paoli named Delaney.

They met by accident, and now they fought, not with swords and rifles, but with long and deadly hunting-knives, they struggled, twining and twisting on the green sward.

At last the Tory is down—down on the turf, with the knees of the Continental upon his breast—the upraised knife flashed death in his face!

"Quarter! I yield!" gasped the Tory, as the knife was pressed upon his breast. "Spare me—I yield!"

"My brother," said the patriot, in a tone of deadly hate, "My brother cried for quarter on the night of Paoli, and [illegible] as he clung to your knees you [illegible] knife into his heart. O, I will give [illegible] quarter of Paoli!" And as his hand was raised for the blow, and his teeth were clenched with deadly hate, he paused for a moment, then pinioned the Tory's arms, and with rapid strides dragged him to the verge of the rock, and held him quivering over the abyss.

"Mercy!" gasped the Tory, turning ashy pale, as that awful gulf yawned below; "Mercy! I have a wife and child at home; spare me!"

The Continental, with his muscular strength gathered for the effort, shook the murderer once more over the abyss, and then hissed this bitter sneer in his face:

"My brother had a wife and two children. The morning after the night of Paoli, that wife was a widow, those children orphans. Would you not like to go and beg your life of the widow and her orphans?"

The proposal made by the Continental, in mockery and bitter hate, was taken in serious earnest by the terror-stricken Tory. He asked to be taken to the widow and her children, and to have the privilege of begging his life. After a moment's serious thought, the patriot soldier consented. He bound the Tory's arms still tighter, placed him on the rock again, and led him to the woods. A quiet cottage, embowered among the trees, broke on their sight. They entered the cottage. There, beside the domestic hearthstone, sat the widow and her children.

They sat there, a matronly woman of about thirty-three years, with a face faded by care, a deep, dark eye, and long black hair, hanging in a disheveled state about her shoulders. On one side was a dark-haired boy of some six years; on the other side, a girl one year younger, with light blue eyes. The Bible, an old and venerable volume, lay open on the mother's lap. And now the pale-faced Tory flung himself upon his knees, and confessed he had butchered her husband on the night of Paoli, and begged his life at her hands.

"Spare me, for the sake of my wife and child!"

He expected the pitiful moan would touch the widow's heart, but not one relenting gleam softened her face.

"The Lord shall judge between us," she said, in a cold, icy tone that froze the murderer's heart. "Look, the Bible is in my lap; I will close the volume, and this boy shall open it and place his finger at random upon a line, and by that line you shall live or die."

This was a strong proposition, made in the strong faith of a wild and dark superstition of the olden time. For a moment, the Tory, pale as ashes, was wrapt in thought; then, in a fainting voice, he signified his consent.

Raising her dark eyes, to Heaven, the widow prayed to the Great Father to direct the fingers of her son. She closed the book, handed it to the boy, whose cheek, reddened with loathing as he gazed on his father's murderer. He took the Bible, opened its pages at random, and placed his finger on a verse.

There was a silence. The Continental soldier, who had sworn to avenge his brother's death, stood with dilating eyes [illegible] upon the [illegible] day, [illegible] the widow [illegible] It [illegible] the [illegible] springs forward to [illegible] into the murderer's heart, [illegible] pleased as he is, clings to [illegible] Perhaps that one more [illegible] made by the little girl, that [illegible] with the golden hair and [illegible] eyes.

[illegible] There is an awful [illegible] With a smile in her eyes, without [illegible] she was doing, the little girl [illegible] as it lay on her mother's [illegible] turned her face away, and placed [illegible] upon a line.

[illegible] glance. The [illegible] of the brother, and [illegible] of the murderer alone disturbed the [illegible] the widow and dark-haired boy [illegible] The little girl, [illegible] of awe [illegible] breathless; her face [illegible] her finger resting on [illegible]

[illegible] courage, the widow [illegible] page, and read—it [illegible] Testament:

[illegible]

Oh, [illegible] and child[illegible] crushes the [illegible] never shone more [illegible] in that lonely cot of the [illegible] you saved the [illegible]

[illegible] wonderful are the ways of Heaven. [illegible] night, as the wid[illegible] there with a [illegible] her eyelids, thinking of [illegible] mouldering on [illegible] there was a tap at the door. She [illegible] husband, living, [illegible] with wounds, was in her arms.

He had fallen [illegible], but not in death; he was alive, and his wife lay panting on his bosom.

That night there was much prayer in the wood-embowered cottage of Wissahickon.

THE MADMAN AND HIS WIFE.

Margaret had, according to my recommendation, swallowed the sedative, undressed, and retired to bed; where, overcome by fatigue and wretchedness, she sank into a heavy sleep. The bedroom in question, the one usually occupied by herself and her husband, was on the ground floor, at the extremity of the right wing and looking [illegible] thickly-tangled shrubbery. About five o'clock that morning, when dawn was breaking, she awoke with the feeling of something cold being pressed tightly on her throat. She opened her eyes, starting up mechanically from her pillow and saw what might have tried the nerves of the strongest man. There was poor Horace sitting calmly by her bedside, perfectly naked, his sea-weed chaplet still on his head, and his arms folded on his breast, making conspicuously visible her own initials and the cross and anchor in pale blue, which he had so carefully punctured on himself in the days that were passed away. But in his hands he held the ends of the coil of black sea-weed stalk, which he had twisted tightly around her neck; and it was the pressure of this deadly ligature upon her throat that roused her from sleep. Owing to her instinctive self-possession, and her wonderfully calm nature, aided, perhaps, by the effects of the opiate, in some measure, she neither started nor screamed when she discovered her peril, but at once addressed him cheerfully, and tried to link one of his hands in hers; yet he still retained his hold on the coil, so that she knew she was helpless. She told me afterwards how difficult it was for her to withstand the inclination to put her fingers to her neck and endeavor to rid herself of her ghastly necklace. She did refrain.

"Yes, it is I, Margaret," he answered dreamily. "I have come to enable you to die. It is necessary," he continued with frightful calmness, "that you should be strangled. I've been a long time preparing this rope, and it is now thoroughly charmed."

She shivered a little. "It is cold—is it not?" he said; "but that will not signify in the end. It seems almost a pity, does it not?" and he touched her full and finely moulded throat doubtfully with his fingers. "Don't be afraid, love," he added, almost tenderly, and proceeded to tighten the coil. She made a desperate effort.

"You know Horace, I can have no objection, but I must have my hair properly dressed; you must dress it for me. You used to think my hair beautiful, you know."

He seemed puzzled for a moment. "Is it absolutely needful?" he inquired, sternly.

"I am sure it is," she replied with a vague idea that it would be better to assign some reason, however absurd; "the corpse would otherwise look unseemly."

"Very well," he answered gravely. He then assisted her out of bed, still keeping the detestable coil in his fingers. She placed herself before the glass, biting her lips to bring back the color which had fled, and trying to smile; then letting down her long hair, she handed him the brushes. He took them, and began his task with the greatest gentleness, and to her inexpressible relief, she felt the coil relax as the two ends fell down on the floor; though of course, it was still round her throat.

These moments seemed hours, and her agitation and suspense were fast growing intolerable. Meanwhile, poor lady, she praised his dexterity, which seemed to please him, excessively, and stimulated him to new endeavors. He began to perform the most extravagant manœuvers, brushing her hair quite [illegible], and letting it fall in a mass over her shoulders [illegible] his own neck and [illegible] this with [illegible].

It was [illegible] I arrived [illegible] that the shortest [illegible] bery, I pushed [illegible] branches with [illegible] on the lawn, I reconnoitred [illegible]. I was naturally surprised to see Mrs. Saltoun visible at that hour from the bedroom window; it was low enough for me to have a view of part of the interior of the room; and I saw that she was sitting before the mirror, her face turned towards the window. She was excessively pale, and had a strange, forced smile. Though she caught my eyes she neither moved nor made the slightest sign of recognition, but continued to gaze with such a stern, [illegible] expression, that I would move with [illegible]. I stepped back and looked again. Yes, so it was! I saw plainly her mad husband standing behind her. I could see his head still crowned, and his naked shoulders.

Though I was not aware of the critical nature of her peril, I knew there was danger, so, crouching down and out of sight, I made my way [illegible] into the house. I encountered his own servant, a man much attached to his master; he inquired eagerly if I had tidings of him.

"Take off your shoes," I said, "instantly, and follow me; your master is in the house." I paused outside the bedroom door and listened. I could hear nothing [illegible] the rustling of the brushes in the hair, and an odd, low, chuckling laugh. I then tried the handle of the door as noiselessly as possible; good—it was not bolted or locked inside, as I had feared to find. I instantly threw it open. Horace faced me, and with a terrible yell sprang upon me like a wild beast. Poor fellow! assistance was at hand, and he was quickly overpowered. When I turned to seek Margaret, she had fainted. —"Horace Saltoun," in Cornhill Magazine.

ENSLAVING THE CALIFORNIA INDIANS.

A correspondent of the Boston "Transcript," writing from San Francisco, tells this story of the treatment of the Indians on the Pacific coast:

Since my last I have been home, and from there two hundred miles northward to Humboldt Bay, where the land office is situated. I went up with a party of eight, on horseback, taking pack animals with us to carry our provisions. It was a rough, mountainous country we had to travel over, and uninhabited, save here and there by a rough mountaineer. The country is pretty thickly populated with wild Indians, who are now being hunted for their children—an assertion which will probably startle you, but such is the fact, disguise it as they may.

For several years different parties have attempted to locate themselves in those hills with cattle to take advantage of the great range of feed. The Indians, being a miserable, improvident race, have now and then killed an ox when they were hungry, and the whites in retaliation have killed them, and the Indians in return have killed some whites when they caught them alone; the consequence has been one or two Indian wars, so called, in that country, but in reality the war was all on one side, for the Indians are incapable of making a war. Well, during all this time there has been a reservation up in that country, where the Indians are supposed to be taken care of by the Government, and all captives were taken there—a good many orphan children among the rest. Experience proved them to be, when tamed, quite docile and very good servants, learning to work and to speak English very rapidly. Many of them were adopted into families, and our legislature was induced to pass a law which by an easy process "apprenticed them out for a term of years."

The demand for these little fellows naturally increased, and to get one many persons living at a distance would willingly pay fifty or a hundred dollars for the trouble of bringing them down. There are many wild, uncouth, reckless fellows living in those mountains with squaws they have stolen from the Indians, and to meet this demand they have to make war on the Indians; the Indians kill a few beeves to keep themselves from starving, and this affords a pretext. The government itself is making war on the Indians at the demand of the settlers for protection, and the settlers make war for the young ones, so as to take them and sell them; that is to say, they make you a present of a little digger, and you make them a present of a hundred dollars for their trouble in catching him.

We stopped at one house on the trail in the deep gorges of the mountains, and saw six poor little naked urchins who had been recently captured; any one we could have taken home with us by quietly slipping fifty dollars into the hands of their captor. The brutal rascal pointed to one boy and said, with the greatest [illegible] imaginable, that he "had killed his daddy yesterday, and thought he was not quite big enough to kill, so he brought him in," and showed us a huge knife with which he had slaughtered the unresisting native.

EARLY RISERS.—One of our contemporaries, who doubtless love to whisper soft things by moonlight and doze dreamily late in the morning, disposes of the virtue of early rising as follows:

"We have watched these fellows who are early risers, and as a general thing they are the first chaps who go to the groceries in the morning. It is all moonshine about the smartest and greatest men being the earliest risers. It may have been so in old times—we won't dispute about that; but now-a-days, when you see a chap moving about very early, you may be certain he is after a drink."

The Weekly Anglo-African.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 7, 1861.

☞ Advertisements for this paper must be accompanied by the cash.

☞ Copies of this paper can be purchased of the news-dealers everywhere.

A NOBLE PROPOSITION.

ROBERT HAMILTON Esq.,

Dear Sir:—I congratulate you at the appearance once more of the Anglo-African,—a paper that gained, for the time it existed, more prestige than any other that had preceded it.

Now sir, the glorious question is, "Shall it live?" I call it glorious, from the immense importance of the hour that is now upon us.

It will [illegible] if we bring our patriotism, our love for the truth, not to a boiling, but a moderate heat. Let each brother and sister, father and child, do what they can—take stock in it at a fair premium. The premium to be paid in Hallelujahs when its work as a Journal for Freedom is over.

Sir, I propose to unite with some in investing Five Dollars to begin with; what will others answer? I propose no plan upon which it is to be paid, but leave that to your better judgment—but I suppose you need the money as soon as you can get it. I therefore pay immediately. Now who will be the next customer,—not for five, for four—for three—for two—for one? Or fifty cents? Keep in remembrance, friends, that this [illegible] pays glorious in premiums, however small be the investment. Yet you must [illegible] remember that greater the investment, more glorious the premium!

Now sir, I believe I have said enough; perhaps more than enough—for, after all, all that is requisite is but for the people to know of our need and they are ready to [illegible] its renewal.

Yours in behalf of the good cause,

J. N. GLOUCESTER.

CHANGES No. 2.

So rapid and various are the changes passing before us, that they command the attention of Anglo-Africans who are as yet mere lookers on, however hopeful of "lending a hand" to set things to rights.

Scarce a twelve-month has passed since Anti-Slavery men were hooted and mobbed in Massachusetts and New York, so that the worst of times of pro-slavery mobs seemed about to recur, and the banner of the "host" even trailed in the dust so far as to omit the usual anniversary in New York. [illegible], meetings in favor of the South and of slavery are mobbed even when they assume the angel livery of peace.

In 1834 the pro-slavery mobs in this city were, to a large extent, urged on by the inflammatory appeals of the New York Courier and Enquirer, edited by James Watson Webb: to-day, the Courier and Enquirer has given up the ghost, and its ferocious editor gently eased off to a small mission where he may enter into the mixed joys of servile decay and agonies of a mis-spent life. So too, the Journal of Commerce, Day Book, and the Daily News who fattened on cursing the negro and endeavoring to prove his relative inferiority in the family of men—these papers are all shut up or metamorphosed so far as their favorite topic is concerned.

The iron heel of the war has leveled white man and free black, slave-holder and slave, in a most important point—in the matter of giving testimony. The panting fugitive and his pursuer rush into the Federal lines even in old Virginia; the officer in command sees two men—he hears both as men, and acts according to his best judgment.

Perhaps the most astounding change of all is that which relates to the great political field, of which the stern necessities of war, what is called the "War Power," has now taken possession. It is well understood that no triumph, cabinet or forum in diplomacy or political strategy can win the next presidency of these United States. Should the vote be taken to-morrow, no civilian however great, no politician however astute could have the shadow of a chance. The yearnings of the people for a military man at the helm of state which began with Jackson and had been smothered in Buchanan's election, will be pronounced with emphasis at each succeeding election for the next half century. Even town candidates for constables in rural districts, instead of swearing that they are sound on the goose will have to scare up a scratch received in battle or ambuscade. The success of Ben. Butler, democrat, led to the appointment of Banks, republican, as general of volunteers. And now that Fremont is fairly in the field, the rivalry between the two, and others who will spring up, will be not only in successful battles, but in shrewdly worded letters and proclamations. We all remember how the classic general orders of General Taylor, written by his [illegible] Colonel Bliss, floated like martial strains on the [illegible] ear, and secured the presidential vote. Now we have a letter from Butler, and a proclamation from Fremont, the pith and turning point in both being who shall be the most thoroughly an emancipationist. Here then we recognise in the fire front of the war the right issue of the great slave question. The question is the same as it has been since the foundation of the government, but what a change in the issue! The president in power is already losing his times: the rapid quicksands of the hour are slipping away from beneath his feet; the people look elsewhere with hope; they will no longer abide [illegible] proclamations which directly or indirectly affirm or admit that man can hold property in man. And the cunning men, sharp-sighted and daring are already seizing upon anti-slavery, [illegible] the most [illegible] their [illegible] in the struggle for power.

These are [illegible] changes, and changes for the better. Like soldiers in the heat of battle, the whites can only see the minor events which occur in our vicinity. We blacks have a larger vision and we rejoice at what we see, not simply because the better time beckons with hope to us—we are not and never have been so intensely selfish—but because we feel that the land we love so well, and the institutions which have been so long perverted, are both about to be rid of the direst curse that ever afflicted humanity; because liberty and justice are about taking the place of slavery and injustice.

To make our statement clearer in regard to Butler and Fremont, let us quote two short passages from each. "Fremont's proclamation, without circumlocution, declares that the slaves of rebels in Missouri are hereby declared to be free men." There is no hitch about contrabands or half-way ideas about what is to be done with them, they are free men and of course able to take care of themselves. Not to be outdone, General Butler in his speech at Washington, made the other night, declared that the Federal host would march from that spot straight through the rebel states, and would secure for every man what the secessionists were so fond of quoting "Life, LIBERTY and the pursuit of happiness."

AMUSEMENTS.

THE EXCELSIOR PIC-NIC.

Bull's Ferry is a quiet little place about seven miles up the Hudson River, and thither on Friday, 30th inst. repaired an agreeable little party of about sixty persons, for the purpose of participating in a social pic-nic. The incredible short space of time in making the arrangements, being hardly twenty-four hours, it was truly astonishing to see such an affair, and on such an extensive scale. The day was all that could be desired, and the occasion a truly interesting one.

A part of the committee went up on the ten o'clock boat, while the remainder, with the invited guests, went up on the two o'clock boat. Arriving there we were received by the committee, and conducted to the house—after depositing baskets, &c. in their charge and laying off hats, cloaks &c. we repaired to the platform for a quadrille, after which a grand march, when the guests all formed in couples, preceded by the committee, and marched to the large dining-hall, where a most sumptuous repast was arranged. It is unnecessary to relate what was there, suffice it to say, that in spite of the damage done to the good things by the consumers, there seemed to be no scarcity in quantity. After the repast was over the guests repaired to the Grove for "Le Danse," Mr. T. B. Voorhees officiating as director. The committee who were so untiring in their efforts to please their guests almost forgot that they had not partaken of the dainties themselves.

Among the strangers I noticed Mr. Lucas of Washington city, and Mr. Crawford of Mobile. The committee consisted of Mrs. W. of Minetta Lane, Mrs., H. C., and Mrs. J. of York St., Mrs. L. of Cornelia St. and Mrs. B. of the same street. Mrs. D. 17th St. Mrs. G. King St. Mrs. B. Thompson St., Mrs. C. and Mrs. N. of York St., Messrs. Nichols, Myers and Butler, who were untiring in their efforts to render everything agreeable. At half-past six o'clock the bell of the steamboat summoned them to the landing. The time had passed so pleasantly that we wished it was morning again, but it seemed the pleasures were not to end here, for there was a hop in the evening at Mrs. G.'s in 19th St. where a large number of the party repaired to make out the day, for it was after, when your correspondent retired. Viva la Excelsior.

SPARTACUS.

P.S. The young lady who came in the 5 o'clock boat is excusable for the remarks she made, for it has never been supposed that her existence is endangered by an overplus of good sense.

REV. H. M. WILSON'S BIRTHDAY PARTY.

The ladies of the Rev. Mr Wilson's church, (7th Avenue, Presbyterian) have, for a few years past, been in the habit of celebrating their pastor's birthday. These gatherings have always been quite popular, and the one given on Monday evening was not an exception to the rule. The lecture room of the church was well filled by a highly intelligent audience, who, judging by the lateness of the hour when they parted, must have enjoyed the occasion very much. The singing and instrumental performances were conducted by Messrs. Bogert and Vanhorn.

In addition to the usual exercises on such occasions, the Rev. Mr. Wilson delivered a short address in which he made the announcement that he would, in a few days, hold a series of meetings in his church in reference to the improvement of the mental and pecuniary condition of our people.

We have no doubt but these meetings will prove highly interesting and instructive.

Letter from Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Aug. 30, 1861.

DEAR ANGLO—

A Grand Convocation of the Bethel Sabbath School was held last evening at their church in 6th Street, between Lombard and Pine Sts. The exercises commenced with singing and prayer. Rev. John Woodlin made the introductory address, and was followed by Rev. Messrs. Stephen Smith, John Smith and Caleb Bond, and Messrs. Henry Gordon, Josiah Eddy and Jabob C. White, Sen. The number of scholars present was about two hundred. They behaved remarkably well. In the evening there was a fruit festival given by the teachers of the school, at the Colored Institute in Lombard Street, which was attended by a large and respectable company, the female portion of which was dressed exceedingly gay. Ice cream, fruits, and other refreshments were in great abundance.

On the day of the above a fine Pic-Nic was held at Red Bank, N. J. Although the weather was quite unfavorable a large gathering was present. During the day addresses were made by several eminent speakers. About 5 o'clock the band struck up, and the company started for Philadelphia, reaching Market Street wharf without anything occurring to mar their happiness.

J. A. T.

For the Anglo African.

Arrival of the Bark Edward at Monrovia.

The safe arrival of the bark Edward at Monrovia must evoke general joy and [illegible] among the friends and relatives [illegible] truly respectable, heroic, and [illegible] body of philanthropists, who having [illegible] to strengthen the establishment of [illegible] and missionary enterprise [illegible] coast of Africa. We [illegible] through the kindness of Mr. T. [illegible] Downing to peruse a private letter from his son Peter, who accompanied the party referred to, and who is located in Monrovia in the grocery business. Mr. Downing presents the hospitality of his adopted government in a most admirable light. Immediately on his arrival at the Capitol an official dinner, such as is customarily tendered in all civilized governments to distinguished strangers, was tendered to the firm and company, Mr. Downing occupying the right of the President, and the Mayor of Monrovia, Hon. B. V. R. James the left. Generous wine flowed, and glowing sentiments, red hot with blazing patriotism found expression and response from hearts brimfull of love to the grand principles which they have carried their lives in their hands to establish. After recounting the many agreeable disappointments in the appearance of the place, the dispositions and qualifications of the inhabitants, their enterprise and social pride, Mr. Downing passes to the more important subject of his business speculations. Says he: "In two weeks I have realized in the retail of my groceries, $700. Candies, loaf sugar, brandy, rum, Scheidam schnapps, &c., find ready sales here. An experimental consignment of such articles by yourself or George will not, I can positively assure you, prove otherwise than to your great pecuniary profit and satisfaction." This truly is flattering, yet we do not wonder at the success of Mr. Downing when we consider his business advantages, in fact his business inheritance; and yet with all those signs of promise a cloud obscures the luster of these dazzling prospects as we weigh the fearful chances of life and health which threaten the stranger from the temperate climes. In fact we believe his struggles with that fatal element but a question of a short time at least. Of course there are exceptions, but they we believe to be tough and stubborn constitutions, hard to break down, which, with continual drugging, eke out a miserable existence—miserable we mean in health, suffering continual mortifications of the flesh, until, as the fearful record during the emigration movement in this direction will show, they mingle their bones with other lamented victims in this distant Golgotha.

TYPES.

Lecture by Miss Paulyon.

On Monday evening the 2nd inst., Miss Paulyon, a lady 7 years out of slavery, lectured at the Zion Baptist Church in Sullivan Street. The meeting was organized by a fervent prayer by Rev. Jno. T. Raymond, for the success of the Federal Government, hoping that the various means that have been resorted by a certain Generals may result in the liberation of the slave. After which the lecturer arose and read a portion of a chapter in the Bible. She then commenced a narration of her early slave life, part of which was very affecting, calling forth many tears, especially from the female portion of the audience. She afterwards spoke at length upon our condition in this country, as a people, our advantages and disadvantages, the question of caste, &c., &c. In speaking of caste the lady frequently alluded to the manner in which most of the white people taught their children prejudice against colored people. She was frequently interrupted with shouts of applause. And, we should think it had a wholesome effect on the audience, many of whom were white. The lady did not think it good policy to narrate her escape from slavery, as it might involve certain parties who aided her, so she would reserve it till some other time. Suffice it to say she was sixteen years old when she made her escape, suffering hunger, thirst, and cold on her journey to the North. Since she has been in the North she has learned needle-work, geography, arithmetic, grammar, painting, together with one or two other of the fine arts, all through her own exertions. She also writes poetry, several anti-slavery pieces of which she sung, which created some mirth, excepting one entitled the "Slave's Farewell," at which many eyes filled with tears. The lady then exhibited a piece of her needle-work, it being a piece she had about just commenced. It was a large piece of fine black cloth embroidered with silk so as to represent a large wreath of flowers in a variety of colors. It certainly dazzled the eye to look at it. In conclusion the lady stated that she would sail for Hayti in a day or two. She said that she wished to make a few purchases before she sailed, and that any favors would be thankfully received by her, either on the spot or at her boarding place at Mrs. J. W. Bells; after which the meeting closed, all expressing great gratification with the manner in which they had been entertained. For our part we never heard anything to equal it. The lecture occupied about one hour and a half in its delivery. Miss P. is a native of Alabama.

TOUSSAINT.

FROM HAYTI.

The following are extracts from letters recently received from members of the New Haven Colony, copied by permission of the parties to whom they were addressed. The first is from Mrs. Monroe, widow of the late Rev. Wm. C. Monroe. The letter is dated,

Port au Prince, Aug. 4, 1861.

* * * * * * * * * * *

We stopped at St. Mark's two days, and went ashore. I did not like the looks of the place as well as Port au Prince, but I do not like the looks of either. You would not like to live here. I am coming home as soon as I can; I have been and still am sick. The president has done all that he can to render us happy, but there is no use in staying here without any health. It has been and is yet very sickly here. There have been many deaths among us.

Mr. John P. Armstrong, his father and mother, a child of Stephen Jackson, and his wife's mother, Mr. Holly's mother and a Mr. Jackson of New Haven, Mrs. Rogers and infant, Mrs. Jane Trusty, Mr. Rogers, have been very sick, and also Mr. C. J. Freeman. His daughter Hatty is dead, also a child of Mr. Adams. There are a great many more who are not expected to live. I have been to the palace, it is a very splendid building. The wife of the President has called on me several times, and has promised me a school, if my health will permit * * * * * * * I hope to see you again soon, and have a good time with you.

Yours, &c.,

M. O. MONROE.

The next is from Mr. Prince T. Rogers, addressed to a gentleman in New Haven.

DEAR SIR,

With mingled emotions I take my pen in hand to let you know how we do. We have been well, and done well, but God is the ruler of all things.

We have all been sick with the fever. It has made a great hole in our colony. Along with the number that have gone is my wife and sister Trusty; I went down to death's door, but God said spare him a little longer. Out of our colony 14 have died. But notwithstanding, God has so scourged us, I must say this is a fine country.

"Every prospect pleases,
And only man is vile."

I am very nervous and can but just walk alone.

The President is a very fine man. He comes out here to see us in our trouble, and counsels us like a father. We brought the sickness upon ourselves by eating too much solid food, and being in the hot sun. We have started an Episcopal Church here, which the natives seem to appreciate much. We also attended the Sabbath School, but our sickness has caused its discontinuance. All the country needs, is active, intelligent men.

Yours, &c.,

PRINCE T. ROGERS.

LETTER FROM LEO L. LLOYD.

MONROVIA, Republic of Liberia, July 6, 1861.

To the Editor of the Boston Journal:

Can you, through the columns of your widely circulated paper, assign to the people of Liberia the reason why the capitalists of the North, who scatter their money in every other direction, overlook or underlook our superior claims to financial recognition, if no more? They ride all night in the cars or steamboat to reach Washington in time to bid on the five per cent. loans, or run the risk of their lives to be at St. Louis or Chicago to the great sales of lands often held in those rocket cities. They press each other's toes rather too close for comfort, to catch the eye of the stock auctioneer; and in seven cases out of every ten, lose at that. They loan their money to Southern planters who do not own the shoes on their feet, or the bed they sleep on. They run headlong into all manner of wild but aerial speculation, with the glaring fact before their eyes that we are only waiting for the first who offers to furnish us with the needful articles (not cash), out of which their thirty-three per cent. is a living certainty. Is it because we are all black men, and they have only been accustomed to placing their means in the hands of white men? Look at our unequaled prospects for sugar and cotton growing; consider that we produce the best coffee in the world, besides arrowroot, ginger, corn, peanuts, cocoa, indigo, and other valuable articles. As to sugar, that will at present, or at least until we obtain *more wealth, be the leading article of ex*port from Liberia, and for this reason, sugar can be grown and brought to market in large quantities much sooner than cotton, and at half the expense to the producer. It brings first class prices both in Europe and America. One reason why the sugar brings a good price in small quantities of fifty thousand pounds or more, is that we as yet know nothing of the art of reducing the strength to give it a fairer grain and color, therefore, what we do make brings a higher price than fancy Cuba brands. As our sugar is so much stronger than Cuba sugar, that after it is refined it is still stronger than all other sugars produced elsewhere, and we can afford to continue in this same way, thereby always commanding a good price. As to obtaining reliable laborers, had we the means that are wasted in attempts to make ten per cent. in other countries, we could set all the natives in Western Africa to work at a much cheaper rate than slave labor costs.

It is preposterous to say the natives of Africa must be enslaved to make them work. The fact is, all they want to induce them to labor as hard and as long as civilized man, is simply the pay for it every month and comfortable houses built for their wives and children, who would do half as much as the men for one third the amount of wages. It is a shame that nearly one half the sugar cane planted here last year is still standing for want of mills to make it up. There are but two steam mills in the Republic. They do all their owners can get, including their own crops. The small power mills sent here by our friends in America are entirely too frail for our large cane. Nothing but steam mills should be sent here, as we have no mules or large horses, and our oxen are small and soon break down. You are aware, I suppose, that we only plant the same land once every eight years, and cut good cane every year during that length of time. Each acre is said by those who are now growing cane to produce from 1000 to 1500 lbs of sugar, besides the syrup and molasses dripping from it. Fifteen dollars per acre will buy the land, clear and plant it. After that it is only necessary to keep the weeding out for eight years to get good crops. Let the knowing ones figure for themselves. Liberia is now full of recaptured slaves, and they could all be set to work at once.

The great cry, however, is "Cotton! Cotton!" Well, it grows spontaneously throughout the great table lands of Western Africa. There are five hundred thousand acres of the best of cotton land in and adjoining Liberia. And all we want is the root of all evil to clear and plant it. It would have been done long since, but people are not as wise as they suppose they are; if they were, they would not risk their money in the slave trade, when the African can be employed here to greater profit and at one-tenth the risk of losing.

How can we, the Liberians, plant cotton or sugar in large quantities without capital? Do they do it in other parts of the world? Do the slaveholders do it? Who has the advantage in such an enterprise—the slaveholders or the Liberians, when the capital is equal? There are four millions of slaves in the United States; not over two millions are cotton laborers, the balance grow sugar, rice, tobacco and other things. When a slave dies, or is successful in the game of "hide and you can't find me," it costs the planter from $800 to $1000 to fill his place, and then it cannot be done immediately. But when a native, working by the month or year, dies, or chooses to stop work, there are one hundred million others ready to take his place at $36 per year, certainly not over $40, as quick as you could say, "Jeff. Davis is a pirate." There's a soft place on the world's head yet about everything African.

We hear much and read more about civilizing and evangelizing Africa. But to speak as one here on the spot where this great work is to be accomplished, and where so many noble women and men have found a grave in the attempt, I beg leave to be one of the minority, as far as accomplishing it by mere praying and preaching is concerned. In my humble opinion it would require centuries to bring it about. But suppose the same amount was expended in planting the above mentioned articles, and the natives were called in two hours per day and instructed in religious matters, who cannot see the difference it would make? The love of gain would keep the native and his children on the plantation, and the regulations on the estate would effectually abolish all heathen practices. Look at the most civilized countries in the world; where do the churches thrive most—is it not where the poorer classes are paid best for their labor, and commerce is in the most flourishing condition? Who supposes the African is not actuated as much by gain as other men? Let the eyes of all Christians be opened to this glaring truth, who cannot see that in such a way as is above hinted at the African will pay the entire expenses of his civilization, and open the door for the generations that will follow him. How blind we all are with our eyes wide open. Now is the time for those who believe, with myself, that the African is to work out his own freedom by making use of his own unsurpassed fertile soil, and employing the legion of laborers he can command in opposition to slave labor.

I cannot believe that the disunion troubles will result as favorably to the slaves as Wendell Phillips eloquently argues. No sir, the North looks at the slave as capital, as will the South, and the African is the greased dollar between them. Now, if the negro could convince the North that he will be of as much value to the people of the free States as he is in a pecuniary sense to those South, that day he is free. Or if we who are in Africa could obtain sufficient goods, &c., (that being the capital meant in this letter,) to set three million of natives to the producing of cotton, sugar, rice, coffee, &c., with the superior productiveness of our soil, we could starve out slavery in twenty-five years. The disunion difficulty in America, in my opinion, is not a struggle for the freedom of my race, but one for political ascendancy in the government. The negro's freedom will be the last thing granted, no matter who wins in the conflict, is the humble conviction of your obedient servant.

LEO L.L.

Revival in Jamaica.

The following letter, from a proof-sheet of the forthcoming "American Missionary" for September, was written by an old and distinguished minister of the Baptist denomination. Mr. Clark has been on the island nearly thirty years. He was a friend of the late Joseph Sturge, and is esteemed very highly wherever known.

BROWNSTOWN, Jamaica, May 28, 1861.

MY DEAR SIR—Your kind and interesting letter reached me last month. We are now looking with deep interest and anxiety for intelligence from the United States, and pray that if it pleases God the awful calamity of war between brothers may be even yet averted; that peace may be restored, and slavery—the cause of discord and of a thousand evils—may be destroyed, and not permitted to ruin your noble republic and country.

You wish me to give you some account of the revival.

It is now about seven months since it commenced in connection with one of the Moravian churches in the western part of the Island. It spread rapidly and powerfully. Multitudes were awakened, and a large portion of them, it is believed, truly converted. Satan at once began to sow his tares, and they speedily sprang up. The minds of thousands of the the most ignorant and superstitious of the people were filled with alarm—they feared that fearful judgments were coming upon them, gave up work and wandered about from place to place. Obeah men declared that they too were visited by the Spirit of God and directed to dig up the Obeah (fetish) that had been hid in the ground for evil purposes, and that they would thus deliver the people from the curse resting upon them. These infatuated persons seemed bereft of reason and possessed by an evil spirit. They disturbed our services—interfered with our plans, and charged us with opposing the work of God. In this way disgrace was brought upon the revival, and the work of grace was hindered in many parts of the Island. Still the people crowded to every service, great numbers were deeply convinced of sin—abandoned their evil practices and sought the Lord with their whole heart. In connection with my own congregations, upwards of seven hundred persons came to me to converse with them about their souls. Many of these were backsliders, who manifested deep and sincere repentance, but the most part were young people, who seemed intensely anxious about their souls. Nearly six months have elapsed since the work began, and a few only have returned to the world, some feel less than when they were just awakened, but the greater portion are pressing on in the way to Zion with their faces thitherward.

The unhallowed excitement, to which I have referred, swept over us like a storm; it wrought fearful havoc; many who might have been brought into the kingdom of God had their thoughts diverted from Christ, and carried away by evil passions and superstitious fears. It is still raging in some of the eastern parts of the Island, and if the reports reach me are correct, to the almost entire prevention of the work of grace.

Certainly, I never beheld anything so strange as the struggle here between evil and good, darkness and light, the kingdom of Satan and the kingdom of God. What the result would have been I cannot tell, but for the fervent prayers and earnest, faithful efforts of the Lord's people. Night and day they labored and prayed to resist the torrent of evil, and to lead sinners to Christ.

Our chapels are still crowded to excess on Sabbath days—although hundreds of the people have to travel five, six and eight miles to them, and on week evenings the services, classes for instruction, etc., are well attended. In the Sabbath-school at this place we have about eight hundred scholars; at our second station, Bellmmy, four hundred; and at two other stations, between two and three hundred. A considerable number of the children are under concern about their souls.

We still hope that many who were deluded by the enemy of souls will even yet be delivered from that power. Seldom a day passes without some one coming to me, and frequently several persons, under concern about their souls. About a hundred couples who were living immorally, have been united in marriage by myself, and similar numbers have been married by other ministers. Nearly, if not all, the new converts have given up the use of rum.

It is supposed that at least twenty thousand persons in the western portion of the Island have been convinced of sin, and have turned to the Lord. Many of these may prove false to their professions, but no Christian or Christian minister I have met doubts the reality of the conversion of a very large proportion of these persons.

Hoping soon to hear again from you, and begging you to excuse this abrupt close, as I have been interrupted, and must send off my letter at once, I remain, my dear sir, most truly yours,

JOHN CLARK.

Lewis Tappan, Esq., New York.

PROCLAMATION OF GEN. FREMONT.

"HEADQUARTERS OF THE WESTERN DEPARTMENT,
"ST. LOUIS, Aug. 31, 1861.

"Circumstances, in my judgment of sufficient urgency, render it necessary that the Commanding-General of this Department should assume the administrative powers of the State. Its disorganized condition, the helplessness of the civil authority, the total insecurity of life, and the devastation of property by bands of murderers and marauders who infest nearly every county in the State and avail themselves of the public misfortunes and the vicinity of a hostile force to gratify private and neighborhood vengeance, and who find an enemy wherever they find plunder, finally demand the severest measures to repress the daily increasing crimes and outrages which are driving off the inhabitants and ruining the State. In this condition the public safety and the success of our arms require unity of purpose, without let or hindrance, to the prompt administration of affairs.

"In order, therefore, to suppress disorders, to maintain as far as now practicable the public peace, and to give security and protection to the persons and property of loyal citizens, I do hereby extend, and declare established, martial law throughout the State of Missouri. The lines of the army of occupation in this State are for the present declared to extend from Leavenworth by way of the posts of Jefferson City, Rolla, and Ironton, to Cape Girardeau on the Mississippi River.

"All persons who shall be taken with arms in their hands within these lines shall be tried by court-martial, and, if found guilty, will be shot. The property, real and personal, of all persons in the State of Missouri who shall take up arms against the United States, and who shall be directly proven to have taken active part with their enemies in the field, is declared to be confiscated to the public use; and their slaves, if any they have, are hereby declared free.

"All persons who shall be proven to have destroyed, after the publication of this order, railroad tracks, bridges or telegraphs, shall suffer the extreme penalty of the law.

"All persons engaged in treasonable correspondence, in giving or procuring aid to the enemies of the United States, in disturbing the public tranquility, by creating and circulating false reports or incendiary documents, are in their own interest warned that they are exposing themselves.

"All persons who have been led away from their allegiance are required to return to their homes forthwith; any such absence without sufficient cause will be held to be presumptive evidence against them.

"The object of this declaration is to place in the hands of the military authorities the power to give instantaneous effect to existing laws, and to supply such deficiencies as the conditions of war demand. But it is not intended to suspend the ordinary tribunals of the country where the law will be administered by the civil officers in the usual manner, and with their customary authority while the same can be peaceably exercised.

"The Commanding General will labor vigilantly for the public welfare, and in his efforts for their safety, hopes to obtain not only the acquiescence, but the active support of the people of the country.

J. C. FREMONT,
"Major-General Commanding.

Happy Effects of Emancipation in the Island of Jamaica.

TO THE EDITORS OF THE INDEPENDENT:

MESSRS. EDITORS: While in Newark the other day, I heard Dea. J. H. Woodhull read a letter received by him from Rev. L. Thompson, giving him an account of the remarkable revival of religion in the Elliot Mission last winter, and of the effects of the emancipation of the slaves in the Island. Feeling that the facts narrated would be deeply interesting to the public mind in our own country—now excited and inquiring—I obtained permission to send the following extract.

E. COLTON.

Belleville, N. J., Aug. 19, 1861.

ELIOT MISSION STATION, June 3, 1861.

J. H. WOODHULL, ESQ.—

MY VERY DEAR FRIEND: Your letter of Feb. 15th has just come to hand.

You ask me to give my views of the effects of emancipation on the whole people and government. There can be no doubt as to the beneficial results of emancipation on the mass of the people, and it is daily becoming more so. We here have ceased to even question the matter. There are a few who have lost property, that charge all on emancipation. It is not, however, a just charge, but to the bad management of the planters immediately after emancipation, and the want of capital.

Emancipation has been a blessing, and nothing but a blessing, from first to last. Thousands have become freeholders—settled in families, and begin to act like men and women, and not slaves. The present awakening has brought out more than ever the advantages of the noble act of her Majesty in giving freedom to the people of this country.

The slanders heaped upon this land by the enemies of the colored men will soon pass into oblivion, all being obliged to admit the advantages of emancipation, as others have of the increased domestic comforts and the increase of exports and imports. In slavery times our imports were about $2,000,000. Now they are more than $6,000,000. The people clothed, fed, housed, educated—possessors of lands, horses, carts, and other property—all this looks like living. Are the colored people of Newark better off by being free! So are the people of Jamaica.

The Government of the country is now administered for the mass of the people as well as for the few. There is a feeling that the country will prosper when the people of the country prosper—not the few officials, but the producers of the country. The small freeholders have not been respected or cared for heretofore. Now their interests are looked after by the Government. We have a goodly number of colored men in the Hon. House of Assembly. And they have influence—are men of talents. The Attorney-General is a colored man, and also a member of the House. Many of our first lawyers and members of the bar, many of our doctors, merchants, jobbers, editors, and Government officers are colored men. All offices of honor or emolument are open to them.

This certainly is an advantage, especially if they fill these offices with fidelity and efficiency, which I am happy to say they do, generally.

But I must close right here, as Brother Rev. W. P. Newman, (colored,) who takes this to New York, must now start for Kingston.

Most affectionately,

LOREN THOMPSON.

LIBERIA COLLEGE.

From a circular of the Trustees of donations for education in Liberia, dated Boston, August 29th, we make the following extracts:

Information having been received that the buildings of Liberia College are nearly completed, and will be ready for occupancy in a few weeks, and that students in Liberia, fitted to enter on the studies of the first and second years of a college course, are desirous of admission—it was Voted, That the Hon. Joseph P. Roberts, President of the College, be appointed Professor of Jurisprudence and International Law.

Voted, That the Rev. Alexander Crummell, of Maryland county, Liberia, be appointed Professor of Intellectual and Moral Philosophy, and of the English Language and Literature.

Voted, That the Rev. Edward Welmot Blyden of Monrovia, Liberia, be appointed Professor of the Greek and Latin Language and Literature.

Votes were passed, assigning to these Professors, for the present, such other studies of other departments as are appropriate to the students.

The Trustees of the College, who are a corporation under a charter from the Legislature of Liberia, will fix the time for the commencement of their Academical year. It will probably be early in December, soon after the day for the annual meeting of the Legislature.

By the charter of the College, the Trustees of Donations, in Massachusetts, are to appoint the Faculty, till otherwise ordered by the Trustees of the College.

Professor Blyden embarked at this port, Aug. 10th, for Liberia, where he has resided about ten years, the latter part of the time as a Presbyterian Missionary, and Principal of the Alexander High School.

Professor Crummell, a native of New York, a graduate of Queen's College, Cambridge, England, and for eight years a missionary in Liberia, from the Protestant Episcopal church, is detained a short time in the United States during which he will collect books and apparatus for the College, and receive donations and subscriptions to its funds.

The College Buildings are situated on the south-western slope of Cape Mensurado, facing the Atlantic ocean, and within the corporate limits of the city of Monrovia. The site, of twenty acres, was granted by the Legislature of Liberia. The chapel, library, lecture rooms, recitation rooms, dormitories and kitchen are sufficient to accommodate any number of scholars that can be expected for many years to come.

The President and Professors have been chosen solely in view of their personal fitness for their respective offices, and with no reference to their ecclesiastical connections. Yet they are of three different communions. Each will be expected to promote Christian faith and practice among the students, according to his own conscientious convictions; but no assent to any creed, or observance of any ritual, will be required of any who dissent from it.

The course of studies will be rather more extensive than has been usual with American Colleges at their origin, and the requirements will be raised as fast as the circumstances of the country will permit.

The expense of preparing the grounds and erecting the buildings has nearly all been paid, and provisions are made for paying the small remainder, on the arrival of the bills in Boston.

HOW MUCH SLAVES ARE WORTH IN WAR.

The Montgomery [Alabama] "Advertiser" rejoices over the immense service of the slaves as follows:

The total white population of the eleven States now comprising the Confederacy is between five and six millions, and, therefore, to fill up the ranks of the proposed army about ten per cent. of the entire white population will be required. In any other country than our own such draft could not be met; but the Southern States can furnish that number of men and still not leave the material interests of the country in a suffering condition. Those who are incapacitated for bearing arms can oversee the plantations, and the negroes can go on undisturbed in their usual labors. In the North the case is different; the men who join the army of subjugation are the laborers, the producers and the factory operatives. Nearly every man from that section, especially those from the rural districts, leaves some branch of industry to suffer during his absence.

The institution of slavery in the South alone enables her to place in the field a force so much larger in proportion to her white population than the North, or indeed than any country which is dependent entirely on free labor. The institution is a tower of strength to the South, particularly in the present crisis, and our enemies will be likely to find that "the moral cancer," about which their orators are so fond of prating, is really one of the most effective weapons employed against them by the South. Whatever number of men may be needed for this war, we are confident our people stand ready to furnish. We are enlisted for the war, and there must be no holding back until the independence of the South is fully acknowledged.

THE WEEKLY ANGLO-AFRICAN may be had at 187 Navy St., Brooklyn, and at Mrs. Garnett's store, 170 West 30th St., New York.

THE REV. H. H. GARNET.

This gentleman took his departure for old England on Saturday last, on the steamer "City of Washington." We are pleased to announce that he bore with him as evidence of citizenship a regular passport from Wm. H. Seward, Secretary of State.

When the Notary was making out his passport, Mr. Garnet insisted that he should describe him as being black, in order that the question in regard to our citizenship might be settled. It will be seen by the above facts that it has been settled, and settled right too.

What will become of Judge Taney when he hears this.

JOHN BROWN, DEAD YET SPEAKETH

Who would have dreamed, a year and a half since, that a thousand men in the streets of New York would be heard singing reverently and enthusiastically in praise of John Brown! Such a scene was witnessed on Saturday evening last. One of the new regiments from Massachusetts on its way through this city to the seat of war sang—

John Brown's body lies a-mouldering in the grave'
John Brown's body lies a-mouldering in the grave'
John Brown's body lies a-mouldering in the grave-
His soul's marching on!
Glory Hallelujah! Glory Hallelujah! Glory Hallelujah!

The stanzas which follow are in the same wild strain:

He's gone to be a soldier in the army of the Lord, etc.,
His soul's marching on!
John Brown's knapsack is strapped upon his back, etc.,
His soul's marching on!
His pet lambs will meet him on the way, etc.,
They go marching on!

Seldom, if ever, has New York witnessed such a sight, or heard such a strain. No military hero of the present war has thus been honored. No statesman has thus loosed the tongues of a thousand men to chant his patriotism. Little did Capt Brown think of the national struggles that were to follow his eventful death. But his calmness and firmness gave evidence of his faith that the cause of freedom demanded the sacrifice of his life, and he nobly died.

It was a notable fact that while the regiment united as with one voice singing this song, thousands of private citizens, young and old, on the sidewalks and in crowded doorways and windows, joined in the chorus. The music was in itself impressive, and many an eye was wet with tears. Few who witnessed the triumphal tread of that noble band of men arrayed for the war for freedom, will ever forget the thrilling tones of that song.—Independent.

FEARS OF INSURRECTION IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Among the various alarms alluded to as afflicting the different sections of the Confederacy, the ever-present and haunting apprehension of negro-insurrection should not be forgotten. This is the universal and controlling fear. Not a slaveowner at the seat of war but is prepared at any moment to hear of the massacre of his family by domestic servants. Even in the midst of villages the least noise at night about the house, the slamming of an unfastened blind, the creaking of a door, or any sound that disturbs the sleep, is fraught with vague terror, and inspires a mysterious dread. Startling reports of slaves rising against their masters, are of daily, indeed hourly recurrence. There have been many false alarms, but the wolf will come at last in earnest. The black race, by the by, have a wonderful intuitive sagacity—a greater sharpness of the senses and keener acuteness of perception than even the Anglo-Saxon—a remarkable fact, considering their ignorance and degradation. Their faculties appear to have something of the unerring quality of instinct. They see further and better in the night than whites, and are singularly cunning in eluding the patrol, and in prosecuting and concealing their continual thieveries. Smoke-houses are robbed of their bacon, granaries of their corn; even burglaries are effected, and detection set utterly at naught. In one instance, in a populous town, a store was entered and a heavy iron safe bodily abstracted by a gang of them, no traces of which were ever afterward found, or the slightest progress made toward a discovery of the bold offenders. They are great dissemblers, and their duplicity rivals the shrewdest Machiavellianism of political intrigue. Yet they are the best confidants in the world, and their narrow brains hold many a fearful secret. It seems natural to them to "keep dark."—Cor. of N. Y. Tribune.

WHAT TO DO WITH THE CONTRABANDS.

We copy the following from the New York "Independent:"

Though I am a woman, and therefore find my sphere in the home circle, my heart beats with no less patriotism than does that of the noblest soldier in the army, and I think much of and pray often for those who are nobly defending the dear old banner of our country. I am a constant reader of your "Independent," and have of late felt quite an interest in the welfare of the "contrabands" at Fortress Monroe. A correspondent addressing you from that place says, in your issue of August 1st, "What to do with the 'contrabands,' will soon be the great question of the age."

Now why cannot some means be devised to scatter these poor people around among their Northern friends, where they will find employment, ready pay for their services, and kind friends? I have heard several remark in this vicinity that they would be willing to board one through the winter, and pay regular wages through the next season. I am not authorized to make their declarations public, but I do believe if "the contrabands" are distributed through the Northern States, they will be well cared for. Perhaps, in my ignorance, I have proposed a plan contrary to the rules of war—and if so, please excuse my liberty in writing—but if not, propose some means by which these human "contrabands" can be disposed of for their good and that of the country, in accordance with the hint I have above given.

Yours in the bonds of liberty, S. M.

Wisconsin, August 15, 1861.

From Liberia Herald, June 19, 1861.

AGRICULTURE AND TRADE.

Estimated quantity of sugar, syrup, melado, and molasses manufactured on the St. Paul's river this season: Sugar, 175,000 lbs.; syrup, 20,000 galls.; molasses, 9,000 galls.; melado, 30,000 lbs.

Of this there have been manufactured by the steam mills of W. S. Anderson and the Messrs. Coopers, as follows:—At Anderson's—Sugar, 50,000 lbs.; syrup, 5,000 galls.; molasses, 4,500 galls.; melado, 30,000 lbs. At Coopers—sugar, 60,000 lbs.; syrup, 6,000 galls.

The estimated manufacture of molasses and melado by the Coopers has not yet been ascertained.

The difference shows favorably the working of the hand or animal power mills possessed by many of our river planters. All the mills are still grinding.

There has been imported and cleared at the Custom House of this (Monrovia) port, during the half year commencing October 1st, 1860, and ending the 31st of last March. Palm oil, 230,000 galls.; camwood, 432 tons; palm nut kernels, 110 tons; ivory, 300 lbs.

The export of sugar, syrup, and molasses, has taken place chiefly since the end of March; this, however, has been fully satisfactory. Our farmers met with no difficulty in finding sales for their produce.

The trade in palm kernels (palm nut kernels) has rapidly come into importance along our coast. These kernels, which are obtained chiefly along the Bassa country seaboard—from Little Bassa to Rock Cesters—are procured "cheaply" from the natives. The kernels find a ready market in Marselles and other parts of France—and they enter largely into the components of perfumeries manufactured in those parts; much of the "superfine" olive oil used with such gusto has its full share of palm kernel oil.

SOUTHERN BARBARISM.

The Baltimore dailies furnish the following item:

On Tuesday, the attention of Officers Houston, Bishop and Suter was called in Raborg street to a noise created by a lot of negro women, who were quarreling about some soldiers. The quarrel soon led to blows, when a general fight took place between them. The officers were soon on the spot, and, taking a hand in it, succeeded in capturing Hetty Smith, Susan Parker and Fanny Dixon. They were taken before Justice Logan, who listened to the story of each and decided to have ten stripes administered to each, well laid on. Fanny did not relish them at all, and became so boisterous that the Justice concluded to give her five extra ones, which seemed to have the desired effect. They were all then allowed to return to their homes. This party had not been discharged very long before Henrietta Bolden, colored, was brought in by Officer Snaden, for being drunk and disorderly, and creating a disturbance. Justice L. ordered her to share the same fate, and after receiving ten stripes she was discharged.

In the proceedings of the Hasford County Court appear the following:

State vs. Charles Rhodes, (negro,) indicted for enticing and assisting slaves to runaway. Guilty. Gentenced to be sold out of the State for 8 years.

State vs. Joe. Perryman, [negro,] indicted for stealing money. Guilty. Sentenced to be sold within the State for eight years.

In the Criminal Court of Baltimore:

State vs. Frances Ann Camphen, colored, indicted for stealing a dress and other small articles. Tried before the Court, and adjudged guilty. Sentenced to be sold out of the State for eighteen months.

The Slave Trade Exceedingly Active on the Coast of Africa.—The royal mail Steamship Ethiope, Captain French, arrived at Liverpool with a month's later advices from the West coast of Africa, and 2,500 ounces of gold dust.

Her Britannic Majesty's ship Prometheus, Commander Bedingfield, senior officer of the South division, arrived at Fernando Po on the 27th of June from the South, having been relieved by the Alecto, Commander Raby. She reported the South coast very unhealthy. Several Europeans had died on the Congo, at Fish Bay, and other places.

The slave trade is still very brisk, and in consequence legal trade dull; it was anticipated that some of the factories would have to close.

Captain Bedingfield had been in active cooperation with the American squadron; and had taken two vessels fitted for slaves in the Congo river; also a Spanish schooner, the Jacinto. The Wrangler, R. N., had taken an American bark, supposed to be the Ardennes, with four hundred and ninety-five slaves on board. The notorious slaver Storm King had come into Mingo Grando with a legal cargo (American flag and papers), but hearing there were slaves to be had, pitched her cargo overboard, shipped a large number of slaves, and got away clear.

The steamer General Miramon (formerly the Greenock) had shipped a cargo at Kasinda in four hours, using the American, Portuguese and Spanish colors, to suit the cruisers she happened to meet. Everything is done under the American flag until the slaves are actually on board, so that two or three English cruisers have very little chance to take prizes or check the trade.

Amalgamation.—A correspondent of the Cincinnati "Gazette" writing from Buckeytown, Md., says of the people:

Their gullibility seems limitless, and they swallow the most fabulous stories concerning the North, though they have not a single ingredient of truth. You are John Brown's in fanaticism without his courage, and carry his humanitarian philosophy into practice by elevating the negro not only to political but social equality, eating with him, sleeping with him, and marrying with him. When I told one of them but yesterday that I had seen more evidence of practical amalgamation between Point of Rocks and Monocacy Bridge than I had seen in the State of Ohio, he was astounded. Why, Messrs. Editors, not many years ago a wealthy planter named M'Pherson, now dead, sold his two colored daughters for the round sum of $4,000, [the agents of the sale still live in Frederick City,] and they are now the mistresses of white men in the cotton States. M'Pherson's white sons live in this neighborhood to-day, and this instance of amalgamation and speculation in one's own flesh and blood is as indisputably a fact of local history as that Buckey settled once upon a time in the Monocacy Valley. Most of the negroes one sees here are coffee colored, and doubtless trace their paternity to the very men who are howling about amalgamation at the North, and claiming as a cardinal virtue of secession that it severs their connection with a people whose weakness is a visible admixture!

The Leaven Working.—The Maine Evangelist copies Rev. G. Haven's description of Gen. Lee's Negro Quarters and adds:

Mrs. Charles Clark, of Auburn, visited Gen. Lee's negro quarters, on her recent visit to Washington, and informs us that she conversed with the slaves referred to above. The old negro, who was the coachman of Gen. Lee, said he was 75 years old, and when he informed Mrs. C. that he should be free in ten months, he seemed as pleased as could be. In the room over the old negro's quarters, there was a young mulatto girl and an old negress, who were gentle and lady-like in their manners. The room was neat, and Mrs. C. saw tracts, testaments and hymn books, and on opening one of the books, she discovered several selections cut from the newspapers, two of which she took. These selections are both poems—one entitled "The Home of Freedom," and the other, "The American Girl." In the same room Mrs. C. saw a young negro about 25 years of age, who said he had purchased his freedom, paying $1,500. In reply to a question as to what he was going to do, he replied with much earnestness that he could get his living as well as white men.

ANGLO-AFRICAN WAR ITEMS.

The St. Louis correspondent of the Cincinnati "Gazette" in a recent letter, says:

I am indebted to General Lane for an original idea on the rebellion. He says, what everybody knows but what everybody has not thought of, that for the last twenty-five years every negro in the Border slave States who has been in the least unruly, and especially those who have manifested any longings for freedom, have been promptly removed to the extreme South, where it was supposed they could plot no mischief. The General argues that this class of contrabands is much more likely to strike a blow for their own freedom than their less abused, better fed, better clothed brethren of the more Northern slave States. "Whenever the Federal armies," says he, "penetrate any of the cotton, sugar, or rice districts of the South, where these troublesome negroes have been sowing the seeds of discord for years, the rebellion must come to an end, or the scenes of St. Domingo will be enacted in their midst." Few people, I imagine, have reflected how ripe for insurrection the blacks of the extreme South are.

It is hardly necessary for us to state that the following is from the Washington correspondent of the "Baltimore Exchange."

The principles of the last act of Congress, providing for the summary confiscation of all descriptions of "property" employed in the service of rebellion, have their practical operation in Fairfax county. To-day I have seen a letter from two ladies ("of Southern proclivities,") all their lives residing in that county, to two other ladies, very loyal, who live in Washington, and the question is asked: Can nothing be done? Can no influence be brought to bear by the Government to put a stop to the "forcible" abduction of slaves from Fairfax county? Nightly, it is asserted in these letters, negro men and women are dragged off screaming; and I know now of two faithful old house servants, attached by many a simple tie of tenderness, to a Fairfax family, who are wandering helplessly in Washington, induced to "run away" by Federal soldiers who plied them with stories of the desperation of their masters, and their intention to post them in the front of the first battle. These poor negroes have already learned the truth, and in vain endeavored to return to their dear old homes, but they cannot pass without "a pass," and that is "not allowable in the existing complication of "military necessity."

SUMMARY.

At Lancaster, Pa., a few days ago, a man by the name of Edward Mackay, was tried on the charge of kidnapping. He was charged with being one of the party that abducted a colored man named John Brown from his house in Pequea, Sadsbury township, this county, on the night of the 2nd of March, 1860, and carried him into Baltimore, where he was offered for sale as a slave. Frank Wilson, Gilmore Hull, Sylvester Gordon, Frank Bostick and Edward Mackay are the parties implicated in the affair. Wilson and Hull were convicted and sent to prison at the last November term of the Court; Bostwick and Gordon gave bail for their appearance to answer the charge, but have not since been heard from. Mackay was put on trial at this term of the Court, convicted, and sentenced to undergo an imprisonment in the Lancaster County Prison for five years. He asked permission of the Court to make some revelations relative to the stealing of Mr. Brown, but as the prisoner had offered nothing in extenuation of the offence during the progress of the trial, the Court refused to hear him.

A colored woman by the name of Mary Allen, was tried at Lancaster, Pa., about two weeks ago, for the murder of her husband. The history of the case in briefly this: The prisoner, Maria Allen, with her husband, Abraham Allen, familiarly called "Old Abe," lived in Conestoga township, in a miserable shanty, such as is usually occupied by colliers when engaged in making charcoal. The hut was built of rails, in a circular form, covered with mud and leaves, without chimney or window, and altogether such a place as none but the most abject poor or degraded would think of making a permanent habitation. Here the prisoner, with her husband lived, he working as a day laborer, she in attending to her household duties and travelling the country, in what capacity did not appear from the testimony. On the morning of the 3rd of March, 1861, Messrs. McCardie and Hill, near neighbors of the Allens, were aroused by the shrieks and cries of murder. On being interrogated she said that her husband, "Old Abe," had been murdered. On repairing to the hut they found the old man lying on a bunk, and in the last agonies of death.

After all the evidence had been given, and a clear but decided charge from Judge Hayes, in which it was intimated pretty strongly that the crime perpetrated—and which was committed by the prisoner—was murder in the second degree, the jury retired, and in about an hour returned with a verdict of Guilty of Manslaughter.

The prisoner received the verdict without any apparent emotion, and being directed to stand up was sentenced to undergo an imprisonment at seperate and solitary confinement in the Eastern Penitentiary for the period of twelve years.

"From the Boston Recorder's report of the old South Chapel prayer meeting we extract the following:

A colored brother from Liberia stated that the three first missionaries who went to that colony fell early victims to the climate; but their works have followed them. The fruits of their labor remain unto this day. He mentioned a female missionary, who labored at St. Paul. When she first went among them, the children were afraid of a white woman. When they saw her coming, they would run into the woods and hide among the bushes. By repeated acts of kindness she secured their confidence, taught them to read the Bible, and many were converted. This brother's mission to this country is to raise money to purchase a sister and her child, that they may return with him to Liberia. He wants twelve hundred dollars, and has obtained seven hundred. Ethiopia is still to stretch forth her hands to God in worship. He requested prayers for the hundred millions of Africa. Prayers were offered for this benighted continent, and the brother received some material aid towards purchasing his sister.

The Pittsburg Dispatch of Aug 23rd says:

On Wednesday the night police of Allegheny were startled by the shrieks of a woman's voice, coming from a house occupied by a colored family named Wagner, and proceeding to the house arrested Wagner. It appears that Wagner's wife has exhibited much greater fondness, recently, for a Mr. Wells than for her own liege lord, and the fact was well known to Mrs. Wells. On Wednesday night Wells visited Wagner's house, and the screams heard by the police were the gentle indications of displeasure vented by Mrs. Wells. Wagner was brought up in the morning and fined two dollars, which his wife stirred herself actively to raise for him. On making her appearance at the office with the money, her husband was released, but the neighbors meantime giving such information as satisfied the Mayor that the woman was the worst of the two, she was arrested and sent three days to jail, her efforts to raise her husband's fine having exhausted all their scources of revenue.

The Leavenworth Conservative of Aug. 23 contains the following account of an attempt to kidnap a colored man at that place:

One week ago last Saturday night, a negro by the name of "Steve," owned by A. Harson, who lives eight mile east of Smithville, Clay County, Mo., applied to Capt. Hill to cross over to Leavenworth on his ferry—to which the Captain agreed. "Steve" came aboard the boat, when he was seized by the Captain and the engineer, Dan, and tied, and robbed by them of $21. When the robbery was complete, Capt. Hill took "Steve" to Smithville. At Smithville, "Steve," not having due regard for the blessed relation of master and slave, and while Capt. Hill was eating his dinner, took to his legs, and succeeded in making good his escape to Kansas City, and is now here. This is not the first time Capt. Hill has been caught in this dastardly business, but it must be the last. "Steve" tells the story in a straightforward manner, and we publish it as told us. We hope Capt. Hill and his engineer will explain their action in the premises, if it can be. We ask Dan, the engineer, to refund to "Steve" the $21 stolen, and trust, for the honor and decency of our city, that these outrages may cease. Capt. Hill and his gang have been engaged in this business a long time; there victims number eight already. What makes the thing more revolting is the fact that this seizing, binding, and returning negroes is wholly voluntary on their part, their being no law in Missouri compelling them to do this dirty work; and there is not a respectable pro-slavery man in Platte County who does not look upon such men with contempt for doing that which no honorable man will do.

The Washington correspondent of The Phisadesphia Inquirer says: "Considerable merriment was occasioned to-day by the passage through the streets of 122 large baggage wagons, each drawn by four horses, and each driven by a negro. The negro drivers, three weeks ago, were all slaves; they are now in the service of the United States Government, and receive the same pay as 'any other man.' I watched them closely, and saw among them some intelligent faces, although the majority looked stolid and stupid. Every one of them, however, understood his business, and drove his horses well and properly. In this respect they are really superior to many of the drivers that one sees every day here, who nearly kill their horses with ill treatment. It is a common practice with the latter to lock one of their hinder wheels and make the poor beasts draw the heavy wagons up hill and down all day, with the wheels locked."

The following appears in the Cleveland, O., Leader of the 2nd ult:

Theodore January, a colored man residing on Michigan street, was driving along Ontario street yesterday afternoon about 5 o'clock, when the horse commenced kicking in a most violent manner, and after putting one foot through the dashboard, he broke into a run and made for the sidewalk, and striking a post, became disengaged from the buggy and rushed through the store of Dr. M. C. Parker, tearing a door completely away. January was thrown from the buggy, and his arm was broken near the wrist. Dr. Schenck was called and did what was necessary. The horse belonged to January. The buggy was a fine one, and was owned by H. Gear & Co. It was badly broken up.

The "Washington D. C. Star" of 23rd. ult. say:

Yesterday afternoon, T. B. Robey was arrested by policeman King for an assault and battery on an old colored man, who had been sent to Robey's house for baggage left there by a lady. The warrant was issued upon the oath of a witness who thought the assault unprovoked. The case was examined by Justice Doan, and Robey was held to bail for court. The conduct of the accused to the arresting officer was reported to the Justice, and Mr. Robey was required also to give security for peace.

We take the following from the police reports of the Baltimore Clipper of Aug 28th:

Officer Topping arrested Alexandria Smith, colored, on Monday night, charged with stealing a black frock coat, a shirt, and two one dollar bank bills, from George Smith his brother, residing at No. 72 Vine street. It was proven that Alexander paid a visit to his brother's house, and stated to his wife that her husband had been arrested and taken to the station house and he wanted $1,75 to get him released; she not having the change gave him two one dollar notes, he returned in a few moments afterwards and said that George's clothes were so much torn that he was not fit to come through the streets, and wished her to send him a coat and a shirt. She gave them to him. He had not left the house many moments before George returned and found that all was a hoax, whereupon, he immediately put the officers on his track, who succeeded in capturing him, but could find neither coat, shirt or money. He was taken to the Western station house, where he had a hearing before Justice Logan, who committed him to jail for his appearance before court.

The Rochester "Union," of August 26th, gives the following items:—

Saturday night the wife of a colored man named Williams died very suddenly on board of a canal boat lying at the coal yard wharf of Roswell Hart, Fitzhugh St. This morning William seemed to be rather flush of money and took the corpse of his wife to the depot, to convey it to New London, (Conn.,) where he intends to inter it. The fact that there is a white woman living on the boat aroused the suspicion that the deceased had come to her death by foul play, and Coroner Bloss was called to investigate the case, but after an inquiry of the physicians who attended the woman, he came to the conclusion that she died from natural causes. The money drawer in the office of Mr. Hart was robbed of twensy-six dollars on Saturday, and it was strongly suspected that William was the thief, but no evidence tending to criminate him directly could be found, and he was allowed to go East with the body of his wife.

The Philadelphia Inquirer in an article on life in that city, remarks:

Apropos of the "hot corn" trade, it is estimated that no less than one thousand colored people are employed in selling boiled corn in the streets of Philadelphia. They may be found in almost every street down town, from early dawn until long past midnight, patiently awaiting the hungry wayfarer, with their cleanly scoured wooden tubs, a snow white towel, fork and cup of salt. All things considered, they make a very fair profit on what is sold, as the first cost of corn is about ten cents per dozen, and it is prepared and sold by them for one, two, and three cents an ear. The feeling, however, among the hot corn folks is similar to that expressed by those in many other branches of business, that the hard times have had an unfavorable effect on their trade. An inquiry into the present condition of colored people generally in Philadelphia, enables us to state that they experience as little discomfort, perhaps, from the existing troubles, as any class among us.

The following is from the New Haven "Register" of the 30th ult.:—Tuesday, the Tarnville Santa Anna Guards, a burlesque concern in uncouth garb, made their annual excursion, and went to Windsor and Bloomfield. Dick George, the sexton of the village, and Gabe Reeder, the colored man of the poorhouse, acted as gunners, and rode upon an old cannon, which looked as bad as the crowd that carried it. On the way home, the grave digger and the colored man had a quarrel, and in the fight both fell under the wheels of the gun carriage. The head of Mr. George was crushed, and he died instantly, but the wheel only took off the top of Mr. Reeder's head, and he lived until Wednesday morning.

A colored man, named Jerry Williams, who was out with McMullin's Rangers, as a servant, cut off the nose of another colored man, of whom he was jealous, at a house in the Nineteenth Ward, Philadelphia, on the night of the 9th ult. Jerry was arrested and his victim was taken to the Hospital.

The Wilmington (Del.,) "Journal" of the 30th ult., says:—It is reported that a negro who had violated the law in St. Georges, Md., and who had eluded the Constable, came out of his hiding place a few days ago, when he was met by Henry McVey, whom he threatened to kill if he attempted to arrest him. Mr. McVey then raised his gun, and fired at the lower extremities of the negro who fell. A physician was called, and the wounds, which were not considered dangerous, examined. It afterwards appeared that one or two shots had penetrated the bowels, and from the effect of which death ensued. Mr. McVey has been arrested, but it is thought that he acted in self-defence, and was therefore justified in using his gun.

Recently a farmer residing near the Lehigh Mountain, not far from Allentown, Pa., was accosted by a colored "chattol"—who came out the mountain at daybreak on a "double-quick"—with the words, "Massa, am this Canada?" He informed the escaped fugitive, who did not seem to possess much knowledge of Geography, that he was indeed very far from Canada, but told him not to be alarmed on that account. The kind-hearted farmer, besides giving the "contraband" plenty to eat, supplied him with funds to prosecute his journey, and sent him on his way rejoicing.

Charles Robinson (colored,) and Charles Congdon, the former aged fifteen years and the latter twelve years, were drowned Monday afternoon in the pond in the vicinity of L. S. Pratt's cotton mills, Grafton, Mass. The boys were seen fishing on the pond from a boat Monday afternoon, and not returning home that night search was made Tuesday morning for them, and at noon their bodies were found about six feet apart, and a few yards from the shore.

The Detroit Advertiser of Aug. 28th, states that:

A colored man named Johnson, and his wife, were yesterday arrested at the instigation of Fire Marshal Snow, for setting fire to their dwelling house on Wednesday night last. The house was situated on Maple street. It was entirely consumed.

The Baltimore Patriot of Aug 27th says:

The sheriff, George H. Dutton, and several other gentlemen, last evening visited the cell of Alexander Gale, colored, condemned to be executed next Friday week, for the murder of James Evans, colored. The prisoner seems resigned to his fate. He acknowledges that he cut the man with a pen-knife, but states that he did it in self-defence. Considerable effort is being made to have his sentence commuted, and petitions numerously signed have been forwarded to the Governor for that purpose, one of them being signed by the jury that convicted him and the Judge who sentenced him.

The teacher of the colored school at Evansville Ind. in a letter to the American missionary says:

Our school closed the last of June for Summer vacation. We had an examination which exceeded my expectations, and those who were present seemed highly gratified I think no one could have been present and not acknowledge that these children have talents which, if cultivated and improved, may fit them to become useful citizens and worthy members of society. I felt greatly encouraged as I thought of the condition of these children two years ago, when many of them could not read, and very few knew what arithmetic and georgraphy ment.

A letter written from Buena Vista O. to the Portsmouth Republican gives the following item:

We paid a "flying visit" to Modern Rome—a small city in Adams County—to day, and while there we leared that no less than twenty-one slaves left the borders of Kentucky, Lewis county, last night destined for the happy land of Canada! They stole some half a dozen skiffs and went down "De Ribeer" as far as Ripley, where they expected aid.—Strange to say, "the owners" did not pursue, as they fear they might not be permitted to arrests and capture them.

CAMP MEETINGS.

We find the following in the Taunton (Mass.) Gazette of August 29th:

Under the auspices of the "Zion Methodist Episcopal Church," (colored people) somewhat extensive preparations have been made for a "Union Camp Meeting," in a grove about half a mile from the village of Mansfield, adjacent to the road leading from Mansfield to Easton. The exercises commenced this morning and will be continued at stated times until some time next week. Large delegations are present from New Bedford, Providence, Boston and Worcester. The fare on the several railroads leading to the place has been placed at a reduced figure for those attending the meeting.

The Binghamton (N. Y.) Republican of August 28th says:

The colored people of this county commence holding a Camp Meeting at French's Grove, about five miles north of Binghampton, on Thursday of this week. They have no objection to white folks uniting with them—in fact they invite the co-operation of all well disposed persons.

A Camp Meeting was held last week at Garpenter's Grove, near Middletown, N. Y.

A Camp Meeting was held last week about two miles south of Indiana, Pa.

PERSONAL.

Dr. Martin R. Delany.—This gentleman arrived in the city last Tuesday. He is here for the purpose of publishing official report of the Niger Valley Expedition, the proof sheets of which he has really shown us and which we are prepared to say will be one of the most interesting and instructive documents ever issued from the American press. The doctor will spend sometime in this neighborhood.

MARRIED.

Green—Richards.—September 1st, by Rev. Wm. Johnson Alston, Mr. Wm. T. Green to Mrs. Mary Richards, all of New York city]

DIED.

Levere.—In this city, August 30th, of hemorrhage of the lungs, David Levere, aged 38 years.

Special Notices.

T. B. VOORHEES'

GRAND MOONLIGHT FESTIVAL, CONCERT

AND

PROMENADE,

Will take place by an excursion up the Hudson River,

ON MONDAY EVE'G SEPT. 16th, 1861.

Returning in seasonable time. The steamer Col. ELLSWORTH and the commodious double-decked Barge CLEVELAND have been chartered, and will be Brilliantly Illuminated on the occasion.

The Grand Orchestra will be under the direction of Prof. R. H. BROWN; Solos, Violin and Cornet, Overtures; and O. FAKES, Sleigh Ride Quadrille Songs, Choruses, Duetts, &c. by Messrs. J. W. and A. A. Luca D. Dangerfield, Helen Johnson, and several amateurs have volunteered their services.

FLOOR MANAGERS.

Messrs. J. White, J. H. Freeman, B. Elston, Wm. Freeman, and T. B. Voorhees.

TICKETS FIFTY CENTS EACH,

to be had of Mr. Harris, 465 Broome St., Mr. Kelly, 53 Mercer St., Mr. George, 85 Mercer St., Mr. Brown's saloon, 70 Bleecker St., Mr. E. G. Hutchinson, Everett House, Mr. Jas. H. Johnson, 141 West 28th St.

Refreshments in Abundance at Reasonable Prices.

The Barge will lay at the foot of Spring St. while the steamer lands as follows:—Broome St., E. R. 6 o'clock, P. M.; South Fourth St. Williamsburgh, 6¼; Fulton Ferry, Brooklyn, ‡7; Sussex St, Jersey City, 7; Spring St., N. Y., 7¼; 22d St, ‡8; 30th St., 8¼.

Should it rain on the 16th, it will take place on the next fair evening.

An Efficient Police Force will accompany the Excursion.

For particulars, see circulars.

Get your Tickets early so as to prevent delay at the landings.

THE PROPOSED NEW BOOK OF MARTYRS.

For the above work the undersigned would state, in answer to numerous inquiries, that he wishes to collect full and accurate accounts of all cases of abuse growing out of Slavery, of the loss of time, property and life, whether among whites, Indians, or blacks. He is not [illegible] as to the length of the articles, for, w[illegible] come to the publication, it may be best to [illegible] some statements; but the original communications will be carefully preserved and placed in some historical collection for preservation and reference. Whatever will serve to illustrate or add interest to the statements, such as photographs or engravings, or autographs of the persons, or maps and plans of the localities named, will be thankfully received and carefully preserved. If the case has been published in the papers, or in pamphlets or books, please make reference to them or forward them. Names of persons, places, and dates, which, if divulged, would involve the parties in difficulty, may be withheld in the communication. Let every one send on what he or she may have to communicate as early as possible. We shall feel greatly obliged to Editors who will copy this advertisement and give it a favorable notice, and all who will promptly respond to this call will receive our hearty thanks.

Address. L. G. OLMSTEAD, New York.

Letters or newspapers for Hayti or Jamaica will be promptly forwarded if left with Mr. N. R. Ashby, at Lewis & Co.'s store, 22 South Street, New York.

I. O. of G. S. and D. of S.

Office of the R. W. G. Sec.,
No. 70 Grove St., N. Y.

The officers and members of the Eastern District Grand Lodge will please to take notice that the regular quarterly meeting of the above named G. S. will be held on Wednesday evening, Sept. 11th, at 8 o'clock, at the Metropolitan Assembly Rooms, 178 Prince St. Subordinate lodges will therefore cause their representatives to be present. By order of the R. W. G. Chief,

MOSES B. COSS.

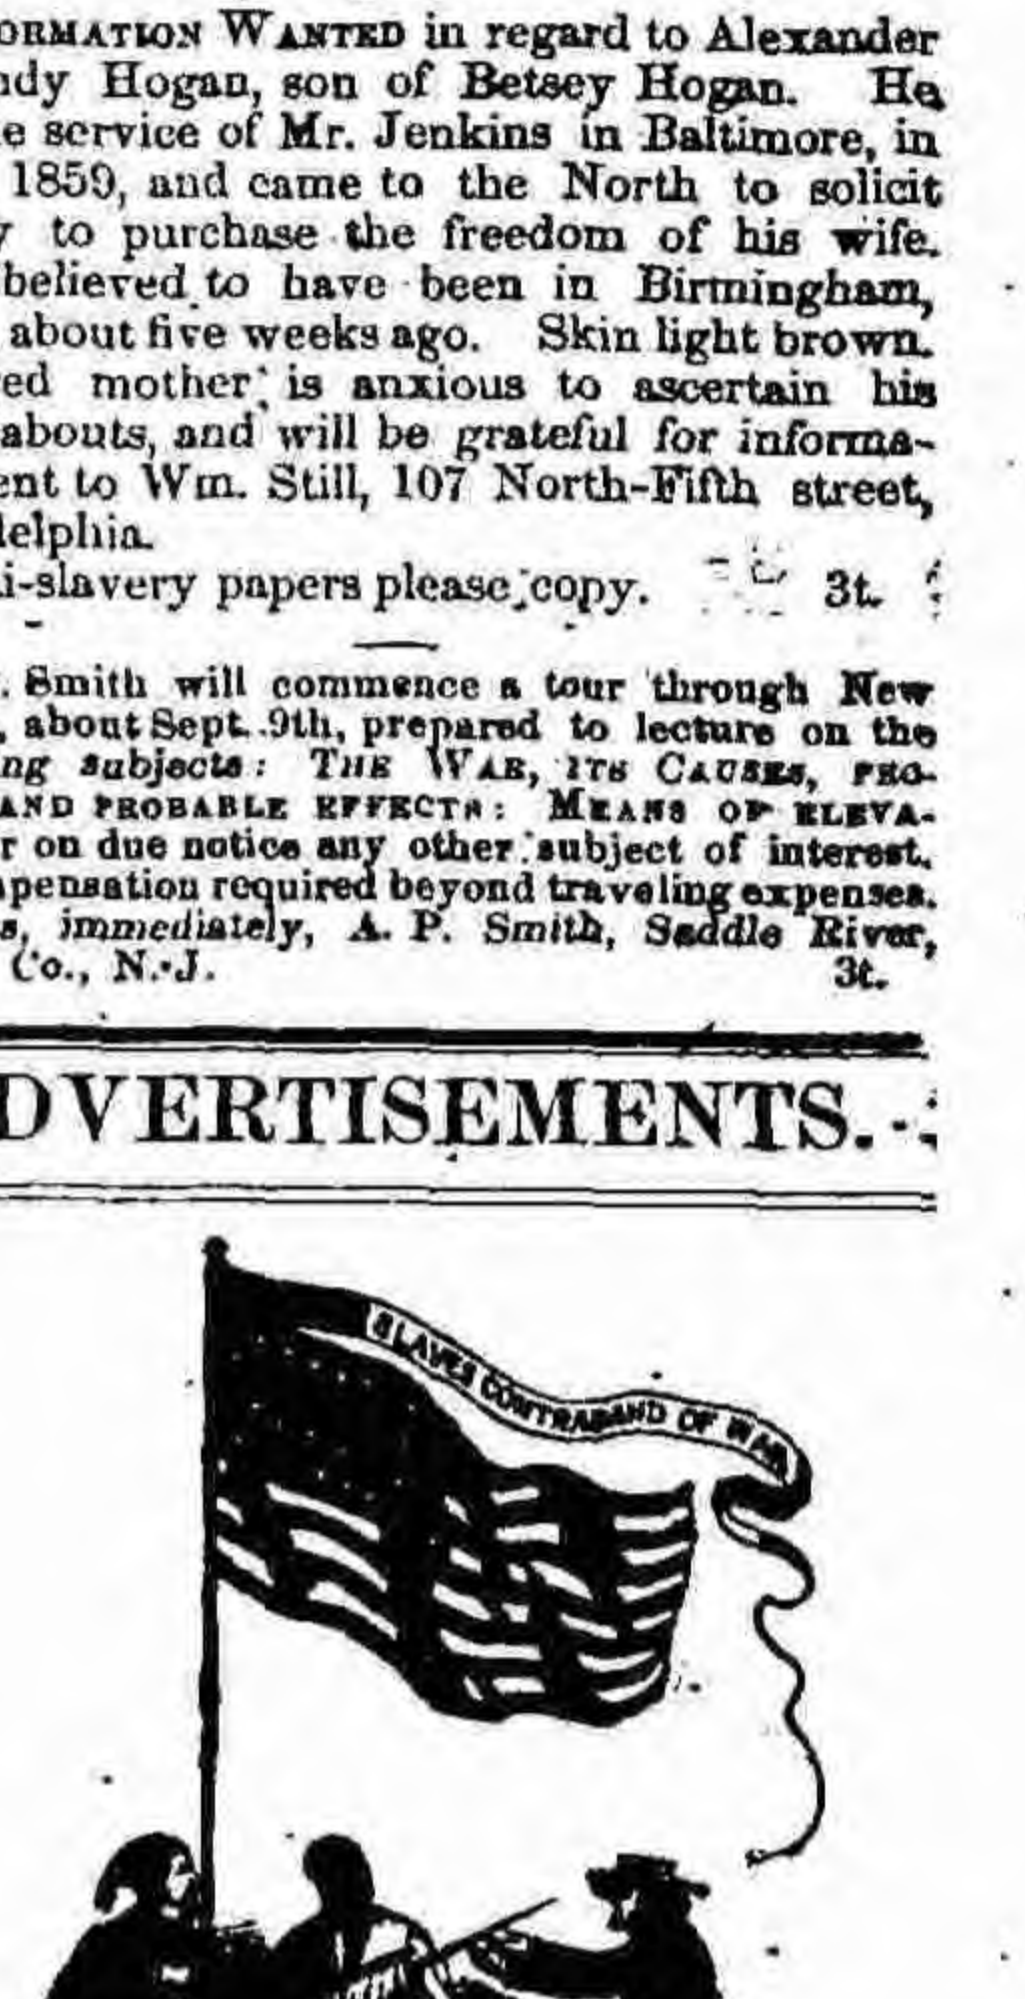
John R. Porter G. S

Information Wanted in regard to Alexander or Sandy Hogan, son of Betsey Hogan. He left the service of Mr. Jenkins in Baltimore, in June, 1859, and came to the North to solicit money to purchase the freedom of his wife. He is believed to have been in Birmingham, N. Y., about five weeks ago. Skin light brown. An aged mother is anxious to ascertain his whereabouts, and will be grateful for information sent to Wm. Still, 107 North-Fifth street, Philadelphia.

Anti-slavery papers please copy. 3t.

A. P. Smith will commence a tour through New Jersey, about Sept. 9th, prepared to lecture on the following subjects: The War, its Causes, Progress and Probable Effects: Means of Elevation, or on due notice any other subject of interest. No compensation required beyond traveling expenses. Address, immediately, A. P. Smith, Saddle River, ergen Co., N.J. 3t.

ADVERTISEMENTS.



THE ZOUAVE AND SLAVE ENVELOPE, Price per thousand $5; per hundred 60 cents; packages of 25 each, 20 cents.
Orders should be addressed
THOS. HAMILTON
48 Beekman Street, N. Y.

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION. THE UNDERSIGNED respectfully announces that he is now prepared to give instruction in the Art of Singing. He will be at home at 187 Navy Street, Brooklyn, on Monday evening, and at Zion Church, N. Y., on Thursday evening, of each week. Ladies or Gentlemen desiring instruction, will please apply immediately. Singing schools taught and private instruction given on moderate terms.
3tf. ROBT. HAMILTON,

NEW SAILOR'S HOME. CHARLES M. Fortes, has opened a pleasant home for Seamen, at 26 Mulberry Street, N. Y., Seamen will find this a very desirable house, as it is in a central location, and every provision made for their comfort.
Boarding by the day or week. Terms moderate. 31y

WANTED AT TILMAN'S AGENCY, NO. 70 East 13th Street, one door east of 4th Ave., first class colored help, and none else. Cooks, house-workers, chambermaids, waitresses and laundresses, coachmen, waiters, &c. Now is the time; fall is near and good help wanted for city and country. 5-14t

MRS. E. CLARKE, IS HAPPY TO ANnounce to her friends and the public, that she has opened her new BOARDING HOUSE, and will be very thankful for their patronage, at No. 66 Sullivan Street, New York. 4-1t

DENTISTRY.
BEAUTIFUL ARTIFICIAL SETS OF TEETH on gold or silver plate on the most improved style. All other Surgical operations, performed to entire satisfaction, on very moderate terms by G. H. GRICE, Surgeon Dentist.
79 Thompson St., N. Y

MRS. E. LEONARD,
FASHIONABLE
DRESS MAKER,
25 Sullivan Street, New York.
Receives monthly the latest Paris Fashions.
3tf.

BOARDING AND LODGING
By Mrs. Mary Johnson, 120 West 20th Street, New York. This house is very pleasantly situated in a very healthy and convenient part of the city.

Boarding for Ladies,	$2,50
" " Gentleman,	3,00
Lodging per week,	75

y13t,

JAMES R. W. LEONARD,
CARD AND JOB PRINTER,
219 Centre Street, New York.

THE BEST DRESSING FOR THE HAIR during warm weather, is White's vegetable extract. For Sale at 19 Sullivan and 40 Grand Sts., 2 tf.

BOARDING AND LODGING ON THE EAST Side. Mrs. Gant, can accommodate a few Ladies and Gentlemen, at her residence 182 Suffolk, Street. Terms very moderate. a10 ly.

BROWN'S POPULAR RESORT.
The undersigned takes the privilege to inform his Friends and the public generally that as he has recently fitted up his SALOON anew, he is now prepared to furnish them with
Ice Cream, Fruit, and other Delicacies.
BENJ. F. BROWN,
70 Bleecker St
between Broadway & Crosby St. 4t,

WARRANTED TO CURE A HEADACHE in 10 minutes, White's Vegetable extract. For sale at 55 West Broadway, and cor. Gold and Frankfort Sts. 1 tf.

Poetry.

THE "LONG AGO."

Oh, a wonderful stream is the river of Time,
As it runs through the realms of tears,
With a faultless rhythm and a musical rhyme,
And a broad'ning sweep, and a surge sublime,
That bends with the ocean of years.

How the winters are drifting like flakes of snow,
And the summers like buds between,
And the year in the sheaf—so they come and go
On the river's breast, with its ebb and flow,
As it glides through the shadow and sheen.

There's a musical isle on the river of time,
Where the softest of airs are playing;
There's a cloudless sky and a tropical clime,
And a song as sweet as a vesper chime,
And the Junes with the roses are staying.

And the name of this isle is the Long Ago,
And we bury our treasures there;
There are brows of beauty and bosoms of snow—
There are heaps of dust, but we loved them so!
There are trinkets and tresses of hair.

There are fragments of songs that nobody sings,
And a part of an infant's prayer;
There's a lute unswept, and a harp without strings,
There are broken vows and pieces of rings,
And the garment that SHE used to wear.

There are hands that are waved when the fairy shore
By the mirage is lifted in air;
And we sometimes hear through the turbulent roar
Sweet voices we heard in the days gone before,
When the wind down the river is fair.

Oh! remembered for aye be the blessed isle,
All the days of our life till night—
When the evening comes with its beautiful smile,
And our eyes are closing to slumber awhile,
May our "greenwood" of soul be in sight!

TO-DAY.

BY J. G. WHITTIER.

A sound of tumult troubles all the air,
Like the low thunders of a sultry sky,
Far rolling ere the downright lightning's glare;
The hills blaze red with warning; foes draw nigh.
Treading the dark with challenge and reply.
Behold the burden of the prophet's vision—
The gathering hosts—the valley of Decision,
Dusk with the wings of eagles wheeling o'er.
Day of the Lord, of darkness, and not light!
It breaks in thunder and the whirlwind's roar!
Even so, Father! Let thy will be done—
Turn and o'erturn, end what thou hast begun
In judgment or in mercy; and as for me,
If but the least and frailest, let me be
Evermore numbered with the truly free;
Who find thy service perfect liberty!
I fain would thank Thee that my mortal life
Has reached the hour—albeit through care and pain
When Good and Evil, as for final strife,
Close dim and vast on Armageddon's plain;
And Michael and his angels once again
Drive howling back the spirits of the night.
Oh for the faith to read the signs aright,
And from the angel of thy perfect sight,
See Truth's white banner floating on before;
And the good cause, despite of venial friends,
And base expedient, move to noble ends:
See Peace with Freedom make no Time amends.
And thro' its clouds of dust, the threshing floor,
Flailed by thy thunder, heaped with chaffless grain!

THE POETRY OF THE FOOT.

We do not like a foot too small for the height, any more than we like one too large. A small foot indicateth coquetry. Cleopatra's foot must have been small and finely arched, or she would never have done as described by Enobarbus:—

> "I saw her once
> Hop forty paces through the public street."

No woman ever did or would have done the like, but with the consciousness of great perfection in the feet.

> "The firm Roman to great Egypt sent
> This treasure of an oyster; at whose feet
> To mend the pretty present, I will piece
> Her opulent throne with kingdoms."

No man alludes to a woman's foot in any way, if he loves her, unless it be beautiful.

Hermoine, on the contrary, had a firm, well proportioned foot, betokening majesty. When she enacts the statue scene, we are sure she had a well-sized foot:—

> "Oh! royal piece,
> There's magic in thy majesty!"

is the exclamation of Leontes.

A woman will never act the part of a statue, if conscious of an ill foot, unless her intellectuality may have perverted her instincts, as in the case of Madame de Stael, who at one time personated in this way; and Talleyrand, if we mistake not, offended her past reprieve by saying he knew who it was by the pied de Stael (pedestal,) a terrible pun where the feet and ankles are ill shaped.

Desdemona, Ophelia and Cordelia must have had long, slender feet, which agree rather with sentiment than with magnetism or genius. Miranda, on the contrary, had elegantly proportioned feet, worthy the chaste Diana herself. Then, too, Kate, dainty Kate, the sharp shrew, the pretty vixen, had a little arched foot, graceful and elastic as the spring of a tiger's. When Petruchio says:—

> "Why doth the world report that Kate doth limp?"

it was a delicate commendation of her foot; still more when he says:—

> "Did ever Diana so become a grove,
> As Kate this chamber with her princely gait?"

Tennyson had a delicate eye for a foot, when he represents Ida in this wise:—

> Among the maidens, higher by the head,
> Her back against a pillar, her foot on one
> Of those tame leopards. Kitten like he rolled
> And pawed about her sandal."

And again describing the retinue of the princess climbing the rock in pursuit of minerals, he says:—

> "Many a light foot shone like a jewel set in the dark crag."

Women with large feet never like to climb hills.

The sentiment of beauty is less in the size than a certain litheness and elasticity. "Light as a fawn"—"Fleet as the greyhound"—"With a step like a stag"—are all pretty phrases, indicating the character of the foot, which is the index to the whole woman.

Dress has a great effect on the foot, and we fear very long dresses demoralize it. The long robe certainly destroys its elasticity. We like to see a woman's feet

> "Beneath her petticoat
> Like little mice steal in and out,
> As if they feared the light."

That was pretty in a lover, who saw his mistress bathing her feet in a brook, and wrote—

> "Do not fear to put thy feet
> Naked in the water, sweet;
> Fear not lizard, newt, or toad,
> Will dare to come where thou hast trod."

The French foot is meagre, narrow, and bony; the Spanish foot is small and elegantly curved, thanks to the Moorish blood, corresponding with the Castilian pride—"high in the instep." The Arab foot is proverbial for its high arch—"a stream can run under the hollow of his foot," is a description of its form. The foot of the Scotch is large and thick—that of the Irish flat and square—the English short and fleshy. The American foot is apt to be disproportionately small.

A foot should be arched, fairly rounded, and its length proportioned to the height of the individual. It should have a delicate spring to it, as if it did not belong to earth, and touching it as daintily, if not disdainfully. The ankle should express tenderness, should be round and firm, and not too small.

"I have hurt the wrist of my foot," said a beautiful child, who never misplaced a phrase, because words were given him only as he stood in need of them. Now this pretty phrase, "wrist of my foot," conveys the true idea of an ankle. It should have the grace and flexibility of the wrist, to which it corresponds.—"Zacharie's Work on the Foot."

AN ALABAMA INCIDENT.

A correspondent of the Pittsburgh "Gazette" relates the following:

While in Alabama, in the month of May, a rumor was afloat that a negro had been detected in raising rebellion. A meeting was immediately called, committee formed, and dispatched after the negro, and witness, a jury of twenty-four men "empannelled" and duly sworn in, ready, for trial. Stirred somewhat by the unusual buzz on all sides—in the house, street and office—I attended the trial. The negro was brought into "court" handcuffed. He was over six feet in height, with a body in proportion. His head large and his forehead high, though a little retreating. On being charged with breeding insurrection, he plead emphatically "not guilty."

The only witness that testified anything of importance was a half drunk white man, who had seen Randall (for that was the slave's name,) open a box in which he saw a paper; but on returning and asking where the paper was Randall said there was not, nor had there been, any papers of any kind whatsoever in the box. The case rested here. The white man affirmed; the negro denied: and no paper could be found. This paper Randall could read, hence the great crime of having a paper in his possession. This was the first trial of the kind I had ever been at, and I gave it every attention. During the whole course of the trial I heard iterated and reiterated, the words "hang him," "hanging is too good for him," "burn him alive; make him dig his own grave, make his own coffin, and make him put the rope around his own neck." The jury was sober, though the crowd was generally drunk. After the absence of a few minutes the jury returned with a verdict of "whipping," three of their number dissenting; they thought he ought to be hung.

On that night he was whipped. He received five hundred and fifty lashes, three white men relieving each other in this work. The negro was stripped and laid on the floor. No words were spoken by him until he had been beaten with about three hundred stripes, when he told his scourger, "massa, I'll fess up." He was taken to one side, but said, to the great disappointment of all, "massa, I doesnt know nothing about it." He was taken back and whipped within an "inch of his life." Dr. Sholl, (Ed. H.,) of Philadelphia, being the physician attending. After this whipping he was suspended by the neck until nearly dead, but he never uttered a word. He would only reply to inquiries as to what he knew of "Linkun," &c., and saying he knew nothing to confess. After this he laid in a hall about four days, apparently almost dead. I visited him and found his back very much bruised up. During his stay in the hall, public opinion was strongly in favor of hanging him. But Randall, probably helped by his master, whose consent in all these proceedings had not been obtained, suddenly took leave at night, and was not heard of until a couple of weeks afterwards, when it was found that he had gone with his master's assistance to another plantation, in a distant part of the State. This I saw, and many of the same "sort" did I hear of while in the land of cotton.

LETTING THE HEART DOWN.

A poor widow lies helpless upon her bed. She has worked at her tubs and ironing table as long as she could stand, since her children depend on her labor. At last her health has given out, and she is obliged to surrender. With her work half done, and knowing not how she is to live and feed her family, she [illegible] from stern necessity. The luxury of sickness she cannot afford, or she would have stopped a year ago. Now she must suffer and wait, whereas before she suffered and worked. It is surely a hard case. How easily may she be gloomy and despairing!

In this state of things I visited her. I was prepared to hear a sad story, and to meet a downcast countenance. But to my surprise, she was cheerful—hoped she would get at work in a few weeks—those she worked for would put up with her sickness for a while, and then she would go on as before. Her feet were not quite so swollen, and if she could only get so as to stand, she could work very well at her ironing-table. Meanwhile, the doctor was so kind as to charge her nothing for his service, and her oldest child got along pretty well with the scanty cooking she required.

Astonished at such a cheerful tone, seeing she made the best of everything, and somehow covered the darkest place with smiles and hopes, I asked her how she could keep such spirits in discouraging circumstances. She spoke of her Christian consolations, and then said, "There is no use of letting the heart down!"

I wondered at the pithy lesson I had received in this house of poverty. As I went away, my burdens somewhat grew lighter, my vexation vanished, my complaining spirit gave place to gratitude, and I resolved to write the Christian philosophy of the widow on my heart.

What would such a habit of holding the heart up do for all earnest workers, as well as patient sufferers? Only let the soul be sustained and girded by such a faith—the countenance lighted up by such a cheerful glow—the imagination busied in the paths of hope, rather than of despair—and how much stronger we should be in every holy service.

Tell it to the tempted minister, to the troubled Christian, to the perplexed statesman, to the earnest worker in every land. Be joyful in God, for "There's no use of letting the heart down!"—"PRESBYTERIAN."

SAVING FOR OLD AGE.

No one denies that it is wise to make a provision for old age, but we are not agreed as to the kind of provision it is best to lay in. Certainly we shall want a little money, for a destitute old man is indeed a sorry sight, and suggests to every one the suspicion that his life has been foolishly if not wickedly spent. Yes, save money by all means. But an old man needs just that particular strength which young men are most apt to waste. Many a foolish young fellow will throw away on a holiday a certain amount of nervous energy, which he never will feel the want until he is seventy, and then, how much he will want it! It is curious but true, that a bottle of champagne at twenty may intensify the rheumatism at three score. It is a fact that overtasking the eyes at fourteen may necessitate the aid of spectacles at forty, instead of eighty. We advise our young readers to be saving of health for their old age, for the maxim holds good with regard to health as to money—waste not, want not. It is the greatest mistake to suppose that any violation of the laws of health can escape its penalty.

Nature forgives no sin, no error. She lets off the offender for fifty years, sometimes, but she catches him at last, and inflicts the punishment just when, just where, just how he feels it most. Save up for old age, but save more than money; save health, save honor, save knowledge, save the recollection of good deeds and innocent pleasures, save pure thoughts, save friends, save love. Save a rich store of that kind of wealth which time cannot diminish, nor death take away.

A TRUE STORY.—In a certain parish in the county of Forfar, there lived, a few years ago, a peculiar individual by the name of Jamie Johnston. Jamie was a poor beggar, who had no home of his own, but lived continually on the parish. As report went, he had, at some remote period of his life, from some cause unknown, lost the use of his legs, and he was in consequence dependent for sustenance on the charity of the people of the district. Gifted with the knack of making himself agreeable wherever he might be, Jamie had become a great and universal favorite among the farmers' wives, who always took care that he should be provided for in a comfortable way. Indeed, they strove with each other who should treat him best, for they were well aware that Jamie had most praise for her who put the most butter on his bread and most sugar in his teacup. He was welcome to stay at any farm as long as he pleased; and when he wished to remove to another place, he was invariably transported thither either in a cart or, if the distance was short, on the broad shoulders of some one or two stout ploughmen. Never was king or beggar half so happy and blithe hearted as Jamie Johnston. He had plenty to eat and nothing to do all the year round, and he was truly thankful. One day two strong ploughmen, Rab and Jock, took upon themselves the burden and responsibility of conveying Jamie from their own farm to another about a quarter of a mile distant. Hoisted on Rab's back, Jamie was as proud as an emperor, and he forthwith began to crow, and chuckle, and crack his jokes, with the greatest good will in the world. The ploughmen being in haste, determined to take what they call a "near cut" through a certain park where a number of cattle were grazing. They were about half way through the park when the three were "struck all of a heap" by seeing a large, black, ferocious looking bull coming up to them, lashing the air with his long tail, pawing and tearing the ground with his feet, moaning and roaring in a manner calculated to strike terror and dismay into the stoutest heart.

"Oh! for guidness sake, Rab, rin wi' a' yer micht, and save me frae that brute," cried Jamie.

Rab ran accordingly as fast as he could, Jock helping him as he might. Notwithstanding all their efforts, however, it was too evident the brute was fast gaining ground, and would soon overtake them. They were still a pretty long distance from the fence, and was nigh falling to the ground exhausted with the weight of the unfortunate Jamie.

"Jock, my guid freen," said that individual, "could ye no stop behind a bit, an try an' keep the beast back? Better ane should risk himsel' than that the three o' us should be killed. Rin, Rab, rin, and save me at ony rate."

Jock, instead of acting as Jamie directed, ran away and left his friends to their fate. The bull was within a few yards of them, when, to the infinite astonishment of the exhausted Rab, the lame man on his back sprang off, and, making good use of the legs long supposed to be useless, soon left the bull and his two friends far behind leaped the fenced with the agility of a "maudin," and was out of danger and out of sight in the twinkling of an eyelid. The astonishment of Rab and Jock it would be impossible to describe. Forgetful of their pursuer, they stood rooted to the earth, and stared, with dilated eyes and open mouths, alternatively at each other, and at the rapidly retreating figure of Jamie Johnston. The infuriated beast was likewise taken by surprise, and instead of following up its advantage, stood still all at once and "glowered," amazed and dumfounded like at the scene before it. As soon as the ploughmen were able to comprehend how matters stood, they set up such a roar of laughter as startled the echoes of the distant hills, and frighten the crows on a field in a neighboring county. It is needless to relate that Jamie Johnston from that day was never again seen in the parish.

AN AFRICAN PRAIRIE ON FIRE.

Turning to Mortar, I exclaimed, "Good God, our return is cut off!" I had seen many wood and grass fires, but nothing to equal this. Immediately in front of us lay stretched out like a sea a vast pasture prairie, dotted with occasional trees, bounded in the distance by groves of huge giraffe thorns—all in a blaze! Thro' the very midst of this lay our path. By delaying a few hours the danger would have been considerably diminished, if not altogether over, but delay in our case seemed almost more dangerous than going forward; and so on we pushed, trusting to some favorable accident to bring us through the perils we had to face. As we advanced we heard distinctly the sputtering and hissing of the inflamed grasses and brushwood, the crackling of the trees as they reluctantly yielded their massive forms to the unrelenting and all-devouring element, the screams of startled birds, and other commingling sounds of terror and devastation. There was a great angle in our road, running parallel, as it were, to the raging fire, but afterward turning abruptly into a burning savannah.

By the time we had reached this point the conflagration, still in its glory on our right, was fast receding on our left, thus opening a passage into which we darted without hesitation, although the ground was still smouldering and reeking, and in some places quite alive with flickering sparks from the recent bosom of hot flames which had swept over it. Tired as our cattle were, this heated state of the ground made the poor brutes step out pretty smartly. At times we ran great risk of being crushed by the falling timbers. Once a huge trunk, in flames from top to bottom, fell athwart our path, sending up millions of sparks, and scattering innumerable splinters of lighted wood all around us, whilst the numerous nests of the social grossbeaks—the Textorerythorhynchus—in the ignited trees—looked like so many lamps suspended in designs at once natural, pleasing and splendid. It was altogether a glorious illumination, worthy of Nature's palace with its innumerable windows and stately vaulted canopy. But the danger associated with the grand spectacle was too great and too imminent for us thoroughly to appreciate its magnificence. Indeed, we were really thankful when once our backs were turned on the awful scene.

At break of day we halted for a few minutes to breathe and to change oxen, then continued to journey on. I dispatched all the loose cattle ahead, giving the men orders to return with a fresh team as soon as they had drunk, fed and rested a little. We arrived at the valley a little before midnight on the 24th of May, but on attempting to kraal the trex-oxen, notwithstanding their fatigue, the thirsty brutes leapt over the stout and tall thorn fences as if they had been so many rushes, and with a wild roar set off at full speed for Okaoa fountain, which they reached the following day, having been more than one hundred and fifty hours without a single drop of water.—Anderson's Travels.

THE COOLEST THING ON RECORD.

As General Scott's army was marching triumphantly into the city of Mexico, a procession of monks emerged from the gate of a convent situated on the eminence at the right, and advanced with slow and measured tread until they met the army at right angles. The guide or leader of the procession was a venerable priest whose hair was whitened with the frost of many winters. He held in both hands a contribution box, upon which there was a lighted candle, and when within a few feet of the army the procession halted. As the army proceeded, many a true believer in St. Patrick dropped some small coin into the old priest's box. And, when it was observed that one of the soldiers was searching for something to bestow, the old priest would step forward and hold his box to receive the donation. Ultimately there came along, a tall, gaunt gander-looking, limber-sided Yankee, who, on seeing the priest, thrust his hands into the very depths of his breeches pocket as if in search for a dime, or something of the kind. The priest, observing this movement, advanced, as usual, while Jonathan, holding forth a greasy looking roll of paper, commenced very deliberately unfolding it. The old priest anticipated a very liberal donation, and put on an air of the most exquisite satisfaction. Jonathan continued to unroll piece after piece of dirty paper, until at length he found a piece of tri-twisted smoking tobacco. He next thrust his hand into another pocket, and drew forth a clay pipe, which, with the utmost deliberation, he proceeded to fill, by pinching off small particles of tobacco. When this was done, having placed his tobacco in his breeches pocket, he stooped forward and lighted his pipe by the old priest's candle, and making an awkward inclination of the head, (intended perhaps for a bow,) he said much obleeged to ye, 'Squire,' and proceeded on.

DOMESTIC DUTIES.—A knowledge of domestic duties is beyond all price to a woman. Every one of our sex ought to know how to sew, and knit and mend, and cook, and superintend a household. In every situation of life, high or low, this sort of knowledge is of great advantage.—There is no necessity that the gaining of such information should interfare with intellectual acquirements or elegant accomplishments. A well regulated mind can find time to attend to all. When a girl is nine or ten years old, she should be accustomed to take some regular share in household duties, and to feel responsible for the manner in which her part is performed, such as her own mending, washing the cups and putting them in the place, cleaning silver, or dusting and arranging the parlor. This should not be done occasionally, and neglected whenever she feels it convenient; she should consider it her department. When older than twelve, girls should begin to take turns in superintending the household, making puddings, pies, cakes, etc.; to learn effectually to do these things themselves, and not stand by and see others do them.—Mrs. Chids.

A CRUSHING RETORT.—Some white men from a Christian land engaged natives in New Zealand to go with them on a journey, to carry their luggage. The Sabbath overtook them on the road. The men wish to go on, but the natives who had been under the pious instruction of missionaries said, "No, no, it is the Sabbath; we must rest." The travelers, however, went on, and left their attendants behind, who in good time arrived safely with the goods; but the men refused to pay them, because they would not travel on the Sabbath.

"What are we to do with the law of God?" asked the natives.

"What have we to do with the law of God? What is that to us?" cried the men angrily.

"You have much to do with that law," answered one of the natives firmly. "Were it not for the law of God, we should have robbed you, taken all you had, and set you adrift; perhaps we might have murdered you. You have that much to do with the law of God."

☞ The following is too good to be lost of a schoolmaster and pupil:

'Joseph, where is Africa?'

'On the map, sir.'

'I mean, Joseph, in what continent, eastern or western.'

'Well, the land of Africa is in the eastern continent; but the people, sir, are all down South.'

'What are the products?'

'Of Africa, sir, are down South!'

'Africa, you blockhead.'

'Well, sir, it hasn't got any; it never had any.'

'How do the people live?'

'By drawing.'

'Drawing what—water?'

'No, sir, by drawing their breath.'

'Sit down, Joseph.'

Among the good stories told of Father Haines, the colored preacher of Vermont, is the following:

Father Haines was visiting a brother pastor, and attended a prayer meeting at the vestry of the latter. Their devotions were led by a worthy deacon whose moderation of speech was so excessive as to render it difficult for the hearer to keep up the connection in his remarks, so far apart were the words.

After the meeting, Father Haines inquired of his friend who it was who led in prayer. "Oh! that's my Deacon, and he's a good man too." "Yes," replied Father Haines, "yes, he prayed like a good man, but he reminds me of Squire B.'s mill. It grinds first rate, but it don't turn out the grist as fast as you want to eat."

A Scotch paper tells the story of a dairy farmer, who, after the funeral of his wife, drove a hard bargain with the grave-digger. At last the indignant grave-digger bringing his hand down on a grave-stone, exclaimed: —"Down wi' anither shillin', or up she comes."

"Boys," says uncle Peter, as he examined the points of the animal, "I don't see but one reason why that mare can't trot her mile in three minutes." They gathered round to hear this oracular opinion, and one inquired "What is it?" "Why" he replied, "the distance is too far for so short a time."

"BARBER," said a farmer to his tonsor, "now corn's cheap, you ought to shave for half price." "Can't, Mr. Jones," said the man of razors; "I ought really to charge more, for when corn's down farmers make such long faces. I have twice the ground to go over."

MISCELLANEOUS.

MRS. WINSLOW'S

SOOTHING SYRUP.

Every mother should be prepared to act in the capacity of both nures and physician to her children if she can, if she will, discharge these duties much better than any one she can employ. If she does not, she ought to know that there is a Medicine prepared by an old nures and female physician which has stood the test of many, many years, and is the most perfect thing on earth for children teething; it also cures Wind Colic, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, and is sure to regulate the bowels. We say to every mother, do not let your own prejudices, or the prejudices of others stand in the way of the relief that will be sure—yes, absolutely sure—to follow the use of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP certainly does, as the name implies, "soothe" the little sufferer into a quiet, natural sleep, from which it awakes invigorated and refreshed. And for the cure of diseases incident to the period of teething, such as Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Wind Colic, &c., we have never seen its equal.

We have always been, and still are, opposed to the practice of drugging infants. This article has no deleterious effects whatever, and from our own experience (we speak advisedly) we have every confidence in it, and can heartily recommend it to all mothers. Take our advice—use it—and you will as strongly recommend it to others as we have to you.

When we say that MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP acts like a charm, we do but reiterate the language of every person who ever used it for their children, for all diseases incident to the period of teething, such as Dysentery and Diarrhœa, Wind Colic and Cholera Infantum. It will produce quietude and rest, relieve all suffering, and the infant will awake invigorated and refreshed, and not with the dull and stupefying effects of preparations of opium.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the excruciating pain of cutting teeth? If so, go at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately—depend upon it; there is no mistake about it. There is not a mother on earth who has ever used it who will not tell you at once that it will regulate the bowels, and give rest to the mother and relief and health to the child, operating like magic. It is perfectly safe in all cases, and pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States.

During the thirty years of unprecedented and increasing popularity of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP, innumerable "CORDIALS" and other nostrums, prepared by pretended M.D.'s, have sprung up and lived but a mushroom existence, the SOOTHING SYRUP has been constantly increasing in popularity, and become a household word, and for the health of their children, by the use of her invaluable article.

THOUSANDS OF MOTHERS THANK
MRS. WINSLOW

PRICE 20 CENTS PER BOTTLE.

For sale by
THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St., N.Y.

TIME, MONEY, AND LABOR SAVED,

BY USING

B. T. BABBITT'S

SUPERIOR FRENCH

CHEMICAL ERASIVE SOAP,

Made and improved by the ORIGINAL INVENTOR of the German and Austrian Chemical Erasive or Detersive Soap, of which the real and genuine article has, since its first introduction to the American public, been most favorably known, as the Best and Cheapest Washing Soap in the market, and with the present improvement, which is not known to any other manufacturer, we CHALLENGE THE WORLD to produce a better article.

1. One pound of it will accomplish as much as three pounds of any other soap.
2. But one quarter the time and labor are required to do the same amount of washing, as with the best of family soap.
3. It does not injure the most delicate fabric; will tend to set the colors, and wash cleaner than any other soap in use.
4. Clothes need no boiling, and but little rubbing with the hands, thus avoiding their wear upon the wash-board.
5. Paints, Grease, Tar, and stains of every description vanish as by magic, before its wonderful, searching, erasive powers.
6. It is invaluable to Machinists, Printers, Painters, and all others using Inks, Oils, etc. for washing hands; it does not chap them (like other soaps,) but will cleanse and soften the skin.
7. It may be used in hard or soft water, and is adapted for use in all climates.

Put up in one pound bars, sixty bars in each Box.

For sale by the bar or box by

THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman Street.

MEDICAL.

THE BEST MEDICINES IN THE WORLD!!!

The following invaluable medicines may be obtained of

THOMAS HAMILTON, 48 Beekman St.

DR. CLARKE'S

VEGETABLE SHERRY-WINE BITTERS,

Are composed of Sarsaparilla, Dock-root, Rheubarb, Thoroughwort, Dandelion, Prickly Ash, Bark, &c. they should be taken not only in the Spring, but at all seasons of the year, as they operate directly on the liver, removing from it all coating of morbid matter, and restoring it to its normal action; also opening the bile ducts, causing the requisite flow of bile so essential to good health. Their influence upon the kidneys, also, is advantageously felt; at the same time they operate upon the dyspepsia, cleansing it from all impurity or taint of any kind. Humors of long standing are eradicated from the blood, thereby speedily curing jaundice, headache, weak stomach, sore eyes, nervousness, and other chronic diseases arising from impurity of the blood.

The palatableness of these bitters renders them agreeable to every one, and being composed entirely of vegetables, they may be used by all classes of people with safety.

Sold for the low price of 25 cents per pint bottle.

DR. CLARKE'S

SUGAR-COATED HERB PILLS.

These pills are made mostly from a valuable herb that grows on the proprietor's farm.

Warranted to cure Bilious Stomach, Bilious Bowels, Bilious Colic, Bilious Fever, and all diseases which arise from a bilious state of the system viz, Jaundice, Headache, Heartburn, Sour Stomach Liver Complaint, Weak Stomach, Pain in the Stomach, Costiveness, Loss of Appetite, and a host, of diseases too numerous to mention, as their number is legion.

Warranted to cure diseases peculiar to the female sex.

Warranted at all times safe and efficient.

Warranted for a gentle family physic not to have an equal in America, operating without pain.

Warranted not to contain calomel, aloes, gamboge colocynth, or other drastic poisonous drugs, which always do the system more hurt than good, and by their continued use are sure to cause a derangement of the liver, bring on costiveness, and its inevitable consequence, piles, and dyspepsia, and finally break down the constitution, and cause the victim to drag out a miserable existence. Touch not, taste not, handle not the wily poison. Your life is your own,—preserve it. Take a simple herb, sure in its effects, but safe and pleasant,—no wrenching pains, no ill effects, and made pleasant to take by a fine coat of sugar. Children love them, ladies admire them, fools and wise men cannot do without them, doctors prescribe them,—and every body takes them. Yes, every body; from the honest farmer and mechanic to the most learned philosopher. And why? Simply because they are good, excellently good; and will do you good.

PRICE, 25 CENTS PER BOX.

DR. CLARKE'S COUGH AND CROUP SYRUP.

It is the most wonderful, effective and extraordinary medicine for the lungs ever used by man. It is perfectly safe and pleasant to take, and gives relief immediately. Thousands have been cured by its use, and tens of thousands will be again. All who use it pronounce it to be the best lung remedy ever discovered. Common coughs and colds are dispelled by the use of only a few doses, and children can be cured of croup at once if taken in its first stage. Long-standing diseases require perseverance, but a cure will be guaranteed. No medicine before ever possessed such excellent healing and curative power for the lungs. It seems, with almost magic power, to dispel the most severe cases of cough and throat ail.

Vocalists and public speakers should not fail to keep a bottle on hand at all times. A small quantity taken occassionally renders the voice beautifully clear and the lungs extremely strong. Words cannot fully express the great benefit to be derived from the use of the world-renowned remedy. Delay not, but procure a bottle at once. Use it if needed, and if not, keep it till necessity requires its use, as all, sooner or later, are overtaken by some unpleasant affection of the lungs or throat.

PRICE, 25 CENTS PER BOTTLE.

BOOKS.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE ANGLO-AFRICAN MAGAZINE, BOUND.

PRICE.—In half Morocco $1,25; half Morocco, gilt edges, $1.50. Muslin, $1.00

CONTENTS;

EMBELLISHMENT.—Portrait of Alexander Dumas.
MUSIC.—By A. J. R. Connor.
Apology.
A Statistical View of the Colored Population of the United States, from 1790 to 1850.
African American Picture Gallery.—Anon.
American Caste and Common Schools,—by J. Holland Townsend.
A Review of Slavery and the Slave Trade,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
A Good Habit Recommended,—by Sarah M. Douglass.
A Chapter in the History of the African Slave Trade,—by Edward W. Blyden.
Anglo-Saxons and Anglo-Africans.—Anon.
A Word to Our People.
Blake; or the Huts of America,—by Martin R. Delany.
Books &c.
Civilization—Its Dependence on Physical Circumstances.
Colored American Patriots,—by Wm. C. Nell.
Comets,—by M. R. Delany.
Citizenship,—by James McCune Smith.
Claude Brihndas De Salas,—Selected.
Communication from N. Y. Society for the Promotion of Education among Colored Children.
Chess.
Dumas,—Alexander.
Effects of Emancipation in Jamaica, by Robert Campbell.
Fragments of Thought,—by D. A. Payne.
Fancy Sketches,—Anonymous.
Gone to God—Poetry—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
Intellectual Culture —by Robert Gordon.
In the Constitution of Man there exists a Religious Element,—by Robt. Gordon.
Lines—Poetry—by Grace A. Mapps.
Mrs. Partington and Mrs. Freshington.—Anon
Our Greatest Want,—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
Our Duty in the Conflict,—by J. Holland Townsend.
On the Fourteenth Query of Thos. Jefferson's Notes on Virginia.
On the Personality of the First Cause,—by Robt. Gordon.
Patrick Brown's First Love.
Poetry—Anonymous.
Selected Items.
Struggles for Freedom in Jamaica—by Robert Campbell.
The Attraction of Planets—by M. R. Delany
The German Invasion, by James M'Cune Smith
Trifles, by Mary A. S. Cary.
The Coming Man—Poetry—by Wm. J. Wilson.
The Educational Wants of the Free Colored People, by Martin H. Freeman.
Thomas L. Jinnings.
The Teacher and his Pupil—Poetry—by Wm. J. Wilson.
Thoughts on Hayti, by James T. Holly.
The Successive Advances of Astronomy, by G. B. Vashon.
The Oberlin Wellington Rescue, by J. Mercer Langston.
The Shadows of Intemperance,—by James Fields.
The Dying Fugitive—Poetry—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
The Anglo-African and the African Slave Trade.
The Two Offers, by Frances Ellen Watkins.
The Re-opening of the Slave Trade—Anonymous.
The First Colored Convention.
The Self-Redeeming Power of the Colored Races of the World,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
The Policy that we should Pursue,—by J. Holland Townsend.
The Education of the Colored People,—by Amos Gerry Beman.
The Great Conflict requires Great Faith,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
The Outbreak in Virginia.
The Sentinel of Freedom—Poetry,—by J. Sella Martin.
The Nat Turner Insurrection.
The Execution of John Brown.
The Anglo-African Magazine for 1860.
The Watering Places.—Anonymous.

Orders should be addressed to
THOMAS HAMILTON,
48 Beekman street,
New York.

PUBLICATIONS FOR SALE BY
THOMAS HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE ANGLO-AFRICAN MAGAZINE, Bound,—Price—In half Morocco, $1.25; half Morocco, gilt edges, $1.50; Muslin, $1.00. CONTENTS: Embellishments—Portrait of Alexander Dumas. Music, by A. J. R. Conner. Articles by Bishop D. A. Payne, James M'Cune Smith, M. D., Prof. Geo. B. Vashon, Dr. Martin, R. Delany, Mrs. Sarah M. Douglass, Prof. Robert Campbell, Prof. Wm. J. Wilson, Rev. J. W. C. Pennington, D. D., Rev. J. Theo. Holly, Mrs. Frances Ellen Watkins Harper, Prof. M. H. Freeman, Rev. Edward W Blyden, Rev. Robert Gorden, Prof. Chas. L. Reason, Mrs M. A. Shadd Cary, Dr. James Fields, Rev. Amos Gerry Beman, Miss Grace A. Mapps Rev. J. Sella Martin, Wm. C. [illegible], Esq. J. Mercer Langston, and J. Holland Townsend, Esq.,

The Life of Captain John Brown.
The Liberator of Kansas, and the Hero of Harper's Ferry. By James Redpath. An elegant 12mo. volume of 400 pages, illustrated and embellished with a superb Steel Portrait of the Glorious Old Man. Price $1.00.

My Bondage and My Freedom.
By Fredrick Douglass. One vol., 12 mo., 464 pp. Illustrated. Price $1.00, postage 22 cts.

Life of Jermain W. Loguen.
The great Underground Railroad King. Price $1.00.

The Martyrs and the Fugitive.
By the Rev. S. H. Platt. A thrilling work on slavery and the slave trade, detailing the capture of a family in Africa by the Slave-dealers, their fearful journey to the coast, the horrors of the "middle passage," their sale in America, and subsequent martyrdom; the slavery of their son, his terrible sufferings and perilous escapes. Sent, postpaid, upon the receipt of 38 cts.

Twelve Years a Slave.
The Narrative of Solomon Northrup, a citizen of New York, kidnapped in Washington City in 1841 and rescued in 1853, from a cotton plantation near Red River, Louisiana. Seven Illustrations, 336 pp. 12mo. Price $1,00, postage paid.

Our National Charters,
For the Millions. Including—1. The Federal Constitution of 1787–9. 2. The Articles of Confederation. 1787. 3. The Declaration of Independence, 1776. 4. The Articles of Association, 1775. With notes showing their bearing on slavery, and the relative powers of the State and National Governments. Also a summary of Legal Opinions, collected from the highest authorities, is prefixed to the Constitution. An Appendix contains extracts from State Constitutions and Bills of Rights; Ordinance of 1787, excluding Slavery from the Northwest Territory: also, Sentiments of the Revolutionary Fathers, &c. By mail, postage prepaid, single copy, 15 cts.; four copies, 50 cts.; nine copies $1,00.

The American Slave-Code,
In Theory and Practice: Its Distinctive Features Shown by its Statutes, Judicial Decisions, and Illustrative Facts. 430 pp., 12mo. Price 75 cts postage paid.

Unconstitutionality of Slavery,
By Lysander Spooner. In paper, 291 pp., 8vo Price 75 cts., or postage paid 86 cts.

Review of Lysander Spooner's Essay on the Unconstitutionality of Slavery.
By Wendell Phillips. Price 25 cts. Postage 5 Cts.

The Revelations of a Slave Smuggler.
Being the Autobiography of Captain Richard Drake, an African trader for fifty years, from 1807 to 1857. The work is handsomely illustrated, with graphic representations of scenes as they actually occur on the slave ships and on shore. Illustration No. 1 is a large cut, 16x23, representing a slave market on the Coast of Africa. Illustrated No. 2 represents a scene in the Hold of a Slaver (middle passage). Then there is a large plate, giving views of a slave vessel betwen decks, regulation slave-deck, regulation packing, &c. The work is handsomely printed—contains one hundred large 8vo. pages, and is published at a price which places it within the reach of the masses—viz: 25 cents a copy. When sent by mail the postage (six cents must be added.

The Nat Turner Insurrection.
A full and reliable account. Copies will be sent to any address on the receipt of five cents.

Uncle Tom's Cabin.
By Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe. Two volumes in one. Price, $1,25.

The Kidnapped and Ransomed,
Being the personal recollections of Peter Still, and, his wife, Vina, after forty years of slavery by Mrs. Kate E. R. Pickard, with an introduction by Rev, S. J. May, Illustrated, 12mo. cloth, $1,25.

Gerrit Smith in Congress.
"Slavery has no right but to die!" A work of over 400 pages, containing all his speeches delivered in Congress; also, an accurate likeness. Price, only 80 cents per copy, and postage paid.

The Dream;
Or, the true history of Dea Giles's Distillery and Dea. Jones's Brewery. By George B. Cheever, D.D. Price per single copy 10 cents, $1 per doz., or $7 per hundred.

A Summer on the Carribbean Sea.
By J. Dennis Harris. With an introduction by Geo. William Curtis. Sent by mail on receipt of $1.

A Pilgrimage to my Motherland;
An account of a journey among the Egbas and Yorubas of Central Africa, in 1859-60. By Robert Campbell, one of the Commissioners of the Niger Valley Exploring Party; late in charge of the Scientific Department of the Institute for Colored Youth, Philadelphia; and member of the International Statistical Congress, London. Price, 63 cents. When sent by mail, the postage (10 cents) must be added.

Turner's (J. A.) Cotton Planter's Manual,
Being a compilation of facts from the best authorities on the culture of cotton, its natural history, chemical analysis, trade and consumption, and embracing a history of cotton and the cotton gin. Price, $1. Postage, 15 cents.

The Manual of the Wardrobe.
60 large octavo pages, in paper, by Mrs. Pullan. Price, 25 cents. Sent, postpaid, upon receipt of the price. It comprises a thorough dissertation upon taste in dress, an explanation of the different kinds of stitches made in sewing, remarks upon the various kinds and qualities of fabrics used in the wardrobe, with complete directions for cutting and fitting all kinds of garments for women's and children's wear; the preparation of table, toilet, and bed linen. Illustrated by nearly one hundred cuts of patterns and modes.

The Weekly Anglo-African.

"MAN MUST BE FREE!—IF NOT THROUGH LAW, WHY THEN ABOVE THE LAW."

VOL. I. NO. 7. NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 14, 1861. PRICE FOUR CENTS.

The Weekly Anglo-African.
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY SATURDAY,
BY ROBT. HAMILTON,
No. 48 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW YORK.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
Two Dollars per year, or Four Cents per copy, payable on delivery.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.
Six Cents a line for the first insertion, and Three Cents for each subsequent insertion.
Notices of Births, Marriages, Deaths, Public Meetings, &c., inserted for twenty-five Cents, provided they do not exceed five lines; if more than that, Five Cents for each additional line.
All communications for the paper must be addressed ROBT. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman st., New York.

Poetry:

FREEDOM.

BY MARTIN FARQUHAR TUPPER.

No blots on the banner of Light!
No Slaves in the land of the Free!
No Wrong should be rampant where all should be Right,
No sin that is shameful to see!
America,—show the wide world in thy strength
How sternly determined thou art
To cut from thy soil in its breadth and its length
The canker that gnaws at thy heart!

Uprouse thee! and swear by thy Might
This evil no longer shall be;
For all men are brothers, the black as the white,
And sons of one Father are we!
America,—now is the perilous time,
When safety is solely decreed
To ridding the heart of old habits of crime
And simply repenting indeed.

Away to the bats and the moles
With the lash and the goad and the chain!
Away with the buying and selling of souls,
And slavery toiling in pain!
America now is thy chance—now at length—
Of crushing—while crouching to thee—
Those Rebels and Slaveholders—slaves to thy strength—
The curse and contempt of the Free!

[Reported for the Anglo-African.]

SERMONS FOR THE TIMES.

PREACHED BY REV. S. V. BERRY, OF ST. LUKE'S CHURCH, NEW HAVEN.

"Sirs, ye are brethren, why do ye wrong one another." Acts 7, 26.

After having at some length demonstrated the certainty of God's interference and over-ruling providence in the affairs of nations, the speaker continued as follows:

"The people of Israel had cried unto God by reason of their oppressions, and their cries had reached the ears of the God of Saboath, and by reason of their cry God had raised up for them a deliverer. This deliverer was Moses. He now stood before them. For centuries the air had resounded with their groans; for centuries they had been bound in servile submission to Egypt; for centuries they had cried to Heaven for release; but now the time of their release was at hand. The eventful period had come for the termination of their servitude; and the individual appointed by God, to be the agent in the accomplishment of their deliverance, now stood before them ready and prepared to enter upon the great work. You no doubt suppose, that the Israelites having so long awaited their deliverance, rallied around this deliverer with the greatest enthusiasm. But it was not so. The paralyzing effects of slavery had so deadened their moral sensibilities and powers, as to render them in a measure incapable of appreciating the noble interference of Moses in their behalf. On a certain occasion he slew an Egyptian, whom he saw wantonly and cruelly beating an Israelite, but what was the result? these very Israelites themselves were the first to inform against him. At another time when he saw them striving, he undertook to reconcile them—he remonstrated with them—appealed to their natural prejudices—their love of race, "Sirs ye are brethren, why do ye wrong one to another." Is it not enough that the Egyptians wrong you. Is it not enough that they injure you and oppress you. Is not your burden heavy enough already, without adding to its weight, by wronging one another? But what is the reply? "Who made thee a ruler and a judge over us?" But this perverseness was not so much the fault of the people as of the institution under which they had been raised. Long years of Egyptian bondage had blunted their moral perceptions, and rendered them incapable of fully appreciating the high moral sentiments of that true and genuine patriotism which resides in the breast of such noble specimens of manliness as Moses. There are some men and women in the world upon whom the powers of slavery can make no impression. Their limbs may be manacled and bound with fetters, their backs may be bared to the lash, their flesh scored and lacerated; but their lofty spirits are too great to be bent and bowed, and corrupted, and humbled by the debasing influences of slavery. Whatever be the condition of such, they are always free—free in mind and soul and spirit. Such a man was Moses, and such were the principal ones who rallied around him. But there are others who can never be made truly free. The institution of slavery has so far crushed out of them every vestige of a noble humanity that they have not the confidence nor the courage to be free. Place them in whatever position you please, they can never be made to imbibe the spirit and independence of freemen. Such were they who betrayed and insulted Moses—and such beings are always void of these high moral sensibilities which distinguish all true men—are ever ready to betray true honor and honesty. Whenever we behold men and women, who like Moses, can honor and love and respect their own despised and oppressed race, and can submit to make such large sacrifices for them, we may be sure that we are looking upon true freemen. But unhappily it has always proved that none of our oppressed race but true freemen, know how to appreciate the talents and qualifications of their own oppressed brethren. They hate to honor their virtues, to respect their abilities, and acknowledge their worth, while they even stand ready to buy up the friendship, and to over-rate the least display of talent and worth put forth by their oppressors. In this way more is done to depress and crush out the high aspirations of those, who like Moses, have given themselves up to labor for the elevation of their race, than even the oppressors themselves can do. To be insulted as Moses was at every attempt to better the condition of their race; to be betrayed by them for vindicating their cause and avenging their wrongs; what else can be so heart-sickening and discouraging? But this is the way that slavery has done in every age. This is still the effect that it has over the oppressed of the earth. This is the effect that American slavery has upon its unhappy subjects. It has made men and women in very many cases treacherous, deadened their moral sensibilities, destroyed their self-esteem and entirely destroyed their love of race. It is on this account that we find in many places no ambition manifested for the improvement of the race. Like the Israelites, in the days of Moses, union is the most essential thing needed by us. In union there is strength—in union there is harmony—in union there is love. When once a people lose the love of race, there remains but little hope for their elevation and improvement. It is in the love of race that the heart acquires all its incitement to noble and praiseworthy ambition. If we love our race as Moses did his, we shall be ready and willing when circumstances demand to make the same large sacrifices that he did. But with many among us there seems to be a marked deficiency in the matter of true disinterested love and devotedness in this direction. Even our leaders, many of them seem to be actuated more by a spirit of selfish ambition, than by the noble self-sacrificing spirit which actuated Moses. While the highest ambition of Moses was to better the condition of his people—the highest ambition of many of our leaders is to better their own condition. Great reformers never make gain the chief object of their enterprise. They live but for their cause, and as their cause prospers so they hope to prosper. It was so with Jesus Christ, the success of his cause was more to him than gold and silver, even life itself was not paramount to it in importance.

Moses being an Egyptian Prince by adoption, identified himself with them in all their interest before he arrived at mature age. He shared their honors, emulated their virtues, and strove with noble ambition to rival and excel them in their various departments of learning. But when he had become of full age, with a well trained and accomplished mind, and with all its powers at full maturity, he resolves upon a full renunciation of his Egyptian honors and preferments, and a full and unreserved devotion of himself to the common good of his race. And the first work he enters upon is that of promoting union, as the first and most indispensable requisite to lead a people in any great cause, And this he did by going right in among his people, and laboring among them to correct their errors, "Sirs," said he when he saw them striving—"Sirs, ye are brethren; why do ye wrong one to another?" And it will yet be found that our leaders will have to do the same way. They will have to come down to their people and make their mission a mission of union,—even if they are insulted as Moses was. God watches over the destiny of the races and nations of the earth with the same unsleeping eye in this age of time, that he has in any other. He is just as much concerned in the promotion of the temporal and spiritual happiness of his people in one age of time that he is in another.

But perhaps it may be said by some: What has all this in its connections to do with the great plan of Jesus Christ? I answer, It has this much: Jesus Christ is God as well as man, and he is man as well as God. As man, he cannot but sympathize with man, and as God in this intimate connection with man, he cannot but be greatly concerned in the promotion of the temporal as well as the spiritual happiness of man.

And Moses in this connection is presented as a type of Jesus Christ. He was appointed the temporal deliverer of his people. Jesus Christ, the spiritual Moses, was ordained of God to lead his people from the degradation and debasement of slavery to political life and liberty in that promised inheritance in the land of Canaan, which was but a type of that glorious inheritance in the world of spirits into which Jesus Christ has promised to lead all those who will follow after and be led by him. Let us take pattern after Moses, that meek, devoted and self-sacrificing man of God, the great temporal and spiritual leader of his people, who chose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. "Sirs, ye are brethren." This declaration of Moses is the voice of inspiration, and it is destined to admonish the people of every nation of the world, "Sirs, ye are brethren." It is the solemn admonition of the Holy Spirit addressing himself to every race of mankind of every clime and of every color, "Sirs, ye are brethren." Yes, God has made of one blood all the nations of the earth. It matters not what our condition, what our wealth, what our station, we "are brethren," and brethren equally united by all the tender ties of a common nature. The poor degraded slave and his haughty master "are brethren," equals in a common humanity, and equals in the sight of God. The king upon his throne and even the meanest of his subjects "are brethren," not only of a common nature, but under common responsibilities, and hopes, and fears, from which none but a divine power can release them. In the present troubled condition of the world when nation is rising up against nation, when nearly all Christendom is in confusion, and Christians are whetting swords to imbrue in the blood of Christians, even in our own land, if Moses should once more be sent to the earth to unite and harmonise the turbulent and discordant factions that disturb the peace and tranquility of the nations, we should hear his voice rising above the sullen murmurs of discontent, proclaiming "Sirs, ye are brethren; why do wrong one to another?" Yes, all of us in this country, and in the world, "are brethren." Oh, if "we the people" of these United States, North and South, and East and West, rich and poor, and bond and free, of every shade of complexion could be brought to realize this truth—to feel that they were brethren—to act like brethren, and live like brethren—all the difficulties that now distract our land would pass away like early dew before a summer's sun. We have had no direct agency in creating the present difficulties which overshadow the land, and therefore many of us are led to view them with an idle curiosity, as if they were nothing to us, whereas they are full of meaning—full of promise—full of hope. God is working with us and for us. The day dawn of a brighter era is upon us. The indications of the times call upon us to make ready and qualify ourselves for a more ennobling career of civil and religious liberty. Let us therefore endeavor to act under all circumstances with the highest regard to God's glory, and the common good; ever on the side of truth, ever on the side of true honor and honesty—remembering that all who dwell in the land "are brethren."

GOV. ANDREWS OF MASSACHUSETTS ON THE WAR.

The following is an extract of a very eloquent speech delivered by Gov. Andrews of Massachusetts, in the Park Barracks, in this city, Sep. 5, on the arrival of the 20th Massachusetts regiment:

"The war is broad and comprehensive as the idea of liberty itself, which is bounded by no land, native to no clime, the inheritance of no particular people—of that liberty which is of no clime, and of no kindred, and of no color under heaven. (Unbounded applause.) And this is our cause—the cause of constitutional liberty and of the right of universal humanity. I am no prophet and no prophet's son, and would not dare to cast the horoscope of the future of this war; but this I will say, that I believe in the guiding providence of the Almighty God. I believe that He who led our fathers to the New England shores, who preserved them from the dangers of the seas and the perils of the wilderness, who protected them from the attacks of the savage tribes—that He who planted the acorn of the great tree of liberty on the inhospitable shores of Plymouth, and who has been with us through all the trials that beset a nation's childhood and early youth, will not desert the faithful and the true in the graver and severer, but not less needful trials of manhood. (Applause.) And whatever others may think, or dream, or fear, over this poor vision of mine, neither by day or by night, since the first triumphant shout rung from one sea to the other, after the seventeenth of April, has there passed the shadow of a doubt as to the ultimate result of this war. The American people, inspired by confidence in their cause, and by their trust in God, have taken up those arms which had so long lain unused by their side, and almost unbidden have gone out to battle. From the hill-sides and from the valleys, from the workshops and the railroads, from the sea side and from the fishing smacks of our own dear old Commonwealth—from every calling, and profession, and pursuit—from every sect, whether religious or political, whether of belief or unbelief—all have joined together in arms under a new inspiration. (Applause.) And whatever fortune or misfortune may befal our flag—should disaster attend the national arms either at Washington, or Baltimore, or Philadelphia, or New York—we of New England will rally behind you, and make the ramparts of New England the Switzerland of your liberties. (Prolonged applause.) But neither in New York or Philadelphia nor at Washington will the national army suffer defeat. We went to the battle of Bull Run an aggregation of town meetings—(laughter)—but whensoever we march again we march forth an army—(applause and cries of "That's so!") disciplined and drilled, and thoroughly equipped and appointed, and ably commanded. Now the army knows who the commanders are, and we will no longer be content with defending Washington under the walls of the Capitol, or on the banks of the Potomac, but Washington shall in the future be defended at Charleston, S. C.—(cheers)—at Savannah, Ga., at the city of New Orleans, and all the way up the Missouri. (Renewed applause.) The Union men of the South must be liberated by the armies of the North and of the West, and all men capable of bearing arms, and capable of allegiance, will yet be summoned to the national ranks, unless, indeed, some blight or blast shall smite the statesmen and generals of the South. It is my opinion that ere long all men who come up to the required standard, and who desire to fight under the flag of liberty, will be accepted; nor will generals deem it important to light a candle to see what complexion they may be of, or to hunt up the family Bible to see whether their grandfathers came from the banks of the Thames or the banks of the Senegal. (Loud cheers.) If those who have attempted to overthrow the national constitution, the ægis of liberty to others as well as to themselves, if those destructionists, in the attempt to overthrow the hopes of their own posterity as well as those of the toiling millions of other lands, find their own social system uprooted and their own "peculiar institution" struggling and finally falling beneath their own parricidal blow, whether it may be accounted a misfortune or not, it will be their own chickens coming home to roost, and the fault will be with themselves. (Cheers.) If it shall follow, in the good providence of God, that other men besides those of our own peculiar complexion and blood shall taste the sweets of liberty, then, I say God be praised. (Applause, followed by three cheers for Gov. Andrews.)

I am glad that this sentiment is not heresy in the great mercantile metropolis of the country. I suppose that although we ought not, if peace had been preserved, either to invade, or counsel, or permit the invasion of any constitutional right reserved to any State or people—that when a State or people tramples the constitution itself beneath their feet, and endeavors to crush us, and our children with it, that then we may at least have the poor privilege of protecting the rights, and battling for the liberty and happiness of the people of the North, bond as well as free. (Applause.) I look, Mr. President, with the assurance of a confident faith for an early restoration of universal peace. I have no idea, not the slightest, that the next Fourth of July will find the people in arms. But it may be, nevertheless, that we shall continue to pour out our money and our blood in prosecuting this holy war. Let the worst come. Let the war continue. Let it abide with us. Let the sword be constantly the emblem glittering before our eyes. Let the flag advance and armed men tread beneath its folds, till, in Heaven's own time, a perfectly assured peace shall come, established upon foundations of eternal right, on which alone can any victory be secured. (Applause) I thank from the bottom of my heart, the sons of New England resident in New York, for the kindness of this reception given to the Twentieth regiment of Massachusetts Volunteers, and for the flattering manner in which my name has been mentioned in connection therewith, and also for the generous hospitality and fraternal love which has been exhibited by you and all of you, from the moment when the Sixth Massachusetts displayed the ensign of our glorious old Commonwealth in the streets of New York, when bound—the first regiment—for the defence of the capital. (Cheers.) From that day till this we have continued, in one stream of military organization, to almost tire your hospitality and patience. [Cries of "no, no."] If you were not faithful and patriotic, as well as generous, we should almost feel it our duty to find some other route to Philadelphia. The sons of Massachusetts residing in New York are bone of our bone, flesh of our flesh, and heart of our hearts, and the memory of your kindness shall not be soon forgotten. [Loud applause.]

THE DEAD ARM.

"Do you see that arm?"

The convict, wasted by a fierce disease, raised himself to a sitting position in the bed, with much labor, and raising his withered right arm with the other, clutched it as if he would wring it from its socket as a traitorous member of his body.

"That arm did it," and he glared vengefully upon it, and shook it fiercely.

"Did what?"

"Did murder! Put me here to live a buried life for ten long years. O! how long they have been. I have counted them hour after hour in my cell. How long can I live at the most?"

"Three hours—perhaps four."

"Too long to live, but sufficient time in which to tell my story. If you believe it, it will be more than judge or jury have done. Would you deceive when on your death bed?

"My marriage to the girl I had long loved, and who loved me with a love exceeding my most sanguine hopes, is the point, so far as regards the nice applicability of the past events to the present certainties, at which my narrative commences. Dating from the day of that marriage, there begins a succession of misfortunes, that insignificant at their birth, were gradually moulded together by extraneous contingencies until they culminated in an act foul and terrible, if meditated or intended, that made me a branded felon.

"My wife and I never quarreled. We loved and revered each other too much to trespass or trample upon what the other considered sacred. To be sure, in mere levity and exultation of spirits we performed acts that, to persons unacquainted with us and our circumstances, might seem seasoned with earnestness. To such misunderstandings, by a third person, may be attributed the origin of reports that we, my wife and I, lived an unhappy life—a life of turmoil—of blows. Many around held to such an opinion, but from mere ignorance of the nature of our lives.

"But, I, descending rapidly to the grave, do declare that we never, by word, or deed, transcended our great love for each other; or transgressed those laws that should preserve the person of the wife from blow or contumely. If it were possible to exist without jarring discord to turn the sweetest sympathies into bitter hatred, ours was that existence. Yet it availed me not in the dark day that came upon my household; but rather offered opportunities by which to strengthen an apparent guiltiness.

"Jessie," I said to my wife, one evening, do you stand on one side of the room while I take a position on the other. Give me a ball of yarn from the basket, and then whosoever is hit with the ball the greatest number of times, shall make a present to the other. A nice present of course.

"If I lose, my present shall be a dressing gown," said Jessie, "but you know you'll have to pay for it."

"It will be just as acceptable," I answered.

"But if I lose, you may have that ring with the emerald and pearls."

Then the soft ball of yarn flew quickly from hand to hand, we all the time laughing and talking with great glee. A knock at the door and an acquaintance entered, finding our faces flushed with the excitement of the contest, and each uncertain who was the vanquished. I declared that she won the ring, and promised to put it upon her finger the next day; which day to her alive, never came.

About two o'clock that night I was awakened to consciousness by one of those inexplicable preternatural premonitions of near danger, which are often encountered, but generally in a skeptical spirit.

My mind was clear to reason—not having its delicate powers blunted by sleep. Scarcely were my eyes closed before I came cognizant of the presence of a cold, clammy nature, by its loathsome contact with my face, and by its presence upon my bosom, whereby it nearly stilled the beating of my heart. Naturally, I am no coward; but the knowledge of the presence of this burden, combined with utter darkness, creator of fierce fear, completely unnerved me, and my body shook like an aspen leaf.

The quiet condition of this body, which appertained not to myself, or my wife—its mysterious situation—and above all—the moist, chilly contact with my face, deprived me for an instant of self possession. The clattering of a blind, or the nibbling of a mouse, seemed like a peal of thunder to my ears; the overstrained eye saw or seemed to see, ghostly shapes pendant from the chandelier or bed-post.

I dared not shout aloud nor change my position in bed for fear that my throat would be clutched by the incubus that sat like a hidious nightmare upon my chest.

I experienced such sensations as does the strong swimmer or the venturous diver, when coming in bodily contact, unforewarned, with a corpse beneath the surface of the water—when nature acts like an electric battery, and discharges volumes of fear at the slightest movement; or like one in the dark, who encounters a skeleton.

I was peculiarly situated; surrounded by an immensity of terror, expansive in as much as it draped thoughts and motions in habiliment that gave them a gigantic appearance, immersed into the sea of dread and doubt, and finally completely cowed by fear.

Now reason made its appeal to the frightened soul. The mere consciousness of bodily contact with this invisibility suggested its substantiality, but I hesitated to make the first movement, hostile or otherwise. There was a half-formed supposition in my mind, that if I stirred there would come upon me an onset by the incubus that I could not withhold; this hesitancy to action I partly overcame by the circumspect rising of my left arm—it was free. I moved my right instantly, and cotemporaneously with that movement the weight upon my face was removed to my neck. A little more stealthy investigation, still fearful of an attack by an insidious enemy, and I found that my right hand and arm as far as the elbow was temporarily paralyzed, or in that condition called "asleep;" that the hand was cold and without sensibility, and it was that object I had rested upon my face.

Of course I was much elated at the discovery, and ashamed that I had been so easily alarmed at an accident that was susceptible of so easy an explanation. In order to give my wife an account of the absurd occurrence, I turned over, my present position being a reclination upon my back.

In my relief, consequent upon what I considered a correct explanation of my fright, the weight upon my chest had been forgotten; now, the change of my position recalled it very unpleasantly and inopportunely, even before I had touched my wife.

Imagine, if you can, the result of this sudden knowledge that my oppressor had not been explained away. Think how quickly all the reasons which had been carefully revolved from the mental perplexities in which I had been entangled, were effectually controverted, and how absolutely mystery and fanatic horror again swayed the sceptre.

There was, then, a being or thing in the room that did not belong there, never had been there previous to that night, and my deductions were faulty. The result was that I lost all control over my passions—that I was lashed into a fury of despair, by the fear of the presence of a supernatural being.

Clasping the object upon my breast with my left hand, with my right nerved with terror, knowing no restraint, and numb to all sensation of pain by reason of its paralysis I struck heavy, treacherous blows. It had soft hair, and at this I pulled and tugged, in this paroxysm of horror, in my great agony of mind I shrieked for aid—notwithstanding my efforts encountered no resistance—and called Jessie to awaken. There was no response. The passive submission to blows of the object grasped in my left hand, was extraordinary—the silence of my wife unaccountable.

Then for the first time during the struggle did I think of Jessie's remarkable sound slumber, and connected with the burden, I could not separate the identity of my wife from that of the object of my vengeance.

Pushing the weight aside, I leaped from the bed and lighted the gas.

My wife was dead.

It was her head—that I had so often fondled, playing with its silken tresses—kissing the dear lips—looking into those lustrous eyes—that had so confidently reposed upon my breast. Yet not more than five minutes had elapsed since my awakening.

I cannot believe that I am her murderer, even, though the law so seals me with the crime.

But the arm, now so shrivelled and withered into its present form, came not so by a punishment from heaven. After my condemnation, doubting as I did my agency in her death, yet hating the instrument that had known no pity or gentleness in its blows. I held it, that arm, as a sacrifice to my dead wife, in the fire, until the flames sapped its life, blackened its beauty, and burned out of it all the semblance of human form.

These are the reasons why I hate it, and have hated it since that night. I am thankful that my stay upon earth is so diminished. When you have lived a life of solitude such as mine, with a doubt such as mine for an invisible companion, you too would gladly seek its conclusion.

* * * *

The convict died that night. The prison warden confirming the truth of the convict's narrative, adding that the marks of blows upon the body of his wife—the absence of all cause to create sudden death—and the unfavorable testimony of many of the witnesses who had interrupted their amusement the evening previous to his wife's decease, were formidable arguments against the innocence of the convict.

If the convict's story was true, and I had no reason to believe it was false, it was certainly an instance of remarkable complicity of circumstances sufficient to embarrass both judge and jury. It was doubtless a case of unintentional murder, committed by the convict in a state of frenzy—originated and finished under the influence of a superstitious mind, too easily excited by such a situation as that in which he had been placed.

THE RAT-TRAP MAN.

A Methodist minister gives a western paper a humorous account of a visit of one of those hangers-on, who seem to think the ministers keep cheap temperance taverns. The servant girl, on Saturday night, announced that a gentleman, with a carpet bag, was at the door, and wanted to see the minister. He went to the door, wondering who it could be, and says:

In this way, as I proceeded down stairs, I made up my mind that I should encounter a book-agent. The moment my eyes rested on the "gentleman with a carpet bag," I knew that he was not an agent for one of our many benevolent institutions, they often call on Saturday night, for he had neither smiling business air nor the immaculate linen of that class of public servants. Indeed, I was at loss to know what his business was. He did not, however, in compassion, I am sure, suffer me to remain a long time in doubt. He was a brother minister—not now in the itinerancy; had located on account of an affliction—a hearty, keen-eyed man he was. "He was compelled to remain in town over Saturday, and did not like to remain at the hotels, for they were not conducted on temperance principles. Perhaps—he did not want to put one to any trouble—perhaps I could find him a place at one of the brethren, or perhaps—he did not want to put me to any trouble—perhaps—but no, he ought not to impose on one who did not get too large a salary." There it was. How I wished there was a hotel in town conducted on temperance principles! I am sure there ought to be one, for the protection of preachers.

I groaned inwardly, as you may suppose, for, poor, selfish mortal that I am, I thought of myself. I wished again that there was a hotel in town, conducted on temperance principles. Then came a dim consciousness that I was not exercising Christian charity—certainly not practicing patience. Indeed I began to pity my poor brother, and wished I had better accommodations and a fuller larder; and I really regretted that there was not a hotel in town conducted on temperance principles, where he could procure better accommodations. I was nearly ready to confess that I was a miserable sinner, when he pulled a book out of his side pocket, and said he would like to read me something he had written on the proper mode of baptism. He had been, he said, after the Campbellites for more than twenty years, and now he had an argument that would end the controversy. I was glad that the controversy was to have an end, but was sorry that I was to be in at the death.

He read the lengthy manuscript as if he knew I liked it. I will do him the justice to say that he read it well, and that the argument was a good one; but I think it will not end the controversy. I was glad when he put up his book, and began to breathe naturally. Giving him the freedom of the parsonage, I was hunting up the proper form of words to excuse myself for the evening, when he hurriedly produced the book again, asking if I had ever read the poem of his "Cutting up Universalists." How I wished I knew it by rote, as I did Halleck's "Marco Bozaris;" but I did not and had to confess ignorance of the poem.

Here let me say for all coming time, that I do write doggerel verses, sometimes myself, which I think an ample excuse for not reading the same kind of verses when published by somebody else. My patience failed me just at this point—and then, as I said, I am somewhat nervous.

He read the poem. Do not understand me to endorse the composition as a poem. I noticed that it made breeze rhyme with trees, and love with above, but did not hear much of it. You know, or ought to know, that no one is under any moral obligation to listen to an author reading his own poems, without he is a particular friend—and not then except as a particular favor.

I think he had something else that he wished to read to me, but I suddenly recollected that there was to be a meeting of the trustees of the Church, and that I was constitutionally President of the honorable body. It was a happy thought.

I would show the brethren that, however delinquent I had been in the past, I was not lacking in interest in all the affairs of the Church, temporal and spiritual. So I gave my brother the evening newspaper, informed him of my engagement, and surprised the board of trustees. The question before them was: How shall we make the collections equal to the expenses?

I think that I have heard the question discussed before, and it may be have taken part in such discussion, but I never before entered into it so heartily. I could have remained till midnight—till every one was in bed—yea, even till all in my own house had gone to bed.

"You preach to-morrow, as a matter of course?" said brother B., as we dispersed late in the evening.

"Well, I do not know exactly," said I, brother X. is stopping with me, and I presume that he will expect an invitation to occupy the pulpit, a part of the day at least."

"Brother X!" he exclaimed, "why, bless me? brother X! You do not mean that man about town peddling patent rat traps?"

"Peddling rat traps?"

"Yes, peddling rat traps!"

"Well, that does rather alter the case."

"I should think it did."

Oh, how I wish there was a hotel in town conducted on temperance principles! But there was none. So I concluded to practice patience.

"Perhaps," I ventured in a quiet tone, "you are mistaken, brother B."

"Not a bit of it sir. A tall rather good looking man, with a carpet bag."

There was the carpet bag again. There could be no mistake; the identity of the man was established, I groaned—not inwardly this time. I wished there was a tav—but what was the use of wishing, I must practice patience. I did so, but I fear there was not any virtue in it, as it was from compulsion not choice.

I can hardly remember how I got through the Sabbath. He undertook to explain to me a new plan of unfolding the book of Revelations, but a call to a very sick man happily relieved me from the fearful affliction. He thought my morning sermon could have been improved in the first division of the subject. I coincided with him in opinion, but did not ask him to mend. He had, he said, an original sermon on the text I preached at night. I took it for granted, and did not ask him for a skeleton of it. I don't think much of original sermons—they are apt to be sensational.

Do you believe it, he left on Monday morning with my thanks, but did not even offer me a rat trap. I would like to have tried one of his traps.

A man who had purchased a pair of new shoes, finding the road to be rather a rough one, decided on putting the shoes under his arm, and walking home barefooted. After a while he stubbed his great toe, taking the nail off as clean as a whistle. "[illegible]" he exclaimed. "What a tremendous [illegible] that would have been for the shoes!"

The Weekly Anglo-African.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 14, 1861.

☞ Advertisements for this paper must be accompanied by the cash.

☞ Copies of this paper can be purchased of the news-dealers everywhere.

A NOBLE PROPOSITION.

ROBERT HAMILTON Esq.,

Dear Sir:—I congratulate you at the appearance once more of the Anglo-African.—a paper that gained, for the time it existed, more prestige than any other that had preceded it.

Now sir, the glorious question is, "Shall it live?" I call it glorious, from the immense importance of the hour that is now upon us.

It will live if we bring our patriotism, our love for the truth, not to a boiling, but a moderate heat. Let each brother and sister, father and child, do what they can—take stock in it at a fair premium. The premium to be paid in Hallelujahs when its work as a Journal for Freedom is over.

Sir, I propose to unite with some in investing Five Dollars to begin with: what will others answer? I propose no plan upon which it is to be paid, but leave that to your better judgment—but I suppose you need the money as soon as you can get it. I therefore pay immediately. Now who will be the next customer,—if not for five, for four—for three—for two—for one! for fifty cents? Keep in remembrance, friends, that this stock pays glorious in premiums, however small be the investment. Yet you must still remember, that greater the investment, more glorious the premium!

Now sir, I believe I have said enough; perhaps more than enough—for, after all, all that is requisite is but for the people to know your need, and they are ready to nobly respond.

Yours in behalf of the good cause,
J. N. GLOUCESTER.

The following are responses to the above proposition, including Mr. Gloucester's subscription:

J. N. Gloucester,	$5
H. Highland Garnet,	1
Henry M. Wilson,	1
Mary A. Chambers,	1

What We are Fighting For.

This has been frequently called the "causeless war." Men cannot understand why the South, absolutely surfeited with rule, should take up arms. Every demand made by them in behalf of their real or imagined rights had been freely and fully conceded. Even Mr. Toombs, with a little patience, might have called the roll of his bondmen beneath the shadow of Bunker Hill monument. With the North at their feet, the Southern Alexanders sighed for new worlds to conquer.

We suspect that the probings of philosophy will ultimately show, that war like other apparent evils which afflict humanity is one of the normal incidents in human progress. On Mr. Darwin's theory, the preservation of the stronger at the expense of the destruction of the weaker of any given species, this would appear clear enough. And it lends strength to the hypothesis, that rarely if ever before in the history of the world, have a homogeneous people, increasing from six to thirty millions, lived without internal war for the period of eighty years. In this view had there been no North versus South: no half free versus half slave: no semi-civilized versus semi-barbarous divisions in our republic, a spontaneous war must have burst out within this period as a necessary and normal incident of development.

The primary answer then to the question at the head of these remarks, is, that we are fighting for the same reason that we are breathing, it is a necessary incident in our aggregate, as breathing is a necessary incident in our individual life

But there are also secondary reasons for this fight; special, more immediately visible and pressing. There are men among our people who look upon this as the "white man's war," and such men openly say, let them fight it out among themselves. It is their flag, and their constitution which have been dishonored and set at naught: it is their forts which have been bombarded or stolen: and all they see to is to retake these forts and to restore the Union as it was!

This is a huge fallacy. In proof of which let us ask ourselves some questions. By ourselves we mean the free blacks of the free States. What rights have we in the free States? We have the "right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." We have the right to labor, and are secured in the fruits of our labor; we have the right to our wives and our little ones: we have to a large extent the right to educate our children—and if in possession of means we can educate them to the fullest extent of their capacities.

Are these rights worth the having? If they are then they are worth defending with all our might, and at any cost. It is illogical, unpatriotic, nay mean and unmanly in us to shrink from the defence of these great rights and privileges. To hesitate to defend them, would prove us unworthy to enjoy them.

But some will say that these rights of ours are not assailed by the South. Are they not? What in short is the programme or platform on which the South would have consented to remain in the Union? It was to spread slavery over all the States and territories. It was to make slavery co-incident with African descent. It was to make the colored man, wherever found on American soil, a slave. It was to gain for the slave-holder the right to carry his slaves with him securely wherever he wished on American soil.

Against whom did this platform level its guns? We assert that it was against the free blacks of the North, and such freedom as they enjoy. The South had every thing else which they demanded or dreamed of demanding. They had both political parties chained to their chariot wheels, and could have been as much in possession of the government and government offices under the republicans of to-day as they had under the whigs of old.

No! it was the free black man, living and enjoying his life of freedom and progress, which tortured the vision and seared the brain of the haughty slaveocracy; and they determined to crush this free black man to the dreadful uniformity of slavery.

Hence, talk as we may, we are concerned in this fight, and our fate hangs upon its issues. The South must be subjugated, or we shall be enslaved. In aiding the Federal government in whatever way we can, we are aiding to secure our own liberty; for this war can only end in the subjugation of the North or of the South. We do not affirm that the North is fighting in behalf of the black man's rights, as such—if this was the single issue, we even doubt whether they would fight at all. But circumstances have been so arranged by the decrees of Providence, that in struggling for their own nationality they are forced to defend our rights. And conversely the struggle and the fight which is beckoning us to join in, in behalf of our rights makes us by the same over-ruling necessity the defenders of their nationality.

Let us be awake, therefore brethren; a generous emulation in a common patriotism, and a special call to defend our rights alike bid us to be on the alert to seize arms and drill as soon as the government shall be willing to accept our services.

Hayti.

As many of our readers would like to be well informed in regard to the actual condition of Hayti, and the prospects held out to emigrants, we shall re-publish shortly some of Mr. James Redpath's letters from Hayti, printed two years ago in the New York Tribune. As that gentleman is a very vivid and truthful writer, and enjoyed unusual facilities for observation, his views will be at once interesting and authoritative.

AMUSEMENTS.

A LITERARY AND MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

The ladies of Zion Baptist Church gave a literary and musical festival, on the evening of August 29th, which was quite successful. The choir of the church, under the leadership of Mr. Bailey, performed several anthems, Madame Magnan sustaining the solo parts, and Miss J. A. Williams and Mr. Waldron presiding at the organ. The literary exercises were sustained by Messrs Jacobs, Powers, and Bodee; the three ever ready members of the Petersonian Association. The last named gentleman's address on "Energy" was particularly fine, and if he will only strive to conquer his excessive nervousness and bashfulness when speaking, will become all that his friends desire.

Remember sir "this is the age of brass." Master Powers, though a brilliant speaker, is a careless one: he has yet to learn that high sounding words and pompous phrases strung together without regard to sense, are unworthy of him, and little better than an insult to his audience. Mr. Jacobs whose speeches are carefully prepared, detracts from their effect by his bad delivery. He roars out the most solemn sentences and the loudest appeals on the same high-sounding key, to the utter destruction of all harmony. In the recitation of "Richard's Soliloquy," he strode from side to side in a manner that would have reflected credit upon him if engaged in a walking match, but which certainly did not become an educated young gentleman. We trust he will take this criticism in good part, and strive to improve himself in this particular. The mental enjoyment over, the audience partook of another feast of a purely physical character; and the way the cream, fruit, and cake disappeared, delighted the hearts of sundry old ladies who pocketed the cash for the said good things with unlimited satisfaction. The affair which was gotten up for the benefit of the church funds, gave general satisfaction.

ELOX.

Letter from Paterson, N. J.

MR. EDITOR:—An everlasting pic-nic, for the special benefit of Mr. Harry Jones, of Paramus, was lately held in the adjoining county, apparently on the outskirts of civilization, commencing Thursday, August 27th, it was continued with music, dancing, feastings, &c., throughout the week. The Paterson boys made a reconnoisance in force, going up in an imposing column. The encampment they found situated among the trees, on a gentle slope, where were congregated the votaries of pleasure from every point of the compass. Pigs and chickens, which had been sacrificed for the occasion, with a flowing fountain of mineral waters, made ample provision for creature comforts. Judging, however, from certain indications, there must also have been a masked battery in range of the party, some of whom, I regret to say, found it difficult to maintain their position. The ladies present ("God bless 'em,") were beautiful, charming, and all that, as they usually are, and their presence did much to make the pic-nic a really delightful affair in spite of the fact adverted to.

And now, while writing about pic-nics, permit me freely to express my opinions concerning them. That they may be made conducive of physical, moral, and mental improvement, I believe. This object probably could be obtained, if to the music and dancing customary, there were added addresses, recitations from the poets, theatrical representations, &c. If these were chosen so as to make the pic-nic a demonstration in favor of liberty and human progress, generally, it would be still more worthy of patronage. In such a case the laboring man, the cheerful housewife, the industrious daughter, while seeking a grateful relief from wonted toils under the open sky, would only be fitting themselves the better to meet the stern realities of life. But the spendings of half a week, or even half a day in dissipation, with no higher object than mere animal enjoyment, casting away the earnings of a summer in a few hours, is a folly that must receive the condemnation of every reasonable being, and when, as at present, labor is nearly "played out" and a bleak and barren winter staring us in the face, such conduct is doubly reprehensible. It is nothing [illegible] a disgraceful crime.

An Anglo-African "war item," and I have done. Mr. John Henry Smith, formerly captain of our American Guard, recently returned on a two weeks furlough from the seat of war. He is connected with Company I, 2nd N. J. regiment, Kearney's Brigade. Mr. Smith was with the Jersey boys in the first skirmish at Cloud's Mills, Va., but came back unharmed, except by an accidental discharge of his own pistol, which took effect in his arm, making only a flesh wound, however. He has again returned to the "sacred soil" of the "F. F. V.'s."

OCCASIONAL.

Letter from New London.

NEW LONDON, Sept. 9. 1861.

MR. EDITOR:—

On Thursday, the 5th inst., on the strength of a very cordial invitation, I wended my way to Groton, to attend the Second Annual "Clam Bake" of the "Plymouth Rock Association." After a very pleasant walk of about fifteen minutes, on Groton side, I found myself in the midst of as fine a company of ladies and gentlemen as ever assembled on such an occasion, composed of the very elite and fashionable of the day. The ladies, as usual, presented a very gay appearance, and I can assure you, they highly appreciated this grand feast of pleasure. A band of amateurs from New York, under the direction of Prof. Douglass, was in attendance, and discoursed some very fine music. A platform had been erected by the committee for the accommodation of those that wished to engage in the "merry dance," which I can assure you did efficient service. About half-past 2 o'clock the guests formed in couples and proceeded to another portion of the grove, where they partook of a fine dinner which would have served well for an epicure. I need not relate to you the many fine dishes that constituted the dinner; suffice it to say that everything was fine. The "clam bake," which was under the direction of Mr. John Boston, passed off finely; the clams, I can assure you, were "par excellant." The dinner over, the company resumed their enjoyments. New York, Brooklyn, Jersey City, Williamsburg, Norwich, and Stonington were well represented. The enjoyments kept up until a late hour in the day, when the company united in singing several patriotic songs, after which cheers were given for the Plymouth Rock Association, three for the several committees, and three for the musicians, when the company dispersed much pleased with the Second Annual Clam Bake of the Plymouth Rock Association. A Union exhibition is to be given in this city at Dart's Hall, this evening, by Mrs. Rebecca A. Smith, assisted by Miss Jane A. Newby, (of the "Peace and Unity" Literary Association of this city,) and several others.

WIDE AWAKE.

Celebration at Red Bank.

MR. EDITOR:—

Thursday, 29th of August, was a joyful day to several hundred children and youth, who had set it apart as a day of celebrating their Sabbath School Anniversary, and the Emancipation of 800,000 slaves in the British West Indies.

The weather, although wet, gloomy, and disagreeable, did not appear to affect the happy throng assembled at Red Bank, the old Colored American battle ground of 1781. Boats were chartered to run from Philadelphia, Wilmington, Chester, and Marcus Hook, to the ground during the day, but unfortunately for our Philadelphians, the Government on that morning seized both the boats chartered for this excursion and hurried them off to the Potomac as transport-vessels for our troops, leaving us all, white and colored, standing upon the levee: (it will be remembered they were regular line boats plying between the city and Red Bank.) Of course for a time we demurred, but after considering it a military necessity, we could but bid them God speed. As there is a large bar in front of the landing at Red Bank, boats of ordinary draught can only land at high tide, this left us but one opportunity of reaching it from the city. The fine steamer Young America, from Chester and Marcus Hook, had brought up her trip at eight o'clock, A. M. The Zephyr had also brought a party from Wilmington, which arrived safe at an early hour on the ground. Our boat, the fine little steamer Raucocas, with a "gay and happy" party, left at two o'clock, P. M. As the boat backed out from her berth at Arch Street wharf, the colored band on board (Harry Craigg's celebrated), struck up one of their celebrated original airs, much to the gratification of the hundreds of spectators that crowded the wharf and the decks of the steamer. When opposite the Navy Yard the band glided gently from a beautiful waltz into the Star Spangled Banner. The United States vessels lay at anchor, and one other was preparing to weigh anchor and leave for the seat of war. They were crowded with soldiers and civilians, and when they discovered that we were colored Americans, and that the band which sent wafting on the breeze this glorious National air was also colored, no tongue can describe the sensation of heartfelt gratification that burst forth spontaneously from officers and soldiers, ladies and gentlemen, as we passed them. Hats, 'kerchiefs, capes, shawls, and whatever came handiest, were waved till we passed far beyond seeing and hearing distance. One fellow got down over the bulwarks of one of the ships, and appeared to lap water like a dog, a rule applied to the tried men of Joshua's army. Perhaps had he not speedily obtained water he would have died from exhaustion and excitement. No colored camp meeting could ever equal that scene in exciting detail.

At length we reached the ground and found dinner over, and the ladies and gentlemen old and young enjoying themselves in all kinds of rural amusements; there were from three to four hundred persons present, all agreeing and touching upon the one thing needful, which, of course, made me wish to be one in their midst, and that to be blessed! After a consultation with the officers and speakers present, among whom were Rev. William Murphy, Rev. James Underdue, Mr. John M. Ridgeley, A. M. Green and others—it was thought advisable (as the effort was to be repeated and as it was a late hour and still raining,) not to interfere with the general good humored pleasures of the moment by introducing the regular order of the day as previously announced—every one, therefore, was left to choose his own manner of amusement. Some played "blind man's buff," others "old man and woman," others strolled away upon the beach, and marked the soft heaving bosom of the incoming tide, while others were engaged in selecting the various sports marked out in the history of this tragic spot. So the day was spent till six o'clock, when the shrill whistle of the Young America summoned us to the dock, and all embarked much happier, if not wiser than when we left our homes, for this long celebrated spot of colored American patriotic achievement.

I have not time to describe the various scenes of interest at Red-Bank in this letter, at some future period I may do so more in detail.

This is the place at which colored men so nobly defended the city of brotherly love against the approach of a large number of British troops in the year 1781. There still stands great shafts of granite marking the graves of those departed heroes of that signal victory over the invaders of our soil and quiet homes. Long live the memory of their achievements in the hearts of all honest patriotic Americans. For the present I must bid adieu to these scenes for we are now again disembarked from our little steamer; whose rise and fall with the swelling waters has more than once frightened our friend, Rev. James Underdue out of his wits.

Perhaps he is like a certain eminent divine, who being challenged by a gallant American tar—when out in a storm with a lack of faith, the minister very promptly replied that he had a full complement of faith in God, but not a particle of faith in these old rotten timbers of which this leaky ship is composed.

ANATHOTH.

Letter from Newark.

NEWARK, N. J. SEPT. 9th, 1860.

MR. EDITOR.—The Rev. Alexander Crummell officiated in St. Philip's church in this city, yesterday at morning and evening service, also on Sunday the 1st inst, greatly to the edification and complete satisfaction of the large congregations, drawn by the eminence of his talents and acquirements.

His two Sunday evening's sermons here, were masterly productions, evincing a clearness and depth of thought exceedingly pleasing to a great many persons who then heard him for the first time.

Mr. Crummell is on the eve of departing on a tour through the western states, and designs being absent some four or five weeks, and as it is his first visit to that part of the country he anticipates much pleasure thereby.

The Rev. Mr. Adams from Buffalo (I believe,) is now supplying the pulpit of the Plane st. Presbyterian Church, and the Rev. Mr. Lynch formerly of Newport who has been filling the same position from last Nov. up to about the 1st ult. though still in the city, is, I am informed, about going to some other field.

The colored grammar school under the charge of W. G. Strong assisted by Miss L. Waters commenced its fall term on the 2d. inst. with a large number of scholars.

Mrs. Rogers, the enterprising widow of the lamented Rev. E. P. Rogers, has quite an interesting little school of juveniles, at her residence in Plane st.

The Parochial school of St. Philip's church is discontinued, having to yield to the pressure of the times, and Miss Josepliine Booth the accomplished principal who endeared herself to many friends here by her eminently ladylike qualities, has returned to Springfield Mass. More anon,

CONTRABAND.

Rev. J. B. Smith's Lecture in Philadelphia.

MR. EDITOR:—

I listened last Thursday evening to a harangue of great length by Dr. John B. Smith of African notoriety, or more recently of Haytian emigration, who it seems is one of Redpath's paid traveling agents, to induce the colored people to leave their native land for one they know not of.

He attempted to show, in the first place, that God had made us emigrationists, by saying that He never intended Adam and Eve to remain in the garden of Eden. He was hard put, too, for argument, as all the old arguments have become threadbare. Said he, "God is an emigrationist, and all who find fault with it must find fault with God."

His next point was that objections were made to emigration, because it unsettled the minds of the people. He then made a deplorable picture of our starving condition in this country. The starving part he may be acquainted with, for all I know, but the colored people in Philadelphia are not starving, I can assure you. But my impression is if he expects to make a living by running around the country trying to get the colored people to emigrate to Hayti, or Africa, or elsewhere, he will starve.

His next point was that there was too much talking done. He seemed to have forgotten that his pay was depending upon his talk, and his pay perhaps was the only reason why he did talk.

He then referred to the various conventions that have been held by the colored people. He said that no good had ever come out of them. His remarks startled me, coming from a professed minister of the gospel. Nothing seemed to be worthy of the gentleman's attention but emigration.

What seemed to hurt him more than anything was, that some one had a clam bake in some part of the country, I know not where (for he did not tell us), that cost some five thousand dollars, so he says. And from the various allusions made to the subject, I came to the conclusion that he was not invited, or does not love clams.

He made several allusions to gentlemen wearing black coats; who he meant I am not able to say. He said that he was at some meeting where an invitation was given to Mrs. Leary to come and take up her abode with them; but he opposed it and begged them not to have her come and starve with them.

His picture of the condition of the colored people in the United States was a very deplorable one, as all make it when they want to make a dollar by inducing us to leave the country.

He said that he had visited the schools throughout the State, and in Harrisburg he found the school up an alley and down in the cellar. And when he was asked if the school referred to was the school taught by Mr. Bustill, he said it was, and the building where the school was held had nothing above it, nor nothing below it. He called it a cellar. So much for the gentleman's veracity. He then wound up his harangue by offering his books for sale, filled with misrepresentations, not to say falsehoods, at twenty-five cents a piece.

G. W. G.

Philadelphia, Sept. 10th, 1861.

BROOKLYN PAPERS No. 2.

MR. EDITOR:—I have noticed with much pleasure a fine proposition over the signature of Jn. Gloucester. Without reviewing the different members of the proposition in detail, suffice to say that the main "question shall the Anglo African live? will" be correctly and most speedily answered by taking Mr. G's. advice, and following his practical example in whole or in part, according to our circumstances. The sums named for investment in this institution of humanity are well chosen, and bears bright marks of foresight. Had Mr. G. given an hundred, fifty, or twenty-five dollars, in the present scarcity of money and labor he would have had very few if any disciples to follow his example. But as the sums now stand, ranging from five dollars to fifty cents every family at least, if not every individual can easily enjoy the luxury of promoting of truth and liberty. I feel bound in all-conscience far as I can, to comply with the Noble Proposition, and to influence all whom I can to support your valuable paper, which no doubt will encourage you to go forward with it. The need of a newspaper published, by intelligent and energetic colored gentlemen, devoted especially to the interests of our oppressed people, must be evident enough to every man of observation.

It is an old proverb in professional circles, "That some things may be done as well as others," but the man who possesses the courage to commence the publication of a newspaper in times like these, and the energy to prosecute it, as we trust you have, can do not some things only, but almost any thing. Competent colored men of all others are the most efficient to plead the cause of the oppressed in this land. In passing a house wrapt in flames I noticed with an interest never to be forgotten, that the shrieks of the inmates were much more touching, appalling, and terrific, than the hoarse peals which the noble, self-denying firemen thundered out. So our wrongs can be more impressively described by our oppressed brethren.

SPES.

CAMP MEETINGS.

AT MANSFIELD, MASS.

MR. EDITOR:—Our visit to the camp ground at Mansfield, Mass., on Sunday, the first instant, was an occasion worthy of notice. Its importance is derived from the fact that it was a Union of the Zion and Bethel Churches of Boston, New Bedford, Worcester, Providence and adjacent neighborhoods. Although it was called a colored gathering, yet the whites greatly predominated. There was from eight to ten thousand persons present.

The Churches (white,) of Mansfield suspended service on the Sabbath, for the purpose of permitting their members to join in solemn worship with their colored brethren. Within a circumference of five miles the convergence of the crowd pointed the stranger to the spot where camp was located. At four o'clock A. M., companies from ten to fifteen miles distant could have been seen wending their way to the meeting.

The number of vehicles present was estimated at 1,600. One farmer who charged ten cents for all conveyances admitted to his field, received the snug sum of ninety dollars. Such a great crowd not being anticipated, there was not a sufficiency of tents, consequently many were obliged to return home.

The Rev. Joseph Hicks acted as moderator, and with the assistance of the select men of the town, preserved the best of order.

The Right Rev. J. J. Clinton, and Revds. Messrs. Giles of New Bedford, Lewis of Boston, Rev. Rue and Loyd of Providence, Talbut of Boston, Butler of Springfield, and other clergymen with whom I was not acquainted were present.

At ten o'clock, A. M., the Rev. Samson Talbut preached a sermon from this text, "Choose ye this day whom you will serve."

We will not attempt to descant upon this gentleman's discourse: all who have heard him, know him to be a Samson indeed, in the Gospel. In listening to this sermon we were richly paid for our mornings visit to the camp.

At half-past two o'clock, P. M., the Right Reverend J. J. Clinton took the stand, and in a sermon of great eloquence added much to the flame that had been kindled in the morning.

Indeed the preaching of all the colored clergymen during the entire continuance of the camp was very excellent, and greatly astonised many of the whites present, who expressed themselves very freely in reference to the matter.

At the close of the meeting the owner of the camping ground, who had cheerfully granted its use gratis, sent in a extra bill [besides incidental expenses] of fifty dollars!

The committee raised forty-seven dollars, but the select men feeling very indignant at this attempted extortion, compelled the land holder, a Mr. Hall, to take fifteen dollars their expenses three dollars to be deducted from that amount.

I think he will be a little more reasonable in his future dealings with colored Americans. The whole affair passed off well, with but one exception. When the meeting had broken up, and all the tents were either down or vacated save one which contained its proprietor [Rev. Mr. Jay of Providence, and wife,] a gang of huge ruffians who had only awaited the absence of the guard and police to do their demonlike work, attacked said tent and occupants But brother Jay went at the ring leader of the gang, an athletic bully, knocked him down, and thrashed him in good old fashioned camp meeting style, which caused his assistants to make hasty flight, fearing their turn would come next. This ruffian was to brother Jay as the bully Bird of Alton, I believe, was to the Rev. Peter Cartwrght of the M. E. Church who caused said Bird to engage in fervent prayer after being knocked down by Cartwrght at the very camp ground Bird and his gang came to annoy.

Providence R. I. W. F. JOHNSTON,
Sept. 9th, 1861.

—

The Harrisburg Telegraph says of the Camp Meeting at Highspire:—The Camp Meeting of the colored folks in Stoner's woods, near Highspire, this county, was very largely attended yesterday by visitors, from this city, including, we are sorry to say, a number of worthless rowdies, who embraced the occasion to get drunk and behave in a riotous and tumultuous manner; fighting among themselves, and with any and every person who had the temerity to remonstrate with them on their conduct. Some of the combatants, it is said, will be laid up for a long time, having received serious injuries, while others will have to resort to various devices to hide the abrazures and wounds received upon the occasion. The promoters of the camp are very justly condemned for not having adopted precautionary measures against such disorderly scenes. The law against the disturbance of religious meetings is very strict, and the presence of a single determined police officer would have awed the rowdies into a decent respect for its observance.

—

The Hempstead Journal makes the following comments in relation to the Jerusalem Camp Meeting:—We are admonished of the contiguity of a colored camp meeting, by the sights and sounds in our streets on the Sabbath, which usually belong to Huckleberry frolic or a race day. The Camp this year is near Jerusalem. On Sunday many wagons came through racing, and in some instances the young men were evidently intoxicated. Unless Camp Meeting can be kept free from their corrupting incidents, they are better honored in avoidance than attendance. We understand that one is about to take place on the Rockaway Beach, and that the houses there have offered inducements to the preachers to vociferate in the vicinity of the roaring waves.

—

The Harrisburg Patriot of the 3rd instant, says:—The labors of the colored Camp Meeting in progress for the last ten days in Stoner's woods, near Highspire, came to a close on Sunday afternoon. We learn from one who was present that no announcement was made of the number hopefully converted and under conviction, but the meeting was declared a financial success, coupled however with the unfortunate fact that either the entire proceeds, or a hundred dollars of the proceeds were missing. It was not stated whether one of the lambs had defaulted, or whether some chevalier d'industrie had laid sacreligious hands upon the funds, but proclamation was made that in two weeks a new camp would be commenced in Middletown, to last as long as circumstances will permit, we presume.

—

The Harrisburg Patriot of September 9th, says:—A colored Camp Meeting will commence in Mussen's woods, on the Marietta and Maytown turnpike on Thursday next, the 12th inst., to continue one week.

—

A colored Camp Meeting is now in progress at Westville, near Gloucester, New Jersy.

GERRIT SMITH TO THE PRESIDENT.

The following is an extract from a highly important letter of Mr. Smith, addressed to the President of the U. S. dated Peterboro, Aug. 31, 1861. Let none of our readers lay it aside without reading:

"Now to the other error—overrating the importance of conciliating loyal slaveholders. Had all the Slave States seceded and all the slaveholders sanctioned the Secession, the war would have been over ere this time. Immediately on its breaking out you would have given to the rebellion its death blow by your proclamation inviting to our standard all the people of those States. Not only would it have been in your heart to do so—but it would have been in every true Northern heart to have you do so. Not to have done so would have shown you to be utterly unworthy of your place. But the Secession was only partial; and as all the slaveholders were not drawn into it; sympathy with such of them as were loyal, desire to please them and preserve their loyality, operated effectually to hold you back from giving such an invitation to the people of any of the Slave States. I do not forget that many will argue that a proclamation so bold would have disaffected the North. This philosophy is unsound. It would have lifted up and rejoiced the North. It would have left scarce patronage enough for one Secession newspaper. Boldness for the right is mighty to convert men to the right.

That all the Slave States did not secede is what makes the war so expensive, so perilous and perhaps in the end so ruinous to us. But for this none would have felt the need of summoning half a million nor even a quarter of white men to arms. But for this none would have felt the need of draining the people of four hundred nor half hundred millions of money. But for this the flagrantly unconstitutional assumption by military men of the right to decide who are slaves would never have been. But for this such men would have had no occasion to insult humanity and defy God by thrusting some persons into Slavery and by threatening to prevent others from getting out of it. But for this black regiments from the Northern States would have been accepted, and the crime of denying men the right to participate in the defense of their country have been avoided. By the way, have you ever dwelt upon the enormity of this crime? Is it not more criminal to restrain a man from defending his country than to restrain him from defending his wife and children? For not only is country more than family, but the fate of family is involved in the fate of country—and hence he is denied the defending of his family also who is denied the defending of his country.] But that only a part of the Slave States seceded, and that your call for the help of bond as well as free, black as well as white, was thereby kept back, the white men of each Slave State would have had quite enough to do within their own State; and none could have gone from the Southern Slave States to help their fellow Secessionists in the Northern Slaves States. Among the black men, who would have sprung forward in response to your call, hundreds would have exhibited as high heroism as William Tillman—the black sailor who as yet, stands at the head of all the heroes of the present war. In response to that call, many a black man would have shown himself as eager to be early in this war as was Crispus Attucks to be early in the Revolutionary war. For it was in one of the very first of these skirmishes, in the dawn of the Revolution, that this noble black man led a party in Boston and sealed his patriotism with his blood. In response to your call many a black regiment would have come forth and distinguished itself for valor and power as highly as did the famous Rhode Island black regiment of the Revolution. Tristam Burgess says of this regiment: "No braver men met the enemy in battle." How sublime an instance of devotion to a leader was the defending by his guard of the mortally wounded Colonel of this regiment! Not one of them would consent to leave him. Every one was slain. God alone knows how far our success in the Revolution was owing to the black patriots, and He alone can fathom the deep ingratitude of persecuting and oppressing their descendants. In response to your call there would have been black troops, whom their commanders would have eulogized as highly as Gen. Jackson did the black troops who rendered him so essential service in saving New-Orleans That great General, who was not so dainty as to decline the help of black muscle, said to his black troops: "I expected much from you—you have done more than I expected."

We have seen that had all the slaveholders rebelled you would have been in no doubt of your duty, and you would have saved the country quickly and cheaply—with no wrong to God nor man—with no defiance to the One nor insult to the other. But the case, which would then have been so plain, became in your esteem greatly complicated by the continued fidelity and allegiance of a very small part of the slaveholders. Here was your error. The salvation of your country demanded your call for the help of the bond and free, black and white, no less than if all the slaveholders had turned traitors. As a war measure—as a military necessity—it is justified as clearly in the one case as in the other. For there was not one in ten of the slaveholders who was even professedly loyal—and why should you accommodate your policy to the gratification of so small a share of the slaveholders? to the gratification of so exceedingly small a fraction of the American people. Again, among those who are determined slaveholders, and who insist, as all such do, on the maintenance of Slavery at whatever hazard to other interests, there is not one who is loyal. The truly loyal man goes for the country at whatever hazard to Slavery or aught else. The Government offered a command to that wise and brave, as well as rich man, James S. Wadsworth. Did he, ere accepting it, stipulate for the safety from the hands of Government of his hundreds of oxen and thousands of sheep? Had he done so he would have shown his want of loyalty and would not have been commissioned. But the General is a patriot; and therefore does he hold his sheep and oxen and all his great estate subject to the needs of his country. So, too, does the slaveholder, who is a patriot, and who is deserving of his country's favor, recognize the like paramount claim to his possessions, his slaves not excepted. No slaveholder has a particle of loyalty who, when traitors are striking at the life of his country, and his slaves are needed to save it, is not willing, nay, is not glad, to surrender them to a service infinitely more sacred, important, and commanding than his own. This is the one test of the loyalty of slaveholders; and, hence, you may be sure that all those slaveholders, whose loyalty is to be secured by securing Slavery, are traitors. As General Wadsworth would rejoice to see the Government take his flocks and herds, and even his "sacred home," when the necessities of his beloved country call for them, so will the truly loyal slaveholder, however highly he may prize Slavery, rejoice to see it blotted out if the salvation of his country shall require the sacrifice. Is it said that the Government will pay General Wadsworth? I answer that the slaveholder as well as General Wadsworth should trust the justice and generosity of the Government.

But this whole matter is in the compass of a nut-shell. Are the slaves property? then, like all other property, they are to be regarded as bought and sold, and held subject to the superior claims of the Government, and to such uses as the Government may choose to put them to. Are they not property, but men?—then, when Government calls for them, neither must they refuse to come, nor must others hold them nor hide them.

Why is it that our Government may not have the help of the black men, as well as white, when it is in need of both? Or, why is it that, in the exercise of its War-Powers it may take this man's grain, and that man's horses, these men's railroads, and those men's vessels, and all simply because it needs them, and whether they belong to friends or foes, and whether, too, it does or does not pay for them—and yet may not take the property of slaveholders? Is their property so sacred and so privileged as to be exempt from the liabilities common to the property of all other? We are educated into a deep delusion at this point.

I add that nothing so much as this insane respect for slave property has contributed to overshadow the claims of the country with the claims of the Constitution. Constitutional as well as other pleas for the absolute and unending preservation of Slavery in the Border States were put in, and the Government was unwise enough to listen to them, and to make the question of Constitution rather than of country—of the construction of a paper rather than of the rights of a nation struggling for life.

We find, then, that there has not been the least occasion in point of fact for all the fastidiousness and all the fear of giving offense which have marked the course of the Administration on the slave question. To no degree whatever should it have been embarrassed by this question. It should have acted just as freely as if there had been no loyal slaveholder in its way—for there really was none, and there really can be none, since a truly loyal man cannot put himself in the way of his country. Those slaveholders, who annoy the Government, draw it from the line of its duties, and damage its reputation at home and abroad by their impudent and absurd claims upon it for persons they allege to be fugitive slaves, and by the expression of their fears that the slaves will rise against their masters, do, of course, find it expedient to put on the guise of loyalty. However, were it not for the presence of Federal troops, and the fear of eventual Federal success, they would not trouble themselves to profess loyalty.

It is all for nothing then that the administration has forborne to bring the nearly five millions of blacks, counting bound and free, to the side of our distressed and deeply endangered country; all for nothing that it has insulted them and let its armies insult, threaten and outrage such of them as were trying to get their own freedom and were eager to help the country secure hers; all for nothing that it is driving these five millions to hate the North, and make the best terms they can with the South; all for nothing that it suffers tens of thousands of black men to work upon the Southern fortifications, instead of their building ours and thus saving the strength of our troops for the battle-field as the enemy does hers; all for nothing that it suffers the Traitors to compel black men to produce the immense quantities of grain, tobacco, cotton and sugar which these Traitors are putting into the hands of their Government for the sole purpose of enabling it to make the Rebellion successful; all for nothing that it is draining the country of men and money, and drenching it in tears and blood instead of letting black men become its chief and inexpensive saviors; all for nothing that it is protracting the war until the impatience and interests of other Nations, combined with their contempt of a Nation too foolish and fastidious to use whatever means for its salvation, shall impel them to throw their weight in the scale against us; all for nothing that it prefers years of civil war, when by a word from your lips it could suddenly block every war-wheel in the South, assure the land of a speedy peace and of a united, prosperous and happy people.

REV. J. W. LOGUEN ON THE POSITION OF COLORED MEN.

MR. EDITOR.—Where'er I may go, the question is asked me, "What are your people doing, or going to do, in this war?" My answer has been, and still is, "Whatever the Government is willing to have us do."

We would not have the world for a moment think that we are not interested in this war, and we have always been willing and ready to do our duty, when the Government would permit, and we are ready now.

Colored men have not been backward, when treated as men, in standing up for the liberties of our country. In proof of this assertion, we would refer the reader to the part taken by colored men in other wars. It is not denied that in the Revolutionary war, the black man made as good a soldier as the white.—The first martyr in the Boston massacre of 1770, was a colored man, Crispus Attucks, who was a brave man, and fought as did the bravest whites. Yet his name is not engraven on the tablet of this country's history. In the war of 1812 colored men did good service for their country. In proof of this fact, hear what General Jackson said to them, December 18th, 1814.

"Soldiers! When, on the banks of the Mobile, I called you to take up arms, inviting you to partake the perils and glory of your "white fellow citizens, I expected much from you;" for I was not ignorant that you possessed qualities most formidable to an invading enemy. I know with what fortitude you could endure hunger and thirst, and all the fatigues of a campaign. "I knew well how you loved your native country," and that you, as well as ourselves, had to defend what "men" holds most dear—his parents, wife, children and property. "You have done more than I expected." In addition to the previous qualities I before knew you to possess, I found among you a noble enthusiasm, which leads to the performance of great things." This General Jackson spoke to the colored soldiers at the close of the war of 1812. Why we are treated at the present time as we are, is surpassingly strange to many, but not so to us all. If there is any party that has more at stake than another, it is the colored people. We have our all at stake, hence something more than the mere "Union" to fight for, that, with Slavery, is to us worse than nothing.

I suppose the Government does not want colored men in the war, for fear they may hurt Slavery.

When William Tillman, the colored hero, went to work the other day, he meant something, and he did something that was worth doing. So it would be if colored men should go to war with Jeff. Davis and his co-murderers.

The Government seems afraid to touch the cause of the present rebellion, but it is slavery, we all know.

One colored regiment of brave men, we believe would do the cause of liberty more service than half a dozen regiments that are merely fighting for the Constitution and the Union. "Give me liberty or give me death" should be the cry of every lover of his country. We, the colored people, have for seventy years tried the Union with slavery, to our sorrow; we want it now without slavery. Give us justice and we will not complain.

Yours for liberty,

J. W. L.

SOUTHERN BARBARISM.

From the police reports of the Baltimore "Clipper" of Sept. 7th, we take the following cases of barbarism:

Margaret Stump, a strapping negro wench, was arrested on Thursday night, charged with being drunk, screaming in the streets, and with throwing bricks at persons on the sidewalks. At the instance of Justice Hiss, she received 20 lashes, properly laid on.

John Brown, negro, was arrested yesterday afternoon by officer Kenny, charged with shamefully cutting with a horse-whip a small white boy named Edward Newell. Justice McAllister ordered that the villain should receive 30 lashes, well laid on.

In the "Clipper" of the 31st ult. appears the following:

Stephen Howard and William Inloes, two colored gentlemen, had a set-to on Thursday night; but before the end of the first round, officer Sprigg made his appearance and conducted them to the Western Station, where Justice Logan was called in to decide who was the champion. Not being able to give a decision, he concluded to give them each fifteen lashes, when they were allowed to depart.

In the same paper of the 1th inst. is the following:

Wm. King, colored, was yesterday arrested by officer Rhodes, for being drunk and disorderly in the Lexington market, and for insulting ladies while making purchases in the market. He was taken before Justice Logan, who very justly had twenty lashes laid on his bare back.

ANGLO-AFRICAN WAR ITEMS.

A correspondent of the "Tribune," writing from Camp Joe Holt, near Louisville, Ky., furnishes the following:

This morning, as some of Capt. Stone's men were bathing in the river, they saw a negro, spent and almost drowned, struggling toward them across the rapids. They saved him from a watery grave, and brought him, naked as he was born, to headquarters. Here some old clothes, and some bread and meat, the first which he had taken for more than a week, were given him, and then he was ordered to give an account of himself. The fugitive's name is Goree. He is the slave, and was the body-servant, of Lieut.-Col. Bob. Johnson, of the Rebel Camp Boone. Goree ran away from him for being beaten without offense, and after adventures enough to make an "Uncle Tom's Cabin," arrived at daylight this morning on the bank of the friendly Ohio. But he was not yet safe. So, pulling off his clothes and wrapping them around his head, he plunged into the river, and struck out boldly for the further shore, distant almost a mile. The swift current swept him down among the rocks and breakers; his heavy turban became saturated, and threatened to sink him; he was bruised and cut horribly by the jagged granite of the Falls. He struggled manfully rather than part with his clothes, his little earthly all; but finding that he must choose between death and nakedness, he concluded to take the latter, and so set his wardrobe adrift. He continued to flounder on toward freedom's bank, now socked under by the powerful eddies, now swept forward with frightful rapidity by the current, or dashed hard against the rocks. He must have perished if Stone's men had not drawn him from the river. His surprise and distress at finding himself in camp may be imagined. He supposed he would instantly be returned "away down in Dixie's land," for his master had told him that Lincoln's soldiers caught all runaway niggers and sold them down South again. Poor Goree, I pity him. As I write, he is crying as though his heart would break, and refuses to be comforted. Goree is a really intelligent lad. He can read and spell and write as well as any boy of his age in the land; and if he but had a white skin, he might make a respectable man. But, like all his unfortunate race, he has no resting in this life, and his only future lies in the vale of shadows beyond the tomb. Amid his sobs, he implores that he may not be sent back to the brutal Johnson. He says he does not care what becomes of him, so that he is not returned to him. But he will be returned. As I write, a sergeant and squad have him in their midst, and are marching him back to Slavery. So much for the influence of political grannies. God send Kentucky speedy deliverance from them.

A correspondent of the Boston Journal writes as follows from Hatteras Inlet:

During the action the scenes on the decks of the Minnesota were most exciting. What do you think of arming negroes? Wouldn't Wendell Phillips have found a text for an oration had he stood on that deck watching half a dozen contrabands, who came from the batteries at Yorktown to seek the protection of Fortress Monroe, as they worked the after gun of the upper deck? Certainly it was a sight which I little expected ever to see when I left your office to take notes of the war. But opinions change very rapidly under the accelerating influence of revolutionary times. First our soldiers were to quell servile insurrections. Then they were to protect contrabands who should relieve them of fatigue duty. Then the contraband doctrine went down before a new comer, looking very much like general emancipation. And in the last days of August, in the first year of our civil war, the negro stands by the side of the white man fighting the battles of the country. Mr. Phillips may think this more important than the capture of seven hundred prisoners with a Flag Officer at their head, or even the possession of two rebel forts and a thousand stand of arms. At any rate, whether the incident has any peculiar significance or not, let me say that the negroes worked well—never better—and they evidently enjoyed the business.

A contraband named Isaac Bennett, belonging to a Virginian residing near Fall's Church, came to our pickets, near Mount Olivet, and gave himself up. He was mounted on a splendid horse. He stated that everywhere in the vicinity the slaves were being impressed into the service of the rebels, and put under arms. His uncle, also a slave, was serving as a soldier at Manassas; and he preferred, if he must fight, to be on this side.

A correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, writing from St. Louis, says:—

The war is tearing out Slavery by the roots. It is but just to many of the Union men of Missouri, who are slaveholders to add that their loyalty has the true ring about it. One of them, who "owns" forty negroes, recently said to me; "The moment the Rebels seem likely to overpower us, I will start every one of my slaves for Iowa and Illinois. It would ruin me pecuniarily, but not one of them shall ever be left to the mercy of the Secessionists." Another, who has one hundred and thirty-seven slaves, declares that if necessary, he will cheerfully give up the last one to aid the Union cause.

The Louisville Courier says that Camp Dick Robinson is constantly increasing in number. A negro yesterday swam the river at this point, passing over the falls and landing perfectly naked in Camp Joe Holt. The negro expressed himself as being the property of Col. Johnston, of Camp Boone, Tennessee. He was this morning returned under a file of soldiers to Jefferson county jail.

Col. Rousseau has given Col. Johnston notice of the fact.

The Horicon [Wis.] Gazette says:

The First Regiment brought home with them a few of that species of the genus homo now known as 'contrabands.' One of them has found a home in this village. We learn that when the boys, who came home to stay over last Sabbath, went back to Milwaukee, this gentleman was anxious to accompany them, so that he could as he said, 'get his disgrace.' He finally did not go in 'to get his disgrace,' but a certain white member of the company got his. That is to say, if being treated to a ride out of camp on a rail is a disgrace.

At Washington on the 5th inst., a Breckinridge Democrat arrested a colored teamster in the employ of the Government, charging that he was a fugitive slave. Before night the teamster was released, and his captor was sent to jail.

SUMMARY.

The following appears in the Washington "Star" of Sept. 7th.

A serious outrage was committed last Saturday evening at the head of Pennsylvania Avenue, opposite the Capitol gate, which has not received proper notice. A colored man by the name of Albert Young, residing in the alley immediately in the rear of No. 557 Pennsylvania Avenue, was either returning home or leaving the same, when he was fired upon by some unknown person standing near the sidewalk on the street leading to railroad depot, as related by some boys who witnessed the affair. The shot missed, when he was horribly beaten on and about the head with the stock of the pistol, some parts of which were found on the spot, (apparently a large horse pistol.) He was carried to his home insensible, and still remains delirious, with but slight hopes of recovery. Much difficulty was experienced in getting a physician to dress his wounds, but finally Dr. Wallace volunteered his services, and took especial care to make him as comfortable as possible. He has a wife and several children, and the case surely needs investigation by the authorities. This murderous assault happened about nine o'clock in the evening.

In the Pittsburg "Dispatch" of the 2nd instant, we find the following particulars of a horrible accident occurring in that city. We have learned that the girl has since died:—

A colored girl named Williams employed as a domestic in the house of Mrs. Winters on Third Street, below Market, was dreadfully burned on Saturday about noon, by her clothes taking fire. She was filling a lamp with carbon oil, holding it over the stove plate, and spilling some of the oil, it ignited and quickly communicated to her clothing. She ran into the street screaming for help, Dr. Murdoch, who was standing on the corner of Market and Third, ran to her assistance, and extinguished the flames by throwing her into the gutter and himself upon her. Her clothing were completely consumed, her skeleton skirt only remaining, and her body burned from the neck to the ankles, deeply in many places. Dr. Murdoch had his right hand badly burned and his coat much scorched. He attended the unfortunate girl, prescribing and doing all in his power for her relief. Although apparently comfortable on Saturday evening her recovery was considered improbable. Mrs. Winters, we understand, was very anxious that the girl should be taken to an Hospital, and at first refused to procure the necessary dressing, sheets, &c., for her.

The Albany "Knickerbocker" of the 2d instant says:—Last week we mentioned the arrest of a colored man named Jones, on the charge of stealing a pair of barbers' chairs. He set up a shop on Broadway, and a few days subsequently started for Schenectady, carrying the chairs, which were borrowed, with him. He was arrested at Schenectady, brought to this city, examined and discharged.

A day or two subsequently to this transaction another colored gentleman named William Satterly arrived in this city from Utica. He desired to set up a barber's shop, and hearing of the place vacated by Jones, made application for a lease of the premises. They were rented to him. He run the machine until Saturday evening, when a telegraph was received here from Officer Richardson, of Utica, requesting the arrest of Satterly on a charge of seduction. Patrollman Wood and Special Officer Kyle effected the arrest of Satterly. He was taken to the Station House and locked up. During the evening Officer Richardson arrived here, took Satterly in custody and returned on the late train west Saturday night.

In Philadelphia on the evening of the 10th ult., at Fourth and South streets, at seven o'clock, David Recco, a colored lad, aged twelve years, attempted to jump from the platform of a passenger railway car while in motion. In doing so, he fell and was run over, the wheels passing over his right leg and left foot, injuring them in such a manner that amputation of both will be necessary. He was taken to the drug store of Mr. DeLacy, where he received immediate attention, and was afterwards removed to the Pennsylvania Hospital.

The following items appear in the police reports of the Washington "Star," of Sept. 6th:—

This morning James Bryan [colored,] and Samuel Price [white,] were arrested for cutting into a building near the Treasury where patterns are kept. They were brought before Justice Donn for a hearing. Price was used as a witness and testified that Bryan cut the window loose, hoisted it, and went in. Bryan was committed for court, and Price held to bail as a witness. Both were arrested by the Provost Guard.

J. D. Lacey was arrested for selling liquor to soldiers, and also for having a colored man concealed in his cellar. He was sent to jail for a further hearing.

The transfer of the passengers and crew of the prize schooner Remittance into the custody of the Marshal of the District is noticed in our Navy Yard report of to-day. Their names are Alexander Johnson, Edward Saunders, Charles A. Yates, John P. Richardson, R. S. Mitchell, J. H. M. Burroughs, Thomas F. Burroughs, J. F. Bradley, William Posey, colored, and Henry Luckett, colored. All were taken to the county jail, but Mr. Yates was immediately brought over to the City Hall, where he was examined before Mr. William R. Woodward, one of the Prize Commissioners. He states that the crew of the schooner consisted of the captain, J. H. M. Burroughs, and one other white man, and two colored men, all of Charles county. He, [Mr. Yates,] was only a passenger, having two hogsheads of tobacco on board, shipped at Port Tobacco, and being taken to Baltimore. His wife has with her all the money, and seems to manifest considerable anxiety. His examination was not concluded when our reporter left.

The Harrisburg "Patriot" of the sixth instant, says:—A colored lad, whose name we did not learn, residing in the Sixth Ward, had his arm broken on Wednesday morning by being struck on the arm by another boy. Surgical aid was immediately procured and the boy attended to.

The Harrisburg, (Pa.,) "Telegraph" comments as below on the case of the four women whipped at Baltimore, an account of which we published in our last.

Four free colored women were whipped in Baltimore last week, by order of a police-justice. They received ten stipes each upon the bare back, well laid on with an additional five for one woman, who is said to have complained too loudly of the first ten. In the same city free white men and women are engaged openly in treason against the Federal Government, but an oath of allegiance instead of a thong or a lash, is administered as their severest punishment. How beautiful are the distinctions of justice in a christian and civilized land!

The Chicago "Journal" of the 30th ult., says:—

James Mails, colored, son of the notorious "Mother Mails," proprietress of a "dive" on Wells Street was arrested last night in a series of performances bordering on assault, incendiarism and murder rather too closely to be interesting. His playful antics were breaking a chair on his mother's head, throwing a lighted lamp under the bed and setting that article on fire, winding up with a desperate attempt to end his maternal relations by cutting his mother's jugular with a razor. He was fined fifty dollars, and sent to the stone heap for thirty days, by the magistrates.

The following named persons were elected officers for the ensuing year, of the Fugitive Aid Society Cleveland at the meeting on the 26th ult.; President, James T. Alston, Vice President, M. Gregory; Treasurer, Joseph Williams; Secretary, B. S. Green.

One of the chief objects of this Society is to guard the public against impostors.

The Philadelphia Inquirer of 31st ult. says:—

In the New York Herald, of last Saturday, there was a statement that two colored regiments were organized in this city. This is a mistake. There is a military company formed by a social club of the more wealthy and educated colored men here, but no contemplation of any other organization of the kind.

A colored man, named Graham, a grain carrier, fell into the river, at Dock street wharf, Philadelphia, on the evening of the 26th ult. and was drowned. His body was recovered, in ten minutes, by Officer Elliot and Fleming, but life was extinct. The Coroner was summoned to hold an inquest. Verdict, accidentally drowned.

Wm. Woodward, the colored man who killed a member of the Seventy-ninth New York [Highland] regiment in Georgetown some time since, and who escaped from prison, and was subsequently recaptured, died in jail on Saturday afternoon 24th ult. The wound he received while scaling the wall of the prison in making his escape was probably the cause of his death.

In Philadelphia, according to the Press of 3rd ult:—

A crowd of colored men and boys engaged in a disgraceful row at Sixth and Spruce streets on Sunday night 1st inst. during which knives and other deadly weapons were freely used. Two white men were badly cut. A number of the rioters were arrested, and yesterday morning committed to prison.

The Pittsburg Dispatch of Sept. 3d contains the following item:

On Monday Louisa Howard, a colored girl, made information before Mayor Drum, charging Benjamin Jefferson, also colored, with seduction under promise of marriage. The prosecutrix alleges that the defendant still further aggravated his offence by circulating the most scandalous stories in relation to her. Jefferson was arrested and held to bail for a further hearing on Tuesday.

On Friday morning 23rd ult. at Washington, Charles Roberts and Walter Bundy, two sprightly colored boys, were arrested by a soldier of the second dragoons, and taken before Justice Donn, for fast driving in the streets, cursing, swearing, drawing a pistol on white persons, and breaking the street lamps. Roberts, being a slave, was sentenced to twelve stripes; Bundy, being free, was sent to jail.

At Washington Thursday evening 22nd ult. about 8 o'clock, a colored man named Dobson who resides in Fifteenth st., fell from a horse which he was riding, at the corner of Fourteenth and F. sts. He was picked up and laid in a convenient place near by, and a physician sent for, who promptly arrived, and after examining the body discovered that life was extinct. It was presumed that the neck of the unfortunate man was broken by the fall, or that the horse trod upon him afterward.

The Paris Star says: On Thursday, 13th inst., a colored man in the employment of Dr. McGeorge, at Aye fell from a loft into a threshing machine in full operation. One of his legs was so much injured below the knee as to necessitate amputation. The operation was skillfully performed by Drs. Caw and Bell. The patient is doing well.

Mary Naylor, a slave, who was to have been hung at Annapolis, Md., on Friday, for the murder of her master, has been respited. She will be executed on the fourth of October, unless the Governor shall deem it proper to further interpose executive clemency.

On Thursday evening, the 6th instant, an infant about one month old was left with a colored woman, at Broad and Market Streets, Philadelphia, by an unknown white woman, who forgot to return for the little one. It was taken charge of by a neighbor.

At Green Bay, Wis., on the 12th ult., Frank, a little son of Mr. Thomas James (barber) was drowned. He was missed from the shop only a few minutes, when his father found his hat floating in the slip, and feeling round with a stick, found the body. He was about four years old.

A colored man in the employ of Wm. Rogers, in Sussex county, Del., had the calf of one of his legs cut off by a threshing machine on Friday, 26th ult. Three doctors were in attendance, but the efforts to save life proved unavailing, as the flow of blood could not be stopped.

The Somerset, (Maryland,) Herald says that whilst Mr. Renshaw, a few nights since, in company with several other gentlemen, visited a negro hut, where one of his slaves was secreted, the negro seeing the white men approaching, threw an axe at them, inflicting a severe wound on the right shoulder of Mr. Renshaw. The negro escaped.

Some excitement was created at the Boston custom house, on Wednesday afternoon, the 28th ult., owing to the rumor that a vessel was about to sail with powder for the South. The matter was investigated, and the officers found that the schooner Austin had on board six cases of powder, which the captain had smuggled, and was intending to take to Hayti. It was immediately surrendered.

The body of Washington Gaines, colored, who fell overboard at Lombard street wharf Philadelphia, a few days since from the sloop Great Western, was recovered on Saturday night. The coroner held an inquest.

On Wednesday the 21st ult., a young colored man, son of James Jackson was drowned in the creek at the Head of the Vleigh, Flushing. While crossing the creek, the boat which he was in was upset, and he was drowned. Coroner Trunk held an inquest on the body.

Gerrit Smith has generously donated five dollars to each of the families of the volunteers of the town of Cazenovia.

The Philadelphia dailies of last week contain the following announcement:

DIED.—At Mobile, 5th ult., Colonel Shadrach F. Slater, a noted slave-dealer, and the "Legree" of Uncle Tom's Cabin.

By an advertisement in the "Examiner" it appears that two hundred "white" girls are wanted in Richmond to make cartridges.

A little colored boy, while fishing in the Feeder, at Trenton, N. J, on the 21st ult., slipped from a log and was drowned.

A colored baby six or seven weeks old, was found on the step of a house in Somerset st. Boston, one evening last week.

Mr. Hamilton, a Canadian, and a fighting man in our Mexican war, three months ago offered to our Government a brigade of five thousand colored men, to be raised in Canada West.

While the steamboat Ella was lying at Stamford on Saturday 31st ult. the stewardess, an Irish girl, set her clothes on fire while trying to fill a lighted fluid lamp, and was burned to death. The cook a colored woman named Emma Willet was so badly burned in trying to put out the flames, that she lived but a short time.

IN MEMORIAM.

At a meeting of the Petersonian Literary Association, held Tuesday evening, September 10th, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas—God, in his infinite wisdom and goodness, has seen fit to remove from our midst our worthy member and late officer, Charles S. Esto, be it

Resolved—That we tender to the family of deceased our heartfelt sympathies in this their bereavement, and hope that their loss is his eternal gain.

Resolved—That we abstain from all places of amusements, and wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved—That a copy of these resolutions, properly engrossed, be transmitted to the family of deceased, and likewise be published in the Anglo-African.

PERSONAL.

The world-renowned colored tragedian, Ira Aldridge, K. S., is about to proceed to Russia to undertake a series of those Shakespearean performances which have been crowned with such brilliant success in numerous foreign capitals. He will fulfill engagements in various parts of Prussia, Austria, and Russian Poland, as well as in Moscow, St. Petersburg, and Odessa; and overtures have been made him to appear in Paris, under illustrious patronage.

The Rochester "Democrat," of the 4th inst. says:

Our townsman, Frederick Douglass, speaks in Fairport, Thursday evening, on the war. He will probably be more hopeful than in some of his late speeches. The gradual tendency of events towards the freedom of his race, has given light even to his dark countenance.

LOVE, PIETY AND TRUTH.—The first of a course of lectures will be delivered by Daniel R. Seaton, of Buffalo, on Thursday evening next, the 19th instant, under the patronage of Fountain Union Lodge, No. 1, I. O. of G. S. and D. of S., at their Hall, corner of Broome and Forsyth Streets. Subject, Virtue and Truth—the public are cordially invited to come. Admission free.

Rev. Henry M. Wilson is now Assistant Secretary of the African Civilization Society, No. 26 Bible House.

Office hours Monday, Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, from ten A. M. till two P. M.

As many letters are sent to his care for different persons in this city, it would be well for parties expecting letters to call at Mr. Wilson's Office.

Brother Henry Stafford, a colored man, of Chatham, Canada West, was ordained an elder, July 24th, in Wright, Mich.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

The colored man who left a pocket knife in an Eighth Avenue car, on Sunday evening Sept. 8th, may obtain the same, after proving property, by calling at the office of the Anglo-African.

If this should meet the eye of Mrs. Anthony B. Fisher, she would confer a favor by leaving her address at the office of this paper.

DIED.

ROGERS.—At Newark, N. J., Sept. 2d, Emily E. infant daughter of Miller N. and Sarah E. Rogers, aged 1 year.

"As the sweet flowers that scents the morn,
But withers in the rising day:
Thus lovely was this infant's dawn,
Thus swiftly fled its life away."

Special Notices.

T. B. VOORHEES

GRAND MOONLIGHT FESTIVAL, CONCERT

AND

PROMENADE,

Will take place by an excursion up the Hudson River,

ON MONDAY EVE'G SEPT. 16th, 1861.

Returning in seasonable time. The steamer Col. ELLSWORTH and the commodious double-decked Barge CLEVELAND have been chartered, and will be Brilliantly Illuminated on the occasion.

The Grand Orchestra will be under the direction of Prof. R. H. BROWN; Solos, Violin and Cornet, Overtures; and O. FAKES, Sleigh Ride Quadrille Songs, Choruses, Duetts, &c. by Messrs. J. W. and A. A. Luca D. Dangerfield, Helen Johnson, and several amateurs have volunteered their services.

FLOOR MANAGERS.

Messrs. J. White, J. H. Freeman, B. Elston, Wm. Freeman, and T. B. Voorhees.

TICKETS FIFTY CENTS EACH,

to be had of Mr. Harris, 465 Broome St., Mr. Kelly, 53 Mercer St., r. George, 85 Mercer St., Mr. Brown's saloon, 70 Bleecker St., Mr. E G. Hutchinson, Everett House, Mr. Jas. H. Johnson, 141 West 28th St.

Refreshments in Abundance at Reasonable Prices.

The Barge will lay at the foot of Spring St. while the steamer lands as follows:—Broome St., E.R. 6 o'clock, P.M.; South Fourth St. Williamsburgh, 6½; Fulton Ferry, Brooklyn, 17; Sussex St, Jersey City, 7; Spring St., N. Y., 7½; 22d St, 18; 30th St., 8½.

Should it rain on the 16th, it will take place on the next fair evening.

An Efficient Police Force will accompany the Excursion.

For particulars, see circulars.

Get your Tickets early so as to prevent delay at the landings.

THE PROPOSED NEW BOOK OF MARTYRS.

For the above work the undersigned would state; in answer to numerous inquiries, that he wishes to collect full and accurate accounts of all cases of abuse growing out of SLAVERY, of the loss of time, property and life, whether among whites, Indians, or blacks. He is not particular as to the length of the articles, for, when we come to the publication, it may be best to abridge some statements; but the original communications will be carefully preserved and placed in some historical collection for preservation and reference. Whatever will serve to illustrate or add interest to the statements, such as photographs or engravings, or autographs of the persons, or maps and plans of the localities named, will be thankfully received and carefully preserved. If the case has been published in the papers, or in pamphlets or books, please make reference to them or forward them. Names of persons, places, and dates, which, if divulged would involve the parties in difficulty, may be withheld in the communication. Let every one send on what he or she may have to communicate as early as possible. We shall feel greatly obliged to Editors who will copy this advertisement and give it a favorable notice, and all who will promptly respond to this call will receive our hearty thanks.

Address, L. G. OLMSTEAD, New York.

INFORMATION WANTED in regard to Alexander or Sandy Hogan, son of Betsey Hogan. He left the service of Mr. Jenkins in Baltimore, in June, 1859, and came to the North to solicit money to purchase the freedom of his wife. He is believed to have been in Birmingham, N. Y., about five weeks ago. Skin light brown. An aged mother is anxious to ascertain his whereabouts, and will be grateful for information sent to Wm. Still, 107 North-Fifth street, Philadelphia.

Anti-slavery papers please copy. 3t.

Letters or newspapers for Hayti or Jamaica will be promptly forwarded if left with Mr. N. R Ashby, at Lewis & Co.'s store, 24 South Street New York.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

A NEW WORK

TO BE READY ABOUT THE 25TH OF SEPT.,

REPORT OF THE NIGER VALLEY

EXPLORING PARTY,

BY

M. R. DELANY, CHIEF COMMISSIONER.

CONTENTS.

Political Movements.
Succeeding Convention.
History of the Project.
Arrival and reception in Liberia.
Liberia—Climate, Soil, Productions.
Diseases—Cause, Remedy.
The Interior.
Topography, Climate, &c.
Diseases of this part of Africa.
Treatment, Hygeine, &c.
Missionary Influences.
What Africa now Requires to Direct Legitimate Commerce.
Cotton Staple.
Success in Great Britain.
Commercial Relations in Scotland.
The time to go to Africa.

Complete in sections (chapters) consecutively from I to XVI, being most conveniently arranged in cut-in or side marginal notes, embracing every subject therein treated, so that in an instant any point or paragraph of interest may be at once cited to.

A learned and candid gentleman who has resided many years in Africa, after glancing over the proof sheets, pronounced it the most interesting and instructive work ever issued on that subject, and should be in the hands of every friend of Africa. It is a complete text-book.

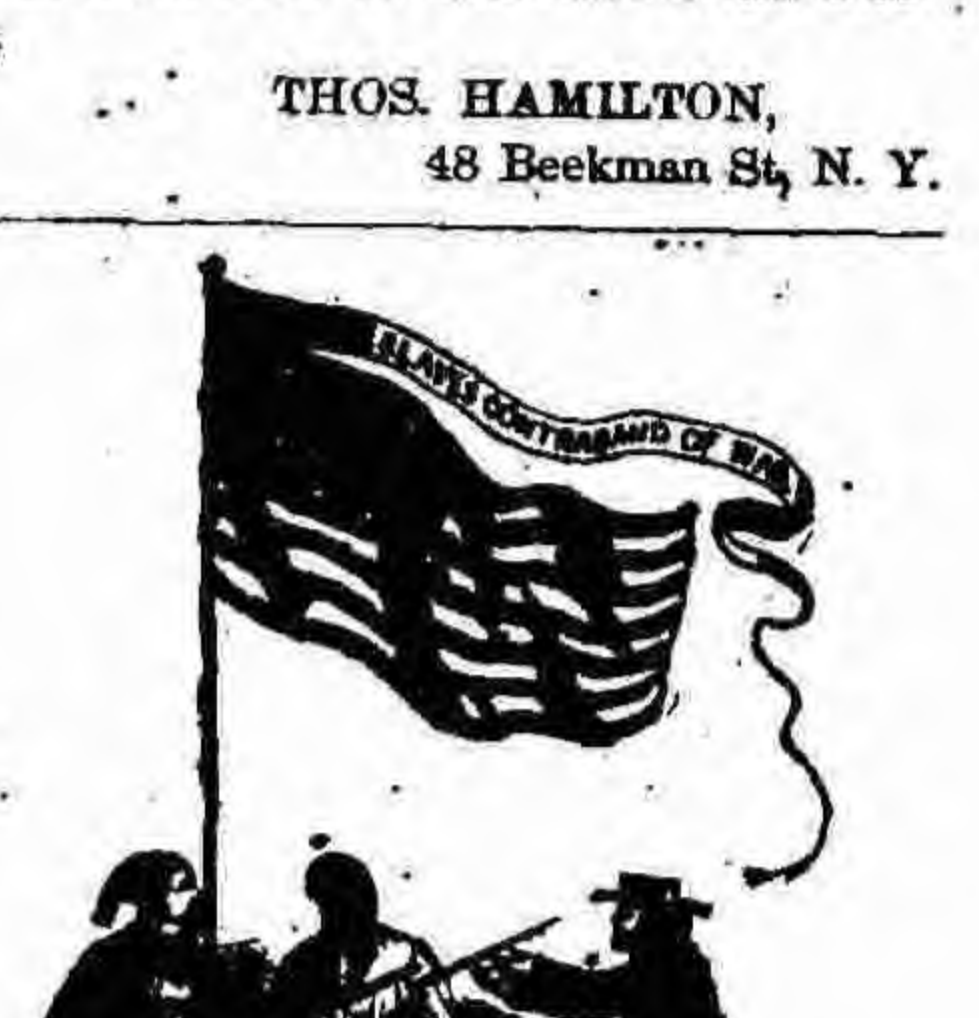
The work contains 72 large pages, and will be sold at the low price of

TWENTY-FIVE CENTS PER COPY.

All Orders should be addressed to the Publisher,

THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St, N. Y.



THE ZOUAVE AND SLAVE ENVELOPE. Price per thousand $5; per hundred 60 cents; packages of 25 each, 20 cents. Orders should be addressed

THOS. HAMILTON
48 Beekman Street, N. Y.

PRIVATE BOARDING HOUSE

BY

MRS. W. S. WILKINS &.Co.,

610 PINE, ABOVE SIXTH STREET,
PHILADELPHIA 7-13t.

LADIES' FURNISHING STORE.

CHILDREN'S CLOTHING

READY-MADE AND MADE TO ORDER, BY

MRS. S. WILKINS & CO.,

610 Pine, above Sixth Street, Philadelphia.
7-13t.

A SCHOOL WANTED.—A YOUNG LADY, a graduate of one of the High Schools of this State, and who is fully qualified as a teacher, is desirous of obtaining a school where the salary would not be less than $200 a-year. Address, Thos. Hamilton, 48 Beekman St., N.Y.

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION. THE UNdersigned respectfully announces that he is now prepared to give instruction in the ART OF SINGING. He will be at home at 187 Navy Street, Brooklyn, on MONDAY EVENING, and at ZION CHURCH, N. Y., on THURSDAY EVENING, of each week. Ladies or Gentlemen desiring instruction, will please apply immediately. Singing schools taught and private instruction given on moderate terms.

3tf. ROBT. HAMILTON,

NEW SAILOR'S HOME. CHARLES M. FORTES, has opened a pleasant home for Seamen, at 26 MULBERRY STREET, N. Y., Seamen will find this a very desirable house, as it is in a central location, and every provision made for their comfort.

Boarding by the day, or week. Terms moderate. 31y

WANTED AT TILMAN'S AGENCY, NO. 70 East 13th Street, one door east of 4th Ave., first class colored help, and none else. Cooks, house-workers, chambermaids, waitresses and laundresses, coachmen, waiters, &c. Now is the time; fall is near and good help wanted for city and country. 5—4t

MRS. E. CLARKE, IS HAPPY TO ANnounce to her friends and the public, that she has opened her new BOARDING HOUSE, and will be very thankful for their patronage, at No. 66 SULLIVAN STREET, NEW YORK. 4-1t

DENTISTRY.

BEAUTIFUL ARTIFICIAL SETS OF TEETH on gold or silver plate on the most improved style. All other Surgical operations, performed to entire satisfaction, on very moderate terms by G. H. GRICE, Surgeon Dentist.

79 Thompson St., N. Y.

MRS. E. LEONARD,

FASHIONABLE

DRESS MAKER,

25 SULLIVAN STREET, NEW YORK.

Receives monthly the latest Paris Fashions.

3t.

BOARDING AND LODGING.

BY MRS. MARY JOHNSON, 120 West 29th Street, New York. This house is very pleasantly situated in a very healthy and convenient part of the city.

Boarding for Ladies, [illegible]
" " Gentleman, [illegible]
Lodging per week, [illegible]

JAMES R. W. LEONARD,

CARD AND JOB PRINTER,

219 CENTRE STREET, NEW YORK.

THE BEST DRESSING FOR THE HAIR during warm weather, is White's vegetable extract. For Sale at 16 Sullivan and 30 Grand Sts.,

BOARDING AND LODGING ON THE EAST Side. [illegible] and Gentlemen, [illegible] Terms very moderate.

BROWN'S POPULAR RESORT.

The undersigned takes the privilege of [illegible] Friends and the public generally that he has recently fitted up his SALOON anew, he [illegible] prepared to furnish them with Ice Cream, Fruit, and other [illegible]

BENJ. F. [illegible]
70 Bleecker St
between Broadway & Crosby St.

WARRANTED TO CURE A HEADACHE in 10 minutes. White's [illegible] For sale at 66 West Broadway, [illegible] and Frankfort Sts.

Poetry.

DENIES THE SOFT IMPEACHMENT.

One of our native poets, tickeled at a little circumstance that happened in his family, in a sentimental fit rushed into print with it, and attempted to father it upon the carelessness of St. Peter but that custodian, it will be seen, denies the soft impeachment. The two "jims" are passing among the current literature of the day:

MY CHILD'S ORIGIN.

One night as old St. Peter slept,
He left the door of Heaven ajar,
When through a little angel crept,
And came down with a falling star.

One summer, as the blessed beams
Of morn approached, my blushing bride,
Awakened from some pleasant dreams,
And found that angel by her side.

God grant but this—I ask no more,
That when he leaves this world of sin,
He'll wing his way to that blessed shore,
And find the door of Heaven again.

ST. PETER'S REPLY.

Full eighteen hundred years or more
I've kept my doors securely tied,
There is no "little angel" strayed,
Nor has been missing all the while.

I did not sleep, as you supposed,
Nor leave the door of Heaven ajar;
Nor has a "little angel" left,
And gone down with a falling star.

Go ask that "blushing bride" and see
If she won't frankly own and say:
That when she found that angel babe,
She found it by the good old way.

God grant but this—I ask no more,
That should your number be enlarged,
That you will not do as before,
And lay it to old Peter's charge.

St Peter.

THE CONTRABANDS AT NEWPORT NEWS.

CONTRABANDS SINGING.

It is one of the most striking incidents of this war to listen to the singing of the groups of colored people in Fortress Monroe, who gather at their resorts after nightfall. Last evening, having occasion to "visit" an officer of the garrison in his tent, I passed around by the fortress chapel and adjacent yard, where most of the "contraband" tents are spread.

There were hundreds of men of all ages scattered around. In one tent they were singing in order, one man leading, as extemporaneous chorister, while some ten or twelve others joined in the chorus. The hymn was long and plaintive, as usual, and the air was one of the sweetest minors I ever listened to. It would have touched many a heart if sung in the audiences who appreciate the simple melody of nature, fresh and warm from the heart. One verse ran thus:—

"Shout along, children!
Shout along, children!
Hear the dying Lamb:
Oh, take your nets and follow me,
For I died for you upon the tree!
Shout along, children!
Shout along, children!
Hear the dying Lamb!"

Passing into the yard, I found a large company standing in the open air around a slow fire. One young man sat on the end of a rude seat, "with a little book in his hand." It had been much fingered, and he was stooping down toward the dim blaze of the fire, to make out the words, as he lined them for the singers. Where he had learned to read I know not, but where some others of his companions will learn to read I do know. The singers were dressed in all manner of garbs, and stood leaning around in all kinds of attitudes. As the reader progressed, one young man threw a few fresh hoops on the fire, and then, as the reading became more distinct, I caught the words:—

"Could I but climb on Pisgah's top,
And view the promised land,
My flesh itself would long to drop
At my dear Lord's command.

"This living grace on earth we owe
To Jesus' dying love.
We would be only his below,
And reign with him above."

FEARFUL APPARITION.

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN.

In a very wild and remote region of the Scottish Highlands there stood on a rocky height, an old fortress.

One stormy evening, in harvest, its lord looked from his window into the darkness, and over the well guarded court of the castle, towards the opposite hills, where the tops of the trees, still visible, rustled and waved in the dark blue heavens. The rivulet in the valley sent forth a wild and strange sound and the creaking weathercock clattered and brawled, as if chiding the storm.

The scene and the hour were congenial to the mind of the lord of the castle. He was no longer the mild and indulgent master. His only daughter had fled from the fortress with a handsome youth, far inferior to her in birth, but a sweeter singer and harp player than any inhabitant of the wild Highlands; and, soon after their flight, the lover was found dashed to pieces in the bottom of a rocky valley, into which, in the darkness of the night, he had fallen. Thereupon the daughter, by an unknown pilgrim, sent a letter to her father, saying that, night having robbed her of her lover, her eyes were opened to her fault; that she had retired to a convent, to do the most severe penance, and that he would never see her more. From this event the lord of the castle had become as obdurate as the surrounding rocks, and as unfeeling as the stony pavement of his fortress.

As he now looked from the window, he saw in the yard a lantern move backwards and forwards, as if in the hand of some one who, with tottering steps, stole across the arena. Angrily he called out "Who goes there?" for his domestics had strict orders to let no one within the walls; and since the flight of the young lady, these commands were so rigidly obeyed, it seemed as if lifeless stones alone dwelt within.

To the lord of the castle there came a soft voice.

"An old woman," it said, "begs some food, noble knight."

But the humble demand was impetuously refused.

"Spy—vagrant witch!" were the appellations showered upon the beggar; and because she did not immediately retire, but reiterated her petition with a fervent, though weak voice, the knight in the wildness of his wrath, called on his blood hounds to hunt the beggar woman away.

Wildly did the ferocious dogs rush forth, but scarcely had they approached the old woman, when she touched the strongest and fiercest with a slender wand. The domestics who had come out expected that the savage dog would tear her in pieces, but, howling, he turned, and the others laid themselves down whining before the beggar.

Again the lord of the castle urged them on; but they only howled and moaned, and lay still.

A strange shuddering seized him, which redoubled when the old woman raised her lantern on high, and her long white hair appeared waving in the storm, while with a sad and threatening voice, she exclaimed:

"Thou in the heavens, who seest and hearest."

Trembling, the knight retired from the window, and ordered his domestics to give her what she demanded. The domestics, frightened at the apparition, placed some food without in a basket, and then secured the doors, all the while repeating prayers, until they heard the strange old woman carry away the food. As she stepped out of the castle gate, the hounds moaned mysteriously after her.

From this time regularly, every third evening, the lantern was seen in the castle yard, and no sooner did the strange twinkling begin to be visible through the darkness, and the light steps to be heard to totter softly over the pavement, than the lord of the castle hastened back from the window, and the domestics put out the basket of food, and the hounds moaned sorrowfully as the apparition vanished.

One day—it was now the beginning of winter—the knight followed the chase in the wildest part of the mountains. Suddenly his hounds darted up a steep height, and, expecting a good capture at the risk of imminent danger, he forced his shuddering horse over the stony, slippery ground. Before a cavern in the middle of the ascent, the hounds stood still; but how felt the knight when the figure of a woman stepped to the mouth of the abyss and with a stick drove back the dogs. From the silvery locks of the woman, as well as from the restless and low moanings of the hounds, and his own internal feelings, he soon perceived that in this drear spot the lantern bearer stood before him.

Half frantic, he turned his horse's head buried his spurs in its side, and galloped down the steep, accompanied by the yelling hounds, towards the castle.

Soon after this strange occurrence, the lantern was no longer seen in the court of the castle. They waited one day—several days—a whole week passed over; but the apparition was no longer seen.

If its first appearance had alarmed the lord of the Castle and his domestics, its disappearance occasioned still more consternation.

They believed that the former prognosticated some dreadful event, which the latter betokened to be near. On the knight this anticipation had a dreadful effect; he became pale and haggard, and his countenance assumed such a disturbed appearance, the inmates of the castle were sure that the apparation fearful gave warning of his death. It was not so.

One day as was his custom, the knight rode to the chase, and in his present distraction of mind, he approached, unaware, that part of the country where the old woman with white hair had appeared to him, and which he from that time had with great care avoided. Again the dogs sprang up the height, howling, and looking fearfully into the cavern.—The affrighted baron in vain called them back. They stood as if fascinated on the dreadful spot; but on this occasion no one appeared to chase them away. They then crept into the cavern, and from its dark bosom the knight still heard their moanings and cries.

At last he summoned resolution, sprung from his horse, and with determined courage, clambered up the steep hight. Advancing into the cavern he beheld the hounds crouched round a wretched, mossy couch, on which the dead body of a woman lay stretched out.

On drawing near her, he recognized the pure white hair of the former lantern bearer. The little horn lantern stood near her, on the ground, and the features were those of his only child.

More slowly than the faithful hounds, who from the beginning knew their young mistress, did the unhappy knight become aware of whom he saw before him; but to dispute every doubt, there lay on the breast of the dead body, a paper on which, with her own blood, her hand had traced the following words:

"In three nights the wanderer's hair became white through grief for the death of her lover. She saw it in the brooks. Her hair he had often called a net, in which his life was entangled. Net and life were both by one stroke destroyed. She then thought of those holy ones of the church, who in humility have lived unknown and despised beneath the parental roof, and, as a penance, she has besought alms from her father's castle, and lived among the rocks from which her lover fell. But her penance draws near its end, the crimson stream falls. Ah fath——"

She would have written "father," but the stream was exhausted, which with unspeakable sorrow the knight perceived had issued from a deep wound in her left arm.

He was found by his servants near the corpse, in silent prayer, his hounds moaning beside him. He buried his daughter in the cavern, from which he never afterwards came out. The unhappy hermit forced every one from him; his faithful dogs alone he could not drive away; and mournful they watched together by the side of their young mistress, and beside their sorrowing lord, and when he also died, their sad howlings first made it known to the surrounding country.

A CALL TO THE HARD SHELL MINISTRY.

Somebody is always telling stories about the "Hard Shell Baptists." Wags have the run on them, and they may as well be content and bear it. Here follows a tale told of them long since. My informant locates it in the mountains of North Carolina, where the Hard Shells are quite numerous, and where they believe pretty strongly in dreams and voices. In the important matter of a call to the ministry, a dream of a voice is almost indispensable.

Now it came to pass that a man by the name of Walker felt himself considerably moved to "hold forth," and kept "spreading the fleece," Gideon-like, to ascertain his duty in the important premises. To assist him in his pious investigations, he called at a still house one evening to get some of the "good critter." After refreshment, the story runs, he left for home, and on the way he felt "moved" to go into the grove, a few hundred yards from the road, "thar to wrastle on the subject." While he was "wrastlin" most earnestly, scarcely outdone by the patriarch, some one passed the road with a long-eared animal, politely called John Donkey, and John let off, as his race is wont to do sometimes, in a most moving and thrilling manner.

Walker's imagination, by his earnest "wrastlin," was brought up to great intensity, and he converted Major John's discordant music, which, to most men, resembles the filing of a saw-mill saw, into a call from Heaven, urging him to preach the Gospel. No time was to be lost. He rose from his knees duly commissioned, went to his church, and demanded a license, when the parson interrogated him thus:

Parson. Do you believe, Brother Walker, that you are called of God to preach, "as was Aaron?"

Walker. Most sartinly, I does.

Parson. Give the church, that is the brethren, the proof.

Walker. I was mightily diffikiltied, and I was determined to go into the woods and wrastle it out.

Parson. That's it Bro. Walker.

Walker. And while there 'wrastlin,' Jacob like, I hearn one ov the curiousest voices I uver hearn in all my borned days.

Parson. You are on the right track, Brother Walker, go on with your noration.

Walker. I couldn't tell, for the life ov me, whether the voice was up in the air, or down in the sky, it sounded so curious.

Parson. Poor creatur, how he was diffikilted. Go on to norate. How did it appear to sound unto you?

Walker. Why this a-way: "Waw-waw ker—waw-waw-ker! Go preach, go preach, go preach, go preach-ee, go preach-ah, go go preach un, go preach-ah-uh-ee uh-ah-ee.

Parson. Bruthering and sistern, that's the right sort of a call. Enough said, Bro. Walker. That's none of yer college calls No doctor ov divinity uver got such a call as that. Brother Walker must have a license fur sartin and fur sure.

The license was granted, the story goes, and Walker is now, doubtless, making the mountains ring with his stentorian lungs.

[From the Cornhill (Eng.) Magazine.]

THE HORRORS OF DELIRIUM TREMENS.

I was quickly called to attend Saltoun in a severe attack of delirium tremens. There lay the strong man, raving of devils and snakes, as he expressed it, creeping things innumerable both small and great; his face flushed, his eyes blood-shot and glistening; his tongue bitten through, and his black lips streaked with foam. He was struggling with imaginary demons, and shouting at the top of his voice that he was devil-possessed, and that his time was come to go to utter darkness. "Oh devils of the air, how they glare at me! Messengers of Satan sent to buffet me. I'll have it out yet. Off, off I say! Crawl, crawl, creep, creep." Then would ensue a fearful paroxysm, and he would make snatches at the bed-clothes, or cower beneath them, or peep over the edge of the bed, with an expression of horror and fright difficult to forget—murderous in its terror. It required the utmost efforts of able men to keep him down in bed. Now, unless physical force be applied so as not only to be perfectly adequate, but also to appear overwhelming, I have always found it productive of more harm than good; so, after repeated trials, I adopted the plan of keeping him in a recumbent position by means of strong webbing across his chest, which was fastened down to the sides of the bed. He made several attempts, when he broke loose by accident, to throw himself out of the window.

He told me afterwards that he perfectly remembered this, that he did it, not for the desire of suicide, which he afterwards experienced, but that he felt the conviction of being able to float painlessly on the air. His screams and yells were awful, and when they ceased he gabbled incessantly; it seemed a veritable diarrhœa of words, sometimes in senseless soliloquy, sometimes in ejaculations addressed to the imaginary beings which crowded his chamber; imploring their pity, or deprecating their insults. Throughout consciousness was, as it were, broken up into fragments, exhibiting an utter absence of that alternate continuity which I have had occasion to remark, as present in genuine insanity. In brain fever the same incoherency is generally noticeable. When he became a little more quiet, he was the prey of universal dread, in which every sound, all the relations of existence seemed to inspire him with a nameless fear. For this he did not attempt to assign any reasonable cause; and it was pitiable to see how he would start and tremble even at the shutting of the door on the entrance of his servant into the room. The delirium ran its course, leaving him in a state of settled dejection. For days he would, if allowed, sit dumb and motionless, apparently without desire or will; his arms folded, his head sunk on his chest, and his eyes fixed on the ground with an expression of the deepest gloom; the utmost that could be extracted from him in reply to any question, was "yes," or "no."

HAVOC OF LIFE BY WAR.

It is difficult to conceive what fearful havoc war has made of human life. Some of its incidental ravages seems to defy all belief. It has at times entirely depopulated immense districts. In modern as well as ancient times, large tracts have been left so utterly desolate that a traveler might pass from village to village, even from city to city, without finding a solitary inhabitant. The war of 1756, waged in the heart of Europe, left in one instance no less than twenty contiguous villages without a single man or beast. The thirty years' war, in the seventeenth century, reduced the population of Germany from 12,000,000 to 4,000,000, three-fourths; and that of Wurtemburg from 500,000, to 48,000, more than nine-tenths! Thirty thousand villages were destroyed; in many others the population entirely died out; and in districts once studed with towns and cities, there sprang up immense forests.

Look at the havoc of sieges; in that of Londonderry 12,000 soldiers, besides a vast number of inhabitants; in that of Paris, in the sixteenth century, 30,000 victims of mere hunger; in that of Malplaquet, 34,000 soldiers alone; in that of Ismail, 40,000; of Vienna 70,000; of Ostend, 120,000; of Mexico, 150,000; of Acre, 300,000; of Ostend, 120,000; of Mexico, 150,000; of Jerusalem, 1,000,000

Mark the slaughter of single battles; at Lepanto, 25,000; at Austerlitz, 30,000; at Eylau, 60,000; at Waterloo and Quartre Bras, one engagement in fact, 70,000; at Bordniao, 80,000; at Fontenoy, 100,000; at Arabella, 300,000; at Chalons, 300,000 of Atilla's army alone; 400,000 Usipetes were slain by Julius Cæsar in one battle, 430,000 Germans in another.

Take only two cases more. The army of Xerxes, says Dr. Dick, must have amounted to 5,283,330; and if the attendants were only one-third as great as common at the present day in eastern countries, the sum total must have reached nearly six millions. Yet in one year, this vast multitude was reduced, though not entirely by death, to three hundred thousand fighting men; and of these only three thousand escaped destruction. Jenghis-khan the terrible ravager of Asia in the thirteenth century, shot ninety thousand on the plains of Nessa, and massacred two hundred thousand at the storming of Kharasm. In the district of Herat, he butchered one million six hundred thousand, and in two cities with their dependencies, one million seven hundred and sixty-two thousand. During the last twenty-seven years of his long reign, he is said to have massacred more than half a million every year; and in the first fourteen years, he is supposed, by Chinese historians, to have destroyed not less than eighteen millions; a sum total of over thirty-two millions in forty-one years.

In any view, what a fell destroyer is war Napoleon's wars sacrificed full six millions, and all the wars consequent on the French Revolutions, some nine or ten millions. The Spaniards are said to have destroyed, in forty-two years, more than twelve millions of American Indians. Grecian wars sacrificed fifteen millions; Jewish wars, twenty-five millions; the wars of the Romans, before Julius Cæsar, sixty millions; the wars of the Roman Empire, of the Saracens and the Turks, sixty millions each; those of the Tartars, eighty millions; those of Africa, one hundred millions.

Dr. Dick says that if we take into consideration the number not only of those who have fallen in battle, but of those who have perished through the natural consequence of war, it will not be overrating the destruction of human life if we affirm that one-tenth of the human race has been destroyed by the ravages of war; and according to this estimate, more than fourteen hundred thousand millions of human beings have been slaughtered in war since the beginning of the world. Edmund Burke went still further, and reckoned the sum total of its ravages, from the first, at no less than thirty-five thousand millions.

ARTEMUS WARD MEETS A TEMPERANCE LECTURER.

At Ann Arbor, bein seized with a sudden faintness, I called for a drop of suthin to drink. As I was stirrin the beverage up, a pale faced man in gold spectacles laid his hand upon my shoulder, & sez, "look not upon the wine when it is red!"

Sez I, "This ain't wine. This is Old Rye."

"It stingeth like an Adder and biteth like a Serpent!" sed the man.

"I guess not," said I, "when you put sugar into it. That's the way I allers takes mine."

"Have you sons grown up sir," the man axed.

"Wall," sed I, as I put myself outside my beverage, "my son Artemus junior is going on 18."

"Ain't you afraid if you set this bad example bef him, he'll cum to a bad end?"

"He's cum to a waxed end already. He's learnin the shoemakin business," I replied. "I guess we can both on us git along without yur assistance, Sir," I observed, as he was about to open his mouth agin.

"This is a cold world," sed the man.

"That's so. But you'll git into a warmer one by and by, if you don't mind your own bizness better."

I was a little riled at the feller, because I never take anythin only when I really need it. I arterwards learned he was a temperance lecturer, and if he can injuce men to stop settin their inards on fire with the frightful licker which is retailed round the country I shall hartily rejoice. Better giv men Prusic assid to onct than to pizen 'em to death by degrees.

Over-Worked Woman.—An over-worked woman is always a sad sight—sadder a great deal than an over-worked man, because she is much more fertile in capacity of suffering than man. She has so many varieties of headache—sometimes as if Jael were driving the ball that killed Sisera into her temples—sometimes letting her work with half of her brain, while the other half throbs as if it would go to pieces—sometimes tightened around her brow as if her cap-band were Luke's iron crown—and then her fits of neuralgias, and her back-aches, and fits of depression, in which she thinks she is nothing, and less than nothing, and those paroxysms which men speak slightly of as hysterical—convulsions, that is all only not commonly fatal ones—so many trials which belong to her fine and mobile structure, that she is entitled to pity, when she is placed in conditions which develope her nervous tendencies.—[Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes.

A correspondent writes of a little four years old lad, who was repeating after his mother, the Lord's Prayer. Coming to the sentence "Give us this day our daily bread," the little boy opened his eyes exclaiming: "Is it corn or wheat bread? If it is corn bread I don't want it."

'Castigate that quadruped until he shall have accelerated his pace,' said a dandy to a livery stable boy, who was driving him a short distance into the country. 'Talk to me in English. I don't understand Ingin,' replied the boy.

Snake Charmer.—On last Tuesday, Mr. John T. Davis' negro boy Adam, while in the country getting a load of wood, caught a large rattle-snake, four and a half feet long, and brought him into town coiled it around his neck apparently on terms of great familiarity. A wondering crowd soon collected around the boy to witness so astonishing a spectacle, when, with all the nonchalance of a menagerie keeper, and no doubt feeling proud in possession of such mesmeric power, he showed by several performances his absolute control over the snake, making him rattle fearfully when told, and cease at the word of command; then taking him up, the snake would lay across his arms, with crest erect, as though definitely proclaiming that he would protect his master from every foe. It was very properly impressed upon Adam, by a genteel thrashing, that such temerity was altogether incompatable with the value of negroes. He says, however, that he has been taming snakes all his life, and that he is going to catch another pet and keep him hid.—West Florida "Enterprize."

An Irish woman appeared in the County Court of Louisville, recently, to be appointed guardian for her child when the following colloquy ensued:

"What estate has your child?"

"Plaze yer honor I don't understand you."

Judge—"I say what has she got?"

"Chills and faver plase your honor."

"Boys," said a village pedagogue, "what is the cause of all this noise in school to-day?"

"It is Bill Snykes, sir, who is all the time imitating a steam engine."

"Come up here, William; if you have turned into a locomotive, it is high time you were switched off."

On one occasion a heavy shower of rain having caused several persons to take refuge in Rowland Hill's chapel, Mr. Hill, remarking this, looked up and said: "Many people are greatly to be blamed for making their religion a cloak, but I do not think those are much better who make it an umbrella."

A minister once delivered a strong sermon against visiting Sunday evening. After which the young clergyman said to a friend:

"Come, let us go to the deacon's and spend the evening with his daughters."

"How!" cried his friend, with much surprise, "is it possible you can make such a proposal to me, after the sermon you have just concluded!"

"Pshaw," said he, "I only made those remarks in order that we might have the better chance with the girls ourselves."

Seven Deadly Sins.—1. Refusing to take a newspaper.

2. Taking a newspaper and not paying for it.

3. Not advertising.

4. Getting married without sending any of the wedding cake, or a golden dollar to the printer.

5. Making a printing office a loafing place.

6. Reading the manuscript on the case.

7. Sending abusive letters to the editor.

For the first and second offences, no absolution can be granted. The fourth is unpardonable; the fifth is death by law; for the balance, dispensations can be received by especial agreement.

Sad Reflection.—'Tis sad to reflect how many who have feasted at the gorgeous banquet of ambition, have created their own desolation, and shed bitter tears of dejection over their irrecoverably lost condition—who have closed their dim eyes in the darkness of penury, and descended to the lonesome valley of death unpitied and despised.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MRS. WINSLOW'S

SOOTHING SYRUP.

Every mother should be prepared to act in the capacity of both nurse and physician to her children: she can, if she will, discharge these duties much better than any one she can employ. If she does not, she ought to know that there is a Medicine prepared by an old nurse and female physician which has stood the test of many, many years, and is the most perfect thing on earth for children teething; it also cures, Wind Colic, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, and is sure to regulate the bowels. We say to every mother, do not let your own prejudices, or the prejudices of others stand in the way of the relief that will be sure—yes, absolutely sure—to follow the use of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP certainly does, as the name implies, "soothe" the little sufferer into a quiet, natural sleep, from which it awakes invigorated and refreshed. And for the cure of diseases incident to the period of teething, such as Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Wind Colic, &c., we have never seen its equal.

We have always been, and still are, opposed to the practice of drugging infants. This article has no deleterious effects whatever, and from our own experience (we speak advisedly) we have every confidence in it, and can heartily recommend it to all mothers. Take our advice—use it—and you will as strongly recommend it to others as we have to you.

When we say that MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP acts like a charm, we do but reiterate the language of every person who ever used it for their children, for all diseases incident to the period of teething, such as Dysentery and Diarrhœa, Wind Colic and Cholera Infantum. It will produce quietude and rest, relieve all suffering, and the infant will awake invigorated and refreshed, and not with the dull and stupefying effects of preparations of opium.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the excruciating pain of cutting teeth? If so, go at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately—depend upon it; there is no mistake about it. There is not a mother on earth who has ever used it who will not tell you at once that it will regulate the bowels, and give rest to the mother and relief and health to the child, operating like magic. It is perfectly safe in all cases, and pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States.

During the thirty years of unprecedented and increasing popularity of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP, innumerable "Cordials" and other nostrums, prepared by pretended M.D.'s, have sprung up and lived but a mushroom existence, the SOOTHING SYRUP has been constantly increasing in popularity, and become a household word, and for the health of their children, by the use of her invaluable article.

THOUSANDS OF MOTHERS THANK
MRS. WINSLOW

PRICE 20 CENTS PER BOTTLE.

For sale by

THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St., N.Y.

TIME, MONEY, AND LABOR SAVED,

BY USING

B. T. BABBITT'S

SUPERIOR FRENCH

CHEMICAL ERASIVE SOAP,

Made and improved by the Original Inventor of the German and Austrian Chemical Erasive or Detersive Soap, of which the real and genuine article has, since its first introduction to the American public, been, most favorably known, as the Best and Cheapest Washing Soap in the market, and with the present improvement, which is not known to any other manufacturer, we Challenge the World to produce a better article.

1. One pound of it will accomplish as much as three pounds of any other soap.

2. But one quarter the time and labor are required to do the same amount of washing, as with the best of family soap.

3. It does not injure the most delicate fabric; will tend to set the colors, and wash cleaner than any other soap in use.

4. Clothes need no boiling, and but little rubbing with the hands, thus avoiding their wear upon the wash-board.

5. Paints, Grease, Tar, and stains of every description vanish as by magic, before its wonderful, searching, erasive powers.

6. It is invaluable to Machinists, Printers, Painters, and all others using Inks, Oils, etc. for washing hands; it does not chap them (like other soaps,) but will cleanse and soften the skin.

7. It may be used in hard or soft water, and is adapted for use in all climates.

Put up in one pound bars, sixty bars in each Box.

For sale by the bar or box by

THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman Street.

MEDICAL.

THE BEST MEDICINES IN THE WORLD!!!

The following invaluable medicines may be obtained of

THOMAS HAMILTON, 48 Beekman St.

DR. CLARKE'S

VEGETABLE SHERRY-WINE BITTERS,

Are composed of Sarsaparilla, Dock-root, Rheubarb, Thoroughwort, Dandelion, Prickly Ash, Bark, &c, they should be taken not only in the Spring, but at all seasons of the year, as they operate directly on the liver, removing from it all coating of morbid matter, and restoring it to its normal action; also opening the bile ducts, causing the requisite flow of bile so essential to good health. Their influence upon the kidneys, also, is advantageously felt; at the same time they operate upon the blood, cleansing it from all impurity or taint of any kind. Humors of long standing are eradicated from the blood, thereby speedily curing jaundice, headache, weak stomach, sore eyes, nervousness, and other chronic diseases arising from impurity of the blood.

The palatableness of these bitters renders them agreeable to every one, and being composed entirely of vegetables, they may be used by all classes of people with safety.

Sold for the low price of 25 cents per pint bottle.

DR. CLARKE'S

SUGAR-COATED HERB PILLS.

These pills are made mostly from a valuable herb that grows on the proprietor's farm.

Warranted to cure Bilious Stomach, Bilious Bowels, Bilious Colic, Bilious Fever, and all diseases which arise from a bilious state of the system viz, Jaundice, Headache, Heartburn, Sour Stomach Liver Complaint, Weak Stomach, Pain in the Stomach, Costiveness, Loss of Appetite, and a host, of diseases too numerous to mention, as their number is legion.

Warranted to cure diseases peculiar to the female sex

Warranted at all times safe and efficient.

Warranted for a gentle family physic not to have an equal in America, operating without pain.

Warranted not to contain calomel, aloes, gamboge colocynth, or other drastic poisonous drugs, which always do the system more hurt than good, and by their continued use are sure to cause a derangement of the liver, bring on costiveness, and its inevitable consequence, piles, and dyspepsia, and finally break down the constitution, and cause the victim to drag out a miserable existence. Touch not, taste not, handle not the wily poison. Your life is your own,—preserve it. Take a simple herb, sure in its effects, but safe and pleasant,—no wrenching pains, no ill effects, and made pleasant to take by a fine coat of sugar. Children love them, ladies admire them, fools and wise men cannot do without them, doctors prescribe them,—and every body takes them. Yes, every body; from the honest farmer and mechanic to the most learned philosopher. And why? Simply because they are good, excellently good; and will do you good.

PRICE, 25 CENTS PER BOX.

DR. CLARKE'S COUGH AND CROUP SYRUP.

It is the most wonderful, effective and extraordinary medicine for the lungs ever used by man. It is perfectly safe and pleasant to take, and gives relief immediately. Thousands have been cured by its use, and tens of thousands will be again. All who use it pronounce it to be the best lung remedy ever discovered. Common coughs and colds are dispelled by the use of only a few doses, and children can be cured of croup at once if taken in its first stage. Long-standing diseases require perseverance, but a cure will be guaranteed. No medicine before ever possessed such excellent healing and curative power for the lungs. It seems, with almost magic power, to dispel the most severe cases of cough and throat ail.

Vocalists and public speakers should not fail to keep a bottle on hand at all times. A small quantity taken occasionally renders the voice beautifully clear and the lungs extremely strong. Words cannot fully express the great benefit to be derived from the use of the world-renowned remedy. Delay not, but procure a bottle at once. Use it if needed, and if not, keep it till necessity requires its use, as all, sooner or later, are overtaken by some unpleasant affection of the lungs or throat.

Price, 25 Cents per Bottle.

BOOKS.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE ANGLO-AFRICAN MAGAZINE, BOUND.

Price.—In half Morocco $1,25; half Morocco, gilt edges, $1.50. Muslin, $1.00

CONTENTS:

Embellishment.—Portrait of Alexander Dumas.

Music.—By A. J. R. Connor.

Apology.

A Statistical View of the Colored Population of the United States, from 1790 to 850.

African American Picture Gallery.—Anon.

American Caste and Common Schools,—by J. Holland Townsend.

A Review of Slavery and the Slave Trade,—by J. W. C. Pennington.

A Good Habit Recommended,—by Sarah M. Douglass.

A Chapter in the History of the African Slave Trade,—by Edward W. Blyden

Anglo-Saxons and Anglo-Africans.—Anon.

A Word to Our People.

Blake; or the Huts of America,—by Martin R. Delany.

Books &c.

Civilization—Its Dependence on Physical Circumstances.

Colored American Patriots,—by Wm. C. Nell.

Comets,—by M. R. Delany.

Citizensihp,—by James Mc'Cune Smith.

Claude Brihudas De Salas,—Selected.

Communication from N. Y. Society for the Promotion of Education among Colored Children.

Chess.

Dumas—Alexander.

Effects of Emancipation in Jamaica, by Robert Campbell.

Fragments of Thought,—by D. A. Payne.

Fancy Sketches,—Anonymous.

Gone to God—Poetry—by Frances Ellen Watkins.

Intellectual Culture,—by Robert Gordon.

In the Constitution of Man there exists a Religious Element,—by Robt. Gordon.

Lines—Poetry—by Grace A. Mapps.

Mrs. Partington and Mrs. Freshington.—Anon

Our Greatest Want,—by Frances Ellen Watkins.

Our Duty in the Conflict,—by J. Holland Townsend.

On the Fourteenth Query of Thos. Jefferson's Notes on Virginia.

On the Personality of the First Cause,—by Robt. Gordon.

Patrick Brown's First Love.

Poetry—Anonymous.

Selected Items.

Struggles for Freedom in Jamaica—by Robert Campbell.

The Attraction of Planets—by M. R. Delany.

The German Invasion, by James M'Cune Smith

Trifles, by Mary A. S. Cary.

The Coming Man—Poetry—by Wm. J. Wilson.

The Educational Wants of the Free Colored People, by Martin H. Freeman.

Thomas L. Jinnings.

The Teacher and his Pupil—Poetry—by Wm. J. Wilson.

Thoughts on Hayti, by James T. Holly.

The Successive Advances of Astronomy, by G. B. Vashon.

The Oberlin Wellington Rescue, by J. Mercer Langston.

The Shadows of Intemperance,—by James Fields.

The Dying Fugitive—Poetry—by Frances Ellen Watkins.

The Anglo-African and the African Slave Trade.

The Two Offers, by Frances Ellen Watkins.

The Re-opening of the Slave Trade—Anonymous.

The First Colored Convention.

The Self-Redeeming Power of the Colored Races of the World,—by J. W. C. Pennington.

The Policy that we should Pursue,—by J. Holland Townsend.

The Education of the Colored People,—by Amos Gerry Beman.

The Great Conflict requires Great Faith,—by J. W. C. Pennington.

The Outbreak in Virginia.

The Sentinel of Freedom—Poetry,—by J. Sella Martin.

The Nat Turner Insurrection.

The Execution of John Brown.

The Anglo-African Magazine for 1860.

The Watering Places.—Anonymous.

Orders should be addressed to

THOMAS HAMILTON,
48 Beekman street,
New York.

PUBLICATIONS FOR SALE BY
THOMAS HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE ANGLO-AFRICAN MAGAZINE, Bound,—Price—In half Morocco, $1.25; half Morocco, gilt edges, $1.50; Muslin, $1.00. Contents: Embellishments—Portrait of Alexander Dumas. Music, by A. J. R. Conner. Articles by Bishop D. A. Payne, James M'Cune Smith, M. D., Prof. Geo. B. Vashon, Dr. Martin, R. Delany, Mrs. Sarah M. Douglass, Prof. Robert Campbell, Prof. Wm. J. Wilson, Rev. J. W. C. Pennington, D. D., Rev. J. Theo. Holly, Mrs. Frances Ellen Watkins Harper, Prof. M. H. Freeman, Rev. Edward W Blyden, Rev. Robert Gorden, Prof. Chas. L. Reason, Mrs M. A. Shadd Cary, Dr. James Fields, Rev. Amos Gerry Beman, Miss Grace A. Mapps Rev. J. Sella Martin, Wm. C. [illegible], Esq. J. Mercer Langston, and J. Holland Townsend, Esq.,

The Life of Captain John Brown
The Liberator of Kansas, and the Hero of Harper's Ferry. By James Redpath. An elegant 12mo. volume of 400 pages, illustrated and embellished with a superb Steel Portrait of the Glorious Old Man. Price $1.00.

My Bondage and My Freedom.
By Fredrick Douglass. One vol., 12 mo., 464 pp. Illustrated. Price $1.00, postage 22 cts.

ife of Jermain W. Loguen.
The great Underground Railroad King. Price $1.00.

The Martyrs and the Fugitive.
By the Rev. S H. Platt. A thrilling work on slavery and the slave trade, detailing the capture of a family in Africa by the Slave-dealors, their fearful journey to the coast, the horrors of the "middle passage," their sale in America, and subsequent martyrdom; the slavery of their son, his terrible sufferings and perilous escapes. Sent, postpaid, upon the receipt of 38 cts.

Twelve Years a Slave.
The Narrative of Solomon Northrup, a citizen of New York, kidnapped in Washington City in 1841 and rescued in 1853, from a cotton plantation near Red River, Louisiana. Seven Illustrations, 336 pp. 12mo. Price $1,00, postage paid.

Our National Charters.
For the Millions. Including—1. The Federal Constitution of 1787–9. 2. The Articles of Confederation, 1787. 3. The Declaration of Independence, 1776. 4. The Articles of Association, 1775. With notes showing their bearing on slavery, and the relative powers of the State and National Governments. Also a summary of Legal Opinions, collected from the highest authorities, is prefixed to the Constitution. An Appendix contains extracts from State Constitutions and Bills of Rights; Ordinance of 1787, excluding Slavery from the Northwest Territory: also, Sentiments of the Revolutionary Fathers, &c. By mail, postage prepaid, single copy, 15 cts.; four copies, 50 cts.; nine copies $1,00.

The American Slave-Code,
In Theory and Practice: Its Distinctive Features Shown by its Statutes, Judicial Decisions, and Illustrative Facts. 430 pp., 12mo. Price 75 cts postage paid.

Unconstitutionality of Slavery.
By Lysander Spooner. In paper, 291 pp., 8vo Price 75 cts., or postage paid 86 cts.

Review of Lysander Spooner's Essay on the Unconstitutionality of Slavery.
By Wendell Phillips. Price 25 cts. Postage 5 Cts.

The Revelations of a Slave Smuggler.
Being the Autobiography of Captain Richard Drake, an African trader for fifty years, from 1807 to 1857. The work is handsomely illustrated, with graphic representations of scenes as they actually occur on the slave ships and on shore. Illustration No. 1 is a large cut, 16x23, representing a slave market on the Coast of Africa. Illustration No. 2 represents a scene in the Hold of a Slaver (middle passage). Then there is a large plate, giving views of a slave vessel betwen decks, regulation slave-deck, regulation packing, &c. The work is handsomely printed—contains one hundred large 8vo. pages, and is published at a price which places it within the reach of the masses—viz: 25 cents a copy. When sent by mail the postage (six cents must be added.

The Nat Turner Insurrection.
A full and reliable account. Copies will be sent to any address on the receipt of five cents.

Uncle Tom's Cabin.
By Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe. Two volumes in one. Price, $1,25.

The Kidnapped and Ransomed,
Being the personal recollections of Peter Still, and his wife, Vina, after forty years of slavery by Mrs. Kate E. R. Pickard, with an introduction by Rev. S. J. May, Illustrated. 12mo. cloth $1,25.

Gerrit Smith in Congress.
"Slavery has no right but to die!" A work of over 400 pages, containing all his speeches delivered in Congress; also, an accurate likeness. Price, only 80 cents per copy, and postage paid.

The Dream;
Or, the true history of Dea Giles's Distillery and Dea. Jones's Brewery. By George B. Cheever, D.D. Price per single copy 10 cents, $1 per doz., or $7 per hundred.

A Summer on the Carribbean Sea.
By J. Dennis Harris. With an introduction by Geo. William Curtis. Sent by mail on receipt of $1.

A Pilgrimage to my Motherland;
An account of a journey among the Egbas and Yorubas of Central Africa, in 1859-60 By Robert Campbell, one of the Commissioners of the Niger Valley Exploring Party; late in charge of the Scientific Department of the Institute for Colored Youth, Philadelphia; and member of the International Statistical Congress, London. Price, 63 cents. When sent by mail, the postage (10 cents) must be added.

Turner's (J. A.) Cotton Planter's Manual,
Being a compilation of facts from the best authorities on the culture of cotton, its natural history, chemical analysis, trade and consumption, and embracing a history of cotton and the cotton gin. Price, $1. Postage, 15 cents.

The Manual of the Wardrobe,
00 large octavo pages, in paper, by Mrs. Pullan. Price, 25 cents. Sent, postpaid, upon receipt of the price. It comprises a thorough dissertation upon taste in dress, an explanation of the different kinds of stitches made in sewing, remarks upon the various kinds and qualities of fabrics used in the wardrobe, with complete directions for cutting and fitting all kinds of garments for women's and children's wear; the preparation of table, toilet, and bed linen. Illustrated by nearly one hundred cuts of patterns and modes.

The Weekly Anglo-African.

"MAN MUST BE FREE!—IF NOT THROUGH LAW, WHY THEN ABOVE THE LAW."

VOL. I. NO. 8. NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 21, 1861. PRICE FOUR CENTS.

The Weekly Anglo-African.

IS PUBLISHED
EVERY SATURDAY,
BY ROBT. HAMILTON,
No. 48 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW YORK.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Two Dollars per year, or Four Cents per copy, payable on delivery.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.

Six Cents a line for the first insertion, and Three Cents for each subsequent insertion.

Notices of Births, Marriages, Deaths, Public Meetings, &c., inserted for twenty-five Cents, provided they do not exceed five lines; if more than that, Five Cents for each additional line.

All communications for the paper must be addressed ROBT. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman st., New York.

Poetry.

BEAUTIFUL POEM.

The following touching and inimitable beautiful lines have been erroneously attributed to John Milton. The New York Historical Magazine, from which we copy them, accompanies them with the following explanatory remarks as to their origin:

"The simple fact is that those 'strains sublime' came to the world from no 'Oxford edition' of John Milton. They are the production of Mrs. Elizabeth Lloyd Howell, of Philadelphia. She wrote them in the days of her maidenhood, when she was known to her many home admirers as plain Elizabeth Lloyd. They were originally published in a little volume of poems, but Miss Lloyd sought no audience for her sweet strains beyond the select circle of Quakers in her native town; and out of that circle she was little known. John G. Whittier was one of her intimate friends. They were kindred spirits, and tattling rumor used to predict that the gifted Quakeress would yet merge her modest name in the world-known name of the poet of Amesbury. But Whittier, the meek man of might, the most earnest of American bards, the gentle girl in loving what is pure and right, the giant 'Great heart' in fighting what is wrong,—Whittier, the 'lone star' of the Quaker firmament, still dreams away life in the reveries of a bachelor. Elizabeth Lloyd is the happy wife of a Philadelphia merchant. Content with a few early efforts she has published but little of late. It is glory enough for her to have written one poem which the world will persist in attributing to the prince of poets."

I am old and blind!
Men point at me as smitten with God's frown;
Afflicted and deserted of my kind;
Yet I am not cast down.

I am weak, yet strong;
I murmur not that I no longer see;
Poor, old and helpless; I the more belong,
Father Supreme, to thee.

O, merciful One!
When men are farthest, then Thou art most near;
When friends pass by, my weakness shun,
Thy chariot I hear.

Thy glorious face
Is leaning toward me; and its holy light
Shines upon my lonely dwelling-place,
And there is no more night.

On my bended knee,
I recognize thy purpose, clearly shown;
My vision Thou hast dimmed that I may see
Thyself—Thyself alone.

I have nought to fear;
This darkness is the shadow of Thy wing;
Beneath it I am almost sacred; here
Can come no evil thing

Oh! I seem to stand
Trembling where foot of mortal ne'er hath been,
Wrapped in the radinace of Thy sinless land,
Which eye hath never seen.

Visions come and go;
Shapes of resplendent beauty round me thrown;
From angel lips I seem to hear the flow
Of soft and holy song.

It is nothing now,
When heaven is opening to my sightless eyes,
When airs from Paradise refresh my brow,
The earth in darkness lies.

In a purer clime
My being fills with rapture—waves of thought
Roll in upon my spirit—strains sublime
Break over me unsought.

Give me now my lyre!
I feel the stirrings of a gift divine—
Within my bosom glows unearthly fire,
Lit by no skill of mine.

THE RUINED CHAPEL.

About a mile and a half from Castletown, the metropolis of the Isle of Man, there is a bay, with a small hamlet and pier in it, called Derby Haven. I walked lately to it, one fine afternoon, from Castletown. My way lay along the coast over the turf which fringed the beach, and which goes by the name of the race-course. Whatever this might have been, it is now so broken up and bumpy that a race on it would be a steeple-chase. It was a lovely day; the wind had dropped, and I could hear distinctly the shrill chatter of a parcel of gulls, which were walking about the edge of the water where the low tide had left long streaks of flat, wet sand. The harbor is formed by an island, now approached by a narrow artificial causeway. Towards the sea this is edged with sharp rocks, whose strata turned inward like teeth are sure to hold fast any ill fated ship which they once touched.

There are only two buildings on the island one a circular, deserted fort, built by an Earl of Derby to help the cause of the Stuarts, but long since unused, at least for the purposes of defense or refuge. It is squat, circular, and upright. One small turret has been built on the wall for the purpose of showing a light by night and a white mark by day to the vessels which enter the harbor. This gives the fort a prick-eared appearance, and makes it look like a Cheshire cheese with a pepper-caster standing on it. The other of the two buildings on the island is not only deserted, but in ruins. It was a Roman Catholic chapel, and the ground around it is still used as a burial place for the Romanists. The roof of the building has fallen in, and nothing is left but four walls, which appear as much worn by the weather within as without, showing that many years must have passed since they were shielded by a roof. The chapel, which is built of stone, looks as if it had been ruined soon after its erection, and for some cause or another had never been restored.

There was not a living human creature on the whole island but myself and one old man, who was crawling in an aimless sort of way among the rocks, as if he had lost himself and could not get out. I sat down and watched him. The turf was soft, and a great piece of gray rock gave good rest for my back. He was, as I said, groping slowly about among the sharpest, baregt-looking shelves of rock. I wondered what he could be looking for. Eggs? No; the tide flowed where he was; no eggs could lie there. Sea-weed? No; there was plenty of that on the flat shore; and I could then see from where I lay a horse and cart engaged in carrying it away to one of the neighboring farms, where it is used as a manure. I got quite curious about my old man. There he was, with wagging head and slow rheumatic limbs, peering patiently about, and every now and then picking something up. The old man was looking for firewood, and, there hardly being any trees in this part of the island, went "sticking" on the shore. The fuel on his hearth would often tell strange stories, if one could hear it speak; logs, from which the numb fingers of drowning men had at last relaxed their [illegible], which had struck ice in Arctic seas, or stirred the long grass in some tropical creek; charred scraps, which had hissed in the water as they fell from a burning ship out in the middle of the sea; thin ribs of island-boats, which had put in and out for many years, till some rough night they had touched the rock, and cracked like eggs.

What a bundle of history the old man tied on his back at last, he and it alike in the last chapter of the tale! As he crept towards me, I thought of questioning him about the ruined chapel which was there; perhaps he might know its history or legend; so with a general meteorological preface, I asked what he could tell about it, and gave him a good cut off a piece of Cavendish I had in my pocket as a retainer.

"Sir," said he, (I leave out the Manx, also his critique on my essay about the weather,) "sir, I am growing an old man now, and it's as much as I can do to get these few sticks; but I've seen more things worth picking here than them, in my day."

"Such as wrecks?" I suggested.

"Ay, you are right there, sir. Time was when a poor man might get a chance; but now, what with your light-houses and life-boats, and coast-guard and police, either them as owns the wreck get ashore all right, and avaricious after their things; or, if so be they don't, 'taint often you can get much more than the value of these few sticks out of a ship, not even when she goes to pieces. Why sir," he continued, "not long ago there was a vessel wrecked off Scarlet; she was loaded with flour (a French ship she was), and that they sold by auction."

"Ah!" said I, soothingly, "times are changed. But, talking of the past can you tell me how this chapel here came to be pulled down, and why they don't keep the pigs from grubbing about among the graves."

"Why, yes," he replied, "I can; not that I saw it alone myself, but there ain't a house about here where the tale ain't told on winter evenings."

After a little pressing, the old man slowly swung his bundle of sticks off his back, seated himself on a stone, fixed his eyes on the ruin, and recited his legend, which I give in my own language.

Many years ago there was a famous priest who gave up all that he possessed, and came to teach Christianity in these parts. He was not a Manksman, though he could talk with the people in their own tongue. He lived in a poor home at Derby Haven, but for all that, there was not a sick or needy person near but what he helped with medicine and food, as well as spiritual advice. Along with a kind heart, he had a kind face and voice; so that the little children would run out to laugh and kiss his hand when they saw him pass. For a long time he used to gather the people together in the winter evenings in one of the largest rooms in the hamlet, while in the summer he would preach to the fishermen and their families on the sea-shore.

After some years of this intercourse, he proposed to the men that they should build a small church on the island. St. Michael, he said, had appeared to him in a vision, and pointed out a chapel on a flat space upon the grass close to the rocks; he had seen it, he said, quite plain in his dream; the light was shining out of the window; he had crept up under the wall, and looked in, and, lo! there he saw himself kneeling before a beautiful costly altar, and he recognized the congregation as themselves.

Now, while they were full of admiration at this dream, the good father bade them rise up and follow him to the place where he had seemed to see the chapel, and, lo! when they got there, they found the ground marked out where the foundations of the chapel now stand, and a border drawn some distance around on which that wall was built, which you can now trace in the grass, just as if some one had turned up a furrow on the bare earth, and then laid a carpet of turf upon it. And when the men of the place saw the marvel, and how truly the good father's dream had been from heaven, he bade them kneel down there at once while he prayed to St. Michael and all angels that these people would not leave off the good work till they had built a chapel to him. Thus they were led to begin, and promised to give a portion of their time till the little church should be finished.

There was abundance of stones close by, and the architecture of the edifice was of the simplest kind. Four plain thick walls with a roof was all they aimed at. Now, this part of the work was comparatively easy; but Father Kelly began to be sore perplexed as it approached completion, how he should furnish it within, and so fulfill the dream of furnishing such a costly altar as he was persuaded he ought to build. The poor people had neither silver nor gold. They had already offered such as they had—strong hands, and hours taken from their rest, to work. Night after night, Father Kelly used to repair to the chapel, now roofed in, and prayed to St. Michael to help him in this strait. One dark evening, he was there longer than usual; he had fallen down with his face upon the ground before the spot on which he hoped to put up the altar. While thus prostrate in prayer, and longing for a continuation of his former dream, he heard some footsteps close outside the chapel walls. Having his face upon the earth, the sound came quite distinctly to his ear. They stopped, and a voice said: "This is the chapel; let us lay them here; 'tis just the place for a burial."

"Very well," replied another, "how does she lie? Here goes, mate, by the northeast corner."

Then came the sound of digging, and pauses, as if men were stooping down to lay something in the ground; after that Father Kelly heard the mould put back, and some one to stamp it down. Though the church had not been furnished, two or three funerals had taken place in the graveyard, one of which he had himself celebrated only that afternoon.

What could be the object of these strange visitors? They had not disturbed the dead—they did not remain long enough for that; their work, whatever it was, seemed to be accomplished in a quarter of an hour, for after that time he heard a slapping of hands, as if some one was cleaning them of dusty earth, and a voice saying: "There! that is done; and, as dead men tell no tales, we may trust the present company."

"Ay, ay," replied the other, "I trust them so much I don't think we need wait any longer."

"What! art afraid, man?"

"Not I; but there is foul weather coming, and the sooner we clear off these cursed rocks, the better."

"Well, come along."

Then Father Kelly heard them walk down towards the water, and presently distinguished the grating of a boat's keel as she was pushed off; then the double sound of the oars in the rowlocks died away, and all was still. He got up from the floor, and walked out of the chapel. It was a mid-summer night. The air was warm and motionless; the clouds, however, had crept up so plentifully as to cover the sky. While he stood there outside the chapel, the moon, which was about a week old, became obscured, and the darkness drew close to his eyes. He could not see a yard before him; he listened, but heard only the slow wash of the swell as the rising tide carried it into the clefts among the rocks, with now and then a liquid flap, as a wave ran into a sudden angle, and fell back upon itself. This was the only sound. It was a night for hearing, too. He felt for his lantern, and got out his steel to strike a light. Having dropped his flint, in groping about to find it, he forgot the direction in which he had stood; and when he had got upon his feet again, after an unsuccessful search, he felt himself so utterly at a loss, that, after walking a few steps with his hand stretched out before him, he determined to wait for the morning, rather than risk a fall over one of the slippery rocks in his attempt to return home.

When he had sat there for some time, the rain began to fall in large though few drops; these were, however, but the splashes from the bucketsful which were soon poured upon his head. The wind, too, was loosed at the same time, and rushed on him with such violence that, though he dared not search for shelter lest he should fall over the rock, he was glad to sit down on a large stone which he felt at his feet. The first flash of lightning, however, showed him the chapel itself, not more than ten yards off. He groped towards it immediately in the gloom, with his hands stretched out before him, right glad when he felt its rough stones. The wall once found, he soon discovered the path with his feet, and, when he got home, was right glad to rest at once.

He had not slept many hours before he was roused to visit a dying man in one of the neighboring houses. Hurrying on his clothes, he hastened to the place, where a crowd was gathered about the door, many of them dripping from the sea. The storm which he had seen the evening before had grown into a terrible tempest, during which a ship had been driven on the rocks and utterly wrecked. All the crew were drowned but one man whom they had dragged out of the surf, and carried to Derby Haven. He had apparently, however, been saved from death in the water to die on the land, for he was so greviously bruised and cut by the rocks on which he had been thrown that life was ready to leave him altogether. When Father Kelly came in, he found him lying on the floor, wrapped up in such dry clothes as the people had at hand. He had begged them to fetch a priest. His back, he said, was broken, and he knew he could not live another hour; so the people fetched Father Kelly, as we have seen, and left the two together.

"Father," said the dying man, "will you hear the confession of a pirate and a murderer?"

The priest, seeing there was no time to lose, signified his assent, and, kneeling down by his side, bent his ear to listen.

Then the man, with strange breaks and ramblings in his speech, told him of murders out in the wide seas, and horrible recollections of cruelty and rapine.

"We took a Spanish ship some weeks ago," added the man, "and come in here to water, being a safe place; when I—God forgive me my soul!—I committed my last crime, and stole from the captain a box of gold he took out of the Spaniard. Another man and I were in the secret. We brought it with us, and buried it in the graveyard of your little chapel, intending to make our escape from the ship on the opportunity, find our way over here, re*cover, and enjoy the booty we had got.*"

"To whom did it belong?" said the priest.

"God knows," replied the man; "to me now, I suppose. Those who owned it can use it no more; the ship from which the captain took it went down with all on board; we burnt her."

"What was her name?" asked Father Kelly.

"Name?" said the dying man. "There take the gold, and shiver me; I have confessed!"

Then, without another word, he died. The people buried him, and gathered up some few pieces of timber from the wreck of his ship, but nothing came ashore to show whether she was laden or not. They never knew her name, nor, for a great while, what she was, the priest not conceiving himself bound to tell even so much of what he had heard in confession. Many years afterwards, the whole story was found in a book which the priest left behind him when he died.

The words "take the gold" haunted the good father long after the man who died in uttering them had been committed to the ground. The chapel was finished but not furnished; the fulfillment of the dream was incomplete. Many a night the priest lay awake arguing with himself the lawfulness of a search among the graves for the treasure which he had no doubt was hidden there. Suppose he could find it, should he credit the pirate's word about the death of the owner? Could he conscientiously appropriate it, not indeed to his own use, but to the use of his chapel? He thought of the terrible sentence that fell on those who put unhallowed fire in their censers; he thought of the accursed thing found in the Jew's tent, which brought trouble upon the people to which he belonged. Then, again, it looked as if sin attached to the appropriation of this gold had been punished in the persons of the pirates who had taken it. It looked as if it were rescued from the service of the world, to be devoted to that of the church—snatched from the devil himself, to be given to St. Michael, his chief enemy.

On the whole he decided upon using the gold, if he could find it. He must, however, be cautious in the search; he would not trust the people to look. It might not be there, and then he would be ashamed. There might be more than he thought, and they might be tempted to take some; or if not that, be jealous at his retaining posses*sion of it himself*. He would search alone. The conversation he had heard outside the chapel, while he listened on the eve of the storm, indicated the spot in which he should look.

Having therefore waited for a suitable moonlight night, he went very late to the churchyard with a spade. There was no one there. The shadow of the building fell upon the likely spot; he could work unperceived, even if some returning fisherman were to pass that way. Half-ashamed of the errand, he had not removed many spadesfull of earth from the graves he suspected, before he struck upon something hard. Stooping down, he felt for it with his hands; it was a heavy box. He took it up, smoothed down the soil, carried it straight home, double-locked his door, and broke it open. It contained broad, shining pieces of gold. They made such a heap on his table as he had never seen before. There was, moreover, in the box, a necklace of large pearls. Gold for the chapel, jewels for the Madonna.

The church was furnished, the altar was decked, the image was bought, and around its neck he hung the string of fair large pearls.

Father Kelly saw his dream fulfilled, and, as success often produces conviction, he thanked St. Michael and all angels for having turned the robbers booty into sacred treasure. So it was written in his book, but he told no one whence these riches came. Some of the simple folks thought the Virgin herself had brought these jewels to the father. He, however, many a time, while he sat on the rocks by the chapel, looking out to seaward, and watching the white sails go by, wandered back to the question whence these riches came, and whether, after all, they might not hide some after-curse or other.

One evening, as he sat there, a vessel came around the point, and dropped anchor in the haven. She drew his attention as being unlike the common coasting-ships, or even the traders which ventured on more distant voyages. She carried more canvas in proportion to her hull, and had her sail furled almost as soon as she had swung round with the ride.

Presently, a boat came off from her, and was rowed to the shore, just beneath the spot where he sat. Two men apparently officers, got out, and, walking up to him, begged him to accompany them back to the ship, as they said one of their crew was dying, and needed the offices of a priest. He went with them at once without suspicion—a man who had been with him, and heard the summons, returned to Derby Haven.

The ghostly summons, however, was a ruse: this was the sister ship of the pirate that had been wrecked here in the storm, now some months ago. The new-comers had learned her fate, and had landed to search for traces of the treasures she had on board. They had first taken the priest, as they thought, with much probability, he could tell them whether the inhabitants of the village had plundered the wreck, and also whether any of her crew survived.

What they learned from Father Kelly, no one ever knew. Some of the men, returning to the shore, strolled into the chapel, and doubtless recognised the necklace as of the costliest items of their lost treasure. The next morning the ship was gone, and the people searching for their priest, who had not returned home at night, found the chapel sacked and his corpse set over the altar in the place where the image of the Madonna had been, with a knotted cord like a necklace tightly twisted around his throat.

The superstition of the natives never permitted them to use the chapel again. It gradually became ruin; the roof fell in; the storm lashed the walls within as well as without, until at last it passed into the state in which it is to-day.

This was the story of the old man. He added that, even now, whoever struck the walls and listen could hear a moan within, and a noise like the jingling of money. "You can try it yourself," said he, "and find whether I have told you the truth."

Accepting this rather fearless challenge of the old gentleman's, I walked with him to the wall, and knocked, and lo! I suddenly found that I had waked myself by striking my hand upon the stone by which I had sat down to rest. It was all a dream. I had fallen asleep thinking of the chapel, and watching the old man among the rocks. He was not in sight now. I was quite alone, and trying to replace a piece of skin which I had knocked off the knuckle of my middle-finger by rapping on a stone. I doubted even whether I had asked the old man any question at all; so I shook myself, rubbed my eyes, and looked at my watch, happily found that I should not be too late for dinner if I set off on my return at once.

Directly we sat down, I asked my friend for the true history of the little church, and he told me there was none. "Now," said I, "that remarkable deficiency has been supplied by me." And, when the cloth was cleared away, we drew around the fire, and I told my host's boys and girls the true legend concerning the ruined chapel on Saint Michael's Island.

SOWING AND REAPING.

BY REV. R. M. HATFIELD.

It has been ordained in heaven that whatsoever men sow, that shall they also reap. And this most righteous law holds nations no less than individuals in its grasp. In the case of individuals, the seed sown in the present life may ripen, and be reaped in eternity; but as nations exist only in this world, their seed-time and harvest must come nearer together. The present condition of our country is calculated to fill the heart of every patriotic citizen with sorrow and apprehension. Business is deranged, the pursuits of industry interrupted, the interests of education and religion almost crowded out of sight, while armies of infuriated rebels are dealing deadly blows at the very existence of our Government. The calamity that we have not feared has come upon us, and we are involved in a terrible and sanguinary war. We are becoming familiar with the confused noise, the sound of battle, and with the sight of garments rolled in blood. The heavens above us are clothed with blackness, and out of the thick clouds come hail-storms and coals of fire. And none can tell when these calamities will be overpast, and peace again

"Lie like a shaft of light across the land."

It is a time for serious and prayerful inquiry into the causes of our misfortunes. None but an atheist will claim that they are accidental, or deny that we suffer justly for our sins. But it is to be feared that many devout Christians fail to see the correspondence between the present condition of our nation and our past transgressions. We are now furnishing the world with an illustration of the truth that sin works out its own punishment. In other words, it is harvest-time with us, and we are reaping as we have sowed. Inasmuch as we would sow seed of a certain kind, nothing but a miracle, and such a miracle as God never works, could avert the natural consequences of our folly.

We have been ready during our past history to make any and every concession to slavery. By as much as the monster grew arrogant and exacting, we became humble and submissive. Herod's vow to the hoiden who turned his head by her dancing was not more rash or wicked than the pledges we have been ready to give to the harridan that has debauched our nation. The oath of Herod cost one good man his life—our fealty to slavery has sent thousand's of good men to untimely graves. There is no exaggeration in this statement—for we have once and again unsheathed the sword, and clotted it with blood, for the extension and perpetuation of the "sum of all villainies." In illustration of this declaration, I need only call the attention of your readers to a single chapter in our nations history. I cannot do more than glance at the subject, referring those who desire fuller information to Giddings's work on the "Crimes committed by our Government against the Maroons of Florida." It is a narrative to make the ears of every American citizen tingle, and to redden his cheeks with shame—and the more so because its facts are drawn from official and authentic documents.

Long before Florida became a part of the United States, it was an asylum for fugitive slaves. More than one hundred years ago large numbers of the Creek Indians separated from their nation and emigrated to Florida, where they took the name of Seminoles, and became an independent tribe. These Indians and fugitive slaves [Maroons] were enfranchised and protected by Spanish law, lived together on the most friendly terms, frequently intermarried, and were prosperous and happy. As a matter of course, the existence of such a community any where on the American continent would be a constant eyesore to the slaveholders of Georgia and the Carolinas. They therefore demanded that it should be broken up, and, failing in this, became clamorous for the annexation of Florida to the United States. As the Government did not move with satisfactory celerity in the matter, Georgia, with genuine Southern arrogance, raised an army on her own account, and carried fire and sword into the territory of a friendly nation with the view of exterminating the Seminoles, and reducing the escaped fugitives to slavery. These efforts were a signal failure, but they subsequently induced the United States to undertake the same work. In 1816 our Government sent a force into Florida, "sixty miles beyond the limits of the United States," to crush these peaceable exiles. Many of these unoffending people had been born in the Seminole country, had always lived there, and were now dwelling in quietness, surrounded by their children and children's children. On the approach of the United States forces, a company of them, numbering three hundred and thirty-four in all—men, women and children—took shelter in a fort that had been built by the English during the recent war. Into this fort shot and shell was thrown till the magazine was fired and exploded. Of its inmates, "two hundred and seventy were killed outright, sixty one were wounded, and three escaped uninjured." Of these three, two were handed over to Indian allies for torture and death. The wounded who recovered were delivered to men who claimed them as slaves, or who claimed to have "descended from planters who some three or four generations previously owned the ancestors of these prisoners." And more than twenty years afterward, Congress made a special approriation to compensate the officers and soldiers who perpetrated this butchery. And here on the Apalachicola River was commenced the Florida war, or rather wars, in which our nation squandered thirty or forty millions of dollars in money, and thousands of human lives.

Florida was purchased of Spain in 1819, and the Maroons and their friends the Seminoles were by this purchase brought fairly within the grasp of the United States. Soon after a treaty was made between the Creek Indians and our Government, in which the Indians were cheated as usual, and nearly half a million of money appropriated from the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the slaveholders of Georgia. To a considerable part of this appropriation the slaveholders were unable to trump up any sort of a claim, and it remained unpaid for several years. But they at length attained it, by petition, from Congress, as a compensation "for the loss of the offspring which the slaves would have borne to their masters had they remained in bondage." A Christian nation indemnifies slaveholders for the loss of unborn children! Does the history of any people, savage or civilized, contain the record of a more disgusting fact? It was decided a few years later that the Seminoles and free blacks should be expelled from Florida, and sent where they would no longer annoy the slaveholders. But it was no easy matter to carry this purpose into execution. The Indians clung to their homes and hunting grounds, and the Maroons were in constant dread of being reduced to slavery if they forsook the swamps and everglades in which they found freedom and variety.

While it was uncertain what course they would take, an incident occurred which opened a bloody drama upon which the curtain did not fall for seven long disastrous years. Young Osceola, a Seminole, had occasion to visit Fort King on a trading expedition. He was accompanied by his wife, a beautiful half-breed, to whom he had been recently married. While at the Fort, a trader, influenced by avarice or lust, seized the wife of Osceola on the ground that she was his slave. The fact that she had [illegible] blood in her veins was apparent. [illegible] pronounced her a slave, and [illegible] torn from her husband and dragged away to a life of pollution and degradation. Osceola was furious with rage, and so turbulent that the officer at the fort ordered him into irons, where he was kept until he seemed subdued and penitent, when he was released. But there burned all the while deep down in his heart hot fires of hate and [illegible] quenched only by blood. [illegible] feel, perhaps, that it was wrong for this poor savage to bind himself by an oath to take vengeance on the whites [illegible] he had suffered—and so [illegible] but how would you feel if [illegible] should treat your wife as your [illegible] his? Only a short time after [illegible] Fort King the country was [illegible] by the massacre of Major Dade and his command, on their march from Tampa Bay. Of the thousands who heaped [illegible] upon the Indians, how few thought of the [illegible] injustice by which it had been provoked. My pen recoils from the work of [illegible] the progress of the war waged by a great and powerful nation against a handful of Seminoles, and a few scattered and peeled fugitives who had taken refuge in the swamps of Florida. Blood-hounds were ordered from Cuba, white flags were used as decoys, treachery and hypocrisy of the basest kind were resorted to in subjugating this despised foe.

And they were at length overpowered and sent beyond the Missisipi. *But their merci*less enemies still pursued them, and our Government utterly failed to extend to them the protection it had solemnly guaranteed, and on the strength of which they had consented to the removal. Our last definite knowledge of these poor fugitives is in 1850, when a majority of them, despairing of obtaining either justice or mercy from the United States, fled to Mexico, where they are said to be living in prosperity and happiness. "After the struggles and persecutions of a hundred and fifty years, they repose in comparative quiet under a Government which repudiates slavery." The Lord deal kindly with them, and give them rest from the oppressor.

But what a chapter this Florida war makes in the history of our country especially as we read it in the light of events that are now transpiring! It is useless to deny that this war was waged in the interests of slavery, and at the dictation of slaveholders and slave-traders. And who that has faith in the Supreme Power whose perogative it is to execute righteousness among the nations, can wonder that the measure we have meted to others is measured to us again? What right have we to complain if we are compelled to wring out and drink the dregs of the cup of trembling we prepared for the fugitives of Florida? The President has very properly appointed a national fast. Nothing can be more appropriate than that we should humble ourselves in view of our sins, and pray God to turn away his anger that we perish not. But penitence and prayer are not our only duties in the present emergency. The power that has corrupted our Government and made it an instrument of injustice and oppression, must be resisted and overthrown. And this work is to be done now or never. We have little faith in the prayers offered by those who counsel submission or concession in a time like the present. Unless we are so base and mean spirited as to be fit only for slavery, we can never succumb to the infernal spirit that aspires to rule or ruin our country. The struggle may be long-continued and costly, but submission is out of the question. While the free North can send one regiment of soldiers to the field or raise a thousand dollars in money, she will listen to no proposals to abandon the righteous contest in which she is now engaged. Her sons have planted themselves in the "imminent deadly breach" to defend the heritage won by the valor and blood of patriot fathers. Every day the number grows larger of those who say,

> "Ay, here we stand with planted feet,
> Steadfast where those old worthies stood;
> Upon us let the tempest beat,
> Around us swell the surging flood;
> We fall or triumph on this spot;
> God helping us, we falter not."

Independent.

The Weekly Anglo-African.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 21, 1861.

☞ Advertisements for this paper must be accompanied by the cash.

☞ Copies of this paper can be purchased of the news-dealers everywhere.

A NOBLE PROPOSITION.

ROBERT HAMILTON Esq.,

Dear Sir:—I congratulate you at the appearance once more of the Anglo-African.—a paper that gained, for the time it existed, more prestige than any other that had preceded it.

Now sir, the glorious question is, "Shall it live? I call it glorious, from the immense importance of the hour that is now upon us.

It will live if we bring our patriotism, our love for the truth, not to a boiling, but a moderate heat. Let each brother and sister, father and child, do what they can—take stock in it at a fair premium. The premium to be paid in Hallelujahs when its work as a Journal for Freedom is over.

Sir, I propose to unite with some in investing Five Dollars to begin with; what will others answer? I propose no plan upon which it is to be paid, but leave that to your better judgment—but I suppose you need the money as soon as you can get it, I therefore pay immediately. Now who will be the next customer,—if not for five, for four—for three—for two—for one! for fifty cents? Keep in remembrance, friends, that this stock pays glorious in premiums, however small be the investment. Yet you must remember, that greater the investment, more glorious the premium!

Now sir, I believe I have said enough; perhaps more than enough—for, after all, all that is requisite is but for the people to know your need, and they are ready to nobly respond.

Yours in behalf of the good cause,

J. N. GLOUCESTER.

The following are responses to the above proposition, including Mr. Gloucester's subscription:

J. N. Gloucester,	$5
H. Highland Garnet,	1
Henry M. Wilson,	1
Mary A. Chambers,	1

"THE FATAL STEP BACKWARD."

"The letter commanding GEN. FREMONT to modify his proclamation relating to the emancipation of slaves, is published here to-day, by order of the President. It is rightly construed here to be an abandonment of that whole question. It may be right, but it would seem as if it was condemning the friends of the Union to fight against frightful odds; making them fight too, for a shadow without a substance."—Washington Correspondent of the Daily Times, Sept. 14, 1861.

The reverse at Bull Run was a slight affair compared with the letter of Abraham Lincoln which hurls back into the hell of slavery the thousands in Missouri rightfully set free by the proclamation of Gen. Fremont, which deprives the cause of the Union of its chiefest hold upon the heart of the public, and which gives to the rebels "aid and comfort" greater than they could have gained from any other earthly source.

Fremont, the pathfinder, deserves eternal gratitude from the just and the true, for having found a way to expose to the public gaze the real source of the hesitation, vacillation and the half-and-half policy which has distinguished the government in the conduct of this war; now we all know whom to blame; we can see why officers in the army from major-generals (Banks) down to colonels (Duryea) betrayed such indecent haste to send back to the enemy their fugitive slaves—it was the sure road to Presidential favor, and to army promotion.

And yet we do not despair. The anti-slavery sentiment, the anti-slavery men must see their course clearly and follow it out. They must appeal from the President to the people, and the people will sustain them. Mr. Lincoln rests upon the Act of Congress as his authority for curtailing the "war power" which Fremont exercised in accordance with the well ascertained public law, in such cases often acted upon before. We must force Congress up to the proper platform and to an Act of universal emancipation, by petition upon petition, such as will command their action.

We have earnestly endeavored by letters and through friends, to urge upon Gerrit Smith on the one hand, and the prominent members of the Garrison party on the other hand, to take up the labor of urging upon the people to petition Congress for IMMEDIATE EMANCIPATION. We have urged that now is the time, when the nation is reeling under the blows of slavery, now is the time to preach successfully their lifelong doctrines of Immediate Emancipation, and to load the tables of the coming Congress with the petitions of millions demanding freedom for the slave as the only means of putting down rebellion and saving the republic.

They have all replied in nearly the same strain. Some fear the excitement of counter petitions, and all rely upon the "war power" to accomplish emancipation. The war power indeed! Where is the war power now? A broken reed, dashed to atoms with one stroke of the President's pen. Now then Abolition friends will you suffer your own eyes to teach you? Will you take up the cause of Emancipation by a bold appeal to the people, by an overwhelming voice forcing Congress to Act, or will you desert the slave when you may secure his freedom?

It is idle to trust any longer to the "war power," or to events for the accomplishment of Emancipation. The President is "set" upon upholding the slave system, and is stubborn as a mule. The South is not slow to perceive this and can and will manage him in such a way as to stave off emancipation. He would sooner die than proclaim emancipation, unless overwhelmingly forced to do so by an Act of Congress. To Congress, then let us appeal. Rouse the people.

This is the day's duty of all true abolitionists, and not an hour should be lost.

The forlorn hope of insurrection among the slaves may as well be abandoned. They are too well informed and too wise to court destruction at the hands of the combined Northern and Southern armies—for the man who has reduced back to slavery the slaves of rebels in Missouri would order the army of the United States to put down a slave insurrection in Virginia or Georgia.

A Colored Soldier at Bull Run.

When Governor Sprague's battery was about to leave Providence for Washington a few months ago, the officers wished to engage the services of a colored citizen of that state, as a servant. He replied that he was perfectly willing to go, but would only go as the rest went a full private in the corps. After a little demurring, he was regularly enlisted as a volunteer. At the Battle of Bull Run, the Captain of his gun was killed early in the action, and the colored soldier took command and held it to the last moment; for which he was highly complimented on the return of the troops to Providence. The name of the hero is MR. JAMES REEDER. Pass him round.

Recruiting.

We learn from the daily papers that recruiting goes on slowly. There is little doubt that the Lincoln vs. Fremont letter will cause it to go on slower still. We know that one proposed regiment in this city, which in a few days had enrolled more than two hundred men, disbanded in disgust on reading the re-enslavement letter of the President.

A Card.

VOORHEES' MOONLIGHT EXCURSION.

In justice to myself and for the satisfaction of my many patrons who were so sadly disappointed by the detention of the boat and barge, on Monday evening, I make the following statement:—

The boat getting aground up the East River, I was prevented from calling as advertised. It was half-past nine o'clock before it made Spring Street, when I immediately sent the boat to Brooklyn and Jersey city; but patience ceasing to be a virtue, the parties had all left for their homes. The Capt. in consideration of the disappointment, has tendered his boat and barge, at a reduced price, for a repetition of the excursion, and promises that nothing shall prevent his being prompt to the time designated in the bills.

Respectfully.

T. B. VOORHEES.

P.S. See advertisement in another part of the paper.

Letter from Washington.

WASHINGTON CITY, Sept. 7, 1861.

MR. EDITOR:—

Business with a portion of our people is quite brisk, yet there is a gloom cast over many by recent events. We are thankful, however. The clouds are passing away. No fears are entertained for the safety of the city. Many of our people are employed as United States Government teamsters, and as the late stampede at Bull Run demonstrated the fact that they could be trusted and confided in to a greater degree than their more fortunate white brothers, they are held in high esteem. It is a known fact that there is less treachery amongst the colored people than any other class of residents of the city and vicinity. Many prominent Secession ladies have been arrested for their acts and sympathies too loudly expressed. The prompt measures of the Government have caused them to fear its strength, but in order to vent their malice in some way, they abuse the Union soldiers, and tell all of many absurd things to poor ignorant washerwomen, causing the greatest alarm in their families. Were justice given here, and the word of colored people respected in law, hundreds of well known Secessionists could be criminated and arrested. A lady, to my certain knowledge, after the battle of Bull Run, invited soldiers to her table, and spread every delicacy she could procure before them, and with every demonstration of love and loyalty to the Government and hatred to the South, gained every possible information from the unsuspecting guests, and immediately, through her agents, transmitted the whole to the rebels. The same lady makes her brags (what she has done and will do), to the poor washerwomen, and even advises them to treat with contempt the Northern soldiers, as it will be well for them when Jeff. Davis arrives. The husband of this lady is a clerk in the Post Office, and her son is an officer in the rebel army. He was at one time postmaster in the House of Representatives. This is one of the many similar cases I could mention, but it shows plainly the evil of a law that ignores the right given by God to every man to speak the truth.

An agreeable evening party was given by Mr. Payne a few evenings ago. Many very interesting young ladies and gentlemen were present, and spent a charming evening. Mr. Payne deserves much praise for his efforts to keep society in cheerful spirits.

The wedding of Mr. William Augustus Gibson and Miss Kate Marshall, came off on Thursday, Sept. 5, at 8 P. M., at Israel Church, the Rev. Mr. Smith officiating. It was a brilliant affair, although many were prevented from going by the state of the weather. Nevertheless, the church was nearly filled. The parties entered in the following manner: Mrs. Gibson, mother to the groom, supported by Mr. Dennis Smallwood, and Mrs. Dennis Smallwood supported by Mr. John Smallwood, after which followed the bridesmaid and Mr. Jink Brooks, in front of the bride and groom. After the parties were properly arranged before the altar, the ceremony was commenced, and before the interesting company they pledged their mutual vows, which joined them before God and man in holy matrimony. The bride wore a superb white Swiss muslin trimmed around the neck with lawn lace, and gracefully hung from beneath a wreath of orange blossoms—an illusion-vail, the whole, though plain, showed a fine and exquisite taste. The bride was a beautiful lady with large dark eyes and dark hair. The bridesmaid, Miss R. V. Gibson, a sister to the groom, was dressed the same as the bride, save the bridal ornaments The gentleman looked very well. After leaving the church, many friends paid their respects and congratulations to the happy pair at the residence of Mr. Dennis Smallwood, where was prepared a handsome and magnificent wedding tea-party; after partaking of the rich delicacies, and spending a few happy hours, your correspondent left, not however, before congratulating the happy pair and wishing them a life of sunshine.

B.

A TERRIBLE TRAGEDY IN MILWAUKEE.

[Correspondence of the Chicago Tribune.]

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 9, 1861.

The telegraph has doubtless apprised you of another period of the reign of mob law in this unfortunate city. And this time, under circumstances more to be deplored and with less provocation, too, than on any previous occasion. The circumstances, as I learn them from the best authority, are briefly these. On Friday evening two negroes, one named George Marshall, a well-known barber, and another named James Shelton, a waiter at Anderson's ice cream saloon, started out together for amusement. A little after seven o'clock they were seen in the Third Ward by a couple of Irishmen, named Darby Carney and John Brady. At the time the latter saw them, the negroes were passing a couple of ladies, whom the Irishmen say they insulted; whereupon they remonstrated with the negroes, when the affray occurred in which Carney and Brady were stabbed, the former so severely that he died on Saturday night at eleven o'clock. Brady was not so much injured, and will soon recover. A lamp-lighter near by got mixed up in the affair, and was slightly cut in the side. Carney and Brady were both in liquor, and they allege that the negroes were also, but as they went directly to Dan Rice's show, and were observed to conduct themselves quietly and soberly there, this report is doubted. Nothing more was seen of the negroes until Saturday morning, when they were discovered and arrested by the police.

The affair created great excitement in the 3d Ward, where Carney has long resided. But among other people the matter was commented upon more quietly. The story of the affray, as told by the Irishmen, was the only one current, and was generally believed; the negroes were in the hands of the law, and were in a fair way of having justice meted out to them through the courts; they had neither sympathy nor friends, and would undoubtedly have suffered the extreme penalty of the law. But the hellish spirit of the mob had become inflamed during the day by frequent potations of raw whiskey; and towards evening, as Carney's condition became worse, this spirit increased and it became well known to the police early in the afternoon that if Carney died his friends would demand the lives of the negroes. Carney died at 11 o'clock on Saturday night, and within an hour, by concerted signals, (the ringing of bells) a mob of some three hundred proceeded to the jail, made an onslaught upon it, broke it open, and dragged out the negroes. In the rush, one of them, Shelton, escaped; Marshall was taken to the house of Engine Co. No. 6, and kept some three or four hours, some of the mob being in doubt as to his identity, as there were other negroes confined in the jail. But about four o'clock Sunday morning they determined that, being a "nigger," he must die anyway. A rope was put around his neck and in his mouth, tightened by a stick, the same as a farmer "toggles" a log-chain. He was then dragged through the streets, kicked and maltreated on the way, and finally hung on a pile driver, within one block of the principal business street of the city. But the poor fellow must have been nearly dead before he was hung, for several of his ribs were broken, one of his eyes gouged out, and his body otherwise injured. The body was soon discovered by the police, and taken to the station-house, where it lay during the day. As people came down town in the morning, or stopped on the way to church, they soon learned of the horrible affair, and it afforded sensation enough for another feverish and excited Sunday.

I have already stated that the Police was informed, or had strong reason to believe, that a storm was brewing Saturday, of treason. And the question has been asked a thousand times why were not the authorities prepared for it? Chief of Police Beck himself said that he was informed that they would attack the jail; and he was on hand with a squad of a dozen or fifteen men, but they being mostly Irish, really sympathized with the mob, and would not do anything even if they could. The Chief himself stood in the door with a loaded revolver until he was knocked down and seized by the mob; but I have not learned that he pulled a trigger. The sheriff, whose business it was to protect the prisoner, took no precaution whatever; nor can I learn that he has even been seen since the affair took place. He is an old granny politician, who thinks more of a few votes from the lawbreakers than he does of doing his duty in behalf of good order and decency The Mayor isn't much better, and his inefficiency, or neglect of duty, both in the case of the bank riot and in the present instance, is commented on in no stinted terms. It is no use to mince matters in regard to our city government any longer. The city and county have been governed by a set of corrupt and thieving politicians fot the last ten years. Gardner and Lynch were only a small part of the rascality brought to light. And it is little wonder that while the people have been plundered year after year, that such a spirit of mob law should have grown up, as can only be controlled by cold lead and glistening steel. And a lesson of this nature will have to be taught before we can ever again claim to be a decent community. If every man engaged in the mob of Saturday night had been shot down in his tracks, property would have risen ten per cent. in value within twenty-four hours. And as an evidence that such a treatment is urgently necessary, I need only say that there could easily be found a number of political blacklegs and office-seekers, who are setting their pins for the coming election, who are known to have encouraged and pandered to the spirit of this mob, and covertly justify its proceedings during Saturday and Sunday. "I can name them," and if they get on the track for office this fall, the public will find out how they did it.

Since writing the above, it is reported that the negro Shelton, who escaped, was arrested yesterday afternoon, a short distance in the country, and brought back to the county jail. This was soon noised around among the Irish, and the jail was under military guard all night. But Shelton is yet at large. The verdict of the public as to the nature of the affray which led to these occurrences, is generally changed into the belief that the negroes, after all, only acted in self defense. They were not known to have been drunk, and had never before been guilty of any violation of law. Carney and Brady admitted that they themselves were drunk, and Carney is an old police court bird of ten years' standing, and his misdeeds have cost the county more than a thousand dollars. Brady is a worthless scamp, living in Waukesha county; has been engaged in all the small fights that ever occurred in his town, and I personally know of numerous instances where he has been picked up on his way home from this city too drunk to drive his team.

Of course no arrests of the mob have been made, and probably none will be.

C.

"FREEDOM TO THE SLAVE."

We cannot resist the conviction that the apprehension expressed by the "News," that the Administration is to be embarrassed in the prosecution of the war by the "cry of freedom to the slave," is to a very great extent, if not entirely, affected. We have no idea that it would trouble it a particle to have the Administration embarrassed to any conceivable extent; and in view of the fact, that all the embarrassments of the Administration now proceed from the circumstances that there is such a condition as slavery, it cannot well believe that to declare a condition of freedom would add at all to its embarrassments, but much rather tend to allay what it already has. Nothing can be more certain that if the country were entirely without slavery, it would be without convulsion, and without danger of domestic war from any source, and on general principles it would seem that any "cry" which looked to the abolition of the cause of the war, would tend to hasten peace and strengthen those who were fighting for peace.

Our own impression is, that the "cry of freedom to the slave," while it cannot very well embarrass the Administration, would only fail of helping it as it fails to be a practical "cry." Calling spirits from the vasty deep is a very easy process, but making them come, when you do call, is quite a different thing. And so, crying freedom to the slave is easy to be done, but to realize the cry will probably require work. All that is practical in that direction, it seems to us the Government has already taken steps to accomplish. And besides, the direct steps taken by the Government to affect property in slaves, in our apprehension to conquer the South to obedience, is to conquer slavery. That is the issue really, and if there were any disposition to avoid it, it could not be avoided. Either slavery will conquer the North or freedom will conquer the South, and there neither will nor can be any peace until one or the other of these ends is attained. Whether we cry freedom to the slave or not, or whether we cry at all, is a matter of small importance, and has no embarrassing qualities about it. The great work goes on independent of all such interference, and the great end will be attained. The effective cry will be from the cannon's mouth, and soldiers, not politicians nor editors, will do the work. And, we may add, not a Northern cannon utters its voice but that a well attuned ear may catch the cry, clearly and distinctly, "freedom to the slave." And so far from the cry embarrassing the Government, its embarrassments will cease as the cry becomes effective.—Milwaukee "Sentinel."

JOHN M. LANGSTON ON THE WAR.

A public discussion was recently held at Oberlin of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That whereas in the providence of God the opportunity is now presented to us to extricate ourselves from all complicity with slavery, and to assume a true and impregnable position before God and mankind; therefore,

1. It is the duty of the American people to demand of the government immediately to abolish slavery in the seceded states by the exercise of the war power, and of the government to respond promptly by the exercise of such power.

2. It is our duty to educate our whole people as speedily as possible to assume this position.

Mr. J. M. Langston having been called for, came forward, and spoke in substance as follows:—

My friends—It is highly proper that we should put our trust in God. This is a dictate of reason, and the history of all people confirms it as wise and advantageous. But no man is trusting in God in any proper sense, who refuses to discharge his whole duty to-day, to labor up to the full measure of his strength according to the sentiments of justice and right. As this is individual duty, so it is the duty of nations.

It is true that God calls upon us in the midst of our national crisis, to trust Him as the Ruler of Heaven and earth. But it is equally true that he calls upon us to labor—to co-operate with Him in his grand endeavor to save our land and government. Let us then define to ourselves the great work which we are called upon, under Divine Providence to perform, and betake ourselves to the task, as becomes the sons of noble sires.

To-day we stand in the midst of a great national crisis. The eyes of the whole world are upon us. More than at any other period in our national existence our nation is a city upon a hill, and it cannot be said, "Shall the expectations of mankind be disappointed in regard to the action of the Government with respect to Slavery?" This is a question of profound significance. It becomes the Government and the people to look well to their duty in this particular.

All admit that slavery is the sole cause of our national difficulties—that this rebellion has sprung from it—that this rebellion can not be suppressed till this cause be removed, and that our war cannot be brought to an honorable conclusion till the cause of this rebellion be wiped out. What line of conduct, then, would good policy support? Most certainly that we at once remove the great cause of all our mischief, and thus end a contest which is being conducted at such an enormous expense of life and treason.

Aside from this consideration, it should be urged that England, France, indeed all the civilized nations of the earth, are expecting the Government to adopt the emancipation policy, and that promptly and without hesitation. For upon this course depends the salvation of all the great interests of American civilization. Indeed the interests of civilization the world over demand that our Government adopt this course. Delay is only fraught with danger to the Republic. This course alone will bring success to our arms. Let this course be followed, and very soon our defeats at Bull Run and Wilson's Creek will be utterly eclipsed by the glorious victories which will crown the efforts of our soldiery. And this is true for these all-important reasons. In pursuing this course we will have the sympathy and approval of God, as well as the sympathy and approval of all civilized nations. And thus, too, like brave and earnest men, we will have met the real issue that is forced upon us by the Southern Confederacy. And our noble soldiery, with the purpose and aim of this struggle well defined, will go into battle to fight under the animating conviction that the unity of our Government, the perpetuity of our free institutions, and preservation of the priceless heritage bequeathed to us by our fathers will depend upon the heroism and the courage with which they discharge their duty in the contest between slavery and treason.

Let us not take counsel of our fears. Compromise is a very Devil. Let it not come near us. God and Right are our mighty allies.

From the Wyoming Country Mirror, Sept. 4th.

FREEDOM OR SLAVERY.

What has been the real cause of the present rebellion?

The habit of domineering over their slaves, has cultivated in slaveholders the disposition to control party and nation, as they control their plantations. They were willing to remain in the Democratic party so long as they could control it. Not able to control the Charleston Convention, they seceded. And no longer able to control the nation, they secede, in order to form a nation in which they can still rule.

A small minority of the whole population, they have filled a large majority of the principal offices of the nation. The executive, legislative, and finally the judicial department of the government, have been subjected to their control. But God is just, and free territory has increased faster than slave territory, in wealth and population. Something must be done to counteract this, in order to retain this control. Of free territory at the North, a considerable part of Maine and of Oregon, was surrendered to the British. The Louisiana Purchase, Florida, Texas, and a large part of Mexico, embracing New Mexico, Utah and California, have been added to the South. But gold actuated free immigration, and California asked to be admitted as a free State. Slaveholders objected, and threatened to dissolve the Union. The North "compromised"—passing the Fugitive Slave Law, and letting New Mexico drift into a Slave Territory, in order to purchase the consent of slaveholders to the admission of California as a Free State.

In 1820 the nation owned the territory now constituting Arkansas, Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska. Missouri and Arkansas were partially settled; the rest of this territory was not. The South procured the passage of the Missouri Compromise in order to secure Missouri and Arkansas to Slavery; and, in 1854, procured the repeal of that Compromise in order to open Kansas to slavery.

The attempt of slaveholders, aided by the demon-cratic Administrations of Pierce and Buchanan, by fraud, violence, forgery, perjury and bribery, to make a Slave State of Kansas, resulted in the formation and success of the Republican party and in the admission of Kansas as a free State. By uniting in the support of Douglass, slaveholders might still have defeated Lincoln. But Douglass was pledged to the admission of Kansas as a free State, and that would give the free States a majority in the Senate. As soon as time could turn out the minions of slavery elected in the free States, freedom would have a majority in both branches of Congress. The domination of slaveholders was passing away; and they were determined not to live in a nation in which they could not rule. Hence, they seceded from the Charleston Convention; and by nominating Breckenridge, defeated Douglas and secured the election of Lincoln; and then made that election a pretext for rebellion.

It was not enough that Northern States repealed, or offered to repeal, their harmless personal liberty bills. It did no good for Republicans to introduce into Congress bills for the organization of Territories, without any provision in the bills prohibiting slavery. It was useless for Congress almost unanimously to pass resolutions to the effect that it had no constitutional power to abolish slavery in the slave States, and that the Constitution should never be so amended as to give Congress that power. All these humiliating attempts to conciliate treason were made, and spurned because none of these things would restore to slaveholders the entire political control of the nation.

If by amendment of the Constitution, we would secure to slaveholders the everlasting control of the country, perhaps they would consent to return and govern us.

X.

MEDICAL ADVICE TO NORTHERN VOLUNTEERS.

[From the Cincinnati Times.]

MESSRS. EDITORS:—Having learned that your paper is a favorite among our patriotic young men who are about doing battle for their country, and having made a discovery which I think may save many of them from sickness, and possibly premature death, I therefore, through their favorite sheet, present it to them, subject, however, to your discretion.

During a period of twenty years, I was unceasingly a medical observer in the States of Tennessee, Arkansas, Louisiana, Florida, Alabama and Mississippi, and by this course of observation, the conviction became forced upon me that there is not on this continent, and probably on no other, a district of country on which man, without distinction of race or color, cannot live and labor in all seasons of the year, with an entire immunity from all of those forms of disease which have been denominated malarious—because supposed to be of malarious origin—as well as all of those forms of fever which obtain extensively in low or tropical latitudes, and also in higher latitudes during the summer and autumnal seasons of the year.

My discovery is simply this: any people, white or colored, can labor under a tropical sun, and in those districts too which are regarded as being highly malarious, with an entire immunity from all of those forms of disease which are so much dreaded in tropical latitudes, if they will do their resting, feeding and sleeping in the shade of a dry and thoroughly ventilated forest. Our Northern soldiers can march or fight, or do any other labor in Florida or Louisiana during the warm season, if they will be careful to make all their encampments in a dry and ventilated forest, and no fears need be indulged, because of the near vicinity of marshes or stagnant ponds of water, but more especially if they too are shaded by the forest.

Many Southern planters have been entirely exempt from disease and death, in both their white and colored families, since, in conformity with my instructions, they moved them into a dry, clean and ventilated forest.

This discovery is not of more value to our army and Southern planters than to our Western pioneer population; for it is well known that in many portions of our Western States the people are greatly afflicted with intermitting, and other forms of fever.—From these invasions of their industry, prosperity and health they can make themselves entirely exempt.

What is the very general practice of our emigrants to the West? Answer: When they reach their destination they clear off an acre or two of forest, build a small log house, plow all the land they have cleared, and plant it with culinary vegetables; but before they are matured, the family are all sick with that form of disease which keeps them alternately shivering with cold and burning with fever.

Now, instead of the preceding procedure, I would suggest that the emigrant select, I would say not less than three acres of fruit land, sufficiently elevated and rolling as to readily become dry after a rain—clear it of all brushwood to such an extent, as to allow an equestrian the greater freedom. I would prefer that the trees be vigorous and tall, and upon this selected acre not a tree should be felled—locate the house about the centre of the area. The house as much as possible, should be protected against the direct rays of the sun. This area about the house should be set with blue or some other suitable grass, and kept short by the grazing of calves. In this way our emigrants can have healthy, comfortable and beautiful residences.

It is known and very generally conceded, that Southern climes are more compatible with the health of the African, or black races, than they are with that of the white, and it has been and is now contended by many that white people cannot successfully cultivate rice, sugar and cotton; but my observation and experience during a period of twenty years in the cotton and sugar States, have forced me to the adoption of the contrary opinion. I admit, however, that the climate for the production of rice, sugar and cotton, is much more favorable to the black than to the white races. Nevertheless, if white men will live as I have indicated, they can cultivate successfully rice, sugar and cotton, and with as much immunity from disease and death, as they now do corn and wheat in Ohio.

Although a black skin adapts a man in a high degree to a hot climate; yet there is much of both sickness and death in the black population of the South. But the truth is, no people can labor all day, consecutively, in a solar heat, considerably above that of the animal body, without a better opportunity for recuperation than can be had in a small and poorly ventilated cabin, heated to the temperature of the animal body. That the white race can live and cultivate the cotton plant in Southern Africa, is a question about which I have no doubt; but I would suggest to those of this country who may contemplate emigrating to Africa to make the experiment of growing cotton, to leave their hogs here as certainly as they would their mineral coal.

That much of the disease of our Southern population, but more particularly the black portion of it, results from the use of fatty food, I think there can be no doubt.

W. BYRD POWELL, M. D.

THE CONTRABANDS IN VIRGINIA.

To the Editors of the Independent:

The American Missionary Association have sent a missionary to Fortress Monroe to labor among the "contrabands." The Assistant Secretary of War recommended the missionary to Gen. Wool, who received him very kindly, and offered him every needful facility. The missionary, Rev. L. C. Lockwood, who has labored very acceptably in the service of the Young Mens' Christian Association of this city, has entered upon the work with very encouraging prospects.

Rev. P. Franklin Jones, Chaplain of the 1st Reg. N. Y. Volunteers, first brought the subject to the notice of the Young Mens' Christian Association. He says:

"There are a large number of slaves, who have been forsaken by their masters or who have fled from them and sought refuge from the oppressors' bonds within our lines. * * * Among them are many pious souls, but they are, in this distracted state of things, without any one to watch over them, or to give them religious instruction."

Under date of September 4th, Mr. Lockwood writes:

"Last evening, while conversing on the piazza of the hotel, I overheard music, and directed my footsteps thither, and in a long low building, just outside the entrance of the Fortress, I found a number of colored people assembled for a prayer-meeting. The brother who led in the concluding prayer had a sing-song manner, but his sentiments and expressions were very scriptural and impressive. He prayed that he who brought Israel out of Egypt, Jonah out of the mouth of the whale, and Daniel out of the den of lions, might bring them out into full deliverance, spiritually and temporally.

"I told my mission in few words, and the message was received with deep, half-uttered expressions of gladness and gratitude. They assured me that this was what they had been praying for; and now that 'the good Lord' had answered their prayers, they felt assured that some great thing was in store for them and their people. * * * This morning I had an interview with Gen. Wool and Col. Butler, brother of Gen. Butler. The project met their cordial approbation. I went with one of the 'contrabands' to see others of the leaders. I find them a religious people, and remarkably intelligent considering their circumstances. They gave me a hearty Christian welcome. Arrangements were made for three services on the Sabbath—one in the house of ex-President Tyler, one in a large open building near the Female Seminary building, and one in the hospital chapel of the Fortress. At all of them I am heartily desired to be present and take the lead. Other meetings will be arranged for week-day evenings. I want, as soon as possible, to visit the people at their dwellings, ascertain who are Christians, combine them together in church capacity, and labor, with the divine blessing, for their spiritual edification and the conversion of souls.

"As far as now appears, it would not fulfill the demands of duty to do less than to institute Sabbath-school instruction and week-day instruction, through the teaching of another, and teaching myself as far as practicable. There will be a sufficient number of soldiers and others who will engage in Sabbath-school instruction. Gen. Wool is actively engaged with us in the arrangement of places, etc.

"The 'contrabands' receive regular rations from Government, and a large number are employed in public service. Others are industriously contributing toward their own suppoet in various kinds of employ ment. * * The largest number are quartered in deserted houses near the Seminary, in a former negro quarter, etc."

Funds are respectfully solicited from the friends of humanity and freedom, for the support of the missionary, for teachers, for school-books, etc., and can be sent to Lewis Tappan, No. 61 John street, Treasurer of the American Missionary Association.

INDEPENDENCE OF HAYTI AND LIBERIA.

The "Miner's Journal" of Pottsville, Pa., advocates the recognition of the independence of Hayti and Liberia, on the ground that thousands of our people would then seek homes in those distant countries; but we can tell our cotemporary that he is laboring under a very great mistake in reference to this matter. The colored people will not go to those countries in larger numbers then than they do now. The reason why so many have gone was because they had no hope of their enfranchisement in this land; but the case is very different now. So rapid is the march of events in this country growing out of the war, that we have no doubt but they will culminate in our complete enfranchisement, hence we have concluded to stand still and see the salvation of God. We wish all manner of success to our brethren, both in Hayti and Liberia, but we tell them that they need not look for any vast accession to their numbers from this country at this time. The hour is bright with hope.

What the "Journal" says against the late administration for failing to acknowledge the independence of those countries, is very true and well said, and we sincerely hope the present government may not long lie under like censure.

Fremont's Proclamation in Kentucky.

Mason County, Ky., Sept. 3.

EDS. GAZETTE: That's the talk! Fremont's proclamation. It will effect more than a dozen victories; has the ring of business; looks the struggle plump in its face, and with a single blow breaks its back. It is folly to dodge around this matter any longer; the Cotton States have precipitated this rebellion upon us and we must accept the issue with all its dire calamities. Does any body suppose that the Slavery question can be kept out of the very issue it has created? Up to this time our Government has endeavored to ignore it with no very agreeable results, it must be confessed. Hereafter it must take its place in the contest, and every day it lasts will Slavery more and more advance toward the front of the fight. This is an inevitable result. All the statesmen and philanthropists in the world could not prevent it. Events are more powerful than men in times like these; and if this war lasts three years, as I think it may, there will not be a slave left to fight about.

This step of General Fremont is only the first; it was bound to come; others will follow in rapid succession—then Wo Wo! to Slavery and all who attempt to uphold it; it is doomed to fall by the acts of its mad and felonious advocates.

KENTUCKY.

GENERAL FREMONT'S MISSOURI PROCLAMATION.

LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The following letter from President Lincoln to Major General Fremont, was transmitted to the latter on the 12th inst.:

WASHINGTON, D. C. Sept. 11, 1861.

Major General Fremont,

Sir: Yours of the 8th, in answer to mine of the 2d inst., is just received. Assuming that you upon the ground could better judge of the necessities of your position than I at this distance, on seeing your proclamation of Aug. 30, I perceived no general objection to it. The particular clause, however, in relation to the confiscation of property and the liberation of slaves, appeared to me to be objectionable in its non-conformity to the act of Congress passed the 6th of Aug. upon the same subjects, and hence I wrote you expressing my wish that that clause should be modified. Accordingly, your answer, just received, expresses the preference on your part, and that I should make an open order for the modification, which I very cheerfully do.

It is therefore ordered, that the said clause of said proclamation be so modified, held and construed as to conform with and not to transcend the provisions on the same subject contained in the act of Congress, entitled "An Act to confiscate property used for insurrectionary purposes," approved Aug. 6, 1861, and that said act be published at length with this order.

Your obedient servant,

(Signed) A. LINCOLN.

SLAVES RIVETING THEIR CHAINS.

The Memphis, Tenn., Appeal, chronicles the following with a chuckle of delight, only excelled by that with which it announced the accession of the wild savages of the West to their ranks:

"A procession of several hundred stout negro men, members of the "domestic institution," marched through our streets yesterday, in military order, under the command of Confederate officers. They were well armed and equipped, with shovels, axes, blankets, &c. A merrier set never were seen. They were brimful of patriotism, shouting for Jeff. Davis and singing war songs, and each looked as if they only wanted the privilege of shooting an abolitionist. An abolitionist could not have looked on this body of colored recruits for the Southern army without strongly suspecting that his sympathy for the "poor slave" was not appreciated, and that it was wasted on an ungrateful subject."

This is another proof of the many previously presented to the Northern public, that the rebels are forcing their slaves into the war against the Government in large numbers. They are not alone used in the erection of fortifications, and for teamsters, servants, cooks, etc., but are compelled to enter the ranks, and thus aid in the riveting their chains more securely. Not to use its whole power to destroy this powerful means of aggression would be nothing less than downright cowardice or stupidity on the part of the Government.—Detroit Adv.

SLAVE LIFE IN VIRGINIA.

The rapid spread of intelligence among slaves from one plantation to another is surprising to those not conversant with the singular habits of the blacks.

It is certain that the most trifling event will often spread for miles as rapidly as if sent by mail, and this by word of mouth passed from one to another. For instance, a child was badly burned in a place called Oak Grove, near Washington's birth-place, early on a Sunday morning, and the writer having occasion to visit a neighboring parish twelve miles distant, found the news had already preceded his advent, through the servants, as they are called. The fact is, they do not lie down at night and sleep until morning, but drop down on the floor near the fire, (which they keep in their cabins even in summer,) and, after taking a nap, will start up and go through the woods to some neighboring cabin, and perhaps snooze a little while there and return. They stroll about in this way through by-paths well-known to themselves, in the darkest nights, and keep up a constant communication with their friends. In this way, we may depend upon it that they are well posted concerning all the important events now transpiring, which greatly interests them, on both sides of the line.

Their credulity and superstition is wonderful. Three "boys" had been punished by an overseer in the absence of the master. They considered their castigation unjust, and ran to the swamp, refusing to come in "'till Massa William came home." The old mother of one had been whipped to make her disclose there whereabouts, but in vain. The overseer discovered that "Aunt Polly" had placed three stones over her door as "a charm," and being an ignorant man himself, he performed a like operation to counteract its force. We asked the old woman what she did it for? when she looked pale, (for black folks will grow pale with fear,) and she replied, quite shrewdly—"Well, I don't know, Massa; Ise never heerd tell on that. But Ise heerd tell as how de servants does put stones in de fire place, to keep de hawks away from de chickuns."—Chicago Record.

THE REIGN OF THE MOB IN MILWAUKEE.

The Milwaukee "Wisconsin," of Tuesday evening brings us the following particulars of the doings of the mob which hung the colored men on Sunday morning: They were not satisfied with taking the life of one of the colored men, but determined to wipe out the other, Shelton, who had escaped. Accordingly they appeared before the jail Sunday night:

They said they were not satisfied that Shelton was not still in jail, and wanted to search the jail. The Sheriff assured them that he was not, but offered if they would appoint a committee of four, to have them conducted through the jail by one of his men, so as to satisfy them. They would not assent to this, and started back down stairs. Before this, cannon had been planted north and south of the jail, and military stationed to protect the jail.

The rumor about Shelton being still in jail, probably started from the fact that another negro, named Graham, is confined there, on the charge of burglary, and he looks some like Shelton. This second visitation of the crowd also caused some considerable apprehension with the nervous portion of the community. The crowd went down Main street, and while there the Sheriff essayed to address them, to urge them to mild and lawful measures, but they paid but little respect to what he said. A couple of Infantry companies and an Artillery company kept guard about the jail last night, and there was no further disturbance of any kind.

Yesterday (Monday) there was scarcely any safety for a negro to be seen in the streets. One was walking up Huron street, along in the forenoon, taking it very quietly, when, as he approached near Seaman's building, the brickbats began to fly about him, and he was compelled to retreat in double quick across Huron street bridge. Another, apparently a gentlemanly young negro, was chased a little ways up East Water street yesterday forenoon.

NORTHERN SOLDIERS TO BE SOLD INTO SLAVERY.

A writer in the Savannah, Ga. Republican suggests that all prisoners taken by the rebel army shall be sold into slavery, and made to work side by side with the slaves. He says:

"How shall we dispose of the prisoners?"—and answers it as follows: "Let the Quartermaster General of the Confederate States issue his proclamation, stating that the prisoners will be hired out to the highest bidder for some specified time, and in such number as their hirer may desire. I know of a gentleman in this city, a rich planter, who would gladly take two hundred of the Yankees on his plantation to build up and mend the dams on his fields. He is more desirous of doing this, he says, as the Northern gazettes have long asserted that we can do without negro labor, and he is anxious of testing the question. One good black driver to every forty Yankees, would insure good order and lively work among them."

The St. Catherine (C. W.) Journal, of Sept. 9th, contains the following:

Yesterday afternoon three boys, denizens of the "Patch," named respectively Thomas Ustice, Daniel Barritt, and Patrick Joice, went into the premises of a colored man named Holinsworth, living near the Welland Railway Depot, and commenced despoiling his plum trees of their fruit; or rather we should say that two of them entered, for Ustice remained on the outside to watch, and give notice when danger approached. Holinsworth is a very industrious, steady, hard working man, the keeper of a huckster's stand in the market, and when he perceived the boys pilfering his fruit, he became, very naturally, much excited; and arming himself with a gun, he proceeded after the boys, and fired at them as they were retreating, wounding Ustice, who was on the outside of the fence, very severely in the ribs. Barritt received five shot in the shoulder, and Joice a few in the back. It is thought that all will recover, although Ustice is not quite out of danger. Holinsworth was arrested by Chief Montgomery, and lodged in the Lock-up.

FROM HAYTI.—Haytian papers are to the 24th of August. One of the most interesting pieces of intelligence which they contain is the capture, trial, probable conviction and execution of one of the most villainous freebooters who have ever infested the southern seas. His name is Antonio Pelletier, a fellow who has run through a career embracing every species of piracy, and extending over a period of ten years—thus far, however, without the slightest accounting to the tribunal of justice. He has been caught in the act of forcible robbery on the high seas. He had sailed from Mobile. His own vessel was a clipper schooner—his prey, the barque William, owned in Port au Prince. He will probably meet at length with his just deserts.

SO FAR FROM Emancipation filling the north with negroes, we verily believe [illegible] slavery were abolished, and [illegible] peace existed, a colored face north of Mason and Dixon's line, in a few years would be a rare sight. The south is the natural climate, and has the soil and peculiarities in all respects which favor the negroes, and there they would naturally go and remain, if there was nothing to drive them away. It is slavery that drives negroes north and keeps them there. Emancipation would empty both the northern states and Canada, in a very few years, of all the colored population, and take them South. This is just as certain as that water will run down hill.—Milwaukee Sent.

ANGLO-AFRICAN WAR ITEMS.

A Washington dispatch dated Sept. 16, says:—

There was a stampede of negroes—fourteen in number, men, women and children—in the neighborhood of Lewinsville, to-day. They came to our lines seeking protection, saying they were to have been sent to Manassas that morning. General Smith sent them to Washington. They belonged to the estate of the late Commodore Jones. They stated that they left at their home only a daughter of the Commodore, her mother having departed some time ago for Manassas Junction.

A despatch from Fortress Monroe, dated 15th inst., reads:—

A party of fourteen contraband slaves escaped last night from near Sewall's Point, and came over to the Fortress in a canoe. They represent that provisions are very scarce in Princess Anna county, and that there are some five hundred rebels at Sewall's Point. The force there is constantly changing.

A correspondent of the Sandusky (Ohio) "Register" in a letter dated Elkwater Creek, Virginia, Aug. 27, says:—

And among those whose open hearted and unbounded hospitalities I have been permitted to enjoy, I must say that I found some of their chattels more apt and better informed than their masters. I was also surprised at the promiscuous occupation and familiar equality that existed between them in their household intercourse. It exceeded all the abolition intermingling that I ever witnessed in the darkest corners of the North. They have degenerated in every respect, instead of improved, as we have approached the borders of the great valley of Virginia, after arriving at which I presume, we see some of the scions or originals of the F. F. V's.

The reception of Mr. Thomas G. Perry of Prince George's County, Maryland, who came to General Sickle's camp to reclaim four slaves, was not flattering. He was informed that they were better than he, that he was a nigger thief, and received unsavory personal news. Mr. Garrison himself could not have outdone these bold spoken Irish Democrats.

The Washington "Star" of the 14th inst., contains the following items:—

Two companies of the Third Regiment of Sickles' Brigade, which have been on an expedition through Anne Arundel county, stopped on their return at Mr. Washington Bell's, in Prince George's county, and were treated in a most hospitable manner. They repaid his kindness by carrying off with them three of his best slaves. Mr. George W. Duvall, one of the newly appointed patrolmen for the county, saw them and tried to reclaim them, but they escaped from him, and he was laughed at by the soldiers. He succeeded, however, in arresting one "contraband" who was following the command and would not tell his master's name. He was lodged in jail.

Major Cooper of the Kentucky Cavalry brought to this city this morning two fugitive slaves of citizens of Marlboro and Piscataway, Maryland, and delivered them up to Justice Donn, who sent them to jail. If they owners are loyal they will be restored.—"Washington Star."

The Washington correspondent of the New York "Tribune," writes:—

The intrenchments at Munson's Hill appear to be nearly completed, and the rebels were to-day occupied in planting heavy guns in position. Their principal point of attack against our pickets is a deserted barn on the left of Little Rivet turnpike, which is constantly filled with their marksmen, "the best of whom has been discovered to be a negro."

The Cincinnati "Commercial" of the 14th, says:—

A contraband, from Nashville, Tennesee, "worn out in service and labor," created some stir among the boys in the streets yesterday afternoon, as he stood in front of the Post Office like a Greek statue, with his hat in one hand extended forth and upward for contributions, while he held on with the other to a staff thrown across his shoulder, to which he had his carpet sack attached. He said he had walked from Cairo, and was three weeks on the way. As near as he could recollect, he would be eighty-five years of age on the 25th of this month. He wore the United States army cloth. His figure and positions were a study for a painter or sculpture. His name, he said, was Samuel Rideout, though he looked as though he rarely used any locomotive engine save his neither pins. Well, what is in a name?

A correspondent of the Indianapolis "Journal," writing from Fairfax county, Va., remarks:—

The extent of country commanded by the felling of the trees is immense. You should have heard the sound of the axes, being wielded by at least two thousand strong arms at once.

Myself and J. visited the hut of an old negress situated at the foot of one of the hills, out in a deep ravine, entirely shielded from view by surrounding thickets, the approach thereto being indicated by a narrow pathway. The old lady was a hearty old dame, save what she suffered from the blessed rheumatiz and 'flenza. She was as black as ebony, with hair as white as snow. Her daughter and grandchildren were around her. I remarked to her, "Aunty, you look very hearty for one so old." She replied, yes, dat for one who had [illegible] fourteen children, she tho[illegible] raised would run to [illegible] thought she did. She [illegible] the door every minute and return with clasped hands, exclaiming, "De Lor' knows I never heard such a cutting of trees since I war born."

The Washington correspondent of the Cincinnati "Inquirer" says there are eight full regiments of colored men, of a thousand men each, in Canada, and four more in Pensylvania, whose services have been offered to the government. These 12,000 men have not been accepted, but they have not been refused. Private assurances have been given to them that their services may be needed, and they have been encouraged to keep up their organization.

A correspondent of the Zion's "Herald," writing from Merridian Hill, near Washington, remarks:

Colored people visit us continually to sell refreshments, and some of them prove to be good earnest Methodists. One of them gave his name as Diggs; said he had been Gen. Cushing's servant for nine years, and that gentleman had loaned him $950 to purchase his children from slavery; he had previously purchased himself. The General he called a good Union man. "I know his heart," he said; "I have often heard him talk against rabid disunion feeling, and advise those who believed it to go for the Union." He had an exalted opinion of the General, and was surprised to hear that the man was not popular in Massachusetts. "That Massachusetts," he thought, "must be a great place; I must go with you when you go back, and see it." The class he represents cheered us enthusiastically all along our journey here, waving handkerchiefs, aprons, old bags, or anything convenient; and when they could do no better, waving their hands and shouting for the Union.

A Washington dispatch dated 15th inst., reads:—

The advance of a large reconnoitering force of Confederate troops in the neighborhood of Balls Cross Roads, and the destruction of the property of known Union men were renewed this morning. They drove in our pickets to within half a mile of the roads so as to get possession of a house occupied by a colored man named Lern Bennett, which they burnt to the ground. Bennet and his wife were captured two weeks ago and taken South.

☞ There are at least twenty-five thousand slaves in Missouri whose masters are, or have been in the rebel army, and who are therefore declared "free men," by Fremont's recent proclamation, confiscating all property of rebels with arms in their hands against the Government.

A correspondent of the New Hampton (Iowa) Courier, in a letter from Ironton, Mo., says:

A slave in Ironton told one of our boys the other day, that his master had used him mighty mean, but since the soldiers came he had been trying to make up with him, but he could not come it,—he was going to be FREE.

The St. Louis Democrat of the 2d inst. makes the following interesting announcement:

"The Home Guards of Washington county have been stirring up a nest of Secessionists in that quarter. On Friday and Saturday last they captured fifteen of them. An effort was made to take James McCullock, a noted Secessionist of that county, and formerly a member of the Legislature. His negroes, some eight or ten, and a fine lot of stock, were captured. The negroes, under the proclamation, go free."

The Washington correspondentof the Independent writes:—

There is much feeling here among leading men, caused by the action of Gen. M'Clellan in ordering the return of fugitive slaves, or rather their arrest in camps and imprisonment in jail to await the claim of their masters. This is in contravention of the spirit of the letter addressed by the Secretary of War to Gen. Butler, for it constitutes our troops but an army of negro-catchers. It is directly in contradiction to the letter of Fremont's proclamation, which has been unanimously accepted by the people of the loyal states as the true interpretation of our relation to slaveholders in rebellion against the Government.

SUMMARY.

We take the following from the Pittsburg Dispatch of the 14th inst.—

For some years past a family named Weible, respectable people, we believe, have resided in the 2d ward, Allegheny. The elder Weible being frequently absent on business down the river, where he was engaged in the coal business, somewhere on the Mississippi river. Last spring he remained away longer than usual, and his son visited him to ascertain the cause of the delay. More recently Mrs. W. made a trip for the same purpose, and both returned apparently well satisfied. A married daughter also visited the family in Allegheny from the South, and remained some time, bringing with her a little colored girl, a slave, it is said, ten or twelve years of age, to wait upon her. The sentiments of the family expressed without reserve, were so strongly in favor of secession and so obnoxious to their neighbors, that they were finally induced to believe that a return to the sunny South was the most advisable course, and began their preparations for removal.

In the meantime the colored people in the vicinity got wind of the affair, and took possession of the little girl. The U. S. marshal was notified of the facts of the case, and a suit entered before one of the city aldermen to obtain a legal release of the little girl.—The *quondam owner appeared in high dudg*eon, and at first refused to listen to any statement of her position. She was finally convinced, however, that the child could not be taken away, and very ungraciously yielded her claim, threatening that those who interfered in the matter would live to regret having done so.

The colored man, Richard Van Deusen, who was examined at Weedsport N. Y. on Monday, on suspicion of burning the barns in Cayuga county, on Friday and Saturday nights last, was fully committed on two charges of arson. There is much feeling against the accused.

PERSONAL.

We have had the pleasure of grasping the hand of that earnest worker for our people, David W. Ruggles, of San Francisco. He has been spending a few weeks in Massachusetts and this city, and will return to San Francisco in the steamer of to-day.

Joseph S. Tatnall, Esq., and Capt. Rhodenwoll, of Nassau, N. P., arrived in this city last Saturday. They brought with them a large cargo of fine pineapples. Mr. Tatnall's health had suffered much from an illness of several months duration, but we are glad to learn that he has been much benefitted by his trip to this post.

Rev. Wm. E. Walker and estimable lady passed through this city last Wednesday, en route to Massachusetts, where they will probably spend several weeks.

Rev. Wm. P. Newman returned to this city during the week, from a short tour through Canada West, and probably left in the steamer of the 20th for Kingston, Jamaica, his future home. He says he had many opportunities of imparting information to the people in relation to the islands of Jamaica and Hayti.

Frederick Douglass addressed an audience of over one thousand persons at South Butler, N. Y., on the 1st inst., on the present state of American affairs.

DIED.

GLASKO.—On Monday, Sept. 2d, at Norwich, Conn., while on a visit to his daughter, Mr. Isaac C. Glasko, of Griswold, in the 85th year of his age.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

The colored man who left a pocket knife in an Eighth Avenue car, on Sunday evening Sept. 8th, may obtain the same, after proving property, by calling at the office of the Anglo-African.

Special Notices.

T. B. VOORHEES'

EXCURSION TO BULL'S FERRY,

BY BOAT AND BARGE.

Owing to so many being dissapointed in not attending the last Excursion, caused by an unavoidable delay, it will be repeated

On Thursday, the 26th Inst.

giving all an opportunity to enjoy the fine treat

PROF. ROBT. H. BROWN

will be in attendance.

Parties can bring their children and enjoy the country air, as we shall lay at Bull's Ferry for three hours, returning at 6½ o'clock, landing at 30th and 22d Streets, each way, reaching the city early in the evening for all that wish to go off. The boat and barge will then make another excursion up the river, and return by 12½ A.M.

TICKETS FOR THE WHOLE EXCURSION THIRTY CENTS EACH.

The steamer will stop at South 7th Street, Williamsburg at 1 o'clock, P.M.; Fulton Ferry, Brooklyn, at 1½; Jersey city 12; thence to Spring St., leaving there at 2½ with the barge, and will land at 22d and 30th Sts.

N.B. There will be no delay, as the boat will be prompt in her landings.

COME AND HELP US.

There will be an entertainment given for the benefit of the Rev. Mr. Manning, on Thursday evening, October the 3rd, 1861, in the Zion M.E. Church in Devoe St., Williamsburg city.

The committee knowing the pecuniary embarrassments under which the Trustees are laboring and their inability to make provision for their Pastor for the coming winter, desire to do what they can, to meet his pressing wants—and they cordially invite all the friends of the Rev. Mr. Manning to lend a helping hand.

Donations of any kind will be thankfully received. Tickets 25 cents, children under 12 years 13 cents, to be had of the following committee:

Miss Jane A. Williams,
Mrs. Octavia Buckus,
Mrs. Mary E. Hicks,
Mrs. Rudolphine Schemerhorn,
Miss Frances A.E. Fitch,
Mrs. Thomas Thompson.

Copies of Anglo-African can be obtained of Mr. Samuel Bayard, 61 Union Street, New Haven, opposite the Railroad depot.

Rev. Henry M. Wilson is now Assistant Secretary of the African Civilization Society, No. 26 Bible House.

Office hours Monday, Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, from ten A. M. till two P. M.

As many letters are sent to his care for different persons in this city, it would be well for parties expecting letters to call at Mr. Wilson's Office.

THE PROPOSED NEW BOOK OF MARTYRS.

For the above work the undersigned would state, in answer to numerous inquiries, that he wishes to collect full and accurate accounts of all cases of abuse growing out of SLAVERY, of the loss of time, property and life, whether among whites, Indians, or blacks. He is not particular as to the length of the articles, for, when we come to the publication, it may be best to abridge some statements; but the original communications will be carefully preserved and placed in some historical collection for preservation and reference. Whatever will serve to illustrate or add interest to the statements, such as photographs or engravings, or autographs of the persons, or maps and plans of the localities named, will be thankfully received and carefully preserved. If the case has been published in the papers, or in pamphlets or books, please make reference to them or forward them. Names of persons, places, and dates, which, if divulged would involve the parties in difficulty, may be withheld in the communication. Let every one send on what he or she may have to communicate as early as possible. We shall feel greatly obliged to Editors who will copy this advertisement and give it a favorable notice, and all who will promptly respond to this call will receive our hearty thanks.

Address, L. G. OLMSTEAD, New York.

INFORMATION WANTED in regard to Alexander or Sandy Hogan, son of Betsey Hogan. He left the service of Mr. Jenkins in Baltimore, in June, 1859, and came to the North to solicit money to purchase the freedom of his wife. He is believed to have been in Birmingham, N. Y., about five weeks ago. Skin light brown. An aged mother is anxious to ascertain his whereabouts, and will be grateful for information sent to Wm. Still, 107 North-Fifth street, Philadelphia.

Anti-slavery papers please copy. 3t.

Letters or newspapers for Hayti or Jamaica will be promptly forwarded if left with Mr. N. R Ashby, at Lewis & Co.'s store, 24 South Street. New York.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

JUST PUBLISHED

"THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE IN LIBERIA."

The Anniversary address, on the 26th July, 1860, in Cape Palmas, Liberia, by the Rev. Alex. Crummell, B.A.

For Sale at the Anglo-African Office, 48 Beekman St., New York. Price 15 cents. 8 4t.

CLOCKS, WATCHES, JEWELRY and Musical Boxes carefully Repaired by Wm. C. H. Curtis, No. 153 Thompson St., N. Y. Silver Plating and Fine Gilding. 8 tf.

A NEW WORK

TO BE READY ABOUT THE 25TH OF SEPT.

REPORT OF THE NIGER VALLEY

EXPLORING PARTY;

BY

M. R. DELANY, CHIEF COMMISSIONER.

CONTENTS.

Political Movements.
Succeeding Conventions.
History of the Project.
Arrival and reception in Liberia.
Liberia—Climate, Soil, [illegible]
Diseases—Cause, Remedy.
The Interior.
Topography, Climate, &c.
Diseases of this part of Africa.
Treatment, Hygeine, &c.
Missionary Influences.
What Africa now Requires to Direct Legitimate Commerce.
Cotton Staple.
Success in Great Britain.
Commercial Relations in Scotland.
The time to go to Africa.

Complete in sections (chapters) consecutively from I to XVI, being most conveniently arranged in cut-in or side marginal notes, embracing every subject therein treated, so that in an instant any point or paragraph of interest may be at once [illegible] to.

A learned and candid gentleman who has resided many years in Africa, after glancing over the proof sheets, pronounced it the most interesting and instructive work ever issued on that subject, and should be in the hands of every friend of Africa. It is a complete text-book.

The work contains 72 large pages, and will be sold at the low price of

TWENTY-FIVE CENTS PER COPY.

All Orders should be addressed to the Publisher,

THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St, N. Y.

THE ZOUAVE AND SLAVE ENVELOPE
Price per thousand $5; per hundred 60 cents; packages of 25 each, 20 cents.
Orders should be addressed
THOS. HAMILTON
48 Beekman Street, N. Y

PRIVATE BOARDING HOUSE
BY
MRS. W. S. WILKINS & Co.,
610 PINE, ABOVE SIXTH STREET,
PHILADELPHIA 7-13t.

LADIES' FURNISHING STORE.
CHILDREN'S CLOTHING
READY-MADE AND MADE TO ORDER, BY
MRS. S. WILKINS & CO.,
610 Pine, above Sixth Street, Philadelphia.
7-13t.

A SCHOOL WANTED.—A YOUNG LADY, a graduate of the of the High School of this State, and who is fully qualified as a teacher, is desirous of obtaining a school where the salary would not be less than $200 a-year. Address Thos. Hamilton, 48 Beekman St., N.Y.

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION. THE UNdersigned respectfully announces that he is now prepared to give instruction in the ART OF SINGING. He will be at home at 187 Navy Street, Brooklyn, on MONDAY EVENING, and at ZION CHURCH, N. Y., on THURSDAY EVENING, of each week. Ladies or Gentlemen desiring instruction, will please apply immediately. Singing schools taught and private instruction given on moderate terms.

3tf. ROBT. HAMILTON,

NEW SAILOR'S HOME. CHARLES M. FORTES, has opened a pleasant home for Seamen, at 26 MULBERRY STREET, N. Y., Seamen will find this a very desirable house, as it is in a central location, and every provision made for their comfort.

Boarding by the day or week. Terms moderate. 31y

WANTED AT TILMAN'S AGENCY, NO. 70 East 13th Street, one door east of 4th Ave., first class colored help, and none else. Cooks, house-workers, chambermaids, waitresses and laundresses, coachmen, waiters, &c. Now is the time; fall is near and good help wanted for city and country.

MRS. E. CLARKE, IS HAPPY TO ANnounce to her friends and the public, that she has opened her new BOARDING HOUSE, and will be very thankful for their patronage, at No. 66 SULLIVAN STREET, NEW YORK. 4-1t

DENTISTRY.

BEAUTIFUL ARTIFICIAL SETS OF TEETH on gold or silver plate on the most improved style. All other Surgical operations, performed to entire satisfaction, on very moderate terms by G. H. GRICE, Surgeon Dentist, 79 Thompson St., N. Y.

MRS. E. LEONARD,
FASHIONABLE
DRESS MAKER,
25 SULLIVAN STREET, NEW YORK.
Receives monthly the latest Paris Fashions.
3tf.

BOARDING AND LODGING

BY MRS. MARY JOHNSON, 120 West 20th Street, New York. This house is very pleasantly situated in a very healthy and convenient part of the city.

Boarding for Ladies, ... [illegible]
" " Gentleman, [illegible]
Lodging per week, 75

JAMES R. W. LEONARD,
CARD AND JOB PRINTER,
219 CENTRE STREET, NEW YORK.

THE BEST DRESSING FOR THE HAIR during warm weather, is White's vegetable extract. For Sale at 19 Sullivan and [illegible] Grand Sts.

BOARDING AND LODGING ON THE [illegible] Side. Mrs. Gant, [illegible] and Gentlemen, at her residence [illegible] Terms very moderate.

BROWN'S POPULAR [illegible]
The undersigned [illegible] Friends and the public [illegible] fitted up his SALOON [illegible] pared to furnish them with Ice Cream, Fruit, and other [illegible]
BENJ. F. BROWN,
[illegible] between Broadway & Crosby [illegible]

WARRANTED TO CURE [illegible] in 10 minutes, White's Vegetable [illegible] For sale at 55 West Broadway, [illegible] and Frankfort Sts.

Poetry.

MOTHER IN THE CLOUD.

I saw thee in the cloud, mother,
  Thou smilest on me there;
The sunny wreath—thy shroud mother
  Thy grave—the spangled air!
Thy wing, all golden seems, mother,
  To span the heavens broad,
And urge thy shining course, mother,
  Among the isles of God.

Oh! art thou in the cloud, mother,
  That veils Jehovah's throne:
Thy robe, no more the shroud, mother—
  Christ's wedding garments on.
Ye form those angel throngs, mother,
  That but in dreams appear:
And bathe in floods of song, mother,
  That but the blest can hear

Your crown's at Jesus' feet, mother,
  Your head's within your wing:
Ye crowd the mercy-seat, mother,
  Whose arches ever ring
With raptured songs, too sweet, mother,
  For human lip to sing—
"Oh, Grave! where is thy victory?
  Oh, Death! where now thy sting?"

RICH AND POOR.

I saw a poor man enter where
  The worshippers of God were seen.
His garments cheap and worn threadbare,
  Yet all was tidy, neat, and clean—
    I saw him take a lonely seat,
    And worship at the Saviour's feet.

I saw, hard by, a family
  Dress'd out in satin, silk, and gold:
Their look was haughty, proud, and high,
  Their gait was very stern and bold—
    They scarcely deigned to look that way,
    So poor was he, so rich were they.

I looked again my faith ahead.
  And saw the "great white throne" on high:
I saw the living and the dead,
  All hastening to their destiny:
    The rich and poor were in that host,
    And some were saved and some were lost.

I saw the man who years ago
  Was dressed in tinsel, silk, and gold:
But oh, how changed! how full of woe!
  What anguish did his looks unfold!
    His lofty airs were fled and gone,
    He stood a wretch, unsaved, undone.

I saw the poor man clad in white,
  Stand with the glorious seraphim;
Angels that glow in realms of light,
  Were not ashamed to be with him—
    Oh who would not prefer to be
    A sinner saved, though poor as he?

THE HOUR AND THE MAN.

BY MRS. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

At last a blow has been struck which finds an echo in the heart of a whole nation! and will find an echo in the hearts of the whole civilized world. The hour has come, and the man!

Fremont's proclamation has in it that genuine military ring—that martial directness, for which the heart of the people in disturbed times always longs. They long for the man without fear—whose sword divides all meshes of compromise, all fine-spun legal doubts and hesitancies—who is not afraid to take the responsibility of a thorough movement in a critical hour, and who does something splendid and decided, while the rest of the world are feebly and perplexedly making up their mind what to do.

Not often has the opportunity of so splendid a deed been given to any one mortal. To right wrong—to uphold law—to give liberty to the slave by one majestic declaration, is the privilege of one in centuries. Fremont has done it—and every heart through the nation leaps up at the news, as the human heart always leaps at what is grand and heroic.

It is true that we did welcome even the acute lawyer-like subtlety which, by naming the slave the contraband of war, took him ingeniously from the grasp of the oppressor. We forgave the fallacy of the figure for its benevolent ingenuity, and the heart of the North warmed toward Butler for using the fine weapons of legal diplomacy on the side of humanity.

All honor to Butler—for while he stooped to call the slave a thing, it was that he might use him as a man. He used the very terms of the Southren law which had stripped the negro of human personality and recorded him a chattel to build a fortress of protection around him, under whose shadow his human rights might be once more restored; and thousands of liberated slaves will bless the name of Butler to their latest day; and when he comes to a dying hour, we question whether all military glory will weigh so much in his eyes as the thought of the human beings he has restored to liberty and manhood.

But it is the noble prerogative of the military chieftain to declare law without subtlety or explanation. Fremont does not call the slave contraband of war. That position, advantageous and ingenious in its day, is now abandoned for higher vantage-ground. Fremont does not even speak of the slave as property. He makes the just distinction: the property of traitors he declares confiscated; their slaves, if they have any—free. There we have it, fair and square. Out goes his banner! down goes his glove! and if any one does not like it, let him try conclusions, sword with sword—that is all!

Earth shall not look on a sublimer sight than the army of the South and West, with freedom to the slave on its banner, as it shall roll majestically down the Mississippi, with the prayers of the oppressed rising like many waters for its success, and the songs of redeemed ones wakening like birds as it passes.

The hero of the golden gate who opened the doors of that splendid new California world, has long been predestined in the traditions of the slave as their coming liberator. "Fremont and liberty" are words that have been coupled in many a song before now—and Fremont has made good the augury. So far as we have seen and heard, this proclamation has met that universal response which the world always accords to a fitting deed done in the fulness of time.

We longed for a bold step—we sighed for a victory—and we have got it!

It was something to take the shores of North Carolina. Well and gallantly was it done. But this proclamation is a greater victory than that: it will carry with it a swing and impulse—a moral force, which will be felt through all nations.

This will be a burning test of the sincerity of those in foreign lands who have said, All our sympathies are with this war when we shall see that it emancipates the slave. Let us see if it proves so. Let us see if they who carped at Butler, though he freed thousands, because he used the legal technics of slave-law to do it, will now respond to the open trumpet-call of Fremont—declaring liberty at a breath to sixty thousand slaves!

Will they meet this great movement with generous sympathy, or with unworthy detraction? To us, now, the question matters little—to them a great deal. It will show to all the world what manner of spirit they are of!

Let us pray that this heroic declaration of Fremont's find its echo at once in the Eastern army. We have freed a great many slaves and got very little credit for it—we have freed them as it were under protest, by pretext, by ingenious subleties—now, let us free them martially and with the high hand.

We have had a good lawyer for them, now let us have a good general. The heart of the nation longs to hear in the East just such a trumpet call as we have heard from the West.—"Independent."

SLAVES TAKING CARE OF THEMSELVES.

Says an exchange: "The invariable argument of slaveholders when urged to emancipate their slaves, is, "They are unfit for freedom, and would not know how to take care of themselves. They are better off in slavery than if set free." Many of the Northern States have similar feelings, but the following incident from the experience of Mr. Nelson, the distinguished author of the "Cause and Cure of Infidelity," is instructive on this point.

Although himself a slaveholder for many years, he could not feel that slavery was right, and when the colonization scheme was started, he entered heartily into it, hoping it would do away with the evil entirely; but, soon satisfied it would never accomplish that for his country, he turned his attention to the duty of "immediate emancipation;" and after long and prayerful consideration of the subject, he consulted his wife about the matter, and they decided to set their negroes free at once.

So calling them together, he told them of his convictions of the sin of slavery, and that he had decided to give them free papers. Their joy was unbounded, and he was overwhelmed with their vociferous exclamations of "tank you, massa!"

"Old Isaac," as he was called, was a very stupid, careless, indolent fellow, who seldom did anything right, even when he was told. If sent to the barn to feed the horse, he was sure to leave the measure where the horse would kick it over, and everything he undertook seemed to go wrong. So Dr. Nelson and his wife conscientiously concluded that it would not be right to set Isaac adrift, for he never could take care of himself, and would be in danger of starving.

Soon after, the Doctor began to reason with his neighbors on the sin of slaveholding, and the duty of emancipation, appealing to his own example as evidence of his sincerity. They replied he had not liberated all, as Isaac was still a slave.

Dr. Nelson said that it was very true, and that for conscientious reasons he did not think it would be right to turn off such a stupid fellow, and he retained him merely out of pity for him.

"That is just the case with our negroes," they replied. "They cannot take care of themselves, so we keep them for their own good."

Dr. Nelson was in a quandary. He saw he must liberate Isaac, at all events, if he would have any influence with others in the matter. So he went to him as he sat in the kitchen one day, with the same leaden look upon his face, seeming more asleep than awake. "Isaac," said Dr. N.

"Yes, massa," drawled Isaac.

"I have been thinking of giving you free papers." (Isaac looked up rather wonderingly.) "But I am afraid if I do, you will suffer." Isaac opened his eyes wider than before.) "I don't think you can take care of yourself; I have no idea you can." (Isaac looked anxious.) "But I have made up my mind to set you free."

"O, tank you, tank you, massa!"

"And Isaac, if you ever get hungry, just remember there is enough to eat in my kitchen, and come and help yourself."

Isaac no sooner realized that his master was in earnest than his face lighted up, and he burst out, "O, tank you, tank you, massa; freedom is de sweetest ting in de wide world, massa!"

He took his papers and left, and for some months Dr. Nelson heard nothing of him. But one day, as he was traveling, he saw some one approaching on horseback. As he drew near the "ivory" began to shine, the eyes rolled about in rather an unusual manner, and who should the stranger be but "Old Isaac!" not the slave, but Isaac the freeman, in a new suit of clothes, and with a face no longer stupid, but full of the consciousness, and importance and happiness of his new life. He was quite overjoyed at meeting his old master.

"And how do you like freedom, Isaac?"

"O, massa, freedom sweetest ting in de wide world! sweetest ting in de world, massa!

"But what have you been doing, Isaac?"

"O, me been to work; me got forty dollars in me pocket; me own dis brack pony; tell what 'tis, freedom is de sweetest ting in de world, massa!"

And Dr. Nelson said he never afterwards doubted that any slaves, with the motives of freedom to inspire them to work, could "take care of themselves."

THE VOICE OF CHRISTIAN ENGLAND TO AMERICA, FOR THE EMANCIPATION OF SLAVES.

The Church of the Puritans was reopened yesterday, by the pastor, the Rev. Dr. Cheever. In the evening he preached on "The Voice of Christian England to America, for the Emancipation of the Slaves." The Church was crowded to its utmost capacity, all anxious to hear the Rev. Doctor's reflex of the Christians of Great Britain in reference to the present war. He took for his text the following:

"Israel hath sinned, and they have also transgressed my covenant which I commanded them; for they have even taken of the accursed thing, and have also stolen, and dissembled also, and they have put it even among their own stuff. Therefore, the children of Israel could not stand before their enemies, but turned their backs before their enemies, because they were accursed: neither will I be with you any more, except ye destroy the accursed from among you."—Joshua vii: 11, 12.

He began by observing, that in the whole current of profane history, it was doubtful if there had ever been a series of events that of themselves more directly claimed the application of that Scripture, than the history and present crisis of our own war. The coat not only fitted, but the juncture took it and put it on. He had selected the text at the suggestion of an officer in the British army, who had written to him immediately after hearing of the affair at Bull Run. As he was seeking for some way through which to convey the voice of Christian England to America, what could he have done better than take the very suggestion of the heart and conscience of a Christian friend, sincerely attached to this country, as well as his own, and well fitted to personify and express the feeling of British Christianity and friendship in regard to us? For it was the voice of Christian sentiment and kindness with the utterance of which he was charged, and not of political bitterness or prejudice.

WHY SYMPATHY IS WITHHELD.

The reason why the sympathies of Great Britain, and, indeed, of all Europe, had not been more directly and positively on our side, as well as against the Southern slave-trading confederacy: It was just because so long as we maintain our own sanction of Slavery, and complicity therewith, we ourselves effectually repressed and prevented that sympathy by setting the Christian conscience of the world against us. If that conscience was against the slavetrading confederacy, as indeed it was, because they had impiously set Slavery as the corner-stone of their intended empire, and the vital law and force of their rebellion: it was also inevitably against ourselves, if we likewise maintained the sanction of Slavery, and go against the Southern rebellion, only because we would endure no divided empire, and were determined not simply that Slavery should not be an independency by itself, but that it should quit its rebellion against ourselves, and submit to be an integral part of our own rebellion against God, should submit to the formula of "the Union and Slavery." It was just because this seemed to be the war cry of the patriotism of our Government and people at this time—"the Union and Slavery"—that the sympathy of British Christianity was chilled in regard to us, and turned into rebuke. We had taken of the accursed thing, and hid it among our stuff; the very wedge of gold out of the tents of our enemies we had claimed as ours.

THE DUTY OF THE PEOPLE AND THE PRESIDENT.

Our conduct was much like that of Saul, in his disobedience of God, when he spared Agag the great rebel, and the best of the stuff, and the prophet Samuel had to step in, and execute for God the war measure that Saul had refused, in hewing Agag to pieces before the Lord. Now, our Saul ought to hew the Agag of this rebellion, its slavery, and bury the carcass where it never shall rise again. God has given him the power. But if he would not do it, alas! there seemed to be no Samuel in our camp or nation. There ought to be. Some blows had been struck in the right direction by some of our commanders, but the prophets of the Lord were still conservatives, and our Samuel says, "Put off the hewing of Agag in pieces to the last moment. Do not obey God in such an extreme mesure until you are compelled to do it. Conquer the rebellion first. It will lose Kentucky, if we obey God." If the President of the United States would but use his legitimate power in the national proclamation of freedom to every slave, he would exalt his country, and place his own name higher among its benefactors than even Washington. It was our duty to send petitions to the President and the Congress, and to pray to God that he would so influence the mind, and so enlighten and constrain the conscience and the heart of the President, as to compel him into the performance of this glorious act. Let it not be said of the President, as it had sometimes been said of the gospel ministers, that "he failed in his sermon because he had lost his prayer book." The Christian people of this country, who saw eye to eye in this matter, ought to bear the President onward in such a manner with their prayers as to make him God's gapman, to strike this blow. Let God find such a gapman, such a Savior of his country, put forward—forced forward on the shield and in the arms of our prayers, in the person of our President, uttering this watchword, enrolling this banner at the command of God, and speaking out what is the voice of the whole heart of the country longing to be spoken, "Freedom to all the inhabitants of the land!" Then would God be honored, and the people justified and pardoned, and the rebellion would instantly be subdued and our country saved; and President Lincoln's name and memory would go down to posterity, as that of the second father of his country, and emancipator of four millions.

CONCLUSION.

The Reverend Dr. continued to speak at some length, showing the inconsistency of waiting upon Providence for the abolition of Slavery, while we refused to repose in him concerning this Rebellion. The defeat and rout at Bull Run were preceded by that military order from Government that no more fugitives were to be received within our lines. Down came God's thunderbolt for that. That God would have compassion upon us, that he would bring us to repentance in season to arrest the awful calamities that otherwise were impending over us, that he would open the eyes and the heart of our President and his Cabinet to see the breakers on which we ware steering, before we strike, that he would incline them, and that speedily, to the one measure of freedom to the enslaved—the one act of national justice and righteousness, for which God and the country were calling, and for want of which our dearest interests are now periled, and we are sinking beneath an increasing burden of guilt and shame, that God would have mercy on us, and bring us, both Government and people to our senses in a proclamation of liberty to the captive before it be too late, was still our humble hope as it was our earnest prayer, and must be the earnest prayer of millions in this time of need.

A WESTERN OBITUARY NOTICE.

MISTER EDATUR:—Jem Bangs, we are sorry to stait, has deseized. He departed this Life last munday. Jem wos generally considered a gud feller. He dide at the age of 23 years old. He went 4th without ary struggle; and sich is Life. Tu da we are as pepper grass—mighty smart—tu Morrer we are cut down like a cowcumber of the ground. Jem kept a nice store, which his wife now waits on. His virchews wos numerous to behold. Menny is the things we bot at his growcery, and we are happy to stait to the admiring wuld that he never cheeted, speshully in the wate of markrel, which wos nice and smelt sweet, and his survivun wife is the same wa. We never new him to put sand in his sugar, though he had a big sand-bar in front of his hous; nur water in his Lickers, tho the Ohio River runs past his dore. Piece to his remains!

POETRY.

he di-ed in his bed,
a great big buk he red,
a prayer he loudly sed,
then turned over unt2 his bed,
and durned if he didn't die—dead.

He leves a wife, 8 children, a cow, 4 horses, a growcery stoar, and other quadrupeds to mourn his loss—but in the spalendid langwidge ov the poit, his loss is there eternal gain.

CLERICAL SHARP PRACTICE.—A facetious parson of a country parish, was employed, some years ago, to unite a rustic couple in the holy bonds of matrimony. As soon as the knot was tied, says the bridegroom:

"Well, parson, what's the damage?"

"Nothing, I hope," replies his reverence, "if there is any damage done, it is no fault of mine, you alone are responsible for the consequences of the proceedings."

"But I mean, parson, what's to pay?"

"Oh, that depends upon circumstances. When I marry a couple, if the bridegroom is rather indifferent towards his bride, he hands over only the usual fee, four and sixpence. If he is pretty fond of her, he will pay a pound or two. If he is very deeply in love with her, he will not think of giving less than three or four pounds."

What effect this gentle hint had on the bridegroom, we will leave to the imagination of the reader.

The following epitaph is to be found in the churchyard of Upton-on-Severn, England:

"Beneath this stone, in hopes of Zion,
  Doth lie the landlord of the 'Lion;'
  His son keeps on the business still,
  Resigned unto the Heavenly will."

LOSS OF A FINE TOOTH COMB.—An English preacher, who spoke in a meeting out west, told the following story: "It is but a little while since I was a traveling along one of our great rivers surrounded by the deep forest, I stopped at a rude shanty by the low river side, and there I found a poor family in great affliction-ah. They were all sick, their children were shivering and starving, their heads frowzy and dirty; and I was informed by the mother, that they had lost their fine tooth comb-ah! They was ignorant of go-ospel, and didn't seem to care about it 'ither, for when I reasoned with 'em the woman was all the time lamenting the loss of her fine tooth comb-ah! "Have you a Bible in your cabin?" said I to her. Says she, "Yes, theer it is, up theer on the catch-all," p'inting to a narrow shelf over the smoky fireplace, "but we don't read into it; ha'nt read any on't but onest, when our little Bill died with the ager, for as much as tew months!" I got on a dye tub, my friends, that stood in a corner, and reached up and took down the blessed book, all covered with dust—and what do you think it was I opened to-ah? What do you think it was I found there to satisfy the longings of that poor woman-ah? It was the lang lost, long wanted fine tooth comb! Oh, my hearers, s'a-r-c-h the skripters! If she had only s'arched she skripters, how her mind would a been eased, for she would have found her fine tooth comb, combed her frowzy head of her children, and made her peace with her Maker-ah!

THE BACKSLIDER.—While attending a meeting during a revival some time ago, I witnessed the following bad 'un. The subject in motion was backsliding. Every one excited; every one wished to say something about it; one gentleman in particular, with more zeal than prudence, rushed up to a toperish looking individual on the back seat, and grasping him by the arm, earnestly enquired:

"My dear friend, you are a backslider, are you not?"

"Why, yaas," responded the toper, dryly, "I hev slid back some, considering the wall; of that want thar, I might possibly squeeze another foot.—Why, is thar eny hurry?"

The subject was dropped.

ANECDOTE OF JOHN G. WHITTIER.—They tell the following story of the amiable Quaker poet: On a recent occasion he was traveling with a friend over a New Hampshire Railroad, and during conversation Mr. Whittier's friend who is also a member of the society of Friends, told the poet that he was on his way to contract for a lot of oak timber, which he knew would be used in building the gun boats at Portsmouth, and asked him whether he thought it was exactly in consistence with the peace doctrines of the Quaker denomination. Without saying anything calculated to decide the question, the two arrived at their parting place, when Mr. Whittier, shaking his friend's hand said: "Moses, if thee does furnish any of that oak timber thee spoke of be sure that it is all sound."

An Irishman called on a lady and gentleman, in whose employ he was, for the purpose of getting some tea and tobacco.

"I had a drame last night, yer honor," said he to the gentleman.

"What is it, Pat?"

"Why, I dramed that yer honor made me a present of a plug of tobaccy, and her ladyship there—Heaven bless her—gave me some tay for the good wife."

"Ah, Pat, dreams go by contraries, you know," said the gentleman.

"Faith, and they may that," said Pat, "so her ladyship is to Give the tobaccy and his honor the tay."

An old toper was induced to sign the temperance pledge, which he kept rigorously for some weeks. At last he got decidedly balmy, and one of his friends remonstrated with him for his faithlessness to his obligations. He answered. "To be sure I signed the pledge; but I was extremely dry, and all signs fail in dry times."

MISCELLANEOUS.

MRS. WINSLOW'S

SOOTHING SYRUP.

Every mother should be prepared to act in the capacity of both nurse and physician to her children she can, if she will, discharge these duties much better than any one she can employ. If she does not, she ought to know that there is a Medicine prepared by an old nurse and female physician which has stood the test of many, many years, and is the most perfect thing on earth for children teething; it also cures Wind Colic, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, and is sure to regulate the bowels. We say to every mother, do not let your own prejudices, or the prejudices of others stand in the way of the relief that will be sure—yea, absolutely sure—to follow the use of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP certainly does, as the name implies, "soothe" the little sufferer into a quiet, natural sleep, from which it awakes invigorated and refreshed. And for the cure of diseases incident to the period of teething, such as Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Wind Colic, &c., we have never seen its equal.

We have always been, and still are, opposed to the practice of drugging infants. This article has no deleterious effects whatever, and from our own experience (we speak advisedly) we have every confidence in it, and can heartily recommend it to all mothers. Take our advice—use it—and you will as strongly recommend it to others as we have to you.

When we say that MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP acts like a charm, we do but reiterate the language of every person who ever used it for their children, for all diseases incident to the period of teething, such as Dysentery and Diarrhœa, Wind Colic and Cholera Infantum. It will produce quietude and rest, relieve all suffering, and the infant will awake invigorated and refreshed, and not with the dull and stupefying effects of preparations of opium

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the excruciating pain of cutting teeth? If so, go at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately—depend upon it; there is no mistake about it. There is not a mother on earth who has ever used it who will not tell you at once that it will regulate the bowels, and give rest to the mother and relief and health to the child, operating like magic. It is perfectly safe in all cases, and pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States.

During the thirty years of unprecedented and increasing popularity of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP, innumerable "CORDIALS" and other nostrums, prepared by pretended M.D.'s, have sprung up and lived but a mushroom existence, the SOOTHING SYRUP has been constantly increasing in popularity, and become a household word, and for the health of their children, by the use of her invaluable article.

THOUSANDS OF MOTHERS THANK
MRS. WINSLOW

PRICE 20 CENTS PER BOTTLE.

For sale by

THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St., N.Y.

TIME, MONEY, AND LABOR SAVED,
BY USING
B. T. BABBITT'S
SUPERIOR FRENCH
CHEMICAL ERASIVE SOAP,

Made and improved by the ORIGINAL INVENTOR of the German and Austrian Chemical Erasive or Detersive Soap, of which the real and genuine article has, since its first introduction to the American public, been most favorably known, as the Best and Cheapest Washing Soap in the market, and with the present improvement, which is not known to any other manufacturer, we CHALLENGE THE WORLD to produce a better article.

1. One pound of it will accomplish as much as three pounds of any other soap.

2. But one quarter the time and labor are required to do the same amount of washing, as with the best of family soap.

3. It does not injure the most delicate fabric; will tend to set the colors, and wash cleaner than any other soap in use.

4. Clothes need no boiling, and but little rubbing with the hands, thus avoiding their wear upon the wash-board.

5. Paints, Grease, Tar, and stains of every description vanish as by magic, before its wonderful, searching, erasive powers.

6. It is invaluable to Machinists, Printers Painters, and all others using Inks, Oils, etc., for washing hands; it does not chap them (like other soaps,) but will cleanse and soften the skin.

7. It may be used in hard or soft water, and is adapted for use in all climates.

Put up in one pound bars, sixty bars in each Box.

For sale by the bar or box by

THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman Street.

MEDICAL.

THE BEST MEDICINES IN THE WORLD!!!

The following invaluable medicines may be obtained of

THOMAS HAMILTON, 48 Beekman St.

DR. CLARKE'S

VEGETABLE SHERRY-WINE BITTERS,

Are composed of Sarsaparilla, Dock-root, Rheubarb Thoroughwort, Dandelion, Prickly Ash, Bark, &c they should be taken not only in the Spring, but at all seasons of the year, as they operate directly on the liver, removing from it all coating of morbid matter, and restoring it to its normal action; also opening the bile ducts, causing the requisite flow of bile so essential to good health. Their influence upon the kidneys, also, is advantageously felt; at the same time they operate upon the blood, cleansing it from all impurity or taint of any kind. Humors of long standing are eradicated from the blood, thereby speedily curing jaundice, headache, weak stomach, sore eyes, nervousness, and other chronic diseases arising from impurity of the blood.

The palatableness of these bitters renders them agreeable to every one, and being composed entirely of vegetables, they may be used by all classes of people with safety.

Sold for the low price of 25 cents per pint bottle.

DR. CLARKE'S

SUGAR-COATED HERB PILLS.

These pills are made mostly from a valuable herb that grows on the proprietor's farm.

Warranted to cure Bilious Stomach, Bilious Bowels, Bilious Colic, Bilious Fever, and all diseases which arise from a bilious state of the system viz, Jaundice, Headache, Heartburn, Sour Stomach Liver Complaint, Weak Stomach, Pain in the Stomach, Costiveness, Loss of Appetite, and a host, of diseases too numerous to mention, as their number is legion.

Warranted to cure diseases peculiar to the female sex

Warranted at all times safe and efficient.

Warranted for a gentle family physic not to have an equal in America, operating without pain.

Warranted not to contain calomel, aloes, gamboge colocynth, or other drastic poisonous drugs, which always do the system more hurt than good, and by their continued use are sure to cause a derangement of the liver, bring on costiveness, and its inevitable consequence, piles, and dyspepsia, and finally break down the constitution, and cause the victim to drag out a miserable existence. Touch not, taste not, handle not the wily poison. Your life is your own,—preserve it. Take a simple herb, sure in its effects, but safe and pleasant,—no wrenching pains, no ill effects, and made pleasant to take by a fine coat of sugar. Children love them, ladies admire them, fools and wise men cannot do without them, doctors prescribe them,—and every body takes them. Yes, every body; from the honest farmer and mechanic to the most learned philosopher. And why? Simply because they are good, excellently good; and will do you good.

PRICE, 25 CENTS PER BOX.

DR. CLARKE'S COUGH AND CROUP SYRUP.

It is the most wonderful, effective and extraordinary medicine for the lungs ever used by man. It is perfectly safe and pleasant to take, and gives relief immediately. Thousands have been cured by its use, and tens of thousands will be again. All who use it pronounce it to be the best lung remedy ever discovered. Common coughs and colds are dispelled by the use of only a few doses, and children can be cured of croup at once if taken in its first stage. Long standing diseases require perseverance, but a cure will be guaranteed. No medicine before ever possessed such excellent healing and curative power for the lungs. It seems, with almost magic power, to dispel the most severe cases of cough and throat ail.

Vocalists and public speakers should not fail to keep a bottle on hand at all times. A small quantity taken occasionally renders the voice beautifully clear and the lungs extremely strong. Words cannot fully express the great benefit to be derived from the use of the world-renowned remedy. Delay not, but procure a bottle at once. Use it if needed and if not, keep it till necessity requires its use, as all, sooner or later, are overtaken by some unpleasant affection of the lungs or throat.

PRICE, 25 CENTS PER BOTTLE.

BOOKS.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE ANGLO-AFRICAN MAGAZINE, BOUND.

PRICE.—In half Morocco $1,25; half Morocco, gilt edges, $1.50. Muslin, $1.00

CONTENTS;

EMBELLISHMENT.—Portrait of Alexander Dumas.
Music.—By A. J. R. Connor.
Apology.
A Statistical View of the Colored Population of the United States, from 1790 to 1850.
African American Picture Gallery.—Anon.
American Caste and Common Schools,—by J. Holland Townsend.
A Review of Slavery and the Slave Trade,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
A Good Habit Recommended,—by Sarah M. Douglass.
A Chapter in the History of the African Slave Trade,—by Edward W. Blyden.
Anglo-Saxons and Anglo-Africans.—Anon.
A Word to Our People.
Blake; or the Huts of America,—by Martin R. Delany.
Books &c.
Civilization—Its Dependence on Physical Circumstances.
Colored American Patriots,—by Wm. C. Nell.
Comets,—by M. R. Delany.
Citizenship—by James Mc'Cune Smith.
Claude Brihndas De Salas,—Selected.
Communication from N. Y. Society for the Promotion of Education among Colored Children.
Chess.
Dumas,—Alexander.
Effects of Emancipation in Jamaica, by Robert Campbell.
Fragments of Thought,—by D. A. Payne.
Fancy Sketches,—Anonymous.
Gone to God—Poetry—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
Intellectual Culture—by Robert Gordon.
In the Constitution of Man there exists a Religious Element,—by Robt. Gordon.
Lines—Poetry—by Grace A. Mapps.
Mrs. Partington and Mrs. Freshington.—Anon
Our Greatest Want,—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
Our Duty in the Conflict,—by J. Holland Townsend.
On the Fourteenth Query of Thos. Jeffer son Notes on Virginia.
On the Personality of the First Cause,—by Robt. Gordon.
Patrick Brown's First Love.
Poetry—Anonymous.
Selected Items.
Struggles for Freedom in Jamaica—by Robert Campbell.
The Attraction of Planets—by M. R. Delany.
The German Invasion, by James M'Cune Smith
Trifles, by Mary A. S Cary.
The Coming Man—Poetry—by Wm. J. Wilson.
The Educational Wants of the Free Colored People, by Martin H. Freeman.
Thomas L. Jinnings.
The Teacher and his Pupil—Poetry—by Wm. J. Wilson.
Thoughts on Hayti, by James T. Holly.
The Successive Advances of Astronomy, by G. B. Vashon.
The Oberlin Wellington Rescue, by J. Mercer Langston.
The Shadows of Intemperance,—by James Fields.
The Dying Fugitive—Poetry—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
The Anglo-African and the African Slave Trade.
The Two Offers, by Frances Ellen Watkins.
The Re-opening of the Slave Trade—Anonymous.
The First Colored Convention.
The Self-Redeeming Power of the Colored Races of the World,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
The Policy that we should Pursue,—by J. Holland Townsend.
The Education of the Colored People,—by Amos Gerry Beman.
The Great Conflict requires Great Faith,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
The Outbreak in Virginia.
The Sentinel of Freedom—Poetry,—by J. Sella Martin.
The Nat Turner Insurrection.
The Execution of John Brown.
The Anglo-African Magazine for 1860.
The Watering Places.—Anonymous.

Orders should be addressed to
THOMAS HAMILTON,
48 Beekman street,
New York.

PUBLICATIONS FOR SALE BY
THOMAS HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE ANGLO-AFRICAN MAGAZINE, Bound,—Price—In half Morocco, $1.25; half Morocco, gilt edges, $1.50; Muslin, $1.00. CONTENTS: Embellishments—Portrait of Alexander Dumas. Music, by A. J. R. Conner. Articles by Bishop D. A. Payne, James M'Cune Smith, M. D., Prof. Geo. B. Vashon, Dr. Martin, R. Delany, Mrs. Sarah M. Douglass, Prof. Robert Campbell, Prof. Wm. J. Wilson, Rev. J. W. C. Pennington, D. D., Rev. J. Theo. Holly, Mrs. Frances Ellen Watkins Harper, Prof. M. H. Freeman, Rev. Edward W Blyden, Rev. Robert Gorden, Prof. Chas. L. Reason, Mrs M. A. Shadd Cary, Dr. James Fields, Rev. Amos Gerry Beman, Miss Grace A. Mapps Rev. J. Sella Martin, Wm. C. Nell, Esq. J. Mercer Langston, and J. Holland Townsend, Esq.,

The Life of Captain John Brown
The Liberator of Kansas, and the Hero of Harper's Ferry. By James Redpath. An elegant 12mo. volume of 400 pages, illustrated and embellished with a superb Steel Portrait of the Glorious Old Man. Price $1.00.

My Bondage and My Freedom.
By Fredrick Douglass, One vol., 12 mo., 464 pp. Illustrated. Price $1.00, postage 22 cts.

Life of Jermain W. Loguen.
The great Underground Railroad King. Price $1.00.

The Martyrs and the Fugitive.
By the Rev. S. H. Platt. A thrilling work on slavery and the slave trade, detailing the capture of a family in Africa by the Slave-dealers, their fearful journey to the coast, the horrors of the "middle passage," their sale in America, and subsequent martyrdom; the slavery of their son, his terrible sufferings and perilous escapes. Sent, postpaid, upon the receipt of 38 cts.

Twelve Years a Slave.
The Narrative of Solomon Northrup, a citizen of New York, kidnapped in Washington City in 1841 and rescued in 1853, from a cotton plantation near Red River, Louisiana. Seven Illustrations, 336 pp. 12mo. Price $1,00, postage paid.

Our National Charters.
For the Millions. - Including—1. The Federal Constitution of 1787-9.. 2. The Articles of Confederation, 1787. 3. The Declaration of Independence, 1776. 4. The Articles of Association, 1775. With notes showing their bearing on slavery, and the relative powers of the State and National Governments. Also a summary of Legal Opinions, collected from the highest authorities, is prefixed to the Constitution. An Appendix contains extracts from State Constitutions and Bills of Rights; Ordinance of 1787, excluding Slavery from the North-west Territory: also, Sentiments of the Revolutionary Fathers, &c. By mail, postage prepaid, single copy, 15 cts.; four copies, 50 cts.; nine copies $1,00.

The American Slave-Code,
In Theory and Practice: Its Distinctive Features Shown by its Statutes, Judicial Decisions, and Illustrative Facts. 430 pp., 12mo. Price 75 cts postage paid.

Unconstitutionality of Slavery,
By Lysander Spooner. In paper, 294 pp., 8vo Price 75 cts., or postage paid 86 cts.

Review of Lysander Spooner's Essay on the Unconstitutionality of Slavery.
By Wendell Phillips. Price 25 cts. Postage 5 Cts.

The Revelations of a Slave Smuggler.
Being the Autobiography of Captain Richard Drake, an African trader for fifty years, from 1807 to 1857. The work is handsomely illustrated, with graphic representations of scenes as they actually occur on the slave ships and on shore. Illustration No. 1 is a large cut, 16x23, representing a slave market on the Coast of Africa. Illustration No. 2 represents a scene in the Hold of a Slaver (middle passage). Then there is a large plate, giving views of a slave vessel betwen decks, regulation slave-deck, regulation packing, &c. The work is handsomely printed—contains one hundred large 8vo. pages, and is published at a price which places it within the reach of the masses—viz: 25 cents a copy. When sent by mail the postage (six cents must be added.

The Nat Turner Insurrection.
A full and reliable account. Copies will be sent to any address on the receipt of five cents.

Uncle Tom's Cabin.
By Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe. Two volumes in one. Price, $1,25.

The Kidnapped and Ransomed,
Being the personal recollections of Peter Still, and, his wife, Vina, after forty years of slavery by Mrs. Kate E. R. Pickard, with an introduction by Rev. S. J. May, Illustrated. 12mo. cloth $1,25.

Gerrit Smith in Congress.
"Slavery has no right but to die!" A work of over 400 pages, containing all his speeches delivered in Congress; also, an accurate likeness. Price, only 80 cents per copy, and postage paid.

The Dream;
Or, the true history of Dea Giles's Distillery and Dea. Jones's Brewery. By George B. Cheever, D.D. Price per single copy 10 cents, $1 per doz., or $7 per hundred.

A Summer on the Carribbean Sea.
By J. Dennis Harris. With an introduction by Geo. William Curtis. Sent by mail on receipt of $1.

A Pilgrimage to my Motherland;
An account of a journey among the Egbas and Yorubas of Central Africa, in 1859-60. By Robert Campbell, one of the Commissioners of the Niger Valley Exploring Party; late in charge of the Scientific Department of the Institute for Colored Youth, Philadelphia; and member of the International Statistical Congress, London. Price, 63 cents. When sent by mail, the postage (10 cents) must be added.

Turner's (J. A.) Cotton Planter's Manual,
Being a compilation of facts from the best authorities on the culture of cotton, its natural history, chemical analysis, trade and consumption, and embracing a history of cotton and the cotton gin. Price, $1. Postage, 15 cents.

The Manual of the Wardrobe,
00 large octavo pages, in paper, by Mrs. Pullan, Price, 25 cents. Sent, postpaid, upon receipt of the price. It comprises a thorough dissertation upon taste in dress, an explanation of the different kinds of stitches made in sewing, remarks upon the various kinds and qualities of fabrics used in the wardrobe, with complete directions for cutting and fitting all kinds of garments for women's and children's wear; the preparation of table, toilet, and bed linen. Illustrated by nearly one hundred toffcrnsedutt and mode s.

The Weekly Anglo-African.

"MAN MUST BE FREE!—IF NOT THROUGH LAW, WHY THEN ABOVE THE LAW."

VOL. I. NO. 9. NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 28, 1861. PRICE FOUR CENTS.

The Weekly Anglo-African.
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY SATURDAY,
BY ROBT. HAMILTON,
No. 48 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW YORK.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
Two Dollars per year, or Four Cents per copy, payable on delivery.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.
Six Cents a line for the first insertion, and Three Cents for each subsequent insertion.

Notices of Births, Marriages, Deaths, Public Meetings, &c., inserted for twenty-five Cents, provided they do not exceed five lines; if more than that, Five Cents for each additional line.

All communications for the paper must be addressed ROBT. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman st., New York.

Poetry.

For the Anglo-African.

THE HOROSCOPE.

Thro' centuries enslaved,
They wore its heavy yoke:
No arm for freedom braved,
No warning prophet spoke.
Content to toil their evil day
Beneath the tyrant's iron sway.

Where is the promised aid
To Jacob's offspring given?
Hath God, the Father, made
Of brass the very heaven,
That prayers and sighs shall not ascend,
And Egypt's bondage never end?

The prowess of whose arm
Shall free the million'd throng?
Whose potent voice shall charm
As with a Syren song—
And wake the nation into birth
Ground in their bondage down to earth?

None, none appear to claim
This meed of high emprise,
No hero's mighty name
Is shouted to the skies!
Who then shall free the downcast race
Whose souls are Slavery's dwelling place?

Look to yon wide deep stream,
Of Egypt's wealth the source,
Where sails of commerce gleam,
And mighty stores go forth
To buy the world a chain of gold
That shall the captives ever hold.

Yet on its banks of sedge,
Hid in a bulrush ark,
Just in the ripple's edge
Floats in the shadows dark
The law-proscribed enfeebled child
Awaiting death—but death is foiled.

Sleep, gentle infant, sleep!
Thy sister's tearful eye
At distance still may weep,
But know the hour is nigh
When thou shalt lead in triumph those
Who tamely now obey their foes.

Jehovah is not man
That he should ever lie;
Tho' men may fail to scan
The signs that mark the sky,
Yet God's dark wrath is gaining strength,
And Egypt shall be crush'd at length.

Crush'd, not by human power,
Crushed, not by warriors proud.
The storms that o'er her lower,
The treasured thunders, loud
Shall burst—but from a hand divine.
Perchance a song—it may be thine

Shall kindle to a blaze
The fuel of his wrath,
And its hot scorching rays,
Shall burn an open path—
Till God's own door, all men shall see,
Is opened—and THE WORLD IS FREE!

Talk not of mighty names,
Arrayed on Freedom's side;
The battle's fire and flames
Will not the fight decide—
Some feeble unexplored nook,
Is where prophetic eyes must look!

There, there is THE UNKNOWN,
Still hidden from our sight,—
Yet Slavery's darken'd throne,
Its millions, and its might,
Shall quail to him, "The Little Stone"
Its grand commission shall be shown.

As Moses gain'd his name
Drawn from the watery deep,
So from the battle's flame
Shall a deliverer leap,
To mock the sway of human pride,
And o'er our highest princes ride.

THE ELEVENTH ANNUAL GENESEE CONFERENCE

In the Third District of the A. M. E. Zion Church in America, met in Zion Church, in Ithaca, N. Y., Sept. 7th, 1861, at 4 o'clock, P. M., Right Rev. Peter Ross presiding, associated with the Superintendent of the First District. Rev. Wm. Sanford and Rev. J. W. Loguen were appointed Secretaries. The Episcopal address of the Superintendent was interesting, feeling, and appropriate. The examination of the moral and ministerial characters of the members of the Conference were subsequently entered upon, and all passed excepting James J. Scott, who was suspended.

The following Committees were appointed by the Superintendent:

On Finance.—B. Mackall, J. Thomas, J. W. Loguen.

On Public Worship.—B. Mackall, Wm. A. Cromwell.

On Credentials of Lay Delegates.—J. W. Loguen, J. H. Smith.

On Temperance.—Wm. A. Cromwell, R. T. Eastep.

On Slavery.—J. W. Loguen, Wm. Sanford.

On Education.—Thomas Jones, Wm. Sanford, J. H. Smith.

On Orders.—T. James, B. Mackall, Wm. Sanford.

On Business.—John Thomas, J. W. Loguen, J. H. Smith.

On Sabbath Schools.—T. James, B. Mackall.

On Post Office.—John Thomas.

The new church was solemnly dedicated to the worship of Almighty God on Tuesday morning, the 10th inst. The dedicatory sermon was delivered by Rev. Mr. Ives. The exercises were of a very interesting character. The amount collected and subscribed amounted to $148. The church is a very fine building, the size is 34 feet by 48 feet, finished in first class style, and handsomely furnished. It is considered the finest church in the Conference District. Rev. B. Mackall has been the pastor during the past year. Building Committee.—Messrs. Joseph Kellog, Henry Jackson, Joseph Gilbert and Jacob Mewtes. There are some $200 due, a portion of which is already subscribed.

The Committees on Slavery, Education, and Temperance, reported as follows:

1st. Committee on Slavery—Whereas we believe that God has a controversy with this nation on the account of the oppression of his poor ones. Therefore

RESOLVED that we as a Conference will stand still, and see the Lord use up Slavery in his own way, and we will unite in giving glory to his name.—J. W. Loguen, S. Brant, Committee.

Report on Temperance:

Your Committee would beg leave to present the following report—In our opinion there never was a time when vigorous action upon this subject was more imperiously demanded than at the present time. The sale and use of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is a sweeping tide of moral death. Therefore

RESOLVED, that we will not cease to pray and labor in all proper ways both in public and private, to hasten the final triumph of sound temperance principles.—R. T. Eastep, Wm. A. Cromwell, Committee.

The Committee on Education made the following report:

We, your Committee, deem the subject of education one of importance next to religion. It is the great lever in the Christian Church. The success of the Church depends greatly upon a thoroughly educated and pious ministry; and as we are in the midst of improvement, and as the rising generation demands that our ministry should make every effort to raise high the standard of literature in the midst of our people. And in the language of Superintendent J. J. Clinton, "May God hasten on the day when Zion Connexion shall be the first in virtue, and in morality, and intelligence; stand the highest in the land."—Thomas James, James Smith, Committee.

Several Missionary Societies were introduced to the Conference, and presented the following sums to the Conference:

The Sons and Daughters of Bishop, of Ithaca, presented $12 25; Daughters of Bishop, of Binghamton, $10 00; Daughters of Bishop, of Elmira, $12 08; the Daughters of Clinton, of Montrose, Pa., $9 00; Juvenile Daughters of Honor, $2 00; Daughters of Ross, of Ithaca, $6 10; the United Daughters and Sons of Clinton, of Elmira, N. Y., $10 00.

The Societies were addressed by the Superintendent of the 1st District, and Elder J. W. Loguen. A vote of thanks was tendered to them, and the names of the officers were ordered to be printed in the minutes. The claims of the "ANGLO-AFRICAN" were set forth before the Conference by the Superintendents and Elder J. W. Loguen. The following resolution subsequently prevailed:

RESOLVED that we, the Ministers of this Genesee Conference, will do all we can to get our people and others interested in the "ANGLO-AFRICAN" and Frederick Douglass' papers, feeling that these papers are a great blessing to our outraged race, and that we will subscribe for one or the other of these papers, and do what we can to get others to subscribe for them.

Superintendent Ross announced the appointments on Tuesday afternoon, at four o'clock.

Elmira, Horseheads and Dundee—James H. Smith; in his charge, H. Butler.

Ithaca, N. Y.—John Thomas.

Binghamton and Montrose—J. W. Loguen.

Little Falls and Utica, N. Y.—R. T. Eastep.

Auburn, N. Y.—Bazill Mackall.

Syracuse, N. Y.—Wm. A. Cromwell.

Johnstown, Fonda, Schoharie and Canajoharie.—George Bosley.

Genesee and Geneva Mission, and Agent for the Superannuated Preachers Fund—Thos. James.

Christopher Benjah left without an appointment, at his own request.

James J. Scott suspended.

Conference adjourned ultimus.

J. J. CLINTON.

P. S.—My executive year on the 1st District having closed, I will now take charge of the 3d District, and enter immediately upon duties.

ELOQUENT TRIBUTE TO FREMONT.

Rev. Dr. Conway of Cincinnati, in his discourse on Sunday, 1st inst., paid the following high tribute to Fremont and his late Proclamation:

There rings through every mind here to-day that noblest word which the war has yet elicited—the proclamation of the gallant Commander of the West, who has shown himself a Roman Curtius, brave and manly enough to leap straight into the heart of this conflict. His steel rang true upon the flint of rebellion, and brought forth a spark of true fire. God grant that it may flash through the land and light the train of liberty that yet sleeps unfired under the entrenchments of slavery.

When this war is up to the standard of John C. Fremont, the country will be saved. Hitherto known as the daring heart that first planted the stars and stripes upon the highest peak of the Rocky Mountains, henceforth the nobler fame awaits him, of one who first planted that standard on the highest summit of liberty and humanity that ranged within his possible authority. Years ago, before his name was echoed through the land as one for the highest office of the country, it was my privilege often to touch that brave man's hand, look into his "mild and magnificent eye;" and I never did so without feeling that there was a power sheathed in that brain and nerve which would one day be unsheathed for his country, and lead the van of honor like King Arthur's sword Excalibur, that struck only for the right, and whose stroke never failed. The nation cried for a leader—a man: lo, he is here!

He takes the step that Congress was too timid to take openly. He pauses not to ask, "will this advance my chances for the next Presidency?" nor "whether, if the country is restored, this step will not make me an object of special odium at the South?" He stops not to consider it it may not bring the lurking dagger near to his heart. Nor does he seek to shift the responsibility on others. Upon the banner of the West his own hand wrote the golden words in the eye of the world: "Their slaves if they have any, are hereby declared free men."

That one sentence will do more to strike terror to the hearts of our enemies, to strengthen us at home, to gain honor abroad, than all that has been done at Washington for thirty years.

Henceforth the genius of America adopts Fremont as her darling hero.

The American people have now an opportunity of communicating their strength to their rulers. Let them see how Americans can respond to a noble and vigorous deed. Let a hand of flame go out from the people and write on the walls of Washington that the nation honors above all the brave and determined heart—which has no tear of aught but fear—whose high diplomacy is to do the manly and true thing, and to do it openly. There on his proud eminence let every honest heart be swift to stand by him, and let his high example raise you to an adequacy to whatever post of labor you are called. We need Ellsworths of the press, Winthrops of the fireside, Lyons of the pulpit, and a Fremont in every man's breast. We need not only the brave men who shall defend the standards when lifted up, but earnest hearts which shall lift them up—aye, up on the very towers of Right and Liberty. We need a banner on which every eye of the circling earth shall see written its liberty and light. We need a school of prophets and seers, who, as of old, shall cry aloud and spare not, showing the evils that must be conquered in ourselves before we are worthy to win the victories of God upon earth. Let every tongue that can speak be touched with a live coal from Liberty's Altar; let every pen that can write be dipped in the truest blood of an earnest heart; let every arm that can strike nerve itself to smite or be smitten for universal freedom. Let none stand back and say, "I will wait until this is a noble war—a war for humanity." Let all enter and make it a noble war—make it a struggle for humanity. As we rise our rulers will rise. We must hold up their hands as Aaron and Hur held up the hands of Moses to the going down of the sun.

When our nation presses on and on toward that Humanity involved here—the Christ of to-day—and its mailed hand is reached out to touch his garment, to save the children of our Common Father, then shall the strength of God thrill and fill us, and our bleeding country shall be made every whit whole.

DOWN A CREVASSE.

FROM "ALL THE YEAR ROUND."

I arrived at Chamouny on the sixth of August, 1858, with a friend and companion, an Englishman, like myself. We two had been about five weeks in Switzerland, and in that time had done everything considered necessary by our countrymen. We had acquired some experience in glacier work, having ascended the Alitsch Horn, whose summit had been reached for the first time by an Englishman, a member of the Alpine Club, only two months before. We made the ascent successfully, and were proud of having been the second exploring party to stand on its lofty peak, nearly fourteen hundred feet high. On that occasion we passed two whole days on the snow and glacier.

I remember well the first glimpse I had into one of those terrible crevasses which intersect glaciers. Getting a guide to hold my hand, I leaned over its yawning brink and gazed carefully into the fathomless abyss. The two perpendicular walls of ice appeared to join together about three hundred feet down; an appearance resulting from the convexity of the crevasse. Usually I believe the great split ends only where the glacier touches the ground beneath.

"No one who falls into one of those ever comes out alive," says one of our guides. "Yes," says another, "a man once escaped and lives still at the Grindewald; he was a chamois hunter, and when coming home alone over the glacier, his foot slipped, and he was precipitated into a crevasse. His fall was broken by projecting ledges and blocks of ice, which, however, gave way as he clung to them. After falling three hundred feet he reached the bottom of the glacier with leg and arm broken. He found a hollow space between the ground and the ice, through which a stream of water ran. Instinctively he followed its course, despite the great pain he suffered, and after crawling along about three hours, he found himself freed from the glacier."

Ordinary crevasses are from three to eight feet wide at the top, but the sides approaching each other rapidly, so that a man would be wedged in between the two walls of ice, long before he could reach the botton. And then, unless there should be ropes at hand long and strong enough, what an awful death. An unfortunate Russian gentleman perished thus in a crevasse only last year, half squeezed, half frozen to death, the heat of his body ever melting the ice, he ever sinking deeper into this dreadful grave.

My companion and I ascended the Brevant, and as few climbing travelers leave Chamouny without visiting the Mer de Glace and the Jardin, we arranged to make that excursion. To shorten our day's work, we left Chamouny in the evening and slept at Montanvert, a solitary little mountain inn on the edge of the Mer de Glace.

We were up betimes in the morning. We provided ourselves with some eatables and wine, and started with our guide, whom we had brought from Courmaveur. It was a glorious morning, and promised well for our expedition. Our road, for about half a mile, was along an uneven path skirting the glacier, which lay below on the left hand, very much crevassed and covered with debris. The path then came to an end, and the guide and we must now take to the glacier. We descended on to it, and threaded our way among the numerous crevasses.

The excursion to Mer de Glace not being looked upon as a regular expedition, is not made with the attendant precaution of axes or ropes. We were in high spirits, and went along at a great rate; so quickly, indeed, that our guide who had fallen behind, cautioned us to allow him to take the lead.

Just then our progress was arrested by a wide crevasse. Looking to the left, I perceived that it terminated some twenty feet from us, in a steep slope of ice, which I thought I could easily climb. As the crevasse was about sixty yards long, I determined to try this slope rather than go round by the other end.

Using my Alpenstock instead of an axe, therefore, I began to make foot-holes in the ice with it. The guide now came up with us. He looked at the ice slope and the wide crevasse, and said very seriously, "It is dangerous; let us go round." By this time I had, with the aid of my Apenstock, climbed half way up the slope. I had already come to the conclusion that it was much too steep to scale without an axe, and had determined to retrace my steps. So, when the guide had spoken, I carefully stretched back my right leg, feeling for the last hole I had made in the ice. My foot went past the place, and I felt that I was slipping. There was not the least projection that I could grasp. The slope became perpendicular, and I went headforemost into the yawning crevasse below.

I heard a loud cry of despair from my fellow traveler and guide. My own sensation cannot be described, or even distinctly separated from the whirl and shock. I felt that I was bumped from side to side between the two walls of ice; that I was falling a great depth; that I was being hurried to utter destruction—to a horrible death. Suddenly I felt that I was caught by something; that I hung suspended. I was just able to take breath and call out "A rope, a rope!"

By the most extraordinary chances, my fall had been arrested by a ledge of ice which spanned the crevasse like a bridge. On this frail structure, not more than two inches wide at the top, (and as well as I could judge,) about two feet deep, I had fallen so that my head hung down on one side my legs on the other. Instinctively and immediately, by means that I cannot at all recall, I raised myself from this ledge, in which there was a little niche, sufficiently wide to admit one foot. I was now so far collected that I could hear my fellow traveler saying from above, "We never expected to hear your voice again. For God's sake take heart. The guide is running to Montanvert for men and ropes, and will soon be back again."

"If he is not," I answered "I shall never come up alive."

My position was an awful one. The little ledge was so narrow that I could not get both feet upon it. I was in fact supporting myself on one leg, half leaning against one side of the crevasse and pressing my hand against the opposite side. It was perfectly smooth, and there was nothing to grasp, a stream of water poured over my shoulder, drenching me to the skin, and freezing me with its icy coldness. Overhead I could see the long narrow strip of blue sky, bounded by the mouth of the crevasse.

There was a terrible stolid, unrelenting look in the intensely blue ice that surrounded me on all sides. The grim walls of the crevasse looked as if they would unite to crush me rather than relinquish their victim. Numerous rills of water poured into the crevasse, but in the whole sixty yards of its length I could see no projection except the little ledge I had so miraculously chanced to fall upon.

I ventured to look down, only for an instant, into the fearful chasm in which I was suspended. At the depth to which I had fallen, the crevasse was barely two feet wide, but downward it narrowed rapidly, and about two hundred feet below me the sides appeared to join. I believe that if I had fallen six inches on either side of the little ledge I must inevitably have been jammed in head downward, where no rope that could have been brought there could possibly have reached me.

I had now been about twenty minutes standing in this perilous position, straining every nerve to prevent myself from giving way, looking up at the blue sky above me, and the clear ice on the sides, but seldom daring to cast a glance into the abyss below. Blood was trickling over me from a cut in my cheek, and I felt that my right leg was becoming exceedingly painful from the strain upon it, and I was afraid of losing my balance if I tried to relieve myself by changing to the other. I felt that I was becoming benumbed by the intense cold of the ice, against which I was leaning, and of the stream of water from under which I durst not move.

I called to my fellow traveler to know if any one were in sight. There was no answer. I called again. No human being seemed to be within hearing. A dizziness came over me, as the thought struck me. "He has gone to look if any help is coming, and he cannot find his way back to the crevasse. There are hundreds of them. I am lost."

Again I had to strain every nerve to keep myself from sinking; I almost gave up hope; I felt inclined to throw myself down and have the agony over. At that miserable time I suddenly heard my friend shouting from above. He had gone to look if he could discern the guide; and when he turned round to retrace his steps had been thunderstruck to see the surface of the glacier intersected by innumerable crevasses, all so similar in appearance as to leave no landmark by which to know my living grave. Thank Heaven, he had caught sight of a little knapsack, left at the mouth of the crevasse by the guide. This had directed him back. I called him to look at his watch; five minutes more were passed. The cold was growing more intense. It is no figure of speech to say that I felt the blood freezing in my veins. I called to him again to know if any one were in sight. It was thirty minutes since the guide had started, but not a soul was visible. It was most unlikely that he could be back so soon, for we ourselves had been three-quarters of an hour in coming thus far.

I felt that I could hold out but a very short time longer, and besides that, I did not know at what moment the little ledge, which was my only safety, might give way under my weight. I remembered that I had a large clasp knife in my pocket, and I determined to try to rescue myself with its aid. I called to my fellow traveler above that I was going to attempt it. He implored me not to try; but my situation was becoming so desperate that I did try. I began by making a little hole in the ice as high up as I could reach, large enough to admit one hand. My next endeavor was to cut a deep foot-hole about two feet above the ledge. I succeeded in this, and found that by placing my foot in it, holding fast by the place I had made for my hand, and at the same time pressing with my back against the opposite side of the crevasse with all my strength, I was able to raise myself and stand firmly in my new position. I again let myself down on the ledge, and commenced cutting another foot-hole, about two feet above the last. It seemed to me possible that in this manner I might escape from my icy prison; but a single slip or false step, and I knew I must be precipitated down the crevasse.

I was working diligently at the second foot-hole, when I heard a joyful sound from above, "They are in sight—three men with ropes—running as hard as they can.

I steadied myself on my terrible, narrow and slippery footing, in order to be able to seize and attach the rope when thrown to me. I saw the end of it dangling over my head. "Merciful God! It will not reach me! It is too short!" "We have got another rope," was answered from above, and it was knotted on and lowered. I caught the end and tied it firmly round my waist. Grasping the rope above with both hands, I gave the word. The strain began, and I felt that I was safe. In another minute I was standing on the glacier. I had been fifty minutes in the crevasse, during which time I had not lost consciousness for a single instant.

When I felt myself once more upon firm footing, an all-pervading sense of gratitude for the wonderful escape I had had, came over me and made me faint, and I should have fallen if they had not held me up. This was soon over, and we prepared to start for Montanvert. Before leaving I took a last look at the crevasse, which had so nearly been my sepulcher. I saw that it would have been utterly impossible to climb out, as I was trying to do. The mouth was so wide that as I approached it, I could have had no support from behind; and without such support not even a cat could have scaled the perpendicular wall.

Our guide was in a terrible state, and had run the whole way to Montanvert, but could find no rope fit for the purpose in the house. He was in despair, and starting off to Chamouny, when two muleteers met him. Their mules were laden with wood, fastened on with ropes. He begged hard for those ropes, telling the men that a young Englishman was being frozen to death in a crevasse. They threw the wood from the backs of the mules, and came to my rescue with the guide, bringing the ropes with them. Knotted together, (it seems there were three in all) they made up a length—about sixty feet—enough to reach me.

With the assistance of my deliverers, I was able to walk slowly back to Montanvert, where I was immediately put into a comfortable bed, where the injuries I had received, (which were insignificant, considering the depth I fallen) were carefully dressed. I dreamed, with unspeakable dread, of what happened when lying in the bed, and have dreamed it in many beds since. I believe that nothing would induce me to go among ice and snow without a long and strong rope. I offer the caution to all other travelers in Switzerland, out of a great experience and a great escape.

FORMATION OF COLORED REGIMENTS.

MR. EDITOR:—

The duty of the black man at this critical epoch is a question of much importance, deeply interesting the friends of liberty both white and black. The most imposing feature of this duty I am told is in relation to military organizations. This question I am told is forced upon us by our eminent, educated, far-sighted leaders, who anxious for our elevation and zealous of our reputation in connection with our white brothers would have us write our names side by side with them upon the immortal book of fame, won by well contended and desperate encounters upon the battle-field. Claiming that any omission on our part to exhibit that patriotism so noticeable in the whites, will, when history shall record the doings of this memorable country, leave our names without one deed of patriotism or expressed desire for the success of the cause of liberty; not one laurel to entwine the brows of those whose valor like blazing stars upon the battle-field would, no doubt have eclipsed those of whom we now are satisfied to acknowledge as superiors and protectors. Is this all wisdom this mode of reasoning; or is it a mistaken idea called into existence by a desire for fame? Is it a demanding necessity that the world will decide belongs to us to meet, thus to prove our manhood and love for liberty? Have not two centuries of cruel and unrequited servitude in this country alone entitled the children of this generation to the rights of men and citizens? Have we not done our share towards creating a national existence for those who now enjoy it to our degradation, ever devising evil for our suffering, heart-crushed race?

Who that will carefully note the many historical reminiscences made mention of by those who are ready to do justice to us can doubt our bravery? Who that has heard of the many privations, hair-breadth escapes, and the unflinching determination of our enslaved brethren—seeking the free shores of Canada, can doubt our love for liberty? True patriotism does not consist in words alone, neither do patriotic demonstrations always contribute to the end alone independent of material aid. I do not suppose any people have been taxed heavier or more than the poor colored people for the cause of Liberty, with such small results to themselves. Now, if we have contributed our share to support and establish a Government that we are not entitled to a share in the benefits thereof, what becomes our duty when that Government is menaced by those they have cherished at the expense of our blood, toil and degradation?

Let your own heart answer this question, and no regiments of black troops will leave their bodies to rot upon the battle-field beneath a Southern sun, to conquer a peace based upon the perpetuity of human bondage, stimulating and encouraging the inveterate prejudice that now bars our progress in the scale of elevation and education.

I claim that the raising of black regiments for the war would be highly impolitic and uncalled for under the present state of affairs, knowing, as we do, the policy of the Government in relation to colored men. It would show our incompetency to comprehend the nature of the differences existing between the two sections now at variance, by lending our aid to either party. By taking such measures we invite injustice at the hands of those we prefer to serve, we would contribute to the African colonization scheme projected a half century ago by ridding the country of that element so dangerous to the charming institution of negro slavery.

Entertaining the sentiment and determination that they do, would it not be unjust in them to accept our service? Would we still invite them to cap the climax by forcing us to the cannon's mouth to save the destruction of those whose whole existence should be merged in with their countries weal and woe? That death should be the readiest sacrifice patriotic citizens could offer to uphold the peoples hope, the people's palladium no one should deny; but what do we enjoy that should inspire us with those feelings towards a Government that would sooner consign five millions of human beings to never-ending slavery than wrong one slave master of his human property? Does not the contemplation of so flagrant a wrong cause your blood to boil with Christian indignation, or bring tears to the eyes of your broken-hearted old men whose heads now silvered by time or bleached by sorrow, can no longer shoulder the weightier responsibilities of a young man's calling.

Not only that. Any public demonstration (for this could not well be done in a corner) would only embarrass the present administration by stirring up old party prejudices, which would cause the loss of both sympathy and treasure, which the Government cannot well afford to lose at present. By weakening the arm of the Government we strengthen that of the Slave power, who would soon march through these States without fear of forcible resistance.

It would be contrary to Christian humanity to permit so flagrant an outrage in silence to be perpetrated upon any people, especially a class who have known naught else but wrong at their hands, whom they would so gloriously serve in time of danger, to their own liberties and sacred rights, proferring now their services to uphold a Government leagued with perdition, upon which the doom of death is written unless they repent in letters so plain that he who runs may read. Let us weigh well this thing before taking steps which will not only prove disastrous to the cause we would help, but bring suffering and sorrows upon those left to mourn unavailingly our loss.

I maintain that the principle of neutrality is the only safe one to govern us at this time. When men's lives are in their hands, and so little inducement as there is for us to cast ourselves into the breach, our work for the present lies in quite a different channel from assuming war responsibilities uninvited, with no promised future in store for us, a dilemma inviting enmity and destruction to the few, both North and South among our people enjoying partial freedom.

The slave's only hope—his only help—is his suffering brother at the North. When we are removed the beacon light which directs and assists the panting fugitive, is darkened and obscured, his once bright hope that gave comfort to him as he pressed on to liberty's goal is shadowed o'er forever. Our own precipitous unwise zeal must never be the cause to stay the car of freedom, but ever let it roll onward and upward until earth and heaven united shall become one garden of paradisal freedom, knowing no color, no clime, but all one people, one language, one Father Almighty God.

Once under army discipline, subject to the control of Government officers or military leaders, could we dictate when and where the blow should be struck? Could we enter upon Quixotic crusades of our own projecting, independent of the constituted authorities, or these military chiefs? Will the satisfaction of again hearing a casual mention of our heroic deeds upon the field of battle, by our own children, doomed for all that we know to the same inveterate heart-crushing prejudice that we have come up under, and die, leaving as a legacy unto our issue—all from those who you would so unwittingly face the cannon's mouth to secure to them a heritage denied you and yours.

Is this country ready and anxious to initiate a new era for down-trodden humanity, that you now so eagerly propose to make the sacrifice of thousands of our ablest men to encourage and facilitate the great work of regeneration? No! no!! Your answer must be: No!!! No black regiments unless by circumstances over which we have no option, no control; no initiatory war measures, to be adopted or encouraged by us. Our policy must be neutral, even praying for the success of that party determined to initiate first the policy of justice and equal rights.

Who can say that in another twelve months' time the policy of the South will not change in our favor, if the assistance of England or France will by it be gained, rather than submit to Northern dictation or subjugation? Did that idea ever suggest itself to your mind? Strange things happen all the while. Look back for the last twenty-four months and ask yourself if you could have foretold what to-day you are so well informed has actually transpired when coming events cast their shadows before?

In these days principle is [illegible] by policy, and interest [illegible] policy [illegible] by daily observation, both in high and low places. Although to [illegible] the above idea may seem idle and [illegible] with the present spirit [illegible] policy of the South, yet I for one would feel justified in entertaining it equally with the idea that the North would proclaim a general emancipation so long as she supposed it a possibility to reclaim the disaffected States of the Southern Confederacy.

Which, if an impossibility, all proclamations to that effect what would it avail?

I believe with the act of emancipation, adopted and proclaimed by the South, both England and France (and in fact I might safely say all Europe,) would not only recognize their independence, but would render them indirectly material aid and sympathy.

To get the start of the Northern slave worshippers, as they are sometimes termed, who can say that as a last resort these rebel leaders have not had that long in contemplation, knowing that should they succumb to this Government through force of circumstances, or the uncertain chance of war, their lives would be valueless only as a warning to future generations.

Then why may we not hope that such is their ultimatum in case of a series of defeats. The liberation of four millions of our poor, heart-crushed, en-slaved race, one or two large battles will decide the future policy of both the contending parties—the sooner it comes the sooner we will know our fate It is in that scale it hangs.

Then let us do our duty to each other—use care in all our public measures—be not too precipitious, but in prayer wait and watch the salvation of God.

R. H. V.

The Weekly Anglo-African.

NEW YORK, SEPTEMBER 28, 1861.

☞ Advertisements for this paper must be accompanied by the cash.

☞ Copies of this paper can be purchased of the news-dealers everywhere.

A NOBLE PROPOSITION.

Robert Hamilton Esq.,

Dear Sir:—I congratulate you at the appearance once more of the Anglo-African, —a paper that gained, for the time it existed, more prestige than any other that had preceded it.

Now sir, the glorious question is, "Shall it live? I call it glorious, from the immense importance of the hour that is now upon us.

It will live if we bring our patriotism, our love for the truth, not to a boiling, but a moderate heat. Let each brother and sister, father and child, do what they can—take stock in it at a fair premium. The premium to be paid in Hallelujahs when its work as a Journal for Freedom is over.

Sir, I propose to unite with some in investing Five Dollars to begin with; what will others answer? I propose no plan upon which it is to be paid, but leave that to your better judgment—but I suppose you need the money as soon as you can get it, I therefore pay immediately. Now who will be the next customer,—if not for five, for four—for three—for two—for one! for fifty cents? Keep in remembrance, friends, that this stock pays glorious in premiums, however small be the investment. Yet you must still remember, that greater the investment, more glorious the premium!

Now sir, I believe I have said enough; perhaps more than enough—for, after all, all that is requisite is but for the people to know your need, and they are ready to nobly respond.

Yours in behalf of the good cause,

J. N. Gloucester.

The following are responses to the above proposition, including Mr. Gloucester's subscription:

J. N. Gloucester,	$5
H. Highland Garnet,	1
Henry M. Wilson,	1
Ezekiel H. Dias,
"A Friend,"
Robert H. Vantine,

The Great Battle at Washington

Seems as far off as ever, so far as fighting with arms is concerned; but the strife of another kind—of plots and counter plots, expedients, tricks, manipulations and intrigue—is going on with daily increasing vehemence, the ink-shed and oath-shed are perfectly frightful, and if the particulars of this great battle at Washington could only get into print the religious and patriotic of this nation would hang their heads with shame and horror.

The eagles are gathered over the carcass of our dead nationality and are pecking at the eyes and heart, while birds of a fouler omen feast on the festering offal: within the same week that the head of the nation makes his salaam before the slave power by upbraiding the noblest general in all the army, we find the New York Herald and kindred prints buzzing again their loathsome outcry against abolitionists and negroes. The Day Book, scotched but not killed, changes its skin, and becomes the caucasian, which will now only run down the blacks, letting the President alone, since he is once more admitted into the pro slavery fold, and is pronounced by the above competent judges to be "sound on the goose."

It is the most marvelous travesty in all our complicated history of to-day, that the Herald, three months ago blatant against Lincoln and his cabinet as a nest of black republicans, should to-day be the only clear-spoken out and out supporter of the administration. In the interval the Herald has not changed its principles—who knows?

This War

Historically considered, is a simple development of a new form of our national power. In agriculture, in arts, in contrivances for rapid inter-communication our national greatness was acknowledged by all the world We were and are in all their matters a first-rate power. Our fighting capabilities lay dormant and more than questioned. Our militia-generals and colonels were the laughing-stock of European [illegible]. But suddenly, within six months, there bristles on our peaceful soil three quarters of a million of bayonets, while the country grows cannon and fairly rains smaller arms. We have as many troops in the field as the combined forces of the allies and Russians in the Crimea, and nearly, if not quite as many, as partook in the struggle which founded the Kingdom of Italy.

Surely the historian must write this down as the most remarkable event of this or any century.

The (P) Reserved Guard.

[Correspondence of the Anglo-African.]

Mr. Editor.

In reading your somewhat magniloquent leader on the "Reserved Guard," a few weeks ago, it occurred to me that in the hurry of composition you had dropped a "p:" and that in speaking of us Carthagenians you intended to style us "The Preserved Guard."

If you will excuse my boldness it appears to me that the action of the Federal Government is carefully directed to keep black men out of this fight entirely. They keep them out of the fight on the side of the North, by refusing to enlist them as soldiers, and (by order of Secretary Cameron) refusing them to be, even make-believe soldiers, by declaring that they shall not wear the soldier's uniform (thereby preserving them from being killed even by mistake). The same Federal Government in like manner prevents black men from being enlisted by the rebels by declaring (horror of horrors to the Southern!) that all such shall be discharged of service to his or their owners. You must be thick-headed indeed, Mr. Editor, (your military ardor to the contrary, notwithstanding) if you cannot see in this last manœuvre the strongest kind of disposition to save the lives of the blacks, in other words converting them into a "preserved guard" even on the side of the rebels.

Yours truly,

LIZZIE.

Jersey Street, Sept. 23rd, 1861.

Note. We print the above in the same spirit in which all liberal minded editors (our wooden neighbor and contemporary to the contrary notwithstanding) permit both sides to be heard in their columns. We seem sure, however, that this 'Lizzie' is not of the crinoline persuasion from the very hand-writing of the communication.

Cause and Effect.

Lincoln's letter to Fremont, and the capture of Lexington, by the rebels. We cannot expect men to fight persistently when they "don't see" what they are fighting about.

It is said that General Butler, in enlisting the 6000 men in Massachusetts, is not particular to inquire whether the proposed recruit is of African extraction. Won't some of our friends in Massachusetts enlighten us on this point?

OUR TICKET FOR 1864,
FOR PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,
JOHN C. FREMONT
FOR VICE PRESIDENT,
JESSIE FREMONT.

AMUSEMENTS.

MOONLIGHT FESTIVAL.

Mr. T. B. Voorhees' Moonlight Excursion, which came off on the 16th inst., was indeed a novel and truly poetical affair. The evening was bright and clear. The silvery moon was out in all her resplendent glory, and the little nymphs in their gauzy gear and joyous spirits, reminded us of our early impressions of "Fairy Festivals." The good cheer and amiable attentions of the Madam together with the polite management of Mr. B. Elston and John Freeman, electrified the hours until early dawn when the company returned to Spring Street dock. The Barge which had been engaged for the early part of the evening from an unavoidable accident did not reach the dock until the patience of over 100 people had fled, which gave much annoyance to the Prof. But this being a matter over which he had no control, we hove no doubt the disappointed parties will avail themselves of the next opportunity.

LOOKOUT.

BROOKLYN AFFAIRS.

Siloam Church has lately purchased a fine organ. The choir, to show its capacity, gave on the evening of the 29th inst., a grand concert under the direction of Mr. George Phillips; Prof. Wiebe presided on the occasion. We will give in our next issue a full account of the affair.

The Brooklynites are rejoicing in the presence among them of a young pianist of great promise. The name of this young lady is Victoria Price, she is a native of Harrisburgh, Pa.

The Rev. Mr. Kane of the Bridge Street Church is delivering a course of lectures on different subjects, which we hear very highly spoken of.

We think that the officers of our different churches greatly miss it in failing to give public notice of the efforts of their pastors.

The Brooklyn Excelsior Literary Association.—This society which is composed of young persons, of both sexes, gave an entertainment on the evening of the 12th inst., at the house of I. Cook, Esq., 187 Navy Street. The rooms which are very spacious, were crowded by the members of the society and invited guests.

The exercises were opened by the whole company singing "The Star Spangled Banner," after which Prof. W. J. Wilson delivered a fine address, which was highly appreciated. This was followed by original compositions by Miss Isabella Linsey and Miss Margaret Soley, whose productions were loudly applauded.

After this two amusing dialogues were spoken; the first by the Misses Linseys and Miss Soley, and the second by Miss Judith Rogers, the Misses Linseys, Miss Anna Coles, Miss Soley and Mr. Peter Cook. These were admirable performances.

These long literary performances having thoroughly prepared the company for what was to follow—when the viands were placed on the table the most rapid destruction fell upon them.

The company understanding that late eating without exercise is very unhealthy, closed the proceedings of the evening by a little exercise on the "fantastic toe," under the inspiration of Prof. H. Moore's violin.

GUEST.

HAYTIAN EMIGRATION.

Editor of the Anglo-African:

Sir—It is extremely gratifying to know that the "Anglo-African" is in circulation once more. When your paper "went out," the hopes of many who had only heard of it, seemed to die out with it; some feared, they felt by intuition, that mischief was brewing, and very soon the evil was upon them in its full extent.

In the interim, between the transfer of the "Anglo-African" to other parties, and its republication, a doubtful scheme, said to be for the benefit of our much injured people, was securely matured and established, (?) and it has been pushed forward since with a vigor, a tact, and an unscrupulousness worthy of the early days of African Colonization.

For the first time, since colored men dared to canvass questions relating to their own interests, have they been summarily silenced—forbidden to examine both sides; for the first time have they been ruthlessly thrust out of doors by those loud in their protestations of friendship. Not only is this a part of our sad history, but in the prosecution of the Haytian Colonization scheme we have, singularly enough, all of the old, and worn out, and repudiated arguments, about the extinction of our race—extinction from 20 persons in 1620, to 4,000,000 in 1861—the invincibility of American prejudice, common schools, churches, railroads in 1832, and 1861 in States and Canada, the incongeniality of climate—do we not live as long, and are we not as exempt from disease as the pure Anglo-Saxon? We have, with these, the exhumed relics of the past, the fact that instead of unrelenting Democrats and heartless slaveholders, to push forward this new crusade against the best interests of the free colored man of the North, we have Republican abolitionists, and fugitive-slaves, who "once upon a time" fought bravely against the dogma, and when its now cherished arguments were the pet theme of the fierce negro-hater and the great conservators of slave property.

To be consistent, would it not be well for the new colonizationists to dig up their buried foes, and make haste and repair the damage to this generation by singing in praise of their wise foresight, and their genuine friendship for our poor people?

But not only has another doubtful scheme been "set a going," now said to be in the name of the black man, and for black men, but for the first time in thirty years have our Pennington's, our Delaney's our Smith's and Downing's, been cuffed into silence. Our so-called enemies, the African Colonizationists, never dared to stigmatize as drunkards, "renegade negroes" and snobs, those of our men known to be among the leaders in defence of our rights.

Once upon a time brave men and women, with bugle-blast of indignation, spoke out against wrong when it was perpetrated against black men, at the risk of the halter. I have a dim recollection of one noble man called William Lloyd Garrison in such peril. Why cannot there be a strong and manly voice now? There has been a slight murmur down about Boston; why does not somebody speak OUT? Are not you recording the dead and buried? Do not you tell of the disappointments? Are not Mother Holly and John Anthony, and numbers, gone? and have not Mrs. Monroe, Sarah Underwood, Mason, and others spoken?

We are told that only the lazy complain, or tell tales; what must we say of the dead? they tell no tales.

I have spoken of the sins of commission, in the interim of your silence—now for the sins of ommission during the same period: The American Union is one scene of distraction; must we for the same cause be at our wits ends? There never was a time when the colored man could afford to be more calm and collected than now. There are thousands of "contrabands" peering cautiously from your forests, and skulking behind corners in your cities, not knowing in their extremity what way to go, and finally starved into asking the first "massa," though it may be an enemy, "am this Canada?" Has the North Star, the old beacon light, gone out, that these men cannot be encouraged to follow the ONLY safe and long tried road to freedom? It seems to me that the devil is let loose to hound the poor fugitives for a season. From the faith of our people being in God, and the North Star, a James Redpath and a star never before heard of, a South Star, now dazzle with a sort of "fox fire" light, to the neglect of our duty to God, our true interests, and our obligations to humanity.

Who, may I ask, is this James Redpath, in the hollow of whose hand lies trembling the destiny of our people? This man, who by a species of moral jugglery, beyond my stupid comprehension, has succeeded in throwing glamour over the optics of all our friends, and who has made the bitter pill of colonization sophistry long since discarded by them, a sweet morsel to hundreds of devotees of the god "Palm?" In all sincerity I ask this question. In a letter to the "Planet" of our town, Mr. Redpath complains that the Rev. W. P. Newman, whom he calls a "renegade negro," is trying "to destroy whatever influence my anti-slavery service may have given me with Americans of African descent."

What have been and what are the anti-slavery services of Mr. Redpath, upon which he claims to be entitled to influence with—colored Americans of African decent, in the name of common sense and common fairness what are they? When Wm. Lloyd Garrison, Lewis Tappan, Wendell Phillips, Gerrit Smith, and a host of such speak of services rendered, we know what they mean—they have looked in the opposite direction from Mr. Redpath for thirty years—they toiled in our cause when it cost something, and their noble sacrifices, crop out into a harvest of gratitude from the entire colored people. But what has Mr. Redpath done?

Is it this leading men and women by reason of their ignorance and credulity, to untimely graves in the island of Hayti?

A child, say our wise educators should be at least five years old before he should be instructed in the rudiments; it may be that moral precosity entitles Mr. Redpath to some consideration, but keeping in view the fact that John Brown has not been dead three years, and that Redpath for all practical anti-slavery purposes, must have been borne since then—I cannot forbear again asking what special labor since he came into being entitles him to teach, to dictate a destiny? and to make of no effect—the work of friendly laborer's who toiled hard heretofore? Who can tell!

Brother Newman tells you we have some excitement here in Canada, so we have, the most of it, is caused by the advocacy of this Haytian scheme about which I write. It is not that the thousands about which you have heard so much, are going to leave and throw off their British allegiance, but that a few agents, using the name of Brown and talking Redpath have, by working upon an imaginative and hitherto overworked people, set afloat stories of genial skies, plenty to eat, and little to do, and have, at the same time, plied vigorously the old story about their attaining to the "greatest height" among the whites; these rigmaroles, which they have been scattering broadcast for a few months, have caused excitement. Before then, our people in Canada, thanked God for this Asylum; they went on adding to their statement, and were surely removing the local obstacles to unbounded progress.

A few have gone to Hayti, a few more will go; a few will go to Jamaica; already some have written back from Hayti who are not too well pleased; some more await further advice. Another record of deaths and they will fall back into their former industrious persevering ways; that is what this new scheme will come to here, and in the meantime, in answer to the question of a good woman in Wisconsin, who writes to know "what to do with the contrabands," we say over here, send them to Canada! Send them over here as you have done thousands before, who now sit in the shade of their own noble forests, with none to disturb them. Canada is just as large as ever, and though they may suffer a little for a time, the people will rally to help them; our government will give them one hundred acres of land, in a region where now she gives the same to Norwegians, Irish, English and Scotch, and where colored men can get it if they will, or they can settle down readily, and do well in this western section, with friends and relatives to help them. Do not let the question be asked what shall we do with them? send them along.

M. A. S. Cary.

Chatham, C. W., Sept. 17, 1861.

The Gerrit Smith Lands to be Peopled.

If there is any one argument that unveils the folly, that belies the disregard of the elbowed and inconvenienced mass of colored people, that have stubbornly persisted in huddling in large cities, it is presented today. The infliction of 1857 called forth spirit-moving petitions for only this one deliverance from the wolf of famine, with promises of better providence for the future; but the return of prosperity brought with it its concomitant domestic tranquility and prodigal indifference which had marked our antecedents. We are again obliged to eat the bitter bread of uncertainty, whilst phantoms of misery and want disturb our dreams by night, to which the morning's sun brings no relief, and we strain our eyes in vain to catch some glimmering hope of the future. We are most of us burdened with heavy rents, whilst many are curtailed in their salaries, and many more without employment altogether. What a predicament! And yet we hug the shore of our large cities, making rich men richer and ourselves poorer from year to year, laboring, toiling, but to find rest in the old folks' home. We believe our only salvation to be to spread ourselves over the country; to seek a footing amongst the honest farmers or with our trades and professions in our infant towns and villages. Some persons have preferred Africa, others Hayti; while we respect their choice if such it be, we beg to remind our readers that many of us own, in this country, very desirable tracts of land, donated by the philanthropist Gerrit Smith—the value and importance of which has been too little appreciated.

About six years ago we opened a correspondence with Mr. Silas Frazer, a gentleman of energy and intelligence, who is located on his lot in Essex county, township eleven, to whom we are indebted for much valuable information concerning this locality. At that time there were thirty-seven farmers within seven square miles around him, his nearest neighbor being over a mile off. The nearest store was sixteen miles, and no mill within several miles. Produce sold at their doors at fair prices, and the whites were represented as in every way disposed to assist. We have just received another letter from this gentleman, dated September 9th, in which he says:—"North Elba has improved very much during the past five or six years. We have eight families in this immediate neighborhood and two saw mills. Baker's store is eight miles from here, on the Saranac, where you can get your store goods. We have also a school winter and summer. Two more families are expected in the Spring, one white, the other colored. The inducements for colored men to settle here are as good as they would be to white men. There is very little said about caste. There is a good abolition society here, for you must know that the grave of the noble hero of Harper's Ferry is with us. Come on all of you with children, it is just what is wanted; we will help you all we can. Mr. William Appo, music teacher, has been living here about three years on his farm with his two sons. You can raise on new land rye, oats, India wheat and potatoes; there has been great yield of crops this season; you may have a good idea of the Adirondacks from the 'Tribune's' correspondence. Martin's is about ten miles from here."

A pioneer movement will be made in this direction by a worthy and energetic fellow citizen of a sister city, and arrangements have been completed for a suitable demonstration for his benefit. This effort, which will take place Thursday, the 10th of next month, (Oct.) will be assisted by the countenances of our best and most honored fellow citizens, combining the rare intellectual and festival elements which distinguish the present day. We heartily urge the earnest support of the public to this laudable, substantial and practical example of progression, for the colored man who goes out today with the energy and determination to master such an enterprise, is a benefactor to his people. He will grow up in strength with those around him, and establish a social and business influence. Besides, he developes his physical powers, aiding vigorous offspring and healthy families, which the pent up inconveniences of our pent up cities have so lamentably desolated.

You are aware of an existence of an old fogy element amongst us, hard to move at any time, which will endeavor to direct our attention from this direction to points where they know we have no possessions and never will have. But we believe the spirit of the age will protect us. We believe the inviting examples of Messrs. Silas Frazer, Lyman Epps, Wm. Appo and other bold pioneers, who have hewn out homes in the bosom of the grand old forest, and are today standing, nature's noblemen, under their own vines and fig trees, will fix our minds aright, and fill us with zeal and wisdom in support of this work.

TYPES.

LETTER FROM SAG HARBOR.

Mr. Editor:—

As you are now, and I trust will be for a long time to come—"may your shadow never be less"—a medium of communication between the many friends who believe in, and desire the improvement and elevation of the colored people in this, as well as in all lands where any portion of the race may be found, I will, with your permission, say a word of those who reside in Sag Harbor, Long Island. Their number is about one hundred and fifty—some twenty-five or thirty families—the majority of them living in their own neat and comfortable homes, and able to sing "Home, sweet home" beneath their own vines and fig-trees—where the voice of the land-lord can neither "molest nor make them afraid"—a voice so dreadful to the poor and the widow. Honest toil, and wise frugality has placed these families in their "castles." In their midst stands their united religious home, a small but neat edifice, sufficiently commodious to accommodate all, and a fit place for divine worship. We spent the third Sabbath of this month with them, and was much pleased with the appearance of the large congregations. The Sabbath-school under the superintendance of Mr. David Hemsted, who has long borne the burden and heat of the day is still teaching "the young idea how to shoot" along the path of truth and virtue. The pastor in charge, Rev. Alexander Posey, whose zeal and faithfulness has called around him the warmest confidence, and co-operation of many warm hearts, who desire to see the standard of improvement carried forward in triumph to certain victory. On the 18th instant, the pastor, parents, teachers and children met in a beautiful grove belonging to one of the noblest families in Sag Harbor—one of their own number, William Prime, Esq., for the purpose of celebrating their annual Pic-Nic. Inspired by the genius of improvement, and christian love they assembled. Joy and gladness beamed on every countenance. None during the year had been called by death away. Having participated in the rich provisions spread by bountiful hands in the grove, all adjourned for social conversation and other good things to the spacious parlors of Mr. Prime, where his good lady with queen-like grace, presided with all that matronly dignity for which she is celebrated. I am sure that all enjoyed themselves much, and felt that it was good to be there, and renew and strengthen the bands of social and christian friendship.

The evidence of progress and improvement is full and divine. The Hemsteds, the Primes, the Sweezys, the Cuffees, the Consars and the Wards of Sag Harbor, with the noble women, not a few show that "all is not lost," but that a brighter day is dawning.

Sag Harbor is the residence of Rev. John P. Thompson, who has done so much for the elevation and progress of the people in this place, and who still lives to "do his Master's will." After singing, and an eloquent address, and appropriate prayer by the Rev. A. Posey, the assembly adjourned to their own quiet and happy homes.

A. G. B.

Sag Harbor, L. I., Sept. 18, 1861.

Lecture by an Escaped Slave.

A lecture on the affairs at the South was delivered on Thursday evening, 19th inst., at the Metropolitan Rooms, 178 Prince St., by William Jones, a runaway slave. The Hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, and each person was waiting patiently for the speaker to arrive, when a gentleman came in and stated that the hall they were then in not being large enough to accommodate all that were anxious to hear the speaker, he had engaged the hall below, and those wishing to procure seats had better go at once down, when the once quietly seated audience made a rush for the door; but on reaching the lower apartment they found they had to remain standing until benches were brought in, and some very eager to get seated commenced seating themselves on benches while in the janitor's hands. At last they were once more seated, and in a short time the speaker came in, in company with the gentleman, Mr. Henry Jones, who assisted him in effecting his escape. The slave told the story of his birth, his masters, and all concerning himself, from the time he first thought of being a freeman, until he found himself safe among the "Yankees," as he termed the Federal troops. He made some excellent remarks, one of which was that before running away he secreted on his person a revolver and bowie knife, in case he came across a Secessionist, and if he were to be taken back he should be taken dead (applause). He also stated that in the vicinity from which he came the slaves had made up their minds to become freemen, and that their intentions were, if called upon by their masters to fight for the Confederacy, they would accept their arms, and as soon as command was given to "fire," they would wheel round and kill their masters—then run to the "Yankees" (applause). He seems to be quite an intelligent young man for one being born a slave, altho' he has no education whatever. He related his story in a manner that would reflect credit upon one that had received education from boyhood.

TREBLA

WE MUST FREE THEM OR FIGHT THEM.

As this rebellion ripens, and the fierce vindictive hatred of armed traitors toward the men who love the Union and towards the institutions of freedom, takes shape and becomes concrete, the feeling, all over the free States, is becoming fixed and crystalized into conviction, that the time is drawing nigh when we must "fight them, or free them." Let us look this alternative in the face for a moment. There is nothing in it unnatural; indeed, is it not a fact that there is logic in the alternative, which will vindicate itself? The Southern rebel has educated his slave into the belief that the people opposed to him and his treason are the bitterest foes the slave can have. We have farther to believe that, in every State, there are on plantations and in cities, many men who are in bonds, but who know a good deal about the causes which underlie secession, and which have developed into rebellion and rank treason; but the great body of slaves may, for aught we know, so far trust their master as to fear and dread what they call the "Abolitionist." If that be so, then we must anticipate armed opposition from the slave, unless they shall be undeceived, as to the end attainable by this war. Why should he not oppose us? He sees no good to himself in our march through the South. Indeed, he has understood that it was the office and the vocation of the "Abolitionist" to worry and capture the black race, and, of course, he is prepared to fight against us. There is no doubt that we shall have armed slaves against us. Our people are conservative—rightfully so. Law and loyalty are necessarily conservative, and it is said we must be careful of the Constitution and of guarantied rights. All that is well enough. But we need not stultify ourselves. If slaves are made to oppose us or to help their masters oppose us! If these millions of men are compelled to work to our injury! Then, what? Why, then the alternative presents itself! We must fight them, or free them!

We must not fight them! Such warfare we cannot engage in. We are men for their masters; Then the alternative is left, and we must free them! And so surely as these blind rebels shall strengthen themselves by slave labor, using their "chattels" to our destruction, so surely we shall vitalize their property, and convert it into men and women! Why not? Why shall we not convert the slave whom his master compels to be hostile into the free man who is ready to be friendly? It is wholly absurd to suppose that this rebellion can continue, and that slave labor can be turned against us, without a proclamation from our headquarters of deliverance and freedom to those who are enslaved.

And we say, in God's name, be it so! If slavery is to be thus turned against freedom, slavery had better to be turned into freedom quickly! If the owners of men and women, under the names of chattels, shall madly use their property as instruments of war, and turn it to our destruction, then we prefer that those men and women shall belong to themselves, and give us the benefit of their skill and their experience and their strength and their new freedom.

There are other and higher views to be taken of this whole question. But this will answer for now. And when the time comes that must compel us to fight them or free them, we say—Let them go free!—New-bedford Mercury.

BLACK MUSCLE.

Editor Leader:—According to the last census the number of colored persons of African descent in the Free States is 221,738; in the District of Columbia, 11,107; in the Territories, 229, and in the Slave States not yet withdrawn from the Union, 116,570—making a grand total of 349,644 free colored persons within the direct call of the Administration. In the seceded States there are 131,401 free colored persons.

I am informed that a regiment—partly drilled—could be raised in a few weeks in this part of the State. Why not use these instruments in the present crisis? Any number of regiments of courageous blacks might be found in the Free States, to say nothing of the colored population of Canada, who are anxiously waiting to be called upon to fight for the "land of Dixie."

Are we not carrying on this war too daintily? Our enemies are using every instrument to crush us—they do not scruple to form black regiments—to use black spies, and to turn black labor to the best account, not only in the harvest field, but in throwing up masked batteries. Why should we reeject such instrumentalities? Is there good sense in carrying on a war such as this has been; we all courtesy, forgiveness, forbearance to our foes; and they full of malignity, hatred and cruelty to us? If Slavery is more precious than the Union, why fight? if the Union is worth more than Slavery, why not carry the war into Africa?

Gerrit Smith speaks a true word in his recent letter to the President. He says it is more criminal to restrain a man from defending his country than from defending his wife and children. For not only is country more than family, but the fate of family is involved in the fate of country—and hence he is denied the defending of his family also, who is denied the defending of his country.

It is only through fear of injuring the rebels that we are so sensitive on this point. In the Revolutionary War, and in the war of 1812, no such conscientious scruples were entertained. And to-morrow, were we engaged in a war with England, and a fleet of the enemy lay before our city, we would be glad to welcome every colored man to a musket or cannon.

Is it not time that we pay more regard to our own interest, and less to the preservation of an institution that is the sole cause of our present difficulty.

Mr. Editor, will you give us a reason, why the Administration does not employ "black muscle" to help quell the rebellion?

On the Anxious Seat.

—Cleveland Leader.

From the State League,

Randolph, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y.

To His Excellency, Abraham Lincoln:

The undersigned beg leave to congratulate your Excellency, and all the true friends of liberty that a blow has been struck against the original cause of the horrid and wide-spread conspiracy and rebellion that are desolating our beloved country.

It cannot be disguised that American Slavery was not the only cause of this rebellion, but that its termination is hopeless so long as the North suffer millions of human beings to be chattelized, and used against us. Far more efficient chattels for our subjugation are they, and as really contraband of war as are guns or kegs of powder—that all efforts to conquer a peace short of depriving those rebels of the possession of those human chattels are worse than useless! The undersigned, therefore, although exempt by age from bearing arms, respectfully offer their services to your excellency to rescue those millions of human chattels from the grasp of our murderous foe. Should any of the undersigned be considered too old, or infirm for so arduous a service, such will quietly retire and endeavor to procure able-bodied substitutes.

Should such a service find favor with the Commander-in-Chief under proper restrictions, and regulations, tens of thousands who otherwise will remain inactive, will take an active part in the struggle, and peril their lives and their fortunes in the cause of liberty.

All men whatever may be their color, or condition are endowed by their Creator with not only the "right," but the love of liberty, and will fight for it if they find there is a reasonable chance—take those oppressed millions from the Southern Pirates and convert them into soldiers for freedom, and the contest will be short, and no motive will remain for its renewal.

Very respectfully,

William Shattuck.
Henry Marsh.
Sylvester Caswell.
Samuel F. Wadsworth.
Sanford Holbrook.
Otis Hitchcock.
Sherman Sadler.

We would say that the first signer to this letter is seventy-six years old—he volunteered as a private to go to Turin in 1801, to rescue American prisoners who had fallen into the hands of Algerine pirates, and capture the pirates. That before the volunteers were mustered into service that piratical government made restitution, and relieved the American prisoners—that he again volunteered as a private to fight the British and Indians in Upper Canada; and while in Canada was promoted as Quartermaster in Colonel J. Wilcox's regiment of mounted riflemen. That after the peace he resigned several offices and became a "non-resistant" quaker. The piracy and oppression of the African race, and the unparalelled perfidy of our late sworn officers of Government have effectually cured him of his non-resistant proclivities, and at the verge of the grave he again wishes to volunteer to fight for liberty.

Ed.

The Weekly Anglo-African may be had at 187 Navy St., Brooklyn, and at Mrs. Garnett's store, 170 West 30th St., New York.

CHURCH NOTICES.

"The kingdom shall not be left to other people."—Daniel, 2nd, 44th.

Dr. J. W. C. Pennington delivered a sermon from the above text, in the basement of Shiloh Church, on Monday evening last. The house was densely crowded by a highly respectable and intelligent audience, who listened with enrapt attention to the most eloquent discourse. It is pronounced to be one of the finest sermons ever preached in this city. We hope to be able to lay it before our readers next week.

The Rev. Mr. Kane of the Bridge street Church, Brooklyn, preached a sermon on the times last Sabbath evening, which we hear very highly spoken of. We hope he may be induced to repeat it; if he does, we suppose that timely notice will be given to the public.

SECESSION POETRY.

A War correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette claims that the following effusions were found among the official papers of the Adjutant of one of the Virginia regiments:

Come all you brave Virginia boys
With hearts boath stout and true
Come lets go down to the mason line
And whip the Northern crue

Old lincoln is there president.
That everybody knows
And he Was elected by the Vote
Of men as black as Crows

A Malgamation is ther theme
And that will never do
Come lets down to the Battle ground
And Whip the Northern Crue

Be brave and Bold you Valiant boys and keep your Armors Bright
For sothern Boys Wonts nothing else
But Just the thing thats Right

God Made the people Black and white
he made the red man to
And for to mix up is not Right
lets Whip the Negro crue

if honor sease your Soards brave boys
And Muskets not a few
Come lets go down to the Battle ground
And Whip the Northern crue
Fight on Brave Boys with out a dout
On til you gain the Field
The god of Battle he is stout
He will caus our foas to yeald

Our wives and sweet hearts
tell us go and fight Just like A man
And keep the northern negro crue off of Virginue land

if luckey is our doom Brave Boys
in old Abe lincon hall
On our next Independent day
We will Take a Sothern Ball

and when we come safe home Again
Our wives and sweet hearts to
We they will welcom us from Washington for they have nothing elce to do
August the 14 1861.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO THE NATIONAL LOAN.

By the following it will be seen that the largest subscription in Pittsburg, Pa., to the National Loan, was made by a colored woman. We copy from the Pittsburg "Gazette," of 21st inst.:—

One day this week an aged colored woman, who in early life was a slave in Virginia, and who has been a servant in one of our most respectable families for many years, called at one of our banking houses with one hundred and fifty dollars in silver coins, some of which were old Spanish dollars, and none bore a later date than 1853. This sum was the accumulated saving of more than thirty years. After exchanging her silver for gold, she called on Mr. Hanna and took one hundred and fifty dollars in Government seven thirty stock. What motive prompted this act, and brought out that little treasure? Was it patriotism? Doubtless it was, but a patriotism mingled with elements with which the white man does not share. Faith and hope in the enfranchisement of her own people unlocked that jealous clutch, and inspired the confidence that enabled her to part with all her living. Is not Ethiopia stretching forth her hand? Large sums have been thrown into the National Treasury in this city; but, rightly viewed, is not this the largest subscription that has been made?

HOW THE ENGLISH PEOPLE FEEL IN REGARD TO THE WAR.

The London correspondent of the Boston Recorder, in giving the result of an interview with a gentleman thoroughly acquainted with the cotton mills districts and the present state of affairs, says:

I inquired what he thought of the general feeling as well of the operatives as of the masters in Lancashire respecting the war, and on which side their sympathies were shown? He replied, "At first we thought and hoped that there might be a peaceful separation. We could not see that there was any sufficient ground for war; our self-interest no doubt helping to close our eyes to the patriotic sentiments of the North. So far as I am able to judge, an impression now prevails that the North could hardly have done otherwise than resist secession, be the consequences what they might; and that the South ought to have given in. I am convinced that there is no sympathy in Lancashire towards the cause of the South, and that there is a real desire for the triumph of the Northern arms, though it is a general belief that the cotton trade would be advantaged by Southern success."

I reminded the genleman of what many of the Northern papers were saying—that our lack of enthusiasm for the Federal cause discovered pretty plainly that our anti-slavery professions were at least very hollow, if not shams altogether, and that we manifestly thought more of cotton for our mills than of freedom for the blacks. His response was: "It is a lie and a libel. Set on foot in Lancashire a subscription for the purchase of the slaves and everybody will contribute to it, or let it be seen ever so faintly how the success of the Federal Government will tend to improve the condition of the negro, and the people will be ready to make large sacrifices. Of that I am thoroughly persuaded. It is because there is no anti-slavery sentiment mixed up with the patriotic cause that any complaint has to be made of our lack of zeal for the North."

THE FRENCH AND THE WAR.

From a recent letter of the Paris correspondent of the New York "Tribune," we make the following extract:—

In the above brief and extremely imperfect survey of some of the causes of the change of drift in French public opinion, I have tried to confine myself strictly within the limits of facts, but have not gone over nearly all the ground within those limits. I might enter upon the debatable ground of opinion, and yet keep far this side of the closed hand of idle conjecture, if I should say that a frank declaration of "Emancipation of the Slave" uttered by our Government, would change the wavering and returning current of French sympathy into a resistless tide in our favor; and if I should say that the Southern leaders, in bold desperation or high intelligence, declaring in advance of us Emancipation of the Slaves, would carry with them them the sympathy of France and England, I am sure that I should say the truth.

THE VIEWS OF GARIBALDI.

We have already mentioned the fact that Garibaldi has decided not to visit America, nor take part in the present war. The following extract from a letter received here by Mr. Frank Nizetelly, artist and correspondent of the Illustrated London News, and an intimate friend of Garibaldi, explains more clearly his position. The letter was written authoritatively by one of Garibaldi's officers, just after his arrival in London from Caprera:

"Repeated endeavors have been made to induce Garibaldi to go to North America, to aid in defending the Union. You can positively contradict (avec certitude dementier) those who assert that he will go there. He will not go. [Then follow some allusions to the condition of European affairs, as restraining his departure, after which the letter continues]—"Beside this, even if Italy, Hungary, and Poland were in the most flourishing state of independence and liberty, he would take no part in thaa struggle so long as the North failed to declare, formally, solemnly, and irrevocably that it would not lay down its arms until Slavery should be destroyed to its last vestige."

SOUTHERN BARBARISM.

The Dansville (Mo.) Herald furnishes the following case of cruelty:

We learn that Mr. Jacob Patten, who lives in the Southwestern part of this county, whipped one of his slaves, a negro woman, to death on Saturday, the 7th inst. After the negro was buried, suspicions of foul play caused her to be taken up. A coroners inquest was held, and it was evident from the condition of the body that she had met her death as stated above. Patten was arrested and gave bail in the amount of $2,500 to appear at the Circuit Court.

Infamous. A private letter to a Baltimore journal, from Carroll County, Maryland, sperking of the recent expedition to Lower Maryland, says the presence of Col. Cowdin's Massachusetts Regiment has convinced the wavering that even Massachusetts men could march through our county without interfering with the slaves. "I know of several instances," the letter continues, "where negroes seeking their camp were whipped and sent home." How does the old Bay State relish having the soldiers apprenticed to this base business!

ANGLO-AFRICAN WAR ITEMS.

When Captain Hight was mustering the 8th Maine Regiment into the U. S. service, at Augusta, last week, in one of the companies he noticed a negro. He ordered him from the ranks, but the man made his appearance in another section of the company, and his captain insisted upon his being mustered in, as he was a strong and able-bodied man. Captain Hight remarked that he came to muster in white citizens, not negroes. He then inquired the name of the negro, and struck it from the company roll.

The Washington correspondent of the Tribune writes as follows; "Maj. Cannon of Gen. Wool's staff arrived to-night with despatches. Gen. Wool wants to know what to do with the negroes,—upward of 2000 of whom are now at Fortress Eonroe. The President's order amending Gen. Fremont's proclamation sets the whole question afloat again as regards negroes not directly employed in rebel service, who may seek protection within our lines. Gen. Wool is ordered to send to Washington all whom he can spare—the men to be put on the entrenchments and the women in the camp kitchens to be paid for their services. Beside 2000 at the fort, there are ten or fifteen on each of our men-of-war which sail from Hampton Roads who get $8 a month and found.

A despatch received subsequent to the above, says, Gen. Wool will probably send no contraband slaves to Washington, as the entire force here is required for the use of Quartermaster Talmadge.

The Missouri correspondent of the Tribune says:

Six companies of troops from Cape Girardeau made a march to Benton recently, seizing property in accordance with Fremont's proclamation. They also gave liberty to a number of slaves. Ten belonging to General Watkins, formerly a representative in the Legislature, but now a Brigadier in the rebel army, were among the number set free. Of course they were glad to be set at liberty. One of them said he "had been wondering Fremont hadn't done so befo'." They were engaged at fair wages as servants to the officers, and, all seemed pleased and dignified by their new position.

The Washington correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune writes:

No list of escaped slaves having been kept here as at Fortress Monroe, the precise number is unattainable. According to the estimate of military authorities, however, about 200, who ran from rebel Virginians, are now practically free men. Of these, some are working on entrenchments or elsewhere, some have disappeared. The number returned to Virginians or Marylanders professing loyalty, is not ascertained.

The Fort Smith Times, of the 10th, states that two companies of southern black men have formed in that neighborhood. They are thoroughly southern men, not armed, but drilling to take the field.

Protection to owners of slaves.—General Kelly, commanding a portion of our forces in Western Virginia, has issued the following order:

Head-Quarters, District of Grafton, }
Grafton, Va., Sept. 7, 1861. }
General Order, No. 7.]

The General commanding desires to assure the people of Western Virginia, that it is the desire and intention of the United States Government, to give to the citizens full and ample protection in all their civil and political rights, and that private property, of whatever kind or description shall be held inviolate.

In order to secure the owners of slaves the most ample protection that can be given, as well as to protect the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad from loss and damage under its charter, it is expressly prohibited for any officer or soldier to transport, or cause to be transported over the lines of the Baltimore and Ohio and North Western Virginia Railroads, any black or mulatto person, the same being a slave, unless owned by such officer or soldier, or transported by permission of the owner.

This order is not to be construed to prohibit officers from traveling over the above roads with their private servants, provided such servants are free, or, if slaves, properly hired from their masters.

Any person in the United States service violating the above order, will be severely punished.

By order of Brigadier General Kelley,
Geo. H. Crosman, Jr.,
Ass't Adjt. General.

SUMMARY.

At Poughkeepsie recently, a colored man named Calder, while fishing, fell overboard, and not being able to swim, would have drowned but for a fish line, the hook of which catching fast in his clothes, enabled his companions to pull him out. When first taken out he showed signs of life, but was speechless until they commenced rolling him, when he so far revived as to be able to speak. He begged them to desist, which they did. Soon after, they conveyed him to a house near by, where they gave him salt water and ipecac to vomit him, and so they continued doctoring him up to Friday forenoon, when they became alarmed and sent for a doctor, who informed them he was too far gone for medical aid. He continued to fail until about three o'clock that afternoon, when he expired.

We find the following in the Utica (N. Y.) Observer of the 17th inst:

Quite an excitement was created yesterday at the depot, as the N. Y. express was due and the Watertown train ready to start. Mr. P. Kelly of this town, got on board with a couple of colored persons, to assist him to wait on people at a hotel in Watertown. Just as the train was ready to start, a colored man named Jones, of Rome, jumped on board, and had several words with Kelly. Soon after, blow after blow followed in the car, and a "free fight" was had, in which, as I have been informed, the colored man got the worst. Police Constable Conley was around, as you'll always find him, stopped the fight, and took the colored man (Jones) up street. After the train had left, Jones, who was a little intoxicated, started again for the depot, with the determination to whip Kelly, who had left for Watertown on a freight train. Being at the depot, Jones attempted to cross between the cars, as they backed up, and jammed his thumb so severely that he had it amptutated, by Dr. J. W. P. Kingsley; two of his fingers were also badly bruised. As near as I could ascertain, the fight was caused because Kelly refused to employ Jones to assist him at Watertown. N.

The Newburyport "Herald" says:

Barclay Coppie, of Iowa, one of John Brown's men at Harper's Ferry raid, whose brother was among those hanged for treason, was one of the victims of the Platte river bridge disaster in Missouri. With a half dozen other persons he was on his way to join Capt. Montgomery, of the Kansas regiment. Montgomery himself is a sort of John Brown, who can pray or fight, and is bound on the liberation of slaves, whatever the proclamations of Lincoln, Fremont, or any of the others may say upon that question.

The Meadville (Pa.) Journal of the 17th inst., says:

John Brown, Jr., was in town last week, on business with regard to raising his company of sharp-shooters. He is a fine, stout, manly person, of some 30 or 35 years, and looks able to kill and bury a regiment of traitors. This company is to enter the regiment of Col. Montgomery, (3d Regiment Kansas Volunteers,) in the brigade of Gen. Lane, and division of Maj. Gen. Fremont. Capt. Brown has already 70 hardy fellows in his company, and has gone among the hunters of Eastern Crawford, Warren and Venago for more. He wants men who are accustomed to the use of the rifle, and can pick off a rebel at any distance whatever! The formation of this company affords an excellent opportunity for good marksmen to enter the service in a way suited exactly to their tastes and habits. Are there not some riflemen ready to go with John Brown from Crawford County!

The Philadelphia News of the 19th inst, says:

Last night a scene of excitement occurred at the Baltimore depot, which lasted from ten to twelve o'clock. It seems that a company of soldiers, calling themselves the Anderson Guards, were at the depot. A faithful colored man, employed about the place, was asleep in his wheel-barrow. One of the soldiers overturned the barrow, and kicked the colored man. The latter jumped up and endeavored to get away, when half a dozen of the valiant sons of war made an attack upon him, and he knocked the whole of them down as fast as they came up to him. All this time he was retreating in good order. The police interfered, and prevented any further attack upon the colored man. Squads of the soldiers searched for him until the time of departure, but the object of their search was secreted by the officers.

The Clinton (N. J.) Leader of the 14th inst. says:

The colored people of this town and vicinity held a Pic-nic in a grove near the High Bridge, on Thursday of last week, which was attended by a number of colored people from a distance. It was a large gathering, and reflected much credit on the managers, for we are informed by some of our white citizens who were present, that the best of order prevailed, and everything passed off in the finest manner and with the best of feeling. May they have many more such pic-nics.

On the 15th inst. Richard Hill, a colored man, was deliberately murdered by his son, Richard L. Hill, at his residence in Munjoy, Portland. There had been a difficulty between the father and the son relative to domestic affairs, and the son lay in wait for his father to return from work. He fired at him twice, both shots taking effect, the second one killing the old man almost instantly. He says he shot his father in self-defence—that he was making towards him with a knife, as he fired one of his pistols at him, the ball taking effect. Perceiving that his father was wounded, and suffering much pain, he says he fired the second pistol to put him out of misery! The pistols he says he kept loaded all ready, supposing it would result in this at last.

We find the following in the Columbus, O., "City Fact," of Sept. 13th.

Yesterday afternoon a colored servant in the Goodale House, named Adarius Liverpool, was brought before mayor Thomas, on a charge of assaulting with intent to murder Mathias Mitchell, also a servant in the same house. It appears that the men got into an altercation which finally came to blows, and Liverpool fancying he was getting the worst of it, seized a carving knife with which he struck Mitchell on the back, cutting through his clothes, and inflicting a severe wound on the back and shoulder. The knife is a murderous looking instrument, nearly two feet long, a very slight wield of which would be sufficient to cut a man in two. The mayor held Liverpool to bail in $100 to appear at the Court of Common Pleas for trial.

The Middletown, (N. Y.) Press says:

Isaac McLaughrey, Jr., (colored) son of Peter McLaughrey, of this town, died of Hydrophobia on Tuesday, 26th ult. He was aged about 26 years. He was bitten just four months previous by his own dog, which was not suspected of being mad at the time, but showed symptoms of disease, not having eaten anything within three days. The dog went off and was never seen again. The bite healed up, and he thought nothing more about it. On Tuesday, 25th, he was taken ill, and showed all the symptoms of hydrophobia, and kept growing worse until Saturday of the same week, when death released him from his suffering. His sufferings were of a most intense character.

We learn from the Utica Telegraph that a colored man named Richard Holmes died at the Hospital in that city on Tuesday last, quite suddenly, and from a post-mortem examination, under the direction of Coroner Donaldson, it was ascertained that his death was caused by a superabundance of fat. Upon opening the body, on a line with the chin downwards, there was found to be two and a half inches of fat covering the breast, and no less than three inches of fat over the abdomen. The heart was found to weigh nearly three times more than ordinary; the lungs were singularly small, the whole of the right lung being not as large as a single lobe of the lung of a healthy subject. His weight was nearly 400 pounds. He was a remarkably superior cook, and had been engaged for several years at the American Hotel.

The Elkton (Md.) Democrat, 7th inst., says:

Aldridge Gibbs, a free colored man, and Michael Harris, servant for a term of years of Mr. Jacob Johnson, were both arrested last week, and committed to jail, charged with attempting to entice away the slaves of Mr. Jacob C. Howard, of this town. The case will come up for a hearing before Justice Owens this afternoon.

A colored woman employed as a servant in the family of Garrett Schenck, at Trenton N. J., was severely if not fatally burned while starting a fire. To hasten its burning, she used a fluid can, and while pouring some of that dangerous article on the fuel, the flames ignited that in the can, causing it to burst. She was instantly enveloped in flames.

The Baltimore Clipper of the 17th inst. states:

On Friday night last, two thieves entered the dwelling of an honest old colored man by the name of Fowler, living near the Whatcoat Chapel, in the northwestern section of the city. They effected an entrance through the rear window. After searching the bureau drawers, and taking therefrom a shawl belonging to the old man's wife, one of them wrapped it around him, ascending the stairs, went into the bedroom where the old man lay asleep, searched his pockets, and took six dollars, all the money he had in his possession. Hearing a noise he got out of bed, thinking the form that stood before him was his wife, he asked why the lamp was lit. The stranger turned his head away and with a whining voice made fun of what was said. He soon found his way down stairs and made his escape out the front door. This is the second time Fowler has been robbed within a few months past.

Coroner Sparklin held an inquest on Saturday night, at the head of the Long Dock, Baltimore, over the body of Joseph Thomas, colored, aged 12 years, who, while walk*ing on the edge of the dock with his father,* stumbled over an iron chain and fell into the water.

We learn by our York exchanges that a case of accidental shooting occurred in that place on Monday, 2nd inst., by which Stephen Harris, a colored man, was shot and instantly killed with a gun in the hands of another colored man named Adam Myers. The coroner's jury rendered a verdict that Harris came to his death by the accidental discharge of a gun, carelessly handled in the hands of Myers. Myers was arrested but released upon giving bail in the sum of $4,000 to appear and answer at court.

The Jamaica "Farmer" states that on Sunday 1st instant a large party of colored men attended the Camp Meeting held at Far Rockaway, and after satisfying themselves at that place they started for home on foot. They left the Camp ground and arrived at Rockaway village where they broke into the house of Mrs. Ann Atkinson, a colored woman, and robbed it of fifty-six dollars in bank bills, one gold chain, three dollars in silver coin, one silver watch, a large quantity of clothing and other valuables amounting in the aggregate to upwards of one hundred dollars. The thieves then entered one of the toll gates on the Jamaica South Road, kept by Nehemiah Areson, and stole a considerable sum of money with which they escaped. Officer Samuel W. Bowker of Rockaway was notified of the robbery and started in pursuit. He came to this village, obtained a warrant from Justice John S. Snedeker, and then proceeded to Williamsburg where he ascertained the names of most of the gang, and with the aid of Detective Frost succeeded in arresting two of them, and brought them to this village on Thursday. Officer Bowker then returned and arrested three more which were placed in the cells in this place on Friday.

The prisoners gave their names as Joseph Simmonds, Samuel Fish, Buck Ellison, Thomas Field, Ezekiel Chester. Committed for further examination on Saturday last.

A colored man by the name of Andrew Lohman, of Wilmington, Delaware, was arrested in Newport on Thursday, the 19th instant, on the charge of burglary:—

It seems Lohman had sold a quantity of rags to a junk dealer in that city, and among them were discovered the remnants of some articles which were known to have been stolen from various places within a few weeks. This discovery led to the search of Lohman's house, in Charles Street, where quite a number of articles were found, which will undoubtedly prove the complicity of this man in numerous burglaires which have taken place of late, some of them within a stones throw of the City Hall. Lohman is now in a safe place awaiting his trial.

In the police report of the Hartford Press appears the following:

Pete Williams, a drinking, fighting, troublesome colored man, who was let off a week or two ago on condition that he would leave town for Poughkeepsie, where he said he belonged, was arrested again last night. He said he did leave town, but "came back for his things." One of the "things" found upon him when arrested was a short thick cudgel of green wood, with this inscription elaborately carved in the bark—"Down You Go By G—d." During the night he tried to whittle out of the watch-house. On a general charge of drunkenness and fighting he was sent to jail for sixty days.

David Jackson, (colored) who, with several others escaped from jail last week, was recaptured in New Brunswick and brought back to his old quarters on Sunday morning, where he is now heavily ironed, to prevent any future attempts being made by him at a second escape.

What a Missouri Slaveholder Thinks.—The St. Louis Democrat publishes an interesting letter from a slaveholder residing in Marion county, Missouri, who owns thirty-five slaves, and who takes this view of Fremont's proclamation: If the result of the Confiscation act shall be freedom to some of the slaves, the government nor the President cannot thereby be blamed, for they have not forced the war. I see no principle in justice or law why negroes should be excepted from confiscation any more than any other species of property, and if they are justly and legally forfeited by the owner to the government, they thereby become the property of the government and subject to their disposition, and I know of no right that the rebels who have forfeited them by their own acts, have to dictate to the authorities in power the manner in which they should be disposed of, whether to be sold again to loyal citizens, or set free. I confess I have no complaint to make of Mr. Fremont for his late proclamation. It would have been sufficient, perhaps, if he had left off with the word "confiscation;" but he did not, and I am rather inclined to the view that the proclamation has had a better effect, as it has set the people to thinking more about results.

PERSONAL.

In the Superior Court, September 14th, before Judge Russel, John S. Rock, M. D., was, on motion of T. K. Lothrop, Esq., examined and admitted to practice in all the Courts of this Commonwealth.

The Venerable Austin Steward, of Canandaigua, N. Y., is now in this city.

DIED.

Jackson.—In Philadelphia, on the 31st ult., Elizabeth Jackson, relict of Benjamin Jackson, in the 81st year of her age.

Past her suffering, past her pain,
Cease to weep, for tears are vain;
Calm the tumult of your breast,
She who suffered is at rest.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

The colored man who left a pocket knife in an Eighth Avenue car, on Sunday evening Sept. 8th, may obtain the same, after proving property, by calling at the office of the Anglo-African.

Special Notices.

GRAND PIONEER FESTVAL.

Attention is called to the Pioneer Festival, in behalf of the Gerrit Smith Land movement, to take place Thursday evening, October 10th, at Prince Street Hall. Dr. James McCune Smith, John Peterson, and others whose substantial interest in this movement is gratefully acknowledged, will be present, and address the company upon the importance of this enterprise. Full particulars next week.

T. B. VOORHEES'
EXCURSION TO BULL'S FERRY,
BY BOAT AND BARGE.

Owing to so many being disappointed in not attending the last Excursion, caused by an unavoidable delay, it will be repeated

On Thursday, the 26th Inst.

giving all an opportunity to enjoy the [illegible]

PROF. ROBT. H. BROWN

will be in attendance.

Parties can bring their children and enjoy the country air, as we shall lay at Bull's Ferry for three hours, returning at 6½ o'clock, landing at 30th and 22d Streets, each way, reaching the city early in the evening for all that wish to go off. The boat and barge will then make another excursion up the river, and return by 12½ A.M.

TICKETS FOR THE WHOLE EXCURSION

THIRTY CENTS EACH.

The steamer will stop at South 7th Street, Williamsburg at 1 o'clock, P.M.; Fulton Ferry, Brooklyn, at 1½; Jersey city 1½; thence to Spring St., leaving there at 2½ with the barge, and will land at 22d and 30th Sts.

N.B. There will be no delay, as the boat will be prompt in her landings.

COME AND HELP US.

There will be an entertainment given for the benefit of the Rev. Mr. Manning, on Thursday evening, October the 3rd, 1861, in the Zion M.E. Church in Devoe St., Williamsburg city.

The committee knowing the pecuniary embarrasments under which the Trustees are laboring and their inability to make provision for their Pastor for the coming winter, desire to do what they can, to meet his pressing wants—and they cordially invite all the friends of the Rev. Mr. Manning to lend a helping hand.

Donations of any kind will be thankfully received. Tickets 25 cents, children under 12 years [illegible] cents, to be had of the following committee

Miss Jane A. Williams,
Mrs. Octavia Buckus,
Mrs. M. E. Hicks,
Mrs. Rudolphine Schemerhorn,
Miss Frances A.E. Fitch,
Mrs. Thomas Thompson.

Copies of Anglo-African can be obtained of Mr Samuel Bayard, 61 Union Street, New Haven, opposite the Railroad depot.

Rev. Henry M. Wilson is now Assistant Secretary of the African Civilization Society, No. 26 Bible House.

Office hours Monday, Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, from ten A. M. till two P. M.

As many letters are sent to his care for different persons in this city, it would be well for parties expecting letters to call at Mr. Wilson's Office.

THE PROPOSED NEW BOOK OF MARTYRS.

For the above work the undersigned would state, in answer to numerous inquiries, that he wishes to collect full and accurate accounts of all cases of abuse growing out of Slavery, of the loss of time, property and life, whether among whites, Indians, or blacks. He is not particular as to the length of the articles, for, when we come to the publication, it may be best to abridge some statements; but the original communications will be carefully preserved and placed in some historical collection for preservation and reference. Whatever will serve to illustrate or add interest to the statements, such as photographs or engravings, or autographs of the persons, or maps and plans of the localities named, will be thankfully received and carefully preserved. If the case has been published in the papers, or in pamphlets or books, please make reference to them or forward them. Names of persons, places, and dates, which, if divulged would involve the parties in difficulty, may be withheld in the communication. Let every one send on what he or she may have to communicate as early as possible. We shall feel greatly obliged to Editors who will copy this advertisement and give it a favorable notice, and all who will promptly respond to this call will receive our hearty thanks.

Address, L. G. OLMSTEAD, New York.

Information Wanted in regard to Alexander or Sandy Hogan, son of Betsey Hogan. He left the service of Mr. Jenkins in Baltimore, in June, 1859, and came to the North to solicit money to purchase the freedom of his wife. He is believed to have been in Birmingham, N. Y., about five weeks ago. Skin light brown. An aged mother is anxious to ascertain his whereabouts, and will be grateful for information sent to Wm. Still, 107 North-Fifth street, Philadelphia.

Anti-slavery papers please copy. 3t.

Letters or newspapers for Hayti or Jamaica will be promptly forwarded if left with Mr. N. R Ashby, at Lewis & Co.'s store, 24 South Street. New York.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

CLOTHING! CLOTHING!!

Gentlemen if you want a Nice, Fashionable, well-fitted Garment at a much Lower Price than can be bought at any other establishment in this ro any other city, please call at the Merchant Tailor Establishment,

168 EWEN STREET,

BET. STAGG & WYCKOFF STS., WILLIAMSBURG,

Where you will find a splendid assortment of seasonable goods, as

BROADCLOTHS,
CASSIMERES
AND VESTINGS

of every description. Also constantly on hand a well-selected stock of Ready-Made

MEN AND BOY'S CLOTHING.

Don't Forget,
168 EWEN ST.,
9 1y. Williamsburg.

JUST PUBLISHED
"THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE IN LIBERIA."

The Anniversary address, on the 26th July, 1860, in Cape Palmas, Liberia, by the Rev. Alex. Crummell, B.A.

For Sale at the Anglo-African Office, 48 Beekman St., New York. Price 15 cents. 8 4t.

TO LET.—THE UPPER PART OF HOUSE 277 South Fourth St., Williamsburg, consisting of front and back parlors, and a large bedroom, with the back basement. Rent nine dollars a month, to be paid strictly in advance. nquire on the premises, or at the office.

LODGINGS.—MRS. LANE CAN ACCOMODATE a few gentlemen with pleasant apartments at her residence, No. 19½ Green Street, in the rear. Terms moderate. 9 13.

CLOCKS, WATCHES, JEWELRY and Musical Boxes carefully Repaired by Wm. C. H. Curtis, No. 153 Thompson St., N. Y. Silver Plating and Fine Gilding. 8 tf.

A NEW WORK
TO BE READY ABOUT THE 25TH OF SEPT.
REPORT OF THE NIGER VALLEY
EXPLORING PARTY
BY
M. R. DELANY, CHIEF COMMISSIONER
TO AFRICA.

CONTENTS.

Political Movements.
Succeeding Conventions.
History of the Project.
Arrival and Reception in Liberia.
Liberia—Climate [illegible]
Diseases—Cause, Remedy.
The Interior.—Yo[illegible]
Topography, Clim[illegible]
Diseases of this p[illegible] Africa.
Treatment, Hygein[illegible]
Missionary Influ[illegible]
What Africa now [illegible] Legitimate
Commerce.
Cotton Staple.
Success in Great Brit[illegible]
Commercial Relations [illegible]
The time to go to Africa.
Concluding Suggestions.

Complete in sections (chap[illegible]tively from I to XVII, being most con[illegible]ranged in cut-in or side marginal notes, embra[illegible] every subject therein treated, so that in an in[illegible] any point or paragraph of interest may be at [illegible] to.

A learned and candid gentleman who [illegible]sided many years in Africa, after glancing over the proof sheets, pronounced it the most interesting and instructive work ever issued on that subject, and should be in the hands of every friend of Africa. It is a complete text-book.

The work contains 76 large pages, and will be sold at the low price of

TWENTY-FIVE CENTS PER COPY.

All Orders should be addressed to the Publisher,

THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St, N. Y.

THE ZOUAVE AND SLAVE ENVELOPE
Price per thousand $5; per hundred 60 cents; packages of 25 each, 20 cents.
Orders should be addressed
THOS. HAMILTON
48 Beekman Street, N. Y

PRIVATE BOARDING HOUSE
BY
MRS. W. S. WILKINS & Co.,
610 PINE, ABOVE SIXTH STREET,
PHILADELPHIA 7-13t.

LADIES' FURNISHING STORE.
CHILDREN'S CLOTHING
Ready-Made and Made to Order, By
MRS. S. WILKINS & CO.,
610 Pine, above Sixth Street, Philadelphia.
7-13t.

A SCHOOL WANTED.—A YOUNG LADY, a graduate of one of the High Schools of this State, and who is fully qualified as a teacher, is desirous of obtaining a school where the salary would not be less than $200 a year. Address Thos. Hamilton, 48 Beekman St., N.Y.

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION. THE UNDERSIGNED respectfully announces that he is now prepared to give instruction in the Art of Singing. He will be at home at 187 Navy Street, Brooklyn, on Monday evening, and at Zion Church, N. Y., on Thursday evening, of each week. Ladies or Gentlemen desiring instruction, will please apply immediately. Singing schools taught and private instruction given on moderate terms.
3tf. ROBT. HAMILTON,

NEW SAILOR'S HOME. CHARLES H. Fortes, has opened a pleasant home for Seamen, at 26 Mulberry Street, N. Y., Seamen will find this a very desirable house, as it is in a central location, and every provision made for their comfort.
Boarding by the day or week. Terms moderate. 31y

WANTED AT TILMAN'S AGENCY, NO. 70 East 13th Street, one door east of 4th Ave., first class colored help, and none else. Cooks, house-workers, chambermaids, waitresses and laundresses, coachmen, waiters, &c. Now is the time; fall is near and good help wanted for city and country. 5—4t

MRS. E. CLARKE, IS HAPPY TO ANnounce to her friends and the public, that she has opened her new BOARDING HOUSE, and will be very thankful for their patronage, at No. 66 Sullivan Street, New York. 4-1t

DENTISTRY.
BEAUTIFUL ARTIFICIAL SETS OF TEETH on gold or silver plate on the most improved style. All other Surgical operations performed to entire satisfaction, on very moderate terms by G. H. GRICE, Surgeon Dentist,
79 Thompson St., N. Y.

MRS. E. LEONARD,
FASHIONABLE
DRESS MAKER,
25 Sullivan Street, New York.
Receives monthly the latest Paris Fashions.
3tf.

BOARDING AND LODGING
By Mrs. Mary Johnson, 130 West 30th Street, New York. This house is very pleasantly situated in a very healthy and convenient part of the city.
Boarding for Ladies, [illegible]
" " Gentleman, 3.00
Lodging per week, 75
13t.

JAMES R. W. LEONARD,
CARD AND JOB PRINTER.
219 Centre Street, New York.

THE BEST DRESSING FOR THE HAIR during warm weather, is W[illegible] Vegetable extract. For Sale at 10 S[illegible] Grand Sts.,

BOARDING AND LODGING ON THE EAST Side. [illegible]

BROWN'S POPULAR [illegible]

[illegible]

Poetry.

SLAVE-HOLDER'S PARODY.

The following Parody was written by a gentleman who formerly resided at the South.

Come, saints and sinners, hear me tell,
How pious priests whip Jack and Nell
And women buy, and children sell,
And preach all sinners down to hell,
And sing of heavenly union.

They'll bleat and ba, dona like goats,
Gorge down black sheep and strain at motes,
Array their backs in fine black coats.
And seize their negroes by their throats,
And choke for heavenly union.

They'll church you if you sip a dram,
And damn you if you steal a Lamb,
Yet rob old Tony, Doll and Sam,
Of human rights and bread and ham,
Kidnapper's heavenly union.

They'll talk of heaven and Christ's reward,
And bind his image with a cord,
And scold and swing and lash abhorr'd,
And sell their brother in the Lord,
To hand-cuff heavenly union.

They'll read and sing a sacred song,
And make a prayer both loud and long,
And teach the right, and do the wrong,
Hailing the brother, sister throng,
With words of heavenly union.

We wonder how such saints can sing,
Or praise the Lord upon the wing,
Who roar and scold and whip and sting,
And to their slaves and mammon cling,
In guilty conscience's union.

They'll raise tobacco, corn and rye,
And drive and thieve and cheat and lie,
And lay up treasures in the sky,
By making switch and cowskin fly,
In hope of heavenly union.

They'll crack old Tony on the skull,
And preach and roar like bashaw-bull,
Or braying ass, of mischief full,
Then seize old Jacob by the wool,
And pull for heavenly union.

A roaring, ranting, sleek man-thief,
Who lived on mutton, veal and beef,
And never could afford relief,
To needy sable sons of grief,
Was big with heavenly union.

Love not the world, the preacher said,
And winked his eye and shook his head,
He seized on Tom and Dick and Ned,
Cut short their meat and clothes and bread,
Yet still loved heavenly union.

Another preacher whining spoke,
Of one whose heart for sinners broke,
He tied old Nancy to an oak,
And drew the blood at every stroke,
And prayed for heavenly union.

Two others op'ed their iron jaws,
And waved their children-stealing paws,
There sat their children in gew-gaws—
By stinting negroes backs and maws,
They keep up heavenly union.

All good from Jack another takes,
And entertains their flirts and rakes,
Who dress as sleek as glossy snakes,
And cram their mouths with sweeten'd cakes,
And this goes down for union.

Fremont's Proclamation.

Behold against the western sky
The sacred banner waves on high;
That banner which our race has borne
A thousand years triumphant on,
Gleaming through England's glorious days,
Lightning our father's darkest ways,
The beacon bright on Plymouth's night,
The flame that rose from Bunker's height,
High o'er Our country, like a star,
To guide the Nation's holy war.
Thank Heaven! Still flaming high we see
The banner of Man's Liberty.
We'll guard it, Freemen, through the fight;
Our war-cry sings "God and the Right."

LIBERTAS.

Boston, September, 1861.

THE WAR.

BY REV. GEORGE B. CHEEVER.

Objections are raised in unexpected quarters against abolishing slavery by the war. The scheme is being denounced as being inhuman, insurrectionary, and full of horrors. Let us take this bull by the horns in the argument, as Fremont in one quarter of the battle field has taken it in his proclamation, giving freedom to the slaves of all rebels in Missouri, and thus striking a blow directly at the heart of the rebellion.

In the first place, a war for emancipation would be quite as just and righteous in itself as a war for the subduing of rebellion. If the rebellion be not subdued, there is an end to all honest government, and a destruction of American liberties. But on the other hand, if slavery be not subdued, the establishment of the slave government over the continent would be a greater calamity for mankind.

In the second place, What is there in a war for emancipation any more inhuman than in a war for putting down rebellion? Is not slavery as great a sin in God's sight as rebellion? Is not slavery as injurious to mankind, and as destructive of all good government, as rebellion? And is not the emancipation of the enslaved as clearly a command from God as obedience to the Government? And is not a war in defence of others' rights quite as benevolent as one in defence of our own? And if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who shall give you that which is your own?

In the third place, What is there in a war for emancipation any more insurrectionary or inhuman than in a war for putting down rebellion? Is it any more inhuman for blacks to be enlisted in fighting against rebellious whites, than for whites to be enlisted in fighting against their brethren? The war for emancipation would simply be a legalized, well-ordered martial insurrection against rebels and traitors. The war to put down the rebellion is much wider and more fearful, occupies vaster territories, and necessitates the fighting and the sacrifice of greater numbers of white soldiers, than it would if it were a war to put down slavery, the cause of the rebellion. The war for emancipation, instead of increasing, would speedily and rapidly reduce the horrors of arw, gathering them into a smaller compass, and instead of covering the whole ground of the rebellion needlessly, would concentrate a force against that one fortress or intrenchment which commands all the enemy's positions, and being invested, would compel him to surrender at all points.

A correspondent of the "Tribune" of August 19th, from a Southern State, declared that the Government would "have to inaugurate some system of emancipation as an act of mercy to the whites of the South, and for the purpose of controlling elements otherwise uncontrollable and destructive."

Now a national act and proclamation of emancipation is not an insurrection, nor its proclamation, but simply an invitation of enlistment under authority and protection of the United States Government. It is just what a proclamation of the marriage ordinance would be in a region where there had been nothing but promiscuous licentiousness. The marriage act would intervene to put a stop to such licentiousness, subduing it within the permanent bounds and channels of domestic life and virtue. And just so, the proclamation of liberty to all the inhabitants of the land would be the proclamation, not of insurrection, but of legitimate obedience and protection under the guardianship of law.

As fast as the army, making or carrying this proclamation, advanced, so fast and so far the slaves would be put under protective arrangements and rules, a system of continued employment and care, drafted and regimented for service, or if kept on plantations, kept at work, the plantations being the property of the Government, and the slaves kept as free laborers. But beyond the advance and occupation of the army, the proclamation of liberty would simply prepare the way for such advance. If it produced a temporary insurrection, this would so paralyze and occupy the power and whole attention of the enemy, as to render an immediate advance, conquest, and occupation by the army an easy and inevitable movement; and whenever any insurrection had begun, it would cease instantly on the presence of the army, being turned into a legitimate and military, and no longer insurrectionary movement.

The country in rebellion must be subdued, and for the present governed as a conquered territory, conquered by a free Government and people, and to be governed by that Government, just as the free territory is governed, under the rule of "no involuntary servitude, except for the punishment of crime." If any human beings henceforward in all the rebellious states are to be put to involuntary servitude, it must be the rebels themselves, taken in the act of rebellion against the Government. Let them be made the slaves, and let the blacks be appointed their overseers. Such would be the result of emancipation, that is, the just reduction and punishment of the rebels, who have filled their country with all the inhumanity and miseries of war for the sake of slavery, and the deliverance and orderly employment of the slaves by the conquering Government.

Yet in the face of all this, we have the strange phenomenon of persons arguing that liberty to the slaves must on no account be proclaimed or permitted, because it would set the whole South in all the miseries of a civil and servile war! But what are the very opponents of emancipation themselves proposing on the largest scale, but just a devastating, desolating war to put down the rebellion, a war against the rebels, which, if it involves anything, involves all the inhumanities of war on both sides! And they mean to maintain this, yet will not adopt the one measure of freedom to the enslaved which would put an end to all this! They will continue the war, with all its horrible desolation and sacrifice of friends more than foes, rather than admit the boon of emancipation, because, they say, this would involve insurrection, and insurrection would be savage and inhuman against the rebels and their social state! An insurrection would be so full of horror to their enemies, that they prefer to desolate the households of their friends!

For the honor of our country, let the word Freedom to all the inhabitants of the land go forth, and thus let this dreadful rebellion be subdued in the speediest possible way.—INDEPENDENT.

THE SHARK.

AN ADVENTURE AT THE PEARL FISHERY.

One breathless day we were floating in our little boat at the pearl fishery, watching the diving. "We" means my wife, myself, and our little daughter, who was nestled in the arms of her "ayah," or colored nurse. It was one of those tropical mornings, the glory of which is indescribable. The sea was so transparent that the boat in which we lay, shielded from the sun by awnings, seemed to hang suspended in the air. The tufts of pink and white coral that studded the bed of the ocean beneath, were as distinct as if they were growing at our feet. We seemed to be gazing upon a beautiful parterre of variegated candy tuft. The shores, fringed with palms and patches of a gigantic species of cactus which was then in bloom, were as still and serene as if they had been painted on glass. Indeed the whole landscape looked like a beautiful scene beheld through a glorified telescope. Eminently real, as far as detail went, but fixed and motionless as death.

Nothing broke the silence save the occasional plunge of the divers in the water, or the noise of the large oysters falling into the bottom of the boat. In the distance, on a small narrow point of land, a strange crowd of human beings were visible. Oriental pearl merchants, Fakeers selling amulets, Brahmins in their dirty white robes, all attracted to the spot by the prospect of gain, (as fish collected round a handful of bait flung into a pond,) bargaining, cheating, and strangely mingling religion with lucre.

My wife and I lay back on the cushions that lined the after part of our little skiff, languidly gazing on the sea and sky by turns. Suddenly our attention was aroused by a great shout, which was followed by a volley of shrill cries from the pearl-fishing boats. On turning in the direction the greatest excitement was visible among the different crews. Hands were pointed. White teeth was gesticulating violently. Then two or three negroes seized some long poles and commenced beating the water violently. Others flung gourds and calabashes, and old pieces of wood and stones, in the direction of a particular spot that lay between the nearest fishing-boat and ourselves.

The only thing visible in this spot was a black, sharp blade, thin as the blade of a pen-knife, that appeared slowly and evenly cutting through the still water. No surgical instrument ever glided through human flesh with more silent, cruel calm. It needed not the cry of "Shark! shark!" to tell us what it was. In a moment we had a vivid picture of that unseen monster, with its small watchful eyes and his huge mouth, with its double row of fangs presented before our mental vision. There were three divers under water at this moment, while directly above them hung suspended the remorseless incarnation of death.

My wife clasped my hand convulsively, and became deathly pale. I stretched out the other hand instinctively and grasped a revolver which lay beside me. I was in the act of cocking it, when a shriek of unutterable agony from the ayah burst on our ears. I turned my head quick as a flash of lightning and beheld her with empty arms, hanging over the gunwale of the boat, while down in the calm sea I saw a tiny little face swathed in white, sinking—sinking—sinking!

What are words to paint such a crisis? I was roused from a trance of anguish by the flitting of a dark form through the clear water, cleaving its way swiftly towards that darling little shape that grew dimmer and dimmer every second as it settled in the sea. We all saw it, and the same thought struck us all. That terrible, deadly black fin was the key of our sudden terror. The shark! A simultaneous shriek burst from our lips. I tried to jump overboard, but was withheld by some one; little use had I done so, for I could not swim a stroke. The dark shape glided on like a flash of lightning. It reached our treasure.

In an instant all we loved on earth was blotted from our sight. My heart stood still—my breath ceased—life trembled on my lips. The next moment a dusky head shot out of the water close to our boat—a dusky head whose lips gasped for breath, but whose eyes shone with the brightness of superhuman joy. The second after, two tawny hands held a dripping white mass above water, and a second and the brave pearl-diver had clambered in, and laid my little daughter at her mother's feet. This was the shark. This the man-eater. This hero in sun-burned hide, who with his quick, acquatic sight had seen our dear one sinking through the sea, and had brought her up to us again, pale and dripping, but still alive. What tears and what laughter fell on us three by turns, as we named our gem rescued from the ocean "Little Pearl!"

BE KIND TO THE AGED.

Age, when whitening for the tomb, is an object of sublimity. The passions have ceased—hopes of self have ceased. They linger with the young, they pray for the young while their spirits are looking beyond the grave—and oh! how careful should the young be to reward the aged with their fresh warm hearts, to diminish the chill of ebbing life. The Spartans looked upon a reverential respect for old age as a beautiful trait of character. Be kind to those who are in the Autumn of life, for thou knowest not what suffering they may have endured, or how much of it may still be their portion. Do they seem unreasonable and disposed to find fault or murmur? Allow not thine anger to kindle against them; rebuke them not, for doubtless many have been the crosses and trials of earlier years, and perhaps their dispositions, while in the Spring time of life, were more flexible than thine own. Do they require aid of thee? then render it cheerfully, forget not that the time may come when thou mayest desire the same assistance from others, that thou renderest unto them. Do all that is needful for the old, and do it with alacrity, and think it is not hard if much is required at thy hand, lest when age sets its seal upon thy brow and fills thy limbs with trembling, others may wait unwillingly, and feel relieved when the coffin-lip has covered thy face forever.—"HENRY WARD BEECHER."

AN UNFORTUNATE PATIENT.

A self-sufficient "regular," who took up the business of a physician, and pretended to a deep knowledge of the healing art, was called to visit a young man afflicted with the apoplexy. Bolus gazed long and fixedly; felt his pulse and pockets and finally gave vent to the following sublime opinion:—

"I think he's a gone feller."

"No, no!" exclaimed the sorrowful wife, "do not say that."

"Yes," returned Bolus, lifting his hat and eyes heavenward at the same time, "Yes, I do say so; there ain't no hope, not the leastest mite, he's got an attack of 'nihil fit' in his lost frontis."

"Where?" cried the startled wife.

"In his lost frontis, and he can't be cured without trouble and a great deal of pains.—You see, his whole planetary system is deranged. Fustly, his vox populi is pressing on his advalorum; secondly, his cutacarpal cutaneous has swelled considerablly, if not more; thirdly, and lastly, his solar ribs are in a concussed state, and finally, 'he ain't got any money,' consequently he is bound to die."

HOW TO KEEP MEN AT HOME.

There would be fewer wretched marriages, fewer dissipated, degraded men, if women were taught to feel the angel duty which devolves upon them, to keep the wandering steps of those who are tempted so much more than they, in the paths of virtue and peace—to make them feel that in the busy world all is noise and confusion—that at home there is order and repose—that their eyes look brighter when they come—that the smile of welcome is ever ready to receive them, the books are ever ready to be laid aside to administer to the husband's pleasure; they would find amusement then at home, nor strive to seek it elsewhere. And not alone to the higher class of society, should this be taught—it should be a lesson instilled into the minds of all, high and low, rich and poor. Fewer heart-broken wives, weeping and scolding, would stand waiting at the doors of public houses to lead the unsteady steps of the drunken husbands home, if that home had offered a room as cheerful, a fire as bright, a welcome as friendly and cordial as at the tap room they frequent. Duty has seldom so strong a hold on a man as woman; they cannot and will not for duty's sake, remain in a dull, tedious or ill-managed, quarrelsome home, but leave it to find elsewhere the comfort and amusement which fails them there, and, when riot and revelry have done their work, the wives and sisters, who have done so little to make them otherwise, are pitied for bad husbands and brothers.

FALLING IN LOVE.

This "falling in love" is a singular thing. 'Tis what everybody laughs at, and what everybody does. 'Tis what grave and proper people frown and shake the head at, and incontinently run behind the door, crying, (pity such hypocrite should ever get anybody to love them well enough to hide away with them,) 'tis the beginning of sorrow and the beginning of joy; it is indirectly the means of all trouble in this world. Don't contradict. It is. Think awhile, and see if it is not so. In a world peopled by human beings, the element which lies at the foundation of life could perpetuate only delight; but in a world like ours, where to live is to suffer, and to love is to live and to cause life, what then? Is our proposition established?

All young persons are eager to become acquainted with love. Many grosser minds care only for passion; but generally there is a great deal of sentiment and refinement in the love of youth. It lacks depth, however; the first love is rarely the best love. It is but the pretty prelude, so charming and gay, that heralds the approach of the master passion of love. It may, to be sure, endure and deepen, and strengthen into the life's long love; but it is not often so. Sweet as are the songs of poets about "first love," there is but little truth in them, as the world can testify. The swelling and overhasty heart of youth, trembling with its desire to overflow into some other heart, is touched but slightly by some chance hand, and out goes its ready affection. For a white brow, for a pretty foot or hand, for a sparkling eye, a mouth, a winning voice, youth will go mad and do a thousand foolish things, the memory of which all haste is made to bury when middle-age is gained. But every one can know what are the motives and emotions which prompt him or her to seek a life-long union with a lover.

If to the inclination of fancy and the fervor of passion be added a conviction in desires and sympathies, the twain are one; if the love they feel for each other raises them nearer to God: if they feel that they can bear with each other's faults, and love each other still when heart and flesh fail; if their affections have folded about each other until they have clasped deeper than the moral frame which their eyes behold, and have fastened themselves firmly to the deathless spirit, there can be but little, very little danger that they are entering a path in which their bodies must march side by side until they reach the grave; while all the time their hearts go wider and wider asunder. God have mercy on all who thus comfortless are marching; and give clear sight, and a wise and pure heart to all who are yet to enter upon the conjugal journey.

A WOMAN'S PARADISE.

A roving adventurer who has hunted the elephant, the rhinoceros, the lion, the tiger and boa through the jungles of Asia, and the wild swamps and broad plains and boundless forests of Africa, writes home that he has found a people in the latter country, on the upper Zimbezi, that astonish him more than any other tribes that he has ever met with. They are intelligent and hospitable, "and are almost entirely governed by their women." Some of the tribes have female chiefs, and say that has been their custom from time immemorial. But where the supreme ruler is a man, the governing influence comes from the women. If you ask a man for anything, or about anything, he replies that he will see what his wife says about it; and as the wife says so must it be. Women vote on all political questions. The religious and judicial oaths also recognizes the supremacy of woman, as everybody swears "by my mother." When a man marries, he takes up his abode with his wife's people, and has to contribute handsomely towards the support of his mother-in-law, and to assume a highly respectful attitude—a sort of kneeling posture—in her presence. The girls of a family inherit the paternal property, and the sons have not only to earn their own living, but also to be responsible for the support of their unmarried sisters. On the whole, the Upper Zimbezi country is a sort of woman's paradise, and the very best country in the world for strong-minded women, and mothers-in-law to emigrate to.

HOW TO PROSPER IN BUSINESS.—In the first place, make up your mind to accomplish whatever you undertake; decide upon some particular employment, and persevere in it. All difficulties are overcome by diligence and assiduity.

Be not afraid to work with your hands, and diligently too. "A cat in gloves catches no mice." He who stays in the mill, grinds not he who comes and goes.

Attend to your business, never trust any one else. "A pot that belongs to too many is ill stirred and worse boiled."

Be frugal. "That which will not make a pot will make a pot-lid." "Save the pence, and the pounds will take care of themselves."

Be abstemious. "Who dainties love shall beggar prove."

Rise early. "The sleepy fox catches no poultry."

"Plow deep, while sluggards sleep, and you will have corn to sell and keep."

Treat every one with civility and respect. "Everything is gained, and nothing lost, by courtesy."

"Good manners insure success."

Never anticipate wealth from any other source but labor, especially never place dependence upon becoming the possessor of an inheritance. "He who waits for dead men's shoes may have to go a long time barefoot." "He who runs after a shadow hath a wearisome race."

Above all things, never despair. God is where he was. He helps those who truly trust in him.

AFFECTING STATEMENT.—The solemnity of the battle-field and the true nature of the work of war have an impressive exhibition in the following which we know to be literally true:—

A soldier who was in the battle of Bull Run, said that after the first fire of the enemy upon our troops, a great many men fell, wounded all around. And from many of them the cry went up, 'God have mercy on my soul.' So earnest was the cry, and so contagious that I found myself making almost unconscious to myself, the same prayer over and over again, as I was fighting, "God have mercy on my soul." He said that for two or three nights, after leaving home and arriving here, he could not sleep. Ringing through his ears, through all the hours of a wakeful night, was the impassioned, earnest cry, a cry which he could never forget, "God have mercy on my soul!" such a cry as none but men passing into eternity could utter.

PRETTY GOOD.—An old colored man, near Victoria, Texas, who was the only Baptist in the neighborhood, always "stuck up for his own faith," and was ready with a reason for it, although he was unable to read a word. This was the way he "put 'em down:"

"You kin read, now, keant you? Well, I s'pose you've read the Bible, hain't you?" "Yes." "You've read about John de Baptist, hain't you?" "Yes." "Well, you never read about "John de Methodist," did you. You see I has de Bible on my side den.

LONDON THE LARGEST CITY IN THE WORLD.—It is said that late investigations show that there is no longer any foundations for the pretence that the largest cities in the world are to be found in the Orient. No city, either in China or Japan, can vie in populousness with London; while in commerce, manufactures, and all that goes to make substantial importance the cities of Asia are far behind the great commercial centers of the enlightened world. Paris, indeed, comes nighest London in these and other respects; but she is, nevertheless, some distance behind the elder city. By the census just made the population of London is stated at 2,800,000, showing an increase within about six years of nearly 500,000 persons.

AN OLD toper being urged to drink the beverage prepared by God himself to nourish and invigorate his creatures, and beautify his footstool, indignantly replied,—No, water is dangerous—very. It drowns people—it gets into their chests—into their heads—water on the brain for instance. And then it makes that infernal steam what's allers blowing a fellow up. Water! no I'll drink none ont. Let him drink it that likes."

"JOHNNY," said a mother to her son, a little boy of nine years, "go and wash your face. I am ashamed to see you come to the table with such a dirty mouth."

"I did wash it, ma," and feeling his upper lip and looking grave he added "I think it must be a moustache coming, mother!"

MISCELLANEOUS.

MRS. WINSLOW'S

SOOTHING SYRUP.

Every mother should be prepared to act in the capacity of both nurse and physician to her children she can, if she will, discharge these duties much better than any one she can employ. If she does not, she ought to know that there is a Medicine prepared by an old nurse and female physician which has stood the test of many, many years, and is the most perfect thing on earth for children teething; it also cures Wind Colic, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, and is sure to regulate the bowels. We say to every mother, do not le your own prejudices, or the prejudices of others stand in the way of the relief that will be sure—yes, absolutely sure—to follow the use of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP certainly does, as the name implies, "soothe" the little sufferer into a quiet, natural sleep, from which it awakes invigorated and refreshed. And for the cure of diseases incident to the period of teething, such as Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Wind Colic, &c., we have never seen its equal.

We have always been, and still are, opposed to the practice of drugging infants. This article has no deleterious effects whatever, and from our own experience (we speak advisedly) we have every confidence in it, and can heartily recommend it to all mothers. Take our advice—use it—and you will as strongly recommend it to others as we have to you.

When we say that MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP acts like a charm, we do but reiterate the language of every person who ever used it for their children, for all diseases incident to the period of teething, such as Dysentery and Diarrhœa, Wind Colic and Cholera Infantum. It will produce quietude and rest, relieve all suffering, and the infant will awake invigorated and refreshed, and not with the dull and stupefying effects of preparations of opium.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the excruciating pain of cutting teeth? If so, go at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately—depend upon it; there is no mistake about it. There is not a mother on earth who has ever used it who will not tell you at once that it will regulate the bowels, and give rest to the mother and relief and health to the child, operating like magic. It is perfectly safe in all cases, and pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States.

During the thirty years of unprecedented and increasing popularity of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP, innumerable "CORDIALS" and other nostrums, prepared by pretended M.D.'s, have sprung up and lived but a mushroon existence, the SOOTHING SYRUP has been constantly increasing in popularity, and become a household word, and for the health of their children, by the use of her invaluable article.

THOUSANDS OF MOTHERS THANK
MRS. WINSLOW

PRICE 20 CENTS PER BOTTLE.

For sale by

THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St., N.Y

TIME, MONEY, AND LABOR SAVED,
BY USING
B. T. BABBITT'S
SUPERIOR FRENCH
CHEMICAL ERASIVE SOAP,

Made and improved by the ORIGINAL INVENTOR of the German and Austrian Chemical Erasive or Detersive Soap, of which the real and genuine article has, since its first introduction to the American public, been most favorably known, as the Best and Cheapest Washing Soap in the market, and with the present improvement, which is not known to any other manufacturer, we CHALLENGE THE WORLD to produce a better article.

1. One pound of it will accomplish as much as three pounds of any other soap.
2. But one quarter the time and labor are required to do the same amount of washing, as with the best of family soap.
3. It does not injure the most delicate fabric; will tend to set the colors, and wash cleaner than any other soap in use.
4. Clothes need no boiling, and but little rubbing with the hands, thus avoiding their wear upon the wash-board.
5. Paints, Grease, Tar, and stains of every description vanish as by magic, before its wonderful, searching, erasive powers.
6. It is invaluable to Machinists, Printers Painters, and all others using Inks, Oils, etc. for washing hands; it does not chap them (like other soaps,) but will cleanse and soften the skin.
7. It may be used in hard or soft water, and is adapted for use in all climates.

Put up in one pound bars, sixty bars in each Box.

For sale by the bar or box by

THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman Street.

MEDICAL.

THE BEST MEDICINES IN THE WORLD!!!

The following invaluable medicines may be obtained of

THOMAS HAMILTON, 48 Beekman St.

DR. CLARKE'S
VEGETABLE SHERRY-WINE BITTERS,

Are composed of Sarsaparilla, Dock-root, Rheubarb Thoroughwort, Dandelion, Prickly Ash, Bark, &c they should be taken not only in the Spring, but at all seasons of the year, as they operate directly on the liver, removing from it all coating of morbid matter, and restoring it to its normal action; also opening the bile ducts, causing the requisite flow of bile so essential to good health. Their influence upon the kidneys, also, is advantageously felt; at the same time they operate upon the blood, cleansing it from all impurity or taint of any kind. Humors of long standing are eradicated from the blood, thereby speedily curing jaundice, headache, weak stomach, sore eyes, nervousness, and other chronic diseases arising from impurity of the blood.

The palatableness of these bitters renders them agreeable to every one, and being composed entirely of vegetables, they may be used by all classes of people with safety.

Sold for the low price of 25 cents per pint bottle.

DR. CLARKE'S
SUGAR-COATED HERB PILLS.

These pills are made mostly from a valuable herb hat grows on the proprietor's farm.

Warranted to cure Bilious Stomach, Bilious Bowels, Bilious Colic, Bilious Fever, and all diseases which arise from a bilious state of the system viz, Jaundice, Headache, Heartburn, Sour Stomach Liver Complaint, Weak Stomach, Pain in the Stomach, Costiveness, Loss of Appetite, and a host, of diseases too numerous to mention, as their number is legion.

Warranted to cure diseases peculiar to the female sex

Warranted at all times safe and efficient.

Warranted for a gentle family physic not to have an equal in America, operating without pain.

Warranted not to contain calomel, aloes, gamboge colocynth, or other drastic poisonous drugs, which always do the system more hurt than good, and by their continued use are sure to cause a derangement of the liver, bring on costiveness, and its inevitable consequence, piles, and dyspepsia, and finally break down the constitution, and cause the victim to drag out a miserable existence. Touch not, taste not, handle not the wily poison. Your life is your own,—preserve it. Take a simple herb, sure in its effects, but safe and pleasant,—no wrenching pains, no ill effects, and made pleasant to take by a fine coat of sugar. Children love them, ladies admire them, fools and wise men cannot do without them, doctors prescribe them,—and every body takes them. Yes, every body; from the honest farmer and mechanic to the most learned philosopher. And why? Simply because they are good, excellently good; and will do you good.

PRICE, 25 CENTS PER BOX.

DR. CLARKE'S COUGH AND CROUP SYRUP.

It is the most wonderful, effective and extraordinary medicine for the lungs ever used by man. It is perfectly safe and pleasant to take, and gives relief immediately. Thousands have been cured by its use, and tens of thousands will be again. All who use it pronounce it to be the best lung remedy ever discovered. Common coughs and colds are dispelled by the use of only a few doses, and children can be cured of croup at once if taken in its first stage. Long standing diseases require perseverance, but a cure will be guaranteed. No medicine before ever possessed such excellent healing and curative power for the lungs. It seems, with almost magic power, to dispel the most severe cases of cough and throat ail.

Vocalists and public speakers should not fail to keep a bottle on hand at all times. A small quantity taken occassionally renders the voice beautifully clear and the lungs extremely strong. Words cannot fully express the great benefit to be derived from the use of the world-renowned remedy. Delay not, but procure a bottle at once. Use it if needed and if not, keep it till necessity requires its use, as all, sooner or later, are overtaken by some unpleasant affection of the lungs or throat.

PRICE, 25 CENTS PER BOTTLE.

BOOKS.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE ANGLO-AFRICAN MAGAZINE, BOUND.

PRICE.—In half Morocco $1,25; half Morocco, gilt edges, $1.50. Muslin, $1.00

CONTENTS:

EMBELLISHMENT.—Portrait of Alexander Dumas.
MUSIC.—By A. J. R. Connor.
Apology.
A Statistical View of the Colored Population of the United States, from 1790 to 1850.
African American Picture Gallery.—Anon.
American Caste and Common Schools,—by J. Holland Townsend.
A Review of Slavery and the Slave Trade,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
A Good Habit Recommended,—by Sarah M. Douglass.
A Chapter in the History of the African Slave Trade,—by Edward W. Blyden.
Anglo-Saxons and Anglo-Africans.—Anon.
A Word to Our People.
Blake: or the Huts of America,—by Martin R. Delany.
Books &c.
Civilization—Its Dependence on Physical Circumstances.
Colored American Patriots,—by Wm. C. Nell
Comets,—by M. R. Delany.
Citizenship—by James Mc'Cune Smith.
Claude Brindas De Salas,—Selected.
Communication from N. Y. Society for the Promotion of Education among Colored Children.
Chess.
Dumas,—Alexander.
Effects of Emancipation in Jamaica, by Robert Campbell.
Fragments of Thought,—by D. A. Payne.
Fancy Sketches,—Anonymous.
Gone to God—Poetry—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
Intellectual Culture—by Robert Gordon.
In the Constitution of Man there exists a Religious Element,—by Robt. Gordon.
Lines—Poetry—by Grace A. Mapps.
Mrs. Partington and Mrs. Freshington.—Anon
Our Greatest Want,—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
Our Duty in the Conflict,—by J. Holland Townsend.
On the Fourteenth Query of Thos. Jefferson Notes on Virginia.
On the Personality of the First Cause,—by Robt. Gordon.
Patrick Brown's First Love.
Poetry—Anonymous.
Selected Items.
Struggles for Freedom in Jamaica—by Robert Campbell.
The Attraction of Planets—by M. R. Delany.
The German Invasion, by James M'Cune Smith
Trifles, by Mary A. S Cary.
The Coming Man—Poetry—by Wm. J. Wilson.
The Educational Wants of the Free Colored People, by Martin H. Freeman.
Thomas L. Jinnings.
The Teacher and his Pupil—Poetry—by Wm J. Wilson.
Thoughts on Hayti, by James T. Holly.
The Successive Advances of Astronomy, by G. B. Vashon.
The Oberlin Wellington Rescue, by J. Mercer Langston.
The Shadows of Intemperance,—by James Fields.
The Dying Fugitive—Poetry—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
The Anglo-African and the African Slave Trade.
The Two Offers, by Frances Ellen Watkins.
The Re-opening of the Slave Trade—Anonymous.
The First Colored Convention.
The Self-Redeeming Power of the Colored Races of the World,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
The Policy that we should Pursue,—by J. Holland Townsend.
The Education of the Colored People,—by Amos Gerry Beman.
The Great Conflict requires Great Faith,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
The Outbreak in Virginia.
The Sentinel of Freedom—Poetry,—by J. Sella Martin.
The Nat Turner Insurrection.
The Execution of John Brown.
The Anglo-African Magazine for 1860.
The Watering Places.—Anonymous.

Orders should be addressed to
THOMAS HAMILTON,
48 Beekman street,
New York

PUBLICATIONS FOR SALE BY
THOMAS HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE ANGLO-AFRICAN MAGAZINE. Bound,—Price—In half Morocco, $1.25; half Morocco, gilt edges, $1.50; Muslin, $1.00. CONTENTS: Embellishments—Portrait of Alexander Dumas. Music, by A. J. R. Conner. Articles by Bishop D. A. Payne, James M'Cune Smith, M. D., Prof. Geo. B. Vashon, Dr. Martin, R. Delany, Mrs. Sarah M. Douglass, Prof. Robert Campbell, Prof. Wm J. Wilson, Rev. J. W. C. Pennington, D. D., Rev. J. Theo. Holly, Mrs. Frances Ellen Watkins Harper, Prof. M. H. Freeman, Rev. Edward W Blyden, Rev. Robert Gorden, Prof. Chas. L. Reason, Mrs M. A. Shadd Cary, Dr. James Fields, Rev. Amos Gerry Beman, Miss Grace A. Mapps Rev. J. Sella Martin, Wm. C. Nell, Esq. J. Mercer Langston, and J. Holland Townsend. Esq.

The Life of Captain John Brown
The Liberator of Kansas, and the Hero of Harper's Ferry. By James Redpath. An elegant 12mo. volume of 400 pages, illustrated and embellished with a superb Steel Portrait of the Glorious Old Man. Price $1.00.

My Bondage and My Freedom.
By Fredrick Douglass, One vol., 12 mo., 464 pp. Illustrated. Price $1.00, postage 22 cts.

Life of Jermain W. Loguen.
The great Underground Railroad King. Price $1.00.

The Martyrs and the Fugitive.
By the Rev. S H. Platt. A thrilling work on slavery and the slave trade, detailing the capture of a family in Africa by the Slave-dealers, their fearful journey to the coast, the horrors of the "middle passage," their sale in America, and subsequent martyrdom; the slavery of their son, his terrible sufferings and perilous escapes. Sent, postpaid, upon the receipt of 38 cts.

Twelve Years a Slave.
The Narrative of Solomon Northrup, a citizen of New York, kidnapped in Washington City in 1841 and rescued in 1853, from a cotton plantation near Red River, Louisiana. Seven Illustrations, 336 pp. 12mo. Price $1,00, postage paid.

Our National Charters.
For the Millions. Including—1. The Federal Constitution of 1787–9. 2. The Articles of Confederation, 1787. 3. The Declaration of Independence, 1776. 4. The Articles of Associatian 1775. With notes showing their bearing on salvery, aund the relative powers of the State and National Governments. Also a summary of Legal Opinions collected from the highest authorities, is prefixed to the Constitution. An Appendix contains extracts from State Constitutions and Bills of Rights; Ordinance of 1787, excluding Slavery from the North-west Territory: also, Sentiments of the Revolutionary Fathers, &c. By mail, postage prepaid, single copy, 15 cts.; four copies, 50 cts.; nine copies $1,00.

The American Slave-Code,
In Theory and Practice: Its Distinctive Features Shown by its Statutes, Judicial Decisions, and Illustrative Facts. 430 pp., 12mo. Price 75 cts postage paid.

Unconstitutionality of Slavery.
By Lysander Spooner. In paper, 291 pp., 8vo Price 75 cts., or postage paid 86 cts.

Review of Lysander Spooner's Essay on the Unconstitutionality of Slavery.
By Wendell Phillips. Price 25 cts. Postage 5 Cts.

The Revelations of a Slave Smuggler.
Being the Autobiography of Captain Richard Drake, an African trader for fifty years, from 1807 to 1857. The work is handsomely illustrated, with graphic representations of scenes as they actually occur on the slave ships and on shore. Illustration No. 1 is a large cut, 16x23, representing a slave market on the Coast of Africa. Illustration No. 2 represents a scene in the Hold of a Slaver (middle passage). Then there is a large plate, giving views of a slave vessel betwen decks, regulation slave-deck, regulation packing, &c. The work is handsomely printed—contains one hundred large 8vo. pages, and is published at a price which places it within the reach of the masses—viz: 25 cents a copy. When sent by mail the postage (six cents must be added.

The Nat Turner Insurrection.
A full and reliable account. Copies will be sent to any address on the receipt of five cents.

Uncle Tom's Cabin.
By Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe Two volumes in one. Price, $1,25.

The Kidnapped and Ransomed,
Being the personal recollections of Peter Still, and, his wife, Vina, after forty years of slavery by Mrs. Kate E. R. Pickard, with an introduction by Rev. S. J. May, Illustrated. 12mo. cloth, $1,25.

Gerrit Smith in Congress.
"Slavery has no right but to die!" A work of over 400 pages, containing all his speeches delivered in Congress; also, an accurate likeness. Price, only 80 cents per copy, and postage paid.

The Dream;
Or, the true history of Dea Giles's Distillery and Dea. Jones's Brewery. By George B. Cheever, D.D. Price per single copy 10 cents, $1 per doz. or $7 per hundred.

A Summer on the Carribbean Sea.
By J. Dennis Harris. With an introduction by Geo. William Curtis. Sent by mail on receipt of $1.

A Pilgrimage to my Motherland;
An account of a journey among the Egbas and Yorubas of Central Africa, in 1859-60. By Robert Campbell, one of the Commissioners of the Niger Valley Exploring Party; late in charge of the Scientific Department of the Institute for Colored Youth, Philadelphia; and member of the International Statistical Congress, London. Price, 63 cents. When sent by mail, the postage (10 cents) must be added.

Turner's (J. A.) Cotton Planter's Manual,
Being a compilation of facts from the best authorities on the culture of cotton, its natural history, chemical analysis, trade and consumption, and embracing a history of cotton and the cotton gin. Price, $1. Postage, 15 cents.

The Manual of the Wardrobe.
[illegible] large octavo pages, in paper, by Mrs. Pullan. Price, 25 cents. Sent, postpaid, upon receipt of the price. It comprises a thorough dissertation upon taste in dress, an explanation of the different kinds of stitches made in sewing, remarks upon the various kinds and qualities of fabrics used in the wardrobe, with complete directions for cutting and fitting all kinds of garments for women's and children's wear; the preparation of table, toilet and bed linen. Illustrated by nearly one hundred [illegible]

The Weekly Anglo-African.

"MAN MUST BE FREE!—IF NOT THROUGH LAW, WHY THEN ABOVE THE LAW."

VOL. I. NO. 10. NEW YORK, OCTOBER 5, 1861. PRICE FOUR CEN[illegible]

The Weekly Anglo-African.
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY SATURDAY,
BY ROBT. HAMILTON,
No. 48 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW YORK.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
Two Dollars per year, or Four Cents per copy, payable on delivery.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.
Six Cents a line for the first insertion, and Three Cents for each subsequent insertion.

Notices of Births, Marriages, Deaths, Public Meetings, &c., inserted for twenty-five Cents, provided they do not exceed five lines; if more than hat, Five Cents for each additional line.

All communications for the paper must be addressed ROBT HAMILTON,
48 Beekman st., New York.

Poetry.

WORK AND THINK.

Hammer, and tongs, and anvils ringing,
Waking echoes all day long,
In a deep-toned voice are singing
Thrifty Labor's iron song.
From a thousand fly wheels bounding,
From a thousand singing looms,
Night and day the notes are sounding
Through the misty fact'ry room.
Listen! workman, to their playing—
There's advance in every click;
Still they're singing—still they're saying,
"Whilst you labor, learn to think!"

Think what power lies within you,
For what triumphs ye are formed,
If, in aid of bone and sinew,
Hearts of emulation warmed.
Mighty Thought ye woo and cherish,
What shall hold your spirits down?
What shall make your high hope perish?
Why shall ye mind fortunes frown?
Do ye wish for profit, pleasure?
Thirst at Learning's fount to drink?
Crave ye honor, fame or treasure?
Ye the germs have— work and think!

Think! but not alone of living,
Like the horse from day to day;
Think! but not alone of giving
Health for pelf, or soul for pay;
Think! O, be machines no longer—
Engines mades of flesh and blood!
Think! 'twill make you fresher, stronger;
Link you to the great and good!
Thought exalts and lightens labor,
Thought forbids the soul to sink!
Self-respect and love of neighbor,
Mark the men who work—and think!

Think! and let the thought now nerve you;
Think of men who've gone before
Leaving lustrous names to serve you;
Yours the path they've plodded o'er;
Freedom fights and wins her charter
With the sword of thought—the pen!
Tyranny can find no quarter
In the ranks of thinking men.
Think! for thought's a word of power—
Power to make oppression shrink;
Grasp ye then the precious dower!
Poise it—wield it—work and think!

Hold your hands up, toiling brothers;
'Mongst us be it ne'er forgot
Labor for ourselves and others,
Is for man a noble lot.
Nobler far, and holier, higher,
Than vain luxury can claim,
If but zeal and worth inspire,
And true greatness be our aim,
Power to compass this is given—
Power that forms the strongest link
'Twixt an upright man and Heaven,
His noblest power—the power to think!

THE MASTER KEY TO OUR PROSPERITY.

Mr. Editor,

The wants of the black man are generally summed up in a few words; each and every one among us admitting the fact.

The following comprise our most essential wants:—Union, Wealth, Education, Force of Character, Incentive and Encouragement. The method of acquiring these necessities are by our different leading advisers presented in as many different modes. Who is right or wrong remains to be seen, time will decide all.

I claim that one method of attaining the above requirements, is the sustenance of a journal through which our progress, wants, hopes, and all general information connected with the black man's interest can be discussed, reproduced, conveyed or circulated.

It creates an anxiety for education and all that stimulates to a moral and religious elevation. It strengthens the feeble intellect and displays the radiant light of the strong and cultivated, which reflection is now lost upon a weak and comparatively benighted race.

While it induces many to seek popularity by contributing to its columns, it develops that hidden talent which, by encouragement, is perfected, and gradually assumes that position that man's duty to his God and fellow man is his prerogative and undoubted obligation; it produces that incentive which gives force to character, a desire for competition in the several branches of industry and mental improvement; it furnishes argument to combat the many slanders cast into our teeth by enemies; to substantiate our manhood with proof, which we have at hand to satisfy those who deny the originality of our ideas, our capability of uniting and sustaining any measure productive of good, independent of their (the white man's) assistance; it raises us in our own estimation, as we by degrees feel the firmness of the foundation upon which our sacred cause is building.

Sir, the disseminating of practical views for contemplation or adoption has the tendency to produce that union we much need, and have heretofore sought for in vain. "Union is strength." The concentration of means. It increases and consolidates our advisers. The Bible tells us that "in the multitude of counsellors there is wisdom." Then with a faithful adherence to the cause we have espoused, let us cling to the only key that will effectually unlock the treasure our necessities demand.

The sustenance of a journal offering the inducements the "Weekly Anglo-African" presents should be our determined, united, and inseparable action. Let it become the people's text book—the people's palladium.

Let the Ministers of the Gospel recommend it with all fervor, and endeavor by their commanding influence and spirit of Christian love to impress it upon their church and congregation; point them to that channel which leads to eminence, respect, and a national recognition, the key to which lies in the prosperity and sustenance of the glorious "Anglo-African.".

The Rev. Mr. Gloucester has initiated a very commendable project for the immediate wants of the paper, and whose exemplary generosity I hope will be followed, for the paper must live beyond to-day. Let us calculate for the future also. When the dark days of this unhappy and sin-cursed Republic shall have past and our great boon shall have been accomplished, may we in gratitude recall the names of Hamilton, Gloucester, and others whose steadfast, self-sacrificing efforts shall become our household words, their portraits our household gods.

R. H. V.

LETTER FROM NEW HAVEN.

Dear Anglo,

I am deeply interested in and highly gratified with the re-appearance of the much-loved "Anglo-African.' My delayed congratulation is no proof of disinterestedness on my part, for I hoped ere this to have some interesting matter for publication, respecting religious affairs in this vicinity.

Religious interest seems in every quarter here to be at a stand still, for reasons not obvious to me; therefore, as the old adage has it "the darkest time is just before day," it only remains for me to anxiously look, earnestly hope, and ardently pray for the radiance of the heavenly star to descend through the thickened and benighted gloom of coldness that seems to cluster around the entire land, and cause each heart to realize and once more acknowledge the fact that

"His presence disperses the gloom,
And makes all within me rejoice."

Yet amid these discouragements I am pleased to report the organization of a Sabbath School. As there was heretofore none connected with our church, I organized one on Sabbath, August 18th, with 11 scholars and 3 teachers which since has increased every Sabbath and numbers now 31. The only obstacle now is to procure an efficient library which I am daily striving to and hope soon will accomplish.

I think if there was a little more punctuality in the distribution of the "Anglo" here, a great many more copies might be disposed of—for even now while I write on Tuesday, 24th, up to 1 o'clock, the last number of that paper has not reached me nor several others who are complaining much of the neglect, and as I often take an extra copy to send to my friends in Nova Scotia, I feel quite disappointed.

The weather here is lovely, the beautiful change taking place in the leaves on the trees betokens the approach of cold winter.

Joseph G. Smith,

New Haven, Conn., Sept. 24, 1861.

LETTER FROM NEWARK.

Newark, N.J., Sept. 24, 1861.

Mr. Editor,

The Rev. John Thompson, pastor of the Academy St. M.E. Church, who has been quite ill for some weeks with a spinal complaint, left here for Sag Harbor, L. I., on Thursday last, with the expectation of regaining his health and returning to the resumption of his pastoral duties, in four weeks. He is very much esteemed by his large flock and has their sincere sympathies. I do not know who is to supply his pulpit in his absence.

The Rt. Rev. Peter Ross, Superintendent of the 2d District of the Zion M.E. Church, preached in the Academy St. Church on Sabbath afternoon and evening—text, afternoon, Acts 13 chap. 18 verse—evening, 2d Cor. 5 chap. 1 verse. Both discourses were excellent and well appreciated by those who listened, and on Monday evening 23d inst., while visiting Mrs. S. Williams' house, he was agreeably surprised by a host of ladies and gents coming in and presenting him with a purse of $5. How opportune! Mr. Ross is en-route from Pennsylvania to Providence, R. I., where he resides. He was well pleased with his visit, having a sister and daughter here, who with his legion of friends, vied with each other in making his time pass most agreeably.

The infant son of Mr. Wm. and Mrs. Mary M. Neal, aged about eight months, died on Saturday evening, and was buried yesterday. The general health of our people in the city and vicinity is pretty good.

Mr. S. Spencer, from Port-au-Prince, on government business in Canada, made his friends a flying visit last week. He looks and feels well, and brought news of the convalescence of the Rev. J. T. Holly and others of the New Haven Colony, in Hayti.

'Rec. in Cur.

COLORED SOLDIERS.

Mr. Editor,

I saw by your last number an article taken from the Washington correspondent of the Cincinnati "Inquirer," respecting colored troops of Canada and elsewhere holding themselves in readiness to be accepted by the United States Government.

Permit me to say that this subject should be investigated thoroughly by colored men of sound sense, for be it remembered that this government has played so ignoble a part in the execution of the fugitive slave law, and has returned (and has yet on hand) so many fugitives to return by military force that the slaves in the South are now enraged at the doing of the North towards themselves, and it is probable that the South will ere long bring upwards of a half million of them into the field. Then, and only then will our services be accepted. The colored man who would accept the job of fighting the slaves is worthy of death.

J. G. S.

New Haven, Con., Sept. 24, 1861.

IRA ALDRIDGE, THE GREATEST LIVING TRAGEDIAN.

As Mr. Aldridge is now astonishing and delighting all Europe with his wonderful performances, we reprint for the benefit of our readers a brief sketch of his life, prepared by an early and talented personal friend of his, and published in the Anglo-African Magazine for January, 1860.

Nearly half a century ago—in 1816–17, to wit—there sailed from the port of New York, in one of the Liverpool packets, as steward thereof, a tall black man named Brown. He belonged to a class which, at that time and for years afterwards, even to the present day, occupied a respectable and responsible position. The steward was then, next to the captain, the most important personage in the ship. Dressed in his brilliant-colored morning-gown and red slippers, he was wont to receive passengers with a "stately courtesy," which was duly reciprocated by those who went down to the sea in ships. The stewards of the different lines of packets vied with each other in their style on board ship, and in their private houses. They were all colored, and sailed to every port, at home or abroad—Liverpool, Canton, Bremen, Charleston, New Orleans, Savannah, &c. There are yet among us, in a flourishing old age, some of the stewards of that good old time: Henry Scott, the retired merchant, whose name is an anologue for probity, and George Lawrence, Senior, and of a somewhat later day, Benjamin Fisher, the "bluff salt" who reigns in the Vanderbilt "skimmer of the seas." And of those who have shipped on their last voyage, Bowser, Mack, Burchell, Portee, Harry Brown, Moses Sheppard, George B. Williams, and a hundred others;

"Quæ regio terris ?"

What part of the earth does not bear witness to their presence?

In 1816–17, Mr. Brown, steward of a Liverpool liner, gave up following the sea, and hired a house on the north side of Thomas street, (nearly opposite that since made famous by the Helen Jewett tragedy,) and fitted up a tea-garden in the rear of the lot. In the evening he made the garden attractive by vocal and instrumental music. His brother stewards and their wives, and the colored population generally, gave him a full share of patronage. Among his artistes were Miss Ann Johnson, since Mrs. Allen, the mother of an excellent cantatrice of the present time, and James Hewlett. These evening entertainments were not dry affairs; brandy and gin-toddies, wine-negus, porter and strong ale, with cakes and meats, enabled the audience to gratify several senses and appetites at the same time. James Hewlett was quite a character in his line; a very fine singer for the times, he added by degrees, dramatic exhibitions to the entertainments. His off nights were invariably spent in the gallery of the old Park Theater, and spent not in vain, for he soon became celebrated for the talent and versatility which enabled him—anticipating Mathews, we believe—to perform several widely differing characters, very perfectly, at one exhibition. He followed the fashionable world to Saratoga, and in the height of the season, when rival singers would scatter their paper announcements through the hotels, there would appear, thickly scattered around, tastily printed on white satin:

"JAMES HEWLETT,
Vocalist, and Shakespeare's proud
Representative
Will give an entertainment
IN SINGING AND ACTING
In the Large Room of the United States
Hotel.
&c., &c., &c.

Hewlett was a mulatto, of middle height, with sharp features, and a well-set, coal-black eye. He was a native of one of the West India Islands.

So great was Mr. Brown's success with his tea-garden, that in four or five years he built a theater in Mercer street, above Prince, then, of course, well up-town. The edifice was of wood, roughly built, and having capacity for an audience of three or four hundred. The enterprise was quite successful, the audience being composed largely of laughter-loving young clerks, who came to see the sport, but invariably paid their quarter for admission.

The father of Ira Aldridge was Daniel Aldridge, a straw-vender in the city of New York. Mr. Aldridge was a strict member, in high standing, in "Old Zion." We well remember the old gentleman—short in stature, with a tall, broad-brimmed white hat, mounted on a high cart filled with his merchandise, and dolefully crying STRAW, S-T-R-A-W! through the streets, especially on Saturday nights. He was a native of Baltimore, and his wife (Ira's mother,) of North Carolina; so that the great actor himself hails from the region which has produced so many distinguished colored Americans.

Ira Aldridge was born in Chapel street, (now West Broadway) in the city of New York, in 1808.* At the time of the existence of Brown's theater, he attended the African school in Mulberry street, on the site now occupied by colored Ward School No. 1. He was among the "big boys" of our schoolmates, yet we do not recollect, nor do others of his schoolmates, that he especially distinguished himself in any direction. We have a dim remembrance of a great fight in which he was engaged with one Joe Prince, on the spot until recently occupied by the New York Gas Light Co., at the corner of Collect and Hester streets, when one—but which of them, we cannot say—got terribly whipped. His attainments were about the average of the scholars in attendance upon the school, then taught by the late Mr. Charles C. Andrews.

It was a peculiar talent, constantly exercised by that teacher, to find out what a boy was good for—in other words, the bent of the child; and having once ascertained this, he would spare no pains to cultivate such bent with untiring industry. Mr. Andrews felt, and often said, that the character of the race was in the keeping of his scholars, and that they must exert themselves to maintain it. "Ira," in the words of his elder brother, Mr. Joshua Aldridge, now resident in New York city, "being a somewhat intelligent lad, was held in considerable favor for his quickness and attention to his studies, both by his teacher and schoolmates. He lost his mother while yet a child, and being of a roving disposition, only remained at home a few months after his father's second marriage; he shipped on a brig, and sailed South. While in a port in North Carolina, he attracted the attention of a slave dealer, who offered the captain five hundred dollars for him; but the captain, who happened to be a Christian man, refused the offer, saying that "the boy had trusted to his honor to carry him back to New York." Shortly after his return home, Brown's theatre was opened, and Ira, with his brother Joshua, took to the stage; but their father finding it out, took them away from the theatre. Some time after this, Ira again shipped, this time as steward in a vessel bound for Liverpool. It happened that Mr. James Wallack, the actor, was passenger in the same vessel. Mr. Wallack engaged Ira as his personal attendant while on the passage, and on the arrival of the vessel in Liverpool, Aldridge left her with that view. He has not since (this was in 1826–7) returned to the United States." In 1828–9 he was engaged in a subordinate capacity in Astley's Amphitheater, London.

In September, 1832, while in Liverpool, the writer of this sketch happened to put up at the same hotel with the wife of Mr. Aldridge. She was an English lady, the daughter of a late member of Parliament, and had made a run-away match with the African Roscius. She was a lady of fine accomplishments and great conversational talent. She showed me a bust, in plaster of her husband, and very anxiously inquired whether he had the true negro features, seeming especially desirous that he should be perfect in this way. Mr. Aldridge himself was absent on a professional tour, and I did not have the pleasure of meeting him until nearly two years after in the city of Glasgow, where he fulfilled an engagement at the Royal Theatre, then under the management of the Mr. Alexander.

The engagement was a very successful one, the actor drawing large audiences and winning golden opinions from the press. The waters, however, did not run smoothly behind the scenes. Mr. Alexander, a tall, stalwart, coarse man, of great energy and perseverance, had won success in the management by alternately cuddling and scolding his audience in the midst of his own performance, and by bullying his actors behind the curtain. No small portion of the attraction to young gentlemen in the pit arose from his habit of suddenly breaking off in the midst of Rob Roy, with:—"Ye Gods in the gallery must na licht your pipes at the gas-jets, and let your brent papers fall on the gentlemen below"—or as suddenly leaving the boiling cauldron and coming down to the foot-lights with:—"Madam, will you please stop that wean's crying!"

One night, between the acts, Mr. Alexander, in a towering passion at some mishap, turned to vent his rage on Mr. Aldridge; the latter firmly resented; Alexander uplifted sword in hand, sprang towards Aldridge, the latter, with a similar weapon quietly disarmed the manager, without stirring a footstep; grasping his sword again he rushed on shrieking—"I'll kill him, don't hold me back"—the latter being addressed to two female supes, who easily led him away.

The good people of Glasgow, at the time we write of, were especially "down upon" two institutions—Popery and the theatre; and a man of repute—which meant a God-fearing, church-going individual—was certain of losing caste if he patronized, or even ventured within the precincts, of either. Anti-slavery men, who were for the most part rigid dissenters, entertained these prejudices in the highest degree. The Secretary of the Glasgow Emancipation Society, the late John Murray, whose distinguished friendship I had the honor to enjoy, was so thorough in his anti-popery and anti-theater views, that it was with some reluctance, one Saturday morning, that I mentioned to him that my old schoolmate, Ira Aldridge, would perform that night at the Royal Theater. To my surprise and delight, he at once proposed to go, which we did. It was his first and only visit to a theater. He was "carried away" by the acting of Mr. Aldridge, insisted on an introduction, and invited us to breakfast next morning. The "reunion" was a most pleasant one. When we left, and walked down Sauchiehall Street to the coach, (Mr. Aldridge was obliged to leave that morning to fulfill an engagement at Edinburg,) Aldridge grasped my arm, and his large, lamping eyes filling with tears as he exclaimed, "Oh, God, what unexpected treatment to a poor outcast actor!"

Mr. Aldridge had not yet ventured on the London boards, although he had constant engagements in the provinces, and had received an offer from a Metropolitan manager. He was devoted to his profession, and determined to give several years of hard study and constant practice, before he risked his reputation, and that of his race, to the ordeal of City criticism. A few years after, feeling that he might make the venture, he accepted an engagement in London, which drew out the following:

[From the London Spectator, October 13th 1835.]*

"The African Roscius (in 1834.)

Mr. Aldridge, a native of Senegal, appeared as Othello, at Covent Garden Theater, on Wednesday. His person is tall and well-formed, and his action free-flowing and graceful; his face is not disagreeable, though, we have seen better looking Africans, but is not susceptible of much variety of expression. His voice is rich, melodious and sonorous withal, and in passages of tenderness its tone had great sweetness. It resembles Macready's, but has more volume. Indeed, the acting altogether—though with due intervals—reminded us of that great tragedian. His deportment is manly, and occasionally dignified; he moves and speaks with deliberation and self-possession. He evinced a great deal of feeling and nature in his performance; these, indeed, were its redeeming qualities; but they could not reconcile us to its numerous and glaring defects. Its beauties, however, surprised us more than its faults."

"An African is no more qualified, &c. In one particular alone, we might expect a native African to be better qualified by nature to personate a character of his own clime and complexion, that is, in having the fiery temperament of these children of the sun. But herein Mr. Aldridge possesses no advantage; he is a remarkable exception to the general rule, being on the contrary tame and larmoyant. So that in fact he is without the natural qualifications which are essential to the verisimilitude of the character. The swarthy actor is not new to the stage; he has played at several provincial theaters, and in some of the minor houses of London. His declamation is not only ineffective, but faulty. Mr. Aldridge's grief is querulous and lachrimose, and his pathos wining. In the most violent bursts of passion he was deficient in energy and power; though in depicting the struggles of mental agony and suppressed emotion he was vigorous and natural. The range of characters in which Mr. Aldridge can appear must necessarily be very limited, we therefore expect his acting to be the more perfect. 'He has no genius, but is not without talent.'',

Such was Mr. Aldridge in 1834. Per contra, let us look at the same Ira Aldridge, the colored tragedian, in 1858. (See "Anglo-African Magazine," Vol. I., p. 69.)

Here is a splendid example, worthy the emulation of all our colored youth. See the contrast. In 1834, Mr. Aldridge is pronounced by a competent London critic to be one who "has no genius, but is not without talent," and in 1858 he is pronounced the first of living tragedians, producing effects only equalled by the wonderful Rachel, in her best role. Let young Anglo-Africans, when they feel the weight and the manifest nature of the barrier in their way to eminence, remember that, in 1858, the first living tragedian in the world was Ira Aldridge, an American black man, who was once a pupil in Colored School No. 1, Mulberry St., New York City.

We say this as a splendid example, for the reason that the severe criticism of the London paper, in 1834, falling upon him when he had reckoned himself fit for the London stage so far from discouraging, only acted as a stimulant to Mr. Aldridge, and drove him to a more severe course of dramatic study, which, after twenty years of persevering assiduity, placed him on that pinnacle of fame, to attain which he had started out. What greater difficulties can there be in the way of any of our young men?

In his up-hill struggle after eminence, Mr. Aldridge met the warmest encouragement from the Irish people. Some of his best friends are among the middle and higher classes in Dublin and Belfast, who urged him constantly to aim at the highest excellence; and among the common people he has hosts of friends and supporters, who cheer him on, as only Irishmen can cheer. When we look to-day at the sentiments of Mitchel, Meagher, and O'Conor, on the one hand, and at the chronic hate with which the Irish masses in America act out such sentiments towards the colored man in America, we are led to alter the celebrated line and exclaim—"Qui trans mare currunt coelum et animam mutant." *

"At Belfast, in Ireland, Mr. Aldridge played Othello, for ten days, to the Iago of the younger Kean, and also Orozembo to the same artist's Alvan. On the Continent he appeared in Amsterdam, Brussels, Berlin, Breslau, Vienna, Pesth, Konigsberg, Dantrice, the Hague, Berne, Frankfort-on-the-Main, Dresden, Cracow, Gotha, and other cities, personating characters of every style and nationality. In most of these cities he received substantial tokens of approbation. The King of Prussia, at Berlin, wrote him an autograph letter, accompanying the first-class medal of Art and Science. The Emperor of Austria conferred on him the Grand Cross of Leopold; and at Berne he received the medal of merit in the shape of a Maltese Cross. In Germany, Aldridge was looked on as performing his Shakspearian characters with marked ability; but in England he has not often appeared in any of Shakspeare's plays, except Othello and the Merchant of Venice. In Zanga, Orozembo, Zarambo, Rolla, Hugo (Gumbo?) in the Padlock, and other characters, the physiognomy of which suits his color, he is thought to display rare excellence. He is also a good comedian. After returning from his continental tour, Aldridge appeared at Covent Garden, in 1857; and after an engagement at the Britannia, was about to visit Sweden, whither he had been invited by King Oscar." (New American Encyclopedia, Vol. I., p. 805.)

Mr. Aldridge is so nearly a pure negro, that there is probably not one thirty-second portion of white blood in his veins. His complexion is black, and yet of that shade through which the red blood may be seen glowing beneath. His hair is woolly. His features, of that negroed type which we see in the Egyptian Sphynxes, are well represented in the plate accompanying this number. He is above the middle height, athletic, and of noble presence. Of the British actors, he may be classed with Garrick, in that it is hard to say whether he excels most in tragedy or comedy. His triumphs on the Continent are the greater from the fact that he used the English language in the various stages, whilst his audiences were French, German, Russian or Norse. He reached eye and ear and heart by something higher than pantomime, inasmuch as the tones of the voice swept the heart-strings with their resistless magic. It was the human appealing to the human, through the universal language of passion which accomplished these highest triumphs of art.

With Dumas, the father, first of living novelists, and Dumas the son, first of living dramatists, and Ira Aldridge, the first of living actors, who will have the hardihood to deny that the negro, in the middle of the nineteenth century, is fully entitled to the first place in the Temple of Art?

PARSON SURELY'S EXPERIMENT.

A SKETCH FOR WEATHER GRUMBLERS.

The small parish at Fallowdale had been for some time without a pastor. The members were nearly all farmers, and they did not have much money to bestow upon the support of a clergyman; yet they were willing to pay for anything that could promise them any due return of good. In course of time, it happened that the Rev. Abraham Surely visited Fallowdale, and as a Sabbath passed during his sojourn, he held a meeting in the small church. The people were pleased with his preaching, and some of them proposed inviting him to remain with them, and take charge of their spiritual welfare.

Upon the merits of this proposition there was a long discussion. Parson Surely had signified his willingness to take a permanent residence at Fallowdale, but the members of the parish could not so readily agree to hire him.

"I don't see the use of hiring a parson," said Mr. Sharp, an old farmer of the place. "He can do us no good. A parson can't learn me anything."

To this it was answered, that stated religious meetings would be of great benefit to some of the younger people, and also a source of good to all.

"I don't know about that. I've heard tell of a parson that could pray for rain, and have it come at any time. Now, if we could hit upon such a parson as that, I would go in for hiring him."

This opened a new idea to the unsophisticated minds of Fallowdale. The farmers often suffered from long droughts, and after arguing a while longer, they agreed to hire Parson Surely, on the condition that he should give them rain whenever they wished for it, and on the other hand, that he would also give them fair weather when required. Deacons Smith and Townsend were deputised to make this arrangement known to the parson, and the people remained in the church while the messengers went upon their errand.

When the deacons returned, Mr. Surely accompanied them. He smiled as he entered the church, and with a bow he saluted the people there assembled.

"Well, my friends," he said, as he ascended the platform in front of the desk, "I have heard your request to me, and, strange as it may appear, I have come to [illegible] your proposal; but I do it only [illegible] condition, and that is, that [illegible] for a change of weather [illegible] mous."

This appeared very [illegible] every member of the parish had a [illegible] terest in the farming business, [illegible] long it was arranged that Mr. [illegible] should become the pastor, and that he should give the people rain when they wanted it.

When Mr. Surely returned to his lodgings his wife was utterly astounded on hearing the nature of the contract her husband had entered into; but the pastor smiled and bade her wait for the result.

"But you know you cannot make it rain," persisted Mrs. Surely, "and you know, too, that the farmers here will be wanting rain very often when there is none for them. You will be disgraced."

"I will learn them a lesson," returned the pastor.

"Ay, that you cannot be as good as your word; and when you have learned it to them they will turn you off."

"We shall see," was Mr. Surely's reply, and he took up a book and commenced reading.

This was a signal for the wife to desist from further conversation on the subject, and she obeyed.

Time flew on, and the hot days of midsummer were at hand. For three weeks it had not rained, and the young corn was beginning to curl up beneath the effects of the drought. In this extremity the people bethought themselves of the promise of their pastor, and hastened to him.

"Come," said Sharp, whose hilly farm was suffering severely, "we want rain. You remember your promise."

"Certainly," returned Mr. Surely. "If you will call for a meeting of the members of the parish, I will be with them this evening."

With this the applicants were perfectly satisfied, and forthwith they hastened to call the flock together.

"Now, you'll see the hour of your disgrace," said Mrs. Surely, after the visitors had gone. "Oh, I am sorry you ever undertook to deceive them so."

"I did not deceive them."

"Yes, you surely did."

"We shall see."

"So we shall see," added the lady.

The hour of the meeting came round, and Parson Surely met his people at the church. They were all there, some anxious, the remainder curious.

"Now, my friends," said the pastor, arising upon the platform, "I have come to hear your request. What is it?"

"We want rain," bluntly spoke Farmer Sharp; "and you know you promised to give it to us."

"Ay—rain—rain," repeated half a dozen voices.

"Very well. Now, when do you want to have it?"

"To-night. Let it rain all night long," said Sharp, to which several others immediately assented.

"No, no, not to-night," cried deacon Smith. "I have six or seven tons of well-made hay in the field, and I would not have it wet for anything."

"So I have hay out," added Mr. Peck.—"We won't have it rain to-night."

"Then let it be to-morrow."

"It will take me all day to-morrow to get my hay in," said Smith.

Thus the objections came up for the two succeeding days, and at length, by way of compromise, Mr. Sharp proposed that they should have rain in just four days.

"For," said he, "by that time, all the hay which is now cut can be got in, and we need not cut any—"

"Stop, stop," uttered Mrs. Sharp, pulling her worthy husband by the sleeve. "That is the day we have set to go Snowhill. It mustn't rain then."

This was law for Mr. Sharp, so he proposed that the rain should come in one week and then sat down.

But this would not do. "If we can't have rain before then, we'd better not have it at all," said they.

In short, the meeting resulted in just no conclusion at all, for the good people found it utterly impossible to agree upon a time when it should rain.

"Until you can make up your minds on this point," said the pastor, as he was about leaving the church, "we must all trust in the Lord." And after this the people followed him from the church.

Both Deacon Smith and Mr. Peck got their hay safely in, but on the very day Mr. Sharp was to have started for Snowhill, it began to rain in good earnest. Mr. Sharp lost his visit, but he met the disappointment with good grace, for his crops smiled at the rain.

Ere another month had passed by, another meeting was called for a petition for rain, but with the same result as before. Many of the people had their muck to [illegible] and rain would prevent them. [illegible] wanted it immediately—some in [illegible] in two, and some in three days, while other parishioners wanted to put it off longer. So Mr. Surely had no occasion to call for rain.

---

* The New American Encyclopedia states: Art. "Ira Aldridge or Roscius, the real name of whom was said to be Hewlett, is a mulatto, . . . born in a village called Bellair, about 1810; was apprenticed to a ship carpenter, . . . and from association with the German population, which is very large on the western shore of Maryland, learned the German language." Of these six statements, not one is true! The writer evidently confounds James Hewlett with Ira Aldridge.

* We may be mistaken in the year; the paragraph is copied from the files of the "N. Y. American" in the N. Y. Historical Society's Library, and the year is left out of our copy.

* "They who cross the ocean change both their skies and their minds." Mr. Jeremiah Powers, at the O'Conor indignation meeting the other night, gave strong evidence to show that this change of mind will not be permanent; he said, the "blackest kind of men in New York are securing beautiful white Irish wives" &c.

One year rolled by, and up to that time the people of Fallowdale had never once been able to agree upon the exact kind of weather they would have, and the result was that they began to open their eyes to the fact that this world would be a strange place if its inhabitants should govern it.

On the last Sabbath in the first year of Mr. Surely's settlement at Fallowdale, he offered to break up his connection with the parish; but the people would not listen to it. They have become attached to him and the meeting, and they wished him to stay.

"But I can no longer rest under our former contract with regard to the weather," said the pastor.

"Nor do we wish you to," returned Sharp. "Only preach to us, and teach us and our children how to live, and help us to be social, contented and happy."

"And," added the pastor, while a tear of pride stood in his eye, as he looked for an instant into the face of his now happy wife, "all things above our proper sphere we will leave with God, for 'He doeth all things well.'"

The Weekly Anglo-African.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 5, 1861.

☞ Advertisements for this paper must be accompanied by the cash.

☞ Copies of this paper can be purchased of the news-dealers everywhere.

A NOBLE PROPOSITION.

ROBERT HAMILTON Esq.,

Dear Sir:—I congratulate you at the appearance once more of the Anglo-African, —a paper that gained, for the time it existed, more prestige than any other that had preceded it.

Now sir, the glorious question is, "Shall it live? I call it glorious, from the immense importance of the hour that is now upon us.

It will live if we bring our patriotism, our love for the truth, not to a boiling, but a moderate heat. Let each brother and sister, father and child, do what they can—take stock in it at a fair premium. The premium to be paid in Hallelujahs when its work as a Journal for Freedom is over.

Sir, I propose to unite with some in investing Five Dollars to begin with; what will others answer? I propose no plan upon which it is to be paid, but leave that to your better judgment—but I suppose you need the money as soon as you can get it. I therefore pay immediately. Now who will be the next customer.—if not for five, for four—for three—for two—for one! for fifty cents? Keep in remembrance, friends, that this stock pays glorious in premiums, however small be the investment. Yet you must still remember, that greater the investment, more glorious the premium!

Now sir, I believe I have said enough; perhaps more than enough—for, after all, all that is requisite is but for the people to know your need, and they are ready to nobly respond.

Yours in behalf of the good cause.
J. N. GLOUCESTER.

The following are responses to the above proposition, including Mr. Gloucester's subscription:

J. N. Gloucester,	$5
H. Highland Garnet,	1
Henry M. Wilson,	1
Ezekiel H. Dias,	1
"A Friend,"	1
Robert H. Vantine,	1

LET US DRILL!

If the Government sees fit to refuse the enrollment of black soldiers, that is no reason why black men shall refrain from organizing themselves into military companies for purposes of drill. "In time of peace prepare for war" is sound doctrine: how much sounder, nay necessary, the policy "in times of war prepare for fighting!"

Our mutual relations to the country at large, and to ourselves especially, enforce upon us the duty of becoming familiar with soldierly exercises.

It is pride rather than prejudice which shuts colored men from the military ranks. The white men of the North believe themselves able to whip and subjugate the white men of the South. With numbers, money, arms and provisions in their favor, they look upon it as a confession of weakness if they call black men to their aid. We must not forget that this privilege to fight in their ranks is almost the only one which they now refuse us. By giving passports to black men the present Administration admits our citizenship: by employing us in the Custom House in this city in clerical positions, this Administration is in advance of any of its predecessors. Two steps in advance is quite as much as we can reasonably expect from a Cabinet composed of men all of them born in slaveholding States and brought up in slaveholding times. Our expectation of all rights should not shut our eyes to the admission of some rights.

We can see the coming necessity for black soldiers and officers. Within the first hundred miles that they march due South from Washington, the commanders of our armies will see it also. They will have a hundred thousand slaves to control, and will not have white men enough to spare for the controling of them. The question as to what they shall do with "contrabands," already embarrasses the Government. This question must grow in importance and must be met. The wicked proposition of one or two interested white men, to transport them out of the country, is hardly less infamous than the ferocious purpose of some slaveholders to butcher them. The proposition stinks in the nostrils of God who has other purposes in view for colored citizens of these United States. The man who murdered "the life" of glorious old "John Brown" after his execution in Virginia, is not quite strong enough to consign to a living grave two or three millions of emancipated colored Americans, even with the assistance of the American Secretary of State.

In either event, whether the Federal Government by emancipation shall conquer the South, or whether the Federal Government by withholding emancipation shall be conquered by the South and forged to submit to secession—in either event there will be a great and pressing need for colored men well drilled in military tactics, and accustomed to military organization.

In addition to such reasons which concern our relations to the whites, there are reasons of equal force arising from our relations to each other which urge the necessity of our becoming acquainted with arms and military tactics.

Such drill from its very nature prepares us for aggressive movements. We have hitherto been simply acting on the defensive—the prey of individual or class whom interest or hate or policy might urge to pounce upon us. Such drill will add to our carriage and demeanor, take away the slouchy slip-shod step too frequent among our young men, and replace it by the firm self-confident, self-reliant tread of the soldier-citizen. Such drill by forming our young men into companies will cement a new union among them, and teach them these lessons of mutual respect and relative subordination so greatly needed among us. Ten such companies, amounting to about one thousand men, with black field and company officers, marching down Broadway, at the date of these presents would send a thrill through the country such as would elevate us in our own, and also in public opinion to a height we have never won before.

So let our young men take up this matter in earnest and commence this good work. Praying will help us a great way, but the skill and ability to fight will help us a great way also.

Brownson on Immediate Emancipation.

The ablest and most influential writer in the Roman Catholic Church in America, MR. A. O. BROWNSON, Editor of Brownson's Quarterly Review has astounded and electrified the country with a long and most able discussion on the war question, assuming the ground that the rebellion can only be put down by a proclamation of emancipation on the part of the Federal Government.

This most important paper, if placed fairly before the people of the North will create that public opinion which alone is needed to force the Government up to the duty of emancipation. Its chief merits are a full grasp of the whole subject, a clear acknowledgement of the full citizenship of our enslaved brothers, (his brethren) of their right to enfranchisement on the soil that gave them birth, and a magnanimous ignoring of the bug-bear dangers of emancipation. We shall publish a large part of this able paper in our next issue, and hope that our men of means will raise the funds to spread it before the people.

HIDE AND GO-SEEK,—Beauregard and McClellan.

"WAITING FOR THE WAGON."—The Hon. Gerrit Smith says, in his last sermon, abolitionists are waiting "until the country is up to the low point of saving itself (by emancipation).' Now if the country gets up to the low point of saving itself by declaring the slaves free, what need will there be of abolitionits. And if the country "don't see" that mode of salvation, whose duty is it to strive to open its eyes?

WILLIAM C. H. CURTIS, ESQ., will lecture before Fountain Union Lodge No. 1, I. O. of G S. and D. of S., on Thursday evening next, the 10th inst., at the Masonic Hall, corner of Broome and Forsyth Sts. Admission free. Mr. Curtis is an able speaker and will, no doubt, have a large audience.

Laying of a Corner Stone at Cranston. R.I.

MR. EDITOR,

Having a few spare moments, I avail myself of the opportunity to communicate to you a notice of an interesting occasion I witnessed last Sabbath: namely, the laying of the Corner Stone of Mount Zion Church, at Cranston, a town adjacent to Providence.

The day was very unpleasant in consequence of a storm which continued until noon. Although the rain ceased it was quite wet under foot and threatening overhead. The exercises were to commence at 3 o'clock, but owing to the weather they did not begin until nearly an hour later.

Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather there was quite a large gathering—more than was expected, but not as many as there would have been had the weather been favorable. The preliminaries being completed Rev. I. H Loyd introduced Rev. Edward Scott, late pastor of Pond St. Baptist Church, who opened the exercises with the following hymn:—

"Behold the sure foundation stone, Which God in Zion lay."

which was admirably performed by the choir, subsequent to which prayer was made followed by reading a portion of Scripture and singing the second hymn.

Rev. S. M. Giles of New Bedford then addressed the audience from Matt XVIII. 19; 20. The theme of the discourse was upon the progress of Christianity: the instrumental means by which it was propagated; its influence upon the human heart &c. In conclusion he alluded to the present event of erecting an edifice as one of the evidences of Christianity advancing and urged as the only means of its perpetuation: the necessity of a holy Ministry the principles of Christianity exemplified among the members, and a strict observance of God's ordinances and precepts.

A collection was taken up while the choir sang one of its choice pieces. Subsequently Rev. I. H Loyd read a document giving an account of the rise and progress of the congregation in Cranston.

At the request of several friends the following poem was read, composed and presented by Rev S. M. Giles, as a memorial:

MOUNT ZION CORNER STONE.

Almighty God thy blessings grant,
On what we here perform:
And may thy dwelling place be where
We lay this Corner Stone.

We consecrate to Thee O Lord,
The place on which we stand;
The offering that we now present,
Accept it from our hand.

O may thine eyes be on this place,
Grant thy protecting care;
And when the saints together meet,
Then lend an ear to prayer.

Upon this sacred spot of ground,
May many souls find rest;
And numbered with salvation's heirs,
To be forever blest.

When those who hear us on this day,
Shall rest beneath the sod;
Then may their children fill their place,
In singing praise to God.

When time shall cease and saints no more
On earth together meet;
May those who sang God's praises here,
In Heaven each other greet.

With grateful hearts and holy fear,
We bow before thy throne—
Asking thy blessings where we lay
Mount Zion Corner Stone.

Several persons contributed some small mementos, all of which, with the history and poem were enclosed in a box and deposited in the Corner Stone. Rev. J. Hicks assisted by Revds. S. M. Giles and I. H. Loyd then raised the stone and put it in its place while the choir sang several select anthems. The laying of the stone which occupied about half an hour; being completed, the audience was dismissed with singing the doxology,

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow," and benediction by Rev. J. Hicks. The whole exercises were solemn and interesting. The dimensions of the house will be 30 by 50 feet, with a basement under it. It is intended to be completed before this winter. We wish the Society success in their efforts,

MORRIS.

Providence, R.I., Sept. 28th, 1861.

Letter from Dr. Delany.

NEW YORK, Sept. 28th, 1861.

MR. ROBERT HAMILTON:

Dear Sir—I simply notice the letter of Mr. W. Wells Brown in the "Pine and Palm" of the 28th inst., written from Chatham, Canada, to correct a most flagrant and designedly mischievous misrepresentation therein stated; that I in a speech in London (Canada,) had declared that the "first thing" I intended to do after going to Lagos, was to "take off the King's head!"

It is merely necessary for me to pronounce this as false in toto, which I do: as a side from the intimate friendship which exists between me and all the native authorities at Lagos (as my Report now just out will show); but no rational person could be capable of such folly as I am here charged with by Mr. Brown, all glaringly to promote for his employer, Haytian Emigration.

I have always treated Mr. Brown as a gentleman, and heretofore regarded him as a friend, and would not now notice his uncouth (and certainly unwarranted) attack, only to correct this shameless misrepresentation.

It is not necessary for me to state that my destiny is fixed in Africa, where my family and myself, by God's providence, will soon be happily situated.

Very respectfully your friend,
M. R. DELANY.

WHO MADE THEE A PRINCE AND JUDGE?

The above language was used by an Israelitish bondman in disparagement of his fellow oppressed Israelite for presuming to be equal to their masters and rulers, and our memory has been forcibly recalled to the passage, by a letter in the Pine and Palm of the 28th of September, written from Chatham, Canada, by Mr. Wm. Wells Brown, in which he holds up to ridicule the position of Dr. M. R. Delany in his association with some of the first Scientific and Literary Institutions in Europe.

After elaborately quoting various positions occupied by him, while abroad, Mr. Brown adds:—"I have copied the above verbatim et literatim, so that those who judge the ribbon of honor and the highfalutin, may see that the colored man is rising;" continuing the next paragraph in a strain of contempt and derision, scarcely to be believed, and certainly never expected to be seen coming from such a source.

But the better to show up Mr. Brown's position in this attack, we give below an extract of a letter in the paper of the same date from Mr. W. J. Watkins, in which he is endeavoring to prove the impossibility of the black man's ever rising to an equality with the whites in this country, for the very reason that he will ever be the subject of disparagement.

"I believe that in this country our condition will, at some time, be ameliorated. But mere amelioration will satisfy no black man whose aspirations are sufficiently elevated. What I want is equal rights in the broadest significance of that hackneyed term. Yes, Equal rights!! Equal access to every position in the Republic with the white man. Now this cannot be until we are sufficiently powerful to extort respect from the white man. As I believe the white man will always be the dominant power in this land, I must also believe that he will always be the ruling power, and that no black man will ever be President of these United States, or Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

In a country where we are "the people," where we regulate all the governmental machinery, where no avenue to honor is closed upon a black complexion, in the language of the "contraband" alluded to, "we can grow up to be men!"

Let me give you a little incident. This morning I went up the street to see a colored man of the highest respectability, to obtain his name for The Pine and Palm. His name is Benjamin Talbot, and he is an excellent blacksmith. I arrived at the shop, and the following colloquy took place between one of the hands and myself:

"Good morning sir. I am looking for a gentleman by the name of Talbot. Is he in?

"No, sir," replied one of the hands, "there is no such man working here."

"There must be some mistake," I replied, "he told me he worked here."

"Well," replied another hand, (a mean gawky, mealy looking fellow,) "he don't work here."

"He is a colored man," said I.

"O," they both remarked, "he means Ben., we call him old Ben."

Now "old Ben" was at least 55 or 60 years old, and had not yet attained the position of a man or of a gentleman. He, Mr. Talbot, indeed! Old Ben forever!"

Here then, we have the exact import of Mr. Brown's sneering: it must be "Old Ben forever!" How dare any black man, however qualified, presume to rise above the level which American oppresion assigns him? But Mr. Watkins asks for, and would have even "Old Ben" to attain to "equal rights in the broadest significance—equal access to every position in the Republic." It would have been well for Mr. Brown had he taken a lesson in self-respect from Mr. Watkins before making his unfortunate attack upon Dr. Delany; and we don't believe that the feelings and designs of that attack, will find an echo or response from any respectable colored person in the United States.

We are in earnest about this matter, and intend to put our foot upon it, as we consider the destiny or claims of every "black man, whose aspirations are sufficiently elevated"—in the language of Mr. Watson—to be involved in it.

The spirit of Mr. Brown, as expressed towards Dr. Delany, would condemn Miss Jinnings for claiming a seat in a 3d Avenue street car; justify the New York Medical Association for not admitting Dr. Smith to membership: condemn Dr. Ray for making application to obtain the position of Director of the City District Dispensary, or condemn all or any of them: did they obtain the object, for giving publicity to the same, though it may have been an important business part of their advertisement?

Once for all, our face shall ever be turned against the spirit of such attacks, as it makes no difference whether they emanate from Parson Brownlow or William Wells Brown, it is the same in principle.

We have never seen in any communication either private or public, while absent, in any manner refering to his positition; but we do remember seeing in the columns of the different anti-slavery papers, letters telling that he had taken by the hand, the Minister Detocquville and lady, and Victor Hugo of France. It would be well for some men to think of themselves before attempting to hold up others to ridicule, especially for that which to all right thinking persons is commendable in itself.

Letter from Rev. H. H. Garnet.

The following interesting letter from Mr. Garnet to his wife, who kindly handed it to us for publication, will be read with pleasure by our readers:

23 ISLINGTON TERRACE,
Liverpool, Eng., September 13, 1861.

My Dearest Wife—We arrived in Liverpool yesterday evening, at 5 o'clock, after an extremely pleasant passage of twelve days.

We had on board four hundred passengers, 340 in the steerage, and 60 in the saloon. Twelve years ago my treatment on board of an English steamer from New York to this place was very different from that which I have just received. Then I was caged up in the steward's room of one of Cunard's vessels, and although a first class passenger, I was not allowed to go into the saloon, or to eat at the table with white humanity.

How changed now. On a steamship belonging to the same nation I took a first class passage, asked the steward to give me my berth, and assign me my seat at the table. My ticket was given me without a remark, an elegant state-room with six berths was placed at my disposal, and my seat at the table was between two young American gentlemen, educated at St. Mary's College in Maryland, and on their way to Rome to finish their studies for the Roman Priesthood. And I am happy to say that I did not receive a look, or hear a word during the whole voyage, that grated upon my very sensitive feelings.

As usual, I was sea-sick all the voyage, more or less. When I went on board I resolved not to be sick; but as soon as we cleared Sandy Hook old Neptune called for me, and lead me to the side of the ship and told me to throw my resolutions overboard, which I did in double quick time, and for a while I felt as if I did not care if he threw me over after them.

On the Sabbath, after worship, we were all gratified to see two whales. They were none of your juveniles, or babies like Barnum's, but were respectable "old folks," and like most other folks of their color, they made considerable stir. A lady exclaimed, as her little under jaw dropped down about an inch, "as nigh as I can guess," "Oh, why do they make such a noise and commotion? they are the biggest fishes in the sea—and they are black, too." I said, "Madam, you have accounted for the noise they make."

On the fifth day we passed an iceberg, about the size of the City Hall Park, with a crystal palace resembling very much our City Hall. This straggling northern loafer had been cruising about in that part of the Atlantic for several weeks, and seemed bent on mischief. These icebergs will in time probably become the source of great annoyance, and dangerous to travelers across the Atlantic. The ice is of course continually increasing in the Arctic seas, and consequently detatched portions of those eternal mountains of ice will continually increase in their desertions.

On the tenth day a little child two years old died, and for the first time I witnessed the solemn scene of a funeral at sea. The mother of the child was a devoted Christian and a member of one of the Presbyterian churches of New York, and died a few months ago. The father, with an aching heart, was on his way back to his native England, with his motherless babes. God took the eldest, and its spirit went up to heaven to meet its mother. One ascended from a sick chamber on the land, the other from an almost pestilential steerage of a ship on the ocean. O how sweet was that heaven to reach! Heaven is central to every portion of our sad and sorrowful earth. When the little pilgrim died, many hands were offered to lay it out. The father begged that a coffin might be made for its remains, instead of the poor sailor's winding sheet. British tars at once acceded to his wishes, and a coffin was made and neatly stained. They then put the little baby in, perforated it with several holes, and put in a cannon shot, so it would easily sink. The bell struck three in the afternoon. The captain, officers and men prepared for the services, and the passengers, fore and aft, assembled as near as possible to the gang-way. The captain and surgeon performed the solemn burial services of the church of England, and at the proper place the board was tilted. A little splash was heard, and the last remains of the young voyager disappeared in a moment. Just then the sea sent up one of his awful and terrible wails which no mortal can describe, and the foam of his billows seemed to spread a white pall over the tombless grave. But the sea shall give up its dead, and they that are in their graves shall hear the voice of God, and come forth.

On the eleventh day at dawn we saw the green hills of Ireland, and at 8, A. M., we passed and saluted the Great Eastern, outward bound. She appeared very much like an island, or a good sized manufacturing village. While we were rolling and pitching, she triumphantly ploughed through the waves, without even deigning to bow her proud head.

Soon after my arrival in Liverpool I set out to find my old friends Mr. and Mrs. James Johnson, formerly of Troy, N. Y., and accomplished my object in twenty minutes. I found them well, and doing very well, and greatly comforted by their lovely, obedient and accomplished daughter.

May God bless all "your friends and mine."

I leave to-night at 11 for London.

Yours truly,
HENRY HIGHLAND GARNET.

Red Bank, Rumsen, Fairhaven and Port Washington, N. J.

MR. EDITOR:—

Having returned from a days' incursion into Monmouth County, New Jersey, I respectfully submit a report for the ANGLO-AFRICAN and its readers.

The region passed over is one of the finest agricultural districts imaginable, and the immense quantities of fruit and vegetables produced have made it the kitchen garden of New York city.

In the pleasant village of Red Bank, Rumsen and Fairhaven, I found many colored families, all of them apparently in comfortable circumstances. I closely canvassed those places, but the number of subscribers obtained was not equal to my expectations. It was gratifying to learn, however, that nearly every person spoken to intends subscribing soon, and several (whose names I have furnished you,) intend calling at your office, some of them next week, for that purpose.

Some anti-slavery publications were disposed of on the way, and it appears that the "next time" I may sell any imaginable quantity, though from information given many have more reading matter than they know what to do with. Indeed at one place where I stopped for refreshments, a young lady declared that she has so many books that she can't read them all, and that she has had to give some away, and burn others up for the purpose of getting rid of them.

In the evening (September 9th,) I attended a Camp meeting of the Bethel people at Port Washington, where I obtained the privilege of inviting them to subscribe for the ANGLO AFRICAN, for which those having the meeting in charge will please accept my thanks. The grove illuminated with blazing barrels casting their light over the assemblage, presented a fine appearance, well calculated to add solemnity to the interesting religious exercises. Rev. W. H. Winder, of Freehold, and Lewis P. Conover were the speakers. The meeting broke up next morning, Tuesday, when Mr. Winder left to prepare for a Camp meeting soon to be held at Englishtown, near Freehold, N. J. It will commence on the 14th and end on the 23d.

OCCASIONAL.

The Freed Men at Fortress Monroe.

To the Editor of the Weekly Anglo-African:

You published recently some account of the "Contrabands," as General Butler styled them. I do not like the term. Freed men—or ex-slaves would suit me better—but it is probable the freed slaves in Virginia will long be called "Contrabands." Supposing your readers would be pleased to know something more about them, I send you additional particulars.

Nearly one thousand eight hundred men, women and children are now under the protection of General Wool, who has succeeded General Butler, in command at the Fortress. Some of them fled from their masters, and the masters of some of them fled from their slaves. You know that the celebrated John Randolph, of Virginia, once prophesied that the time would come when the masters would flee from their slaves. Many of the freed men, about four hundred, are working for the Government. Others are industriously supporting themselves in various kinds of employment. Chaplain Jones has written that "a more interesting field of missionary work was never opened to the Christian public."

Two thousand Primmers and a variety of Sunday-school cards have been forwarded, so that elementary and religious instruction is attended to with very encouraging success. The people are delighted beyond measure with the opportunities enjoyed, and say that "the good Lord" has at length answered their prayers. Mr. Lockwood, the missionary sent by the American Missionary Association, to attend to their moral, physical and religious welfare, says:

I now open a subject as thrilling as it is novel. I have ascertained that a very large portion, probably more than half of the 'married' contrabands have been married only in slave fashion, by 'taking up together,' or living together by mutual agreement, without the least marriage ceremony. General Wool has been consulted, and he advises the administration of marriage in due form in regard to parties who, without having been married in fact, are living as man and wife. The leaders of the colored people agree as to the propriety of the measure. Mr. Lockwood has accordingly 'published the names of a large number, and afterwards married them in a Christian manner.'

Many of them seem to be consistent Christians, and there are among them several of superior abilities, and fervent piety, whose prayers and exhortations are exceedingly interesting. Those who were raised near the Fortress and Seminary had experienced slavery in a milder form than those who came from the interior of the State; but all longed for freedom. Mr. Lockwood writes that the meetings are well attended, and there is the manifest presence of the Spirit in awakening and quickening prayer. Numbers desire to be freed from the bondage of sin and Satan, while God is delivering them from the bondage of man.

Mr. Lockwood writes under date of Sept. 16, as follows:

Thank and praise the Lord! Yesterday was a high day in Zion. At half past nine, A. M., opened Sabbath-school in ex-President Tyler's house, near Hampton. A new thing under the sun! A Sabbath-school among Virginia freemen! Little did the ex-President think that his house would ever be used for such a purpose. A Tyler compromise with a witness! Commenced with the usual exercises; repeated together the A. B C. card; arranged the classes, employed those that could read (even a little) as teachers; let them teach a little while; gave direction for the future, and closed the school in due form. Elementary books and papers were distributed. All felt that it was the beginning of better days for them and their children, and in glad anticipation hailed the time when they and their children should all be "taught of God."

A similar course was pursued in the Sabbath-school in the gymnasium of the Seminary at two P. M. All were eager for books. This morning, I find those who received them, old and young, busy learning to read, during the leisure morning hour. But I have scarcely begun to meet the demand.

I have received a letter from one of the contrabands, this morning, containing an affecting appeal—many yesterday were kept from meeting by want of proper attire. I am convinced that five thousand dollars worth of clothing would be well appropriated. And I have no doubt that were the matter brought before the public in the right light, and to the requisite extent, the charitable people of the free States would cheerfully contribute to supply all the necessities of the people. I am sure that anti-slavery men and women especially would delight to respond to such an appeal. Individuals in Boston and Wilmington, Delaware, have already made inquiries in regard to these wants, with the view of supplying them. May the Lord open the heart and the hand of many a cheerful giver in this direction.

Mr. Lockwood, after stating that religious meetings have multiplied on his hands, and have greatly increased in numbers and interest, says:

Last week I had a meeting every morning except Saturday, which I needed for rest preparatory to the Sabbath. I expect to have nearly or quite as many meetings weekly. In these meetings a number signified an earnest desire to seek the Lord, and become emancipated from the thraldom of sin. Yesterday I held a sunrise prayer meeting and three preaching services, one near Hampton, one at the Seminary gymnasium, and one at Fortress Monroe, in Military Hall. There were besides several prayer and exhortation meetings, one conducted by an engineer and the rest by contraband leaders. The meetings were very largely attended and of marked interest. After the first preaching service, the people sang, with great enthusiasm, a chant in regard to Joseph and Moses and the deliverance from Egypt, said to have been introduced about nine years ago. It was one of the songs upon which slavery placed its ban; yet the people would sing it by themselves. Tell me not that slaves! even in this mild region of slavery, have no desire for liberty, when they secretly pour out their own souls in such a strain as that. One of their melodies runs thus:

"Go down to Egypt—go tell Pharoah,
Thus saith my servant Moses—Let my people go."

Among the freed men is a man named Davis, who is very intelligent and eloquent. Mr. Lockwood alludes to him in the following paragraph:

The afternoon meeting was one long to be remembered. After I had finished my discourse, several of the exhorters spoke. One of them, Mr. Davis, is an Apollos. I spoke of his eloquence, &c., in former letters, but his address yesterday was a masterpiece. It melted every heart. He appealed to the soldiers present who were in rebellion against God striving to put down rebellion in this land, and asked them how they, who had been taught to read the Bible, and learned the Lord's Prayer in infancy from a mother's lips, could stand in judgment, when a poor despised and inferior race, who, though denied the Bible, had been taught of God and found their way to Christ, should rise up and condemn them. He then turned to his fellow contrabands and entreated them to embrace thankfully, and improve the boon already given. He considered the present a pledge of the future—the virtual emancipation of fifteen or eighteen hundred, the promise of the emancipation of four millions. The Lord works from little to great.

Mr. Lockwood alludes to the deceptions practiced in men who travel South, and even in masters, on regard to the desire of slaves for freedom. One of the freed men said:

If his master had asked him before his conversion, if he wanted to be free, he would have told him a lie, and said that he did not want liberty, for he well knew that if he had answered otherwise, he would have been sold down far South. But when he was made free to Jesus he felt that he could say, Lord it is enough, I can patiently wait for any other liberty, till thy time comes. Yet he could not help saying out ever and anon, "Lord, how long?" shall I and my fellow bondsmen always be slaves? He longed and sometimes almost hoped that he should see such a day as this, yet the blessing was so great and so improbable, that he feared he should he without the sight. "But now," said he, "our eyes see and our hearts enjoy, and shall we not manifest our gratitude to the great Emancipator, by turning unto Him, and embracing a double freedom."

Mr. Lockwood is very desirous of an assistant, as his labors are so arduous. As soon as sufficient funds are received his wishes will be gratified. He has employed Mrs. Leabe, a free colored woman, to teach a week day school. Pious soldiers assist in the Sabbath-school on Sundays. As the season advances clothing will be wanted for many who will otherwise suffer. Donations in money and clothing are earnestly solicited. They can be sent to me at No. 61 John Street, New York, or forwarded direct as follows, to Rev. L. C. Lockwood, care of Captain Burleigh, Seminary, near Fortress Monroe, Virginia; sent by Adam's Express, freight pre-paid.

LEWIS TAPPAN.

Letter from Newark.

NEWARK, N. J., Oct. 2, 1861.

MR. EDITOR:—

Thursday the 26th instant was observed in our city as a day of fasting and prayer—that the blessing of God may rest upon those who are loyal to the Union, and that success may attend those who endeavors to subdue the rebels of the South, and bring about peace and happiness. Many of our M. E. Churches joined together and held prayer-meetings through the day. The Plane Street Presbyterian Church was open for service in the morning and afternoon. In the evening the Rev. Mr. Adams preached an able discourse from Isaiah the Prophet.—"And is this not the fasts that I have proclaimed; that you undo the heavy burden and let the oppressed go free?" The meeting was well attended.

We regret to announce the death of two of our venerable citizens, Mr. J. Statia and Mr. Fields. The mysterious working of Providence called these two men to the place appointed for the living both in one day. Their loss will be felt by a large circle of relations and friends.

William, the escaped slave, and Mr. Jones his agent, lectured to a large audience on Monday evening in the lecture room of the Plane Street Church. William gave many interesting facts concerning the great battle at Bull Run, and his escape from the iron heel of oppression. He also showed the form of some of the batteries in Virginia that he was engaged in building, and how he could whip the rebels providing he was Captain. At the close of the lecture it was proposed that William should stand at the door with the contribution box. This being done he received a handsome sum, the exact amount I did not learn.

Mr. Peter Hedges, a student from the Ashmun Institute, Oxford, Pennsylvania, where he has been for three years preparing for the ministry, returned to resume his studies for the present season, at the close of which he expects to sail for Africa as a Evangelist.

During his vacation he has visited a large circle of friends, and has received many handsome gifts, the principal one being a silver watch which was presented to him by the ladies of this city.

The young people's Christian Association are preparing for a Declamatory Exhibition to come off in two weeks.

ISAAC TEMBROOK.

A Discourse by Dr. Pennington.

On Monday evening last, according to announcement on Sabbath, a goodly number of the respectable colored citizens assembled in Zion Baptist Church, Rev. John T. Raymond, to hear a discourse by Rev. Dr. Pennington.

The subject was one of marked interest and abounded with great ability, as the Doctor is ever wont to do, showing our relation and duty as an American people in general, and the colored people as a class in particular—to the government of the United States, and its relation and duty to us.

Nothing less than the Union entire with Emancipation, was the duty of the American Government, and anything short of that was defying the wrath of Heaven, and trampling under foot the eternal love of God, indelibly written upon the heart and conscience of every human being.

The Doctor concluded by exhorting the colored people to permit no misconceived idea to mislead them, but ever stand firm and loyal to the country, and although their loyalty was spurned, their aid coldly rejected, and the fiery ardor of their patriotism partially quenched by the cold waters of prejudice against them—yet he knew that the vital spark was still alive in the smouldering embers of adversity, which would yet be kindled into a flame, that would assist in warming into cheerfulness the sad hearthstones made vacant by the fall of their brave white brethren—who have led the van in the strife of battle.

It was announced that the doctor was nearly ready and expected to sail for Europe on Saturday the 5th current, and his friends would meet him in a farewell assemblage at Shiloh Church, corner of Prince and Marion Sts, on Thursday evening, the 3d.

OBITUARY.

A MOTHER IN ISRAEL FALLEN.

Died in this city, September 24th, of Paralysis, Margarette Thompson, aged 80 years.

The writer had not the pleasure of an acquaintance with deceased, but has often heard her name mentioned by the members of Shiloh Church (of which she has been a member for almost half a century,) with much respect.

The following short biographical sketch was written by one of the first ladies of the city who has long known Mrs. Thompson, and who speaks of her Christian character in terms of highest praise.

Margarette Thompson was at Albany, New York in the year 1780, in the family of Mr. Van Ransellaer, with whom her mother resided, and with whom her sister and brother were brought up.

She lived in Judge Coe's family in Hackensack, and also in the Lesparard family, where she was much esteemed.

She became a disciple of Christ, under the ministry of Dr. Romaine, and remained in that Church until the Rev. Samuel E. Cornich was settlee in New York, when she attached herself to his congregation, and afterward to the Rev. T. S. Wright's Church. She was a consistant and faithful Christian, and for several years of feebleness and suffering her great desire was to be with Christ.

Her patience and submission was very edifying to those who visited her, and taught them how a "Christian ought to die."

"Her end was peace."

Her funeral took place from Shiloh Church. The Rev. James N. Glosoester and the Revernd A. M. Freeman officiating.

ROSSVILLE S. I.

We paid a hasty visit to this village a few days since, the occasion being an entertainment given for the benefit of the A. M. E. Zion Church.

We were pleased to find that our friends had erected a very commodious building since we were last there. This entertainment was given to assist in sinking a small debt still due on the property.

The Rev. Messrs. Colman and Pitts were present, and labored to make the affair a success, but we are sorry to say that it did not meet the expectation of the friends.

The nonappearance of Dr. Penington was a sad disappointment to the people, which feeling must have been greatly augmented by the babbling of the writer, who managed nevertheless to stir up the bile of some of the secessionists of the place by a few remarks upon the war—its cause, and its cure. One gentleman insisted that niggers were the cause of the war, therefore they ought to fight.

Now from the manner in which this was said we are satisfied that this man would have been the first to prevent us from going to the South to fight.

We found several of our friends in comfortable circumstances, their large gardens giving evidence of much thrift.

Mrs. Henry Stevens showed us a well which she had dug and stoned up with her own hands. The Rev. Messrs. Barcroft and Purnell have very fine places and we hear that the Messrs. Harris are also quite successful.

We take great pleasure in recording the successes of our old friends.

NEW BOOKS.

Official Report of the Niger Valley Exploring Party. By M. R. Delany, Chief Commissioner to Africa. New York: Thomas Hamilton, 48 Beekman Street. London: Webb, Millington & Co., Fleet Street. Pp. 75. Price, 25 Cents.

It is refreshing to turn from the myriad shames of to-day towards a man of mettle in downright earnest. Such a man is betrayed in every page of the interesting little brochure before us. It is the only book that has had the power to withdraw our strained attention from eager watching for every rumor or breath from the seat of war. And if our readers would like to be relieved for an hour or two from the absorbing topic which is driving the nation mad, they would do well to invest the small sum named above, and—shades of Colonization avaunt!—follow Dr. Delany to Africa.

The personality and vitality of the man carry us along with him in spite of ourselves; he is evidently alive, and about. The first two sections, or chapters, give a history of the origin of the movement. As far back as 1831–2, when quite a youth, he determined to go to Africa; he does not say with what special object. In 1853–4–9, he plans his movement, or rather creates it, for every step is up-hill work. He needs authority, and he creates a convention of colored people at Cleveland; he causes the convention to appoint a Board of Commissioners, and causes this Board of Commissioners to appoint him, along with Professor Campbell, Robert Douglass, of Philadelphia, and James W. Purnell, of Canada, to be the "Exploring Party, to make a Topographical, Geological and Geographical examination of the Valley of the River Niger, in Africa, * * for the purposes of service and general information; and without any reference to, and with the board being entirely opposed to any emigration there as such," * * granting "the right of the Commissioners to negotiate in their own behalf, or that of any other parties, or organization for territories." "It being agreed and understood that this organization (the Board) is, and is to be exempted from the pecuniary responsibility of sending out this expedition."

We are delighted with the sight of this 'commission." It is decidedly a big thing. Any one not bound for Africa with all his might, prepared to go it blind, would have torn it to atoms and thrown it in the face of the Board. It is on the decided work-for-nothing-and-find-yourself principle. Jefferson Davis' privateer documents are respectable along side of it.

Yet we are glad to see this "Commission." It throws historical light on the celebrated treaty with the King and chiefs of Abbeokuta, which has been discussed in these columns. We understand now why the treaty was not made in behalf of "the Board of Commissioners" who gave the party their commission; and was made in behalf the "African Race in America." The "Board of Commissioners" had shirked the treaty in advance; and the party were forced to make this treaty in the name of "other parties" as their commission read, and these "other parties" were "the African Race of America." To what race did the "Board of Commissioners" belong?

But the "party" acted in the teeth of their instructions when they made arrangements to colonize Abbeokuta with the "African Race in America," contrary to the express avowal of the Board.

We do not rehearse these things as a matter of fault-finding or cavil, but simply to show that the head and front of the whole matter, Dr. Delany, was, not to be disturbed or baulked by trifles, and that Board of Commissioners, colored convention, &c., &c., were but so many means which he created to carry out his end.

As our review of this Report is a labor of love, we will endeavor to say more about it next week. In the mean time let all our readers procure it, that they may follow our criticisms intelligently.

"Hospitable graves in Hayti!"—In a letter to the "Pine and Palm" from Hayti, Rev. T. J. Holly announces fourteen deaths among the New Haven colony alone. As the colony numbered less than a hundred, this is a frigthful mortality, and should rest as a pall upon those, who for motives best known to themselves, are decoying our people to their graves. Mr. Holly himself adds, "Come on, then, brave, stout hearted emigrationists—friends of a colored nationality, who are not afraid to die, if need be, and here is a home and a wide field of development for you." We do not doubt, from the heat of the climate, that decomposition occurs much sooner in Hayti than in Connecticut. But it does seem a queer way to build up "colored nationalities" by enriching a soil already the richest in the world.

Differences of opinion.—Mr. Holly says of the dead New Haven colonists, that "Their deaths were a triumphant witness in behalf of the noble cause of Haytian Emigration."

The Editor of "the pine and palm," who is generally believed to be James Redpath, says, on the contrary, "We do not regard the deaths of which he (Holly) speaks, as a triumphant witness, &c., but as a sad evidence of the fatal folly of refusing to obey the rules of living, which experience has laid down for the tropics."

We would respectfully suggest that "fatal folly" is properly applied to the unfortunate dead; but it was the "fatal folly', of listening to whom? of obeying whom? The very person who, with Haytian gold gingling in his pockets, coolly turns round and calls his dead victims fools.

A Scene in a Christian Land.—Can our readers read the following, copied from the Baltimore "Clipper," without asking themselves whether it is possible that they are living in a land laying claims to the highest civilization, and engaged in efforts to extend christiauization into parts of the globe where no such God-defying scenes are ever enacted?

On Sunday night a negro woman, named Louisa Ann Murray, was found by a policeman on Aisquith Street, endeavoring to make her way out of the city. The woman had a chain fastened to her neck by means of a padlock. She had with her two small children of hers, and upon being intorrogated stated that she and the children belonged to Mr. William Kelly, of Baltimore, and that she had been whipped a few days since, and the chain placed about her neck; the end of the chain, she stated, being attached to a cannon ball, which she succeeded in detaching and ran away, taking with her her two children. She was detained in the central station house yesterday morning, when she was returned to her master.

A Marriage of Contrabands.—A correspondent of the Boston Journal writes from Old Point Comfort on the 8th inst. as follows "I had supposed that my servaces in this particular department of clerical duty were likely to be suspended while in old Virginia, but it apperrs not. I have been applied to by two contrabands who had lived for years as man and wife, but whose masters had assured them that marriage was not necessary or right in slaves. Now they have learned that God's law extends to them and is obligatory on them, and if human law in Virginia recognizes no marriage tie as binding on slaves, or to be respected by masters, God's law does, for he is no respecter of persons. The ceremony will be gladly performed by me. God pity these poor heathen in a Christian land, and may the missionary institution of slavery as some some call it, show less degrading fruits or be speedily struck its death blow and cease to pervert religion itself from its holy mission, making its name a cloak for the foul mouster slabery.

Arrest and Return of a Fugitive Slave.—One day last week, a man named Monck Levy, a resident of Louisville, came to this city in search of an absconding "chattel" named Eliza, quite a neat and well-dressed quadroon, about twenty-eight years old, "which," or who, he believed to be secreted somewhat heresbout. On Saturday she was discovered in the Colored Orphan Asylum on Ninth street, and taken before Commissioner Halliday, who sanctioned the claim of Mr. Levy by remanding her to Louisville in his charge. She admitted that she had always been well treated, and did not seem greatly disinclined to return. When asked why she ran away, she replied, "Liberty is sweet."—Cincinnati Gazette of Sept. 23d.

Civilization in New Jersey.—The Bordentown Register of Sept. 20th, furnishes editorially the following evidence that the people of that place, at leart, are not willing that the world should think that all relics of heathenism had been swept from the long benighted State of New Jersey. However, some progress is shown in the transaction; for twenty years ago the "fun" would have lasted a whole day, instead of a "full hour."

Plucky.—Quite a bloody and disastrous fight occurred in West street, on Monday last, between two "she contrabands," all on account of the "green eyed monster." The conflict lasted a full hour, during which time considerable wool was pulled and a quantity of blood spilt, besides the manufacture of a nice lot of rags—for it is said that "big Jule" was almost stripped! The boys had plenty of fun. Nobody interfered, and the fight lasted until one or both gave out from sheer exhaustion. We have'nt heard which claims the victory.

Slaves in the Revolution.—Slaves owned by tories, in the days of the Revolution, were not only set free, but all able-bodied slaves were permitted to enlist, and at the close of the war manumitted.—These slaves which were the confiscated property of the tories, became the property of the State, and in 1786 the following act was passed, providing for the subsistence of the aged and ingrm:

"Be it enacted, &c., that all negro slaves become the property of the people of the State, by the attainder or conviction of any person whomsoever, and now in possession of the Commissioners of Forfeiture, be and they are hereby manumitted." Again: "That the Commissioners of Forfeitures for the several districts be and are hereby required to provide for the comfortable subsistence of all such slaves as by age and infirmity are become unable to gain subsistence, at the expense of the people of the State."

New York was then a slave State, just as Missouri is now.

SUMMARY.

The Baltimore papers of the 25th ult. state that a colored man, by the name of Benjamin Simms, was arrested on the charge of throwing stones, while intoxicated in the windows of the Saratoga street church. He stated that his lady love having visited said church in company with another gentleman and seated themselves near the window he could not resist the temptation to throw a stone at them. At the suggestion of Justice Hiss he received thirty-nine lashes.

At Waynesville, Ohio, on the 14th ult., a colored man named Wm. Carter, killed in self-defence, another colored man by the name of Lucius Whittingham. It was stated in Court that Whittingham had procured a knife for the express purpose of killing Carter. On the day of the occurrence, Whittingham approached him and threatened to cut out his heart, when for self-preservation, Carter struck Whittingham with a huge club, fracturing his skull, which resulted in his death.

Elizabeth Facts was arrested on the night of the 9th inst. in Baltimore, charged with being an absconded slave, the property of one S. H. Tagart.

The Elmira Gazette, in its report of the races over the Hawley Course, near that place, says: "only two entries for the foot race were made, which was won by a colored man from Elmira."

A colored woman named Charity Hall died in the Central station house, Baltimore on Monday night 24th ult. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of death from intemperance and exposure.

PERSONAL.

The Geotgetown (Del.) Messenger of September 25th contains the following:

"An old colored man, by the name of Benjamin Brown died at Laurel on Thursday last, aged about 80 years who deserves a passing notice. Brown has been in the habit of preaching to his colored brethren in all parts of the country, and has gained a wide reputation for his funeral discourses. He was unlettered, but possessed good natural talent for one of his race, and his sermons were often listened to with attention. He was honest and upright and the utmost confidence was placed in his piety. He had the respect of all classes."

The Rochester Express of the 27th ult. says: "Charles Taylor, colored, who left Rochester with the 13th Regiment, in the capacity of servant to Capt. Scherffel, returned home on furlough. He was in the Arcade this morning, in the centre of a group of curious observers, to whom he was narrating incidents of Bull Run. He had upon his back a knapsack taken from a Georgia Rebel on that occasion with his own hand. He fought in the ranks of the 13th throughout the day with a musket which he took from a fallen soldier, and thinks that he did as much execution as the circumstances would allow."

Mrs. Mary O. Monroe, widow of the late Rev. W. C. Monroe, and her two sons returned from Hayti last Saturday, in schooner Joseph Grice. Mrs. Monroe reports the death of Rev. John W. Lewis, leader of the Lawrence colony.

The Oswego Gazette furnishes the following item: "Died in Richford, in this county, on the 11th inst., Augustus Van Buren, a colored man, at the extraordinary age of one hundred and two years. He is said to have been, at one time, the slave of the father of Martin Van Buren.

Rev. M. M. Clark recently returned from Africa was advertised to lecture at Plainfield and Indianapolis last week. The Journal of the latter place remarks: "Mr. Clark is an educated man, and made a visit to Africa to obtain information that is considered important by that portion of the Christian community who have the Missionary cause at heart. His lectures will be interesting, and we bespeak for him a good audience, both at Plainfield and Wesley Chapel.

The Burlington, (Vt) Free Press thus notices Mr. Garnet's departure for Europe: "The Rev. H. H. Garnet, [colored], left N. Y. a few days ago, for Europe, with a regular passport of citizenship, signed by W. Seward, Secretary of State. Such a return to the usage of the government previous to the last few years must fill Judge Taney with horror."

John S. Rock, Esq, of Boston has been appointed and commissioned by the Governor and Council, a Justice of the Peace for Suffolk county, Mass.

Osborne P. Anderson, the only surviving representative of John Brown's party at Harper's Ferry is now in this city.

It will rejoice the friends of Rev. John P. Thompson, who was so severely injured by a fall in Newark, N. J. a few weeks since, to learn that he has arrived at his home in Sag Harbor and is now convalesent.

Rev. W. E. Walker and lady returned from their Easteru tour at the early part of this week, and left immediately for their home at Trenton, N. J.

Capt. Edward Fleming of Nassau, N. P. arrived here last Monday night with a fine assortment of pineapples.

MARRIED.

Married, Sept. 25th, 1861, by the Rev. Wm. Johnson Alston, Mr. Wm. Wilson, of Washington, D. C., to Miss Henrietta Lambert, of New York City.

DIED.

Cooper.—At Newport, R. I., Sept. 25th Mrs. Dianah Cooper, sister to Mrs. Clinton, the mother of Right Rev. J. J. Clinton, Superintendent. She lived and died a Christian, leaving this world in the triumph of faith. Her hope, anchored within the vale, enabled her to out-ride every storm. Her soul has gone to God; it has gone to its home, no more amid peril and error to roam. The eyes are no longer dim. Her soul is in Heaven enjoying the unclouded smiles of God, that fills all the glorious place.

J. F. L.

Providence, Oct. 1st, 1861.

Special Notices.

A MENTAL FEAST.

There will be a Mental Feast given by the Male and Female Sinking Fund attached to the Branch of A. M. E. Zion Church, 231 West 16th Street, on Wednesday and Thursday evenings, the 9th and 10th of October, 1861, for the benefit of said Church. There will be speaking and singing on the occasion, and refreshments.

Exercises commence at 8 o'clock. Admittance at the door, 10 cents.

Names of the Committee:

Mrs. M'rg't Jackson, Mrs. Lucretia Robinson,
" H. A. Harper, " E. K. Jackson,
" Mary A. Forbes, " Sarah Jane Ray,
" Margaret Duncan, Miss Martha Eato,
Mr. Abraham Ray, Mr. John Pulley,
Mr. John Ray.

LOVE, PURITY, AND TRUTH.

Good Samaritan Lectures.

The second of the Course will be delivered by William C. H. Curtis, Esq., on Thursday evening next, the 10th inst., under the patronage of Fountain Union Lodge No. 1, at their Rooms, corner of Forsyth and Broome Streets. Subject—Development of Truth.

The public are most cordially invited to attend.

N. B.—Admission Free.

Charles R. Hornbeck, W. C.
Julia Hamilton, W. P. D.
John D. Bagwell, R. S.

DONATION.

The Annual Donation for the benefit of Rev. Henry M. Wilson, will take place at the Lecture Room of the Seventh Avenue Presbyterian Church, on Thursday evening, Oct. 23, 1861. An efficient committee of gents and ladies, whose names will be published in next week's issue, will manage this Benefit.

Copies of Anglo-African can be obtained of Mr Samuel Bayard, 61 Union Street, New Haven opposite the Railroad depot.

Rev. Henry M. Wilson is now Assistant Secretary of the African Civilization Society, No. 26 Bible House.

Office hours Monday, Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, from ten A. M. till two P. M.

As many letters are sent to his care for different persons in this city, it would be well for parties expecting letters to call at Mr. Wilson's Office.

THE PROPOSED NEW BOOK OF MAR-

For the above work the undersigned would state, in answer to numerous inquiries, that he wishes to collect full and accurate accounts of all cases of abuse growing out of Slavery, of the loss of time, property and life, whether among whites, Indians, or blacks. He is not particular as to the length of the articles, for, when we come to the publication, it may be best to abridge some statements; but the original communications will be carefully preserved and placed in some historical collection for preservation and reference. Whatever will serve to illustrate or add interest to the statements, such as photographs or engravings, or autographs of the persons, or maps and plans of the localities named, will be thankfully received and carefully preserved. If the case has been published in the papers, or in pamphlets or books, please make reference to them or forward them. Names of persons, places, and dates, which, if divulged would involve the parties in difficulty, may be withheld in the communication. Let every one send on what he or she may have to communicate as early as possible. We shall feel greatly obliged to Editors who will copy this advertisement and give it a favorable notice, and all who will promptly respond to this call will receive our hearty thanks.

Address, L. G. OLMSTEAD, New York.

Information Wanted in regard to Alexander or Sandy Hogan, son of Betsey Hogan. He left the service of Mr. Jenkins in Baltimore, in June, 1859, and came to the North to solicit money to purchase the freedom of his wife. He is believed to have been in Birmingham, N. Y., about five weeks ago. Skin light brown. An aged mother is anxious to ascertain his whereabouts, and will be grateful for information sent to Wm. Still, 107 North-Fifth street, Philadelphia.

Anti-slavery papers please copy. 3t.

Letters or newspapers for Hayti or Jamaica will be promptly forwarded if left with Mr. N. R. Ashby, at Lewis & Co.'s store, 24 South Street. New York.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

WHITE'S

VEGETABLE EXTRACT FOR THE HAIR,

FOR THE PRESERVATION, BEAUTY, GROWTH, AND RESTORATION OF THE HAIR.

After many years of study and experiment the undersigned now presents it to the public. This valuable preparation excites the scalp to a new and healthy action, cleanses it from Scurf and Dandruff, prevents the hair from falling off or becoming prematurely Gray.

The question often arises, why the hair turns gray, rusty, and coarse, harsh and unpleasant in appearance, and finally falls off?

Each hair has a root in the skin, and is itself a hollow tube through which there is a constant circulation of blood. By this circulation the hair is nourished, its glossy color is given and preserved, and it is covered with oil. Any thing which injures the skin of the head, or diverts or takes away the blood from it, will prevent or impede the circulation through the tubes of the hair, stop its growth, and cause it to fall off, turn gray, or both. Hence it is that any cause that obstructs or weakens the circulation of the blood through the skin, or that diverts the blood to other parts of the system, will take away the lively, fresh, and youthful appearance of the hair, arrest its growth, turn it gray sooner or later, and in thousands of cases cause premature baldness.

For this reason, all kinds of fevers, dyspepsia, low spirits, dissipation, and excessive thought, allowing the hair to grow too long without cutting, long and continued headache, neglected condition of the scalp and hair, great mental uneasiness, etc., etc., will always, unless proper remedies are used, produce general or partial Baldness or gray hair. The cure is perfectly effected by preserving a healthy and brisk circulation of the blood through the skin of the scalp and head; could this always be done, the hair would never fall off or turn gray.

The EXTRACT will produce this cure, and for the toilet it will be found an admirable article as it gives luxuriant brilliancy to the hair.

Persons taking sea-voyages will find this a most valuable assistant for preserving the health of the hair, which at those times is so apt to fall.

Many persons, both ladies and gentlemen, find their hair apt to become dirty and greasy and full of dandruff, so as to soil dresses, caps, bonnets, coats, etc. The use of the EXTRACT as directed will correct all this, and make the hair all that most refined taste could require.

DIRECTIONS FOR USING.

Let the hair be brushed with a good stiff hair-brush, until the scalp is considerably excited, and the dandruff and dirt removed, this will open the pores of the skin to the direct action of the EXTRACT. Then apply the EXTRACT in small quantities, at the time, rubbing it in with a brush, particularly where the hair is thin or weak, or shows a disposition to fall off, always brushing the way in which it lies, not backward and forward. The EXTRACT should be used at least three times a week. Avoid the use of soaps or alkalies, Alcohol, Cologne Water, Bay Rum or water, as they remove the natural oil, make the hair harsh and coarse, cause it to split and break, and will more or less change its color. Dandruff is the result of a languid, unhealthy condition of the scalp and surface vessels, whereby the perspiration becomes thick and clammy and adheres to the surface, which, drying, forms a scurf or dandruff. The frequent application of the EXTRACT will soon free the head from it.

In conclusion I would add that cases of failure will no doubt occur, arising from causes beyond the reach of remedies. Yet I am convinced that if the EXTRACT were faithfully and perseveringly applied, a large majority of cases of baldness might be cured.

BADEAU'S

STRENGTHENING PLASTER.

AN INVALUABLE REMEDY FOR

LAME OR WEAK BACK, PAIN OR WEAKNESS IN THE SIDE, CHEST, STOMACH, OR LIMBS. A CERTAIN CURE FOR RHEUMATISM, DYSPEPSIA, ASTHMA, PLEURISY, LIVER OR KIDNEY COMPLAINT, SPRAINS, BRUISES, &c., &c

Persons disposed will find this plaster particularly servicable

Dyspeptic persons will find a permanent relief from its use, as it keeps a continued heat, acting as a gentle counter irritant, removing the inflamation of the stomach without breaking the skin. Persons engaged in sedentary pursuits should use these Plasters constantly, as they give strength to parts weakened by constant sitting and stooping.

For STRAINS and SPRAINS they are infallible, affording relief immediately and without fail.

For RHEUMATISM there is no external application equal to them, promoting the general circulation, and of the excrutiating pain.

PREVENTING A RETURN

These plasters are prepared with great care, and of the best material, and to prevent fraud the name of the originator is placed on the back of each one. In purchasing ask for BADEAU'S PLASTER. See that the name BADEAU is written on the back, or you will be deceived.

P. A. WHITE, Sole Proprietor.

P. A. WHITE,

Corner of Frankfort & Gold Sts.,

GENERAL

COMMISSION MERCHANT,

KEEPS CONSTANTLY ON HAND

A FRESH AND PURE ASSORTMENT

OF

DRUGS, MEDICINES, CHEMICALS,

GENUINE

LUBIN'S EXTRACTS

AND OTHER PERFUMERY,

FANCY SOAPS, FINE HAIR AND TOOTH BRUSHES, PURE WINES AND BRANDIES FOR MEDICINAL PURPOSES, FAMILY ARTICLES, HAVANA SEGARS, &c., &c.

All his articles are purchased with great care, and are warranted to be pure, fresh, and genuine.

MEDICINE CHESTS

carefully made up.

All orders promptly attended to, on receipt of the CASH.

Physicians prescriptions carefully prepared.

PAIN-KILLER.

We can recommend on the best authority, PERRY DAVIS' PAIN-KILLER, as a remedy unsurpassed for the cure of Sudden Colds, Coughs, Diptheria and Sore Throat, Asthma, Dyspepsia, Headache, Rheumatic and Neuralgic Affections, Chilblains and Frosted Feet, Burns and Scalds, Tooth and Face Ache, Pains in the Back, Joints, Limbs and Side, Felons, Boils, and all kindred diseases.

Dr. Ware, of Columbus, Ga., says, for Neuralgia of the Back, or Lumbago, it surpasses any medicine I have ever used.

Dr. Sweet says it is excellent to remove the soreness after bone-setting.

Dr. Hall recommends it as an excellent linament for Rheumatism.

Dr. Nelson recommends it as a linament.

Dr. Walton writes from Coschocton County, Ohio, Nov. 28, 1860: "Your Pain-Killer cures this new disease, Diptheria, or Sore Throat, that is so alarmingly prevalent here; and it has not been known to fail in any instance when used in time. This fact you should make known to the world." [It is used in this disease as a gargle and lotion as well as a tonic and stimulant.]

Rev. H. L. Van Meter, writing from Burmah, says: "The Pain-Killer has become an almost indispensable article in my family."

Hundreds of missionaries give similar testimony of its virtues.

Rev. J. G. Stearns writes: "I consider it the best remedy for Dyspepsia I ever knew."

Rev. Jabez Swan says: "I have used it for years in my family, and consider it an invaluable remedy."

Rev. A. W. Curtis: "By its use I entirely cured a felon in a few days."

The Salem Observer says, "It is a medicine every household should have at hand in case of accident or sudden attack of disease."

The New York Examiner says, "We have used the Pain-Killer, and consider it an indispensable article in the family medicine box."

The N. Y. Independent says, "We have used it, and it proves to be all it professes."

Sold by Druggists and Dealers everywhere.

PERRY DAVIS & SON, Proprietors.

10—13t

GRAND

PIONEER FESTIVAL,

TO AID A SETTLEMENT UPON

THE GERRIT SMITH LANDS,

WILL BE GIVEN ON

THURSDAY EV'G, OCT. 10, 1861,

AT PRINCE ST. HALL, N. Y.

This entertainment suggested by the peculiar state of the country and encouraged and supported by wise and good counsel for the best interest of the people, will be one of the most finished efforts presented before the people of this city for many years.

The following gentlemen have kindly volunteered to briefly address the guests upon the features of this movement:—

Dr. J. McCune Smith, Mr. T. Downing,
" Wm. Lively, " John Peterson,
Rev. J. N. Gloucester, " J. J. Zuille,
" David Stevens, Zion, " Robt. Hamilton,
" C. B. Ray " Jere'h Powers,
Prof. W. J. Wilson.

A YOUNG LADY WILL PRESIDE AT THE PIANO.

Tickets of Admission 38 Cents,

TO BE HAD OF THE FOLLOWING COMMITTEE:

NEW YORK.

Wright Seaman,	Mulberry St.,
Jas. P. Miller,	32nd Street,
Jos. Matthews,	No. 6 22d St.,
Hannibal Ritter,	Crosby Street,

BROOKLYN.

Peter Vogelsang,	No. 2 Stanton St.,
Francis Thompson,	No. 4 Hick Street,
Henry Ross,	No. 80 High St.

WILLIAMSBURG.

Mrs. Theo. Giles,	No. 54 Johnson St.,
Mrs. Chas. Harris,	Varet St. & B'way,
Miss Hope Conyers,	No. 77 S. 7th St.,
Miss Elizabeth H. Case,	Varet St. & B'way,

Theodore Giles.

HATS, CAPS & FURS

IN THEIR VARIETY.

First Premium for Misses and Children's HATS, CAPS AND LADIES' RIDING HATS.

The Clergy supplied at a discount.

KELLOGG, 381 Canal St., N. Y.

10 1y.

VALUABLE TOWN LOTS

For sale in the township of Rye, Westchester Co., N. Y. Size 25 by 100 feet.

Apply to L. TILMON, 70 East 13th St., one door east of 4th Avenue N.Y.

10 5t

CLOTHING! CLOTHING!!

Gentlemen it you want a Nice, Fashionable, well-fitted Garment at a much Lower Price than can be bought at any other establishment in this ro any other city, please call at the Merchant Tailor Establishment,

168 EWEN STREET,

BET. STAGG & WYCKOFF STS., WILLIAMSBURG

Where you will find a splendid assortment of seasonable goods, as

BROADCLOTHS,

CASSIMERES

AND VESTINGS

of every description. Also constantly on hand a well-selected stock of Ready-Made

MEN AND BOY'S CLOTHING.

Don't Forget,

168 EWEN ST., Williamsburg.

9 1y.

JUST PUBLISHED

"THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE IN LIBERIA."

The Anniversary address, on the 26th July, 1860, in Cape Palmas, Liberia, by the Rev. Alex. Crummell, B.A.

For Sale at the Anglo-African Office, 48 Beekman St., New York. Price 15 cents. 8 4t.

UNION CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

Rev. Eli N. Hall, Pastor, cor. DeKalb and Hudson Avenues, Brooklyn.

Hours of worship:

10½ o'clock,	A. M.
3 "	P. M.
7½ "	P. M.

10 4t.

TO LET, A FRONT ROOM ON THE FIRST Floor of house No. 61 Leonard Street, Williamsburg. Inquire on the premises. 10 tf.

MRS. ANDERSON,

CLAIRVOYANT & DOCTORESS

Has Removed from 106 Washington St. to 7½ Prospect St., (up stairs) cor. of Stewart, Brooklyn. 10 5t.

TO LET.—THE UPPER PART OF HOUSE 277 South Fourth St., Williamsburg, consisting of front and back parlors, and a large bedroom, with the back basement. Rent nine dollars a month, to be paid strictly in advance. Inquire on the premises, or at the office.

LODGINGS.—MRS. LANE CAN ACCOMODATE a few gentlemen with pleasant apartments at her residence, No. 192½ Green Street, in the rear. Terms moderate 9 13.

CLOCKS, WATCHES, JEWELRY and Musical Boxes carefully Repaired by Wm. C. H. Curtis, No. 153 Thompson St., N. Y. Silver Plating and Fine Gilding. 8 tf.

A NEW WORK

REPORT OF THE NIGER VALLEY

EXPLORING PARTY;

BY

M. R. DELANY, CHIEF COMMISIONER TO AFRICA.

CONTENTS.

Political Movements.
Succeeding Conventions.
History of the Project.
Arrival and reception in Liberia.
Liberia—Climate, Soil, Productions.
Diseases—Cause, Remedy.
The Interior.—Yoruba.
Topography, Climate, &c.
Diseases of this part of Africa.
Treatment, Hygeine, &c.
Missionary Influences.
What Africa now Requires to Direct Legitimate Commerce.
Cotton Staple.
Success in Great Britain.
Commercial Relations in Scotland.
The time to go to Africa.
Concluding Suggestions,

Complete in sections (chapters) consecutively from I to XVII, being most conveniently arranged in cut-in or side marginal notes, embracing every subject therein treated, so that in an instant any point or paragraph of interest may be at once cited to.

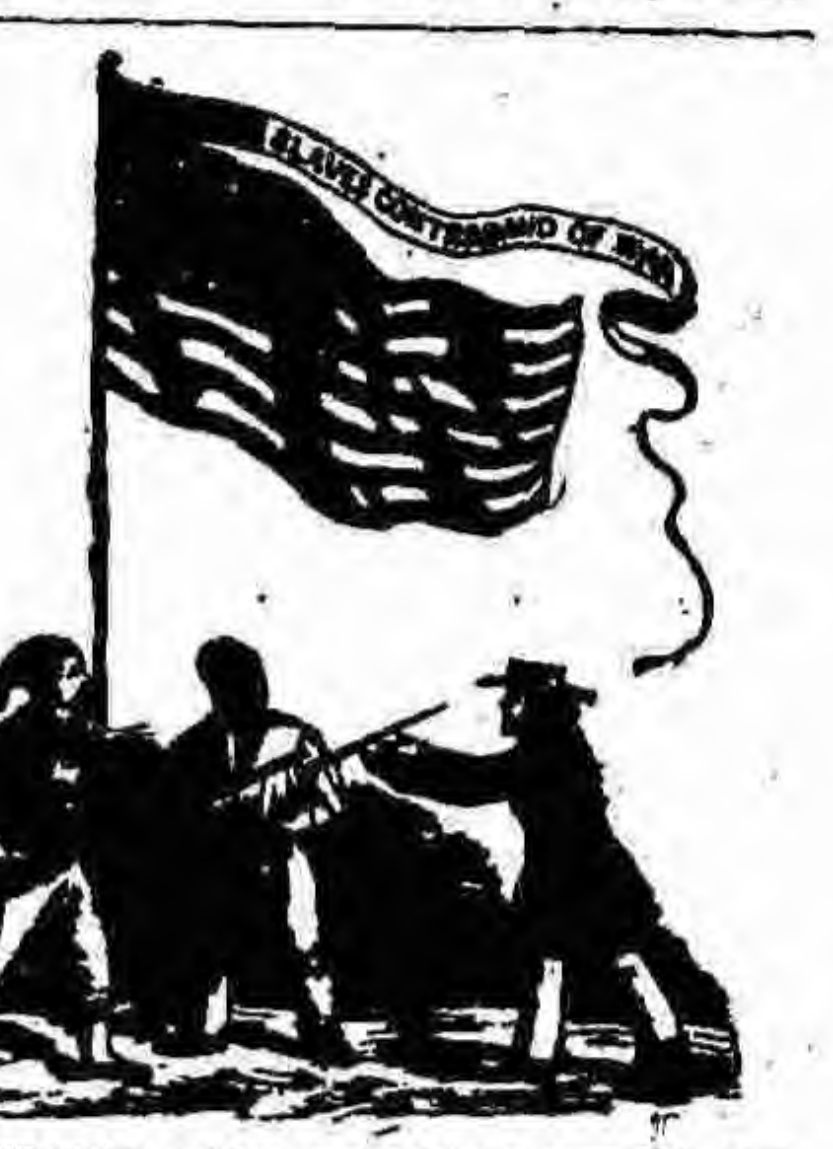
A learned and candid gentleman who has resided many years in Africa, after glancing over the proof sheets, pronounced it the most interesting and instructive work ever issued on that subject, and should be in the hands of every friend of Africa. It is a complete text-book.

The work contains 76 large pages, and will be sold at the low price of

TWENTY-FIVE CENTS PER COPY.

All Orders should be addressed to the Publisher,

THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St, N. Y.



THE ZOUAVE AND SLAVE ENVELOPE Price per thousand $5; per hundred 60 cents; packages of 25 each, 20 cents.

Orders should be addressed

THOS. HAMILTON
48 Beekman Street, N. Y

PRIVATE BOARDING HOUSE

BY

MRS. W. S. WILKINS & Co.,

610 PINE, ABOVE SIXTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA 7-13t.

LADIES' FURNISHING STORE.

CHILDREN'S CLOTHING

Ready-Made and Made to Order, By

MRS. S. WILKINS & CO.,

610 Pine, above Sixth Street, Philadelphia. 7-13t.

A SCHOOL WANTED.—A YOUNG LADY, a graduate of one of the High Schools of this State, and who is fully qualified as a teacher, is desirous of obtaining a school where the salary would not be less than $200 a year. Address Thos. Hamilton, 48 Beekman St., N.Y.

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION. THE UNdersigned respectfully announces that he is now prepared to give instruction in the Art of Singing. He will be at home at 187 Navy Street, Brooklyn, on Monday evening, and at Zion Church, N. Y., on Thursday evening, of each week. Ladies or Gentlemen desiring instruction, will please apply immediately. Singing schools taught and private instruction given on moderate terms.

3tf. ROBT. HAMILTON,

NEW SAILOR'S HOME. CHARLES M. Fortes, has opened a pleasant home for Seamen, at 26 Mulberry Street, N. Y., Seamen will find this a very desirable house, as it is in a central location, and every provision made for their comfort.

Boarding by the day or week. Terms moderate. 31y

WANTED AT TILMAN'S AGENCY, NO. 70 East 13th Street, one door east of 4th Ave., first class colored help, and none else. Cooks, house-workers, chambermaids, waitresses and laundresses, coachmen, waiters, &c. Now is the time; fall is near and good help wanted for city and country. 5—4t

MRS. E. CLARKE, IS HAPPY TO ANnounce to her friends and the public, that she has opened her new BOARDING HOUSE, and will be very thankful for their patronage, at No. 66 Sullivan Street, New York. 4-1t

DENTISTRY.

BEAUTIFUL ARTIFICIAL SETS OF TEETH on gold or silver plate on the most improved style. All other Surgical operations, performed to entire satisfaction, on very moderate terms by G. H. GRICE, Surgeon Dentist. 79 Thompson St., N. Y.

MRS. E. LEONARD,

FASHIONABLE

DRESS MAKER,

25 Sullivan Street, New York.

Receives monthly the latest Paris Fashions. 3tf.

BOARDING AND LODGING

By Mrs. Mary Johnson, 120 West 20th Street, New York. This house is very pleasantly situated in a very healthy and convenient part of the city.

Boarding for Ladies,	$2.50
" " Gentleman,	[illegible]
Lodging per week,	75

y13t.

JAMES R. W. LEONARD,

CARD AND JOB PRINTER,

219 Centre Street, New York.

THE BEST DRESSING FOR THE HAIR during warm weather, is White's vegetable extract. For Sale at 19 Sullivan and 40 Grand Sts., 2 tf.

BOARDING AND LODGING ON THE EAST Side. Mrs. Gant, can accommodate a few Ladies and Gentlemen, at her residence 182 Suffolk Street. Terms very moderate. 10 1y.

BROWN'S POPULAR RESORT,

The undersigned takes the privilege to inform his Friends and the public generally that as he has recently fitted up his SALOON anew, he is now prepared to furnish them with Ice Cream, Fruit, and other Delicacies.

BENJ. F. BROWN,
70 Bleecker St
between Broadway & Crosby St.

WARRANTED TO CURE A HEADACHE in 10 minutes, White's Vegetable extract. For sale at 55 West Broadway, and cor. Gold and Frankfort Sts.

Poetry.

THY WILL BE DONE!

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

We see not, know not; all our way
Is night: with Thee alone is day.
From out the torrent's troubled drift,
Above the storm our prayer we lift,
Thy will be done!

The flesh may fail, the heart may faint,
But who are we to make complaint,
Or dare to plead in times like these
The weakness of our love of ease?
Thy will be done!

We take with solemn thankfulness
Our burden up, nor ask it less,
And count it joy that even we
May suffer, serve, or wait for Thee,
Whose will be done!

Though dim as yet in tint and line,
We trace Thy picture's wise design,
And thank Thee that our age supplies
The dark relief of sacrifice.
Thy will be done!

And if, in our unworthiness,
Thy sacrificial wine we press,
If from Thy ordeal's heated bars
Our feet are seamed with crimson scars,
Thy will be done!

If, for the age to come, this hour
Of trial hath vicarious power,
And, blest by Thee, our present pain
Be Liberty's eternal gain,
Thy will be done!

Strike, Thou, the Master, we Thy keys,
The anthem of the destinies!
The minor of Thy loftier strain
Our hearts shall breathe the old refrain,
Thy will be done!

REMARKABLE TRANCE.

Communicated in a letter from F. D. Richardson, M. D., of Cold Spring, N. Y., to the American Journal of Medical Science.

In the month of January, 1814, being surgeon of the U. S. Frigate President, commanded by Commodore John Rodgers, cruising off the coast of South America, a sailor, belonging to one of the tops, about 23 years of age, named ——, burst a vessel in his lungs, and was brought down to me, about suffocating with the sudden and great discharge of blood. I succeeded in stopping the hemorrhage; he was confined to his cot, and put upon low diet, and the use of such medicines as the case demanded. During my attendance upon him I discovered nothing in his conversation or actions different from ignorant, rough, profane men in the same station. My mates said that to them he was at times insolent, swearing terribly at the refusal of such things as would have been injurious to him, saying they wished him to starve. He was to all appearances extremely illiterate. After doing well for some time, a vessel, having the appearance of an enemy's frigate hove down upon us, and as all hands were at quarters and a fight expected to commence in a few minutes, knowing the spirit that animated all aboard, I thought proper, before descending to the cock-pit, to call on this man, and forbid his making any attempt to move, as it might prove fatal. He promised to obey faithfully; but at the moment he heard the first sound of the gun he sprang upon deck and ran to the gun where he was quartered. The excitement was so great that the blood burst forth from his mouth and nostrils in a full stream, and in this deplorable condition he was brought down to me in the cock-pit.

I with some difficulty saved him from immediate death. He was returned to his berth and put to the same course as before. The weather being hot and calm, I hung his cot between two ports, on the gun-deck, from which he was obliged to be removed to the berth deck, whenever we were called to quarters at night, a strange sail being near. He had occasional discharges of blood, and became much debilitated. During all this time, being apprised that his dissolution was nigh, I do not remember of witnessing any change of expression or feelings, as far as the state of his soul was concerned. Soon after dinner time Dr. Birchmore reported his death to me. The usual orders were given to his messmates to lay out the body and watch it. Dr. Birchmore called upon me to inform me that the supposed dead man had revived, and addressed his messmates in such a manner as to astonish every one, and bring tears from the eyes of all who heard him; that he then addressed himself to the surgeon's mate, and had now sent for me. I immediately repaired to the spot, and found him leaning upon and supported by a messmate; and a doctor at each wrist trying to find a pulse. He was universally cold, without any perceptible pulsation, his eyes bright and animated, his speech strong and distinct, without any discharge of blood from the lungs, although he had been exercising them so long. All the men not upon duty on deck surrounded the sick bay, and were gazing with wonder at the scene. I was then brought to attend his address, which was long, and consisted of language strong and appropriate, great fluency, good grammar, and words well put together.

My surpise was too great to permit me to recollect more than a small part of what he said. He declared that he was dead, that his spirit had been separated from his body, that he had beheld the glories of the other world, of which, if language could convey an idea, he was not at liberty to give a description; that he was only allowed a short time to return to earth, and give the advice he was now communicating to certain officers and men. He was extremely solemn and impressive, and what he uttered was in such a correct and pure style, that it might have been heard with satisfaction from a pulpit, delivered by a learned divine. After finishing with me he ordered me to send for Commodore Rodgers, as he said he must deliver a message to him before he finally quit us. I waited upon the Commodore and delivered the order. The Commodore stared, and for a moment hesitated how to act, fearing some deception, and the ill effects it might have upon the minds of the superstitious seamen; but he descended, when such a scene presented itself as is seldom witnessed by man. Imagine to yourself for a moment such a man as Commodore Rodgers, in a sick bay, by lamplight, surrounded by a hundred or more witnesses, standing before a common sailor, supposed to have been dead, who commenced to address him in words like these: I have sent for you, sir; some hours since I would have trembled at your frown and feared your displeasure; but now sir, I am your superior, being a messenger from Heaven to you; therefore, listen to what I shall say. He then touched in a handsome manner upon the different duties and relative situation of commander and men, dwelt upon the great responsibility of his station, his power to do good, the force of good example, humanity, etc.

When he had concluded, his head sunk upon his shoulders, and he appeared once more to be lifeless. The Commodore retired to his cabin, sent for me, and requested from me a philosophical explanation of what had happened. I endeavored to give one, which it would take up too much time to repeat; but there was, and ever will be, one insurmountable difficulty in the case, without admitting something like inspiration, to wit, how or what manner he acquired the knowledge of such excellent language, and delivered himself with such fluency and ease, smoothly and clearly, being an uneducated, common topman. Not knowing what might take place after what I just witnessed, I laid down and retired to rest. Late at night I was called out of my room to see a man who was very ill, and hanging in a hammock near the sick bay. After bleeding him and giving him an anodyne, I went to haste into the bay to get something, no one was present but myself; all hands not on duty were sleeping soundly around me; a solitary lamp threw a sickly light. Upon turning my head aside, what struck my eyes but the aforesaid corpse sitting up in his bed, fixing his glaring eyes upon me. I became motionless and almost petrified, when I was relieved from this unpleasant situation by his exclaiming, with a loud voice and much authority, Give me some water. I never obeyed an order so quickly before. Springing to a tin mug that stood near him. I approached, presented it to his lips, he drank of it, and closed his eyes forever. The next morning he was buried, or committed to the deep. I never saw more anxiety depicted upon the human face than every man discovered during the reading of the funeral service. Among six hundred and fifty men, I believe not a fearless eye could be found: and when the body was slid into the sea, every one, I was about to say, instinctively looked over the side, when their surprise was not lessened by beholding the body arise to the surface once or twice before it finally disappeared. It was astonishing the effect this affair had upon the language and countenances of the men for some days, especially those who had heard the address.

The Commodore was delighted to learn, that so far from representing fighting to be criminal, he spoke of love of country, and recommended discipline, attention to orders, obedience, and performance of duty in time of action.

HOW SLAVERY LOOKS IN MISSOURI.

A volunteer in one of the regiments in Missouri gives the following illustration of the beauties of slavery in that section of country:

"I have seen slavery in all its forms in this State. The negroes do everything, or rather half do everything, and it is always more work to boss them than to do the job.

For instance, in passing a mill I saw the following:—A farmer's wife, perhaps, found that her meal chest had a bottom, whereupon her lord must start with a detachment of his field hands, to the grist-mill, half a dozen miles distant, which detachment took up its line of march in the following order:

1st, Farmer leading horse with bag of corn, and hand No. 1 riding, and afraid he'll fall.

2d, Horse with bag of corn, and hand No. 2 riding.

3, Horse with bag of corn, and hand No. 3 riding.

Recapitulation—
1 white man,
2 horses,
3 negroes,
3 bags corn,

Estimated that said bags held two bushels each, which makes a total of 6 bushels of corn.

Corn worth per bushel, 15c.

Total value, 90c.

White man's labor, one day, (would have to wait for grist, which would, together with going to the mill and returning home, consume the whole day) worth at least 75c.

Three negroes' labor, one day, each 50 cts.—$1,50.

Three horses labor, one day each, 25c.—75c.

First cost of producing corn, 5c. per bushel—30.

Total cost of producing meal, $3,30.

Total value of meal when produced deducting toll, say 25c. per bushel, $1,50.

Amount expended more than value of meal, $1,80.

The above will show the manner in which they labor in slave districts. In a free State a pair of horses, a wagon and driver, would take a grist of 25 bushels to mill, accomplishing in one day what would take this farmer, three negroes and three horses, four days to do, and saying nothing about the interest on the value of the chattels.

Slave labor cannot be profitable in any way but wielding the hoe on Southern plantations. Slave breeding in this State as also breeding for other markets, may be profitable for those who are soulless enough to follow raising and driving human beings to the auction block.

JOHN A. WASHINGTON.

While a party of rebel officers were "observing" our pickets near Elkwater, Virginia, yesterday, a "vagrom" bullet, hurtling into their midst, perforated the uniform of Col. John A. Washington, somewhere in the region of the diaphragm, and instantaneously terminated the military and mental career of that famous individual. Famous on two accounts, first, that he was a roundabout descendant of the great patriot whose illustrious name lends honor to everything with which it is even remotely connected; and, secondly, that he once had the unspeakable pleasure of being done up in excellent wood-cuts, as one of the individuals to whom John Brown and his terrible army gave such a nightmare of apprehension. When the old partisan burst upon the sleepy denizens of Harper's Ferry, and disturbed their equanimity so seriously, Col. Washington was one whom they visited. His two hundred and eighteen pounds avoirdupois were comfortably disposed upon a feather bed, over which hung one of the swords of the immortal patriot—one that he had swung on many a battle-field and never sheathed with dishonor. As John Brown pounced into his room, the Colonel raised his night-cap tremblingly, gasped convulsively and covered his head with the quilts incontinently, while Old Ossawatamie reached out his bony fingers, clutched the sword and bore it off. When Brown and his fanatics were fighting like tigers in the arsenal, the Colonel was traveling in an opposite direction; but when Brown was standing chained and haltered upon the scaffold, Colonel Washington was there, on a big, black horse, wearing a red sash and looking as brave and martial as one of the paletots. By some means the sword of the Pater Patriæ was carried away with those who escaped, and when old Brown was buried, amid the stony hills of North Elba, it lay upon his coffin. The family were magnanimous and honorable enough, however, to restore it to its owner. Colonel John A. received it, hung it up once more on the pegs over the bedstead, and it is to be hoped slept as sweetly and snored as loudly as ever, with no dread fears of "nigger insurrection" to disturb his dreams. When conspiracy assumed the form of rebellion, and the government was threatened with overthrow, Col. John A. took down his sword, not to defend the institution his great ancestor had given the labors of his life to create and establish, not to preserve the constitution he had helped to frame, not to sustain the government of which he was the first Chief Magistrate, not for those purposes, but to aid the criminal wickedness of those who seek to efface all the principles Washington lived to establish: who declare that he and the other fathers "were mistaken, and incorporated a mischievous error into their theory of politics." Colonel John A. was a brilliant man; a good, hearty eater; a valiant and mighty champion at wine suppers; a pleasant companion in a story telling circle; a fine looking personage in uniform—but unfortunately he was not bullet-proof, else we should not be called on to establish his obituary. One of those painful casualties which so seriously interfere with the prosecution of little schemes like that in which himself and his fellow-rebels were engaged, has removed him from the theater of operations. We need not say that we regret the fact—for with all his peculiarities, the history of Harper's Ferry does not show that Colonel Washington was a brave man, and it is not pleasant to record the decease of a coward under such circumstances. A hero balances life against glory, and willingly takes the hazard of the stake; but if a man is not a hero, it must be particularly uncomfortable to die as the Colonel did. Yet "he who takes a sword shall perish by the sword," and the unworthy descendent of a noble house, we hope, is not the only leader among the rebels with reference to whom this truth will speedily be exemplified.—Troy Times.

PERILS OF TEACHING GRAMMAR TO YOUNG DAMSELS.

MR. EDITUR:—

I have been sendin' my darter Nancy to a skoolmaster in this naberhood. Last Friday I went over to the skool just to see how Nancy was gettin' along, and I sees things I don't like by any means. The skoolmaster was larnin her things intirely out of the line of eddyeashun, and, as I think improper. I stayed awhile in the skool house, and heered one class say their lesson. They was a spellin', and I tho't spelled quite exceedingly. Then cum Nancy's turn to say her lesson. She said it very spry. I was shoct! and determined she should leave the skool. I have heerd that grammer is an uncommon fine study, but I don't wan't any more grammer about my house. The lesson that Nancy said was nothin' but the foolishest kind uv talk, the ridiclest love talk you ever seed. She got up, and the first word she said was "I love!" I looked at her rite hard* for doin' so improper, but she went rite on and sed, "Thou lovest, he loves!" and I reckon you never heard such a rigmarole in your life—love, love, love, and nothing but love. She said one time, "I did love."

Then the skollars laffed, but I wasn't to be put off, and I sed:

"Who did you love, Nancy—I want to know—who did you love, Nancy?"

The skoolmaster, Mr. McQuillister, then put in, and he said he would explain when Nancy finished her lesson. This sorter pacyfied me, and Nancy got on with awful luv talk. It got wus and wus every word. She said "I might, could or would love."

I stopt her again, and said I reckon I would see about that, and told her to walk out of that house. The skoolmaster tried to interfere, but I wouldn't let him say a word. He said I was a fool, and I knocked him down and made him holler in short order. I taulkt the strait thing to him. I told him I'd show him how he'd learn my darter grammer.

I got the nabers together, and we sent Mr. McQuillister off in a hurry, and I recon tharl be no more grammer teachin in these parts soon. If you know of any rather oldish man in your region that don't teach grammer, we would be glad if you would send him up. But in the footure we will be keerful how we employ men. Young schoolmasters won't do, especially if they teaches grammer. It is a bad thing for morals. Yours til deth.

THOMAS J. SOLE.

THINGS THAT ARE FOOLISH.

A great many foolish things are said and done in the world, among which an unknown writer classes the following:

For a young man to think he does himself credit by hanging around stores and taverns, smoking bad cigars and paying for whisky and oysters, in order to be called "liberal," by a set of youths as soft in the brain as himself.

For a lady to be annoyed because gentlemen do not always give her the best half of the street, and the nicest seat in the public assembly. She should not forget that these conventional courtesies are not her right any farther than they choose to concede them.

For an unfledged clerk to think that he must buy extravagant gloves and cravats for every festival occasion, because Jones, whose father is worth thirty thousand dollars, does so. The best way of proving his manhood would be to leave such things entirely alone.

For a girl to stay away from a party because she has worn all her dresses and can't have a new one. Isn't it something akin to discontent for her imagine that people have nothing to do but to think about her dresses.

For a man to be extra fastidious about cologues, diamond finger rings, and scented pocket handkerchiefs, and then set society at defiance with his cigar case and tobacco-box.

For a girl to think that she is establishing her character as a young lady of fashion, by allowing her mother to toil through all the drudgery of the house, and then investing her money in gaudy broaches and artificial flowers.

For a man to suppose himself a gentleman because he touches his hat to a party of spendidly dressed young ladies, while he scorns to lend a helping hand to the woman struggling across the street.

For a simple working girl to buy imitation jewlry, because her wealthy neighbor spends a small fortune in the real.

For an elderly young lady to think she renews her bloom by dressing in the style of sixteen, with pink roses in her bonnet and carmine roses on her cheeks.

For an old bachelor to attempt to darn his own stockings without a good stock of patience, or to venture where there are a dozen pretty girls.

JOKING WITH A BARBER.

Stopping for a day or two at a village a short way from Boston, Jeems went to a barber's to get shaved. On entering, and casting his eye about the room, he perceived that the barber drove a double trade of tonsor and small grocer.

"Shave, sir?" said the barber to his customer, whose face sufficiently indicated the object of his visit.

Jeems made no reply, but drawing himself up to a lofty height, proceeded, in the attorney fashion, to interrogate the barber as follows:

"Sir, you are a barber?"

"Yes, sir; have a shave?"

"And do you also keep this oyster cellar?"

"Yes, sir; have any oysters?"

"Well, sir, this occupation of yours gives rise to the most horrible suspicions. It is a serious thing to submit one's head to the manipulations of a stranger; but if you can answer a couple of questions to my satisfaction I should like to get shaved."

The barber said he would try.

"Well, sir," said Jeems solemnly, "do you shave with your oyster-knife?"

"No, sir," said the barber, smiling.

"One question more," continued the interrogator, "and remember that you are under an oath, or rather, recollect that this is a serious business, (the barber started) one question more; do you never open oysters with your razor?"

"No, sir!" exclaimed the barber, indignantly, amid a roar of laughter from the bystanders.

"Then shave me," said Jeems, throwing himself into the chair, and untying his neck-cloth with the air of a man who has unshaken confidence in human nature.

A GREAT SCARE.

The Indian scare at Horicon, a few days since, has had no parallel, as a laughable farce, since the frogs of Windham. There is a settlement of some one hundred Indian twelve miles north of Horicon, in the populous country of Dodge—the feeble remant of the once proud Winnebago tribe. They are naturally peaceable, and would never be otherwise were it not for the interference of "pale faces" and the evil influence of fire-water. It seems that a Dutchman killed an Indian's pony. The Indian was mad; and as whiskey worked within him he became sanguinary in his disposition. He sought out the Dutchman, and threatened to kill him. The latter, terrified at the demonstration, rushed headlong toward the town, alarming the neighbors, who, as they spread the word from one to another, magnified it by degrees until it had increased first to the murder of a whole family, then to the massacre of a community, and finally—most singular of all—to the uprising of eight hundred Indians for the slaughter of all Horicon! It is strange that the good people of Horicon swallowed the greatest story, and were themselves seized with this senseless panic. But that they did is now history, and may only be accounted for on the ground that "Madness ruled the hour." A moments reflection would have shown them that an irruption of Fejee Islanders was quite as likely as eight hundred wild Indians. They armed themselves, and telegraphed the alarm all over the country. Milwaukie was called upon for munitions of war, and the astonished officials, who forwarded them, could solve the strange problem in no other way than that the Horicon telegraph operator was drunk. Armed men arrived at Haricon from all the neighboring towns. Not less than twenty came from the town of Hartford, twenty miles distant. Within twenty-four hours the streets of Horicon were alive with the preparations of defence; and not till then, when fully five hundred citizens had shouldered their rifles, was it discovered that the Indians were quietly making their baskets at New England settlement, with no thought of scalp or scalping-knives, and that nobody had been or was likely to be hurt! And so ended the Indian scare.

A PREACHER'S ADVICE.—Lorenzo Dow once closed a discourse with the following language, which is as singular for its quaintness as practical in its advice:—"I want you, my young sinners, to kiss and get married, and devote your time to morality and money-making. Then let your home be provided with such necessaries and comforts as piety, pickles, pots and kettles, brushes, brooms, and benevolence, bread, virtue, wine and wisdom. Have these always on hand, and happiness will be with you. Do not drink anything intoxicating, eat moderately, go about business after breakfast, lounge a little after dinner, chat after tea, and kiss after quarrelling. Then all the joy, the peace and bliss this earth can afford, shall be yours until the grave closes over you, and your spirits are borne to a brighter and happier world.

A man in La Cross, Wis., a few days ago, rushed to the river swearing that he would drown himself. When he had waded in to the depth of his waist, his wife, who followed him, seized him by the hair, and then, as a local editor describes it, "she led him back till they reached a place where the water was about two feet deep, where she pulled him over backwards, soused him under, and pulled his head up again. "Drown yourself"—(down he went)—"leave me to father the brats"—(another plunge)—"get drunk"—(another souse)—"and started for the river"—(another dip)—"better use rot-gut"—(another dip and shake of his head)—"I'll larn ye to leave me a widow, and all the men at the war!" After sousing him to her heart's content she led him out a wetter if not a better man, and escorted him into the house and closed the door."

A good story is told of a rustic youth and a country girl, who sat facing each other at a husking party. The youth smitten with the charms of the beautiful maid or vented his passion in sly looks, and now and then touching Patty's foot under the table. The girl, determined to make the youth express what he appeared so very warmly to feel, bore with these advances a little while in silence, when she cried out, "look here, if you love me why don't you say so, but don't dirty my stockings."

A good anecdote is related of a well-known vagabond who was brought before a magistrate as a common vagrant. Having suddenly harpooned a good idea, he from a capacious pocket of his tattered coat a loaf of bread and half a dry codfish, and holding them up with a triumphant look and gesture to the magistrate, exclaimed:—"You don't catch me that way! I'm no vagrant. Ain't them visible means of support.

A drunken lawyer, on going into church, was observed by the minister, who addressed him thus: "I shall bear witness against you at the day of judgment." The lawyer shaking his head with drunken gravity, replied: "I have practiced five years at the bar, and have always found that the greatest rascal is the first to turn State's evidence."

NEW SONG.—"How do you like the clam song?" asked an old lady of her daughter as they stepped into the street after a popular concert.

"Clam song!" exclaimed the young lady in astonishment. "Why, what do you refer to, mother?"

"Why, the first one she sung."

"Oh! you mean Shells of the Ocean, don't you, mother?"

"Well, yes," said the old lady, "I do think that was it; it was something about clams, any way, and you know I do like them so well. Didn't you like it?"

"Mr. Smith, you said you once officiated in a pulpit; do you mean that you preached?"

"No, sir, I held the light for the man that did."

"Ah, the court understood you differently. It understood that it came from you."

"No, sir! I only throwed a little light upon it."

"No levity, Mr. Smith. Crier, wipe your nose and call the next witness."

QUAKER'S QUERY.—"Obadiah," said a venerable elder to his grandson, "thou knowest it is against the discipline of the society to of Friends to fight."

"Yes, grandfather."

"Is that shooting thing in thy hands a rifle?"

"Of course it is, do you think I would have any other."

"I'm told that it is the best kind; now thee must take it right out of thy grandfather's sight."

At an evening party, lately, a young man from England was boasting of the pedigree, wealth, and importance of his ancestors.

"Oh, yes," said Sam H., "your father and mine spent part of their lives together."

"Where was that?" sharply inquired the other.

"Pap, I planted some potatoes in our garden," said one of the smart youths of this generation to his father, "and what do you think came up?"

"Why, potatoes, of course."

"No, sir-ee! There came up a drove of hogs and ate them all. The "old man gin in."

A lady who was taken suddenly ill, became almost immediately delirious. Her husband was sent for. He went into the room, and the doctor said to him:

"She will not know you—her senses are gone entirely."

The sick woman looked up and said, "Ah! I know what you want; make him a glass of warm toddy!"

"Pooh," said the husband, "she's not delirious at all—she talks quite rational."

MISCELLANEOUS.

MRS. WINSLOW'S

SOOTHING SYRUP.

Every mother should be prepared to act in the capacity of both nurse and physician to her children she can, if she will, discharge these duties much better than any one she can employ. If she does not, she ought to know that there is a Medicine prepared by an old nurse and female physician which has stood the test of many, many years, and is the most perfect thing on earth for children teething; it also cures Wind Colic, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, and is sure to regulate the bowels. We say to every mother, do not le your own prejudices, or the prejudices of others stand in the way of the relief that will be sure—yes, absolutely sure—to follow the use of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP certainly does, as the name implies, "soothe" the little sufferer into a quiet, natural sleep, from which it awakes invigorated and refreshed. And for the cure of diseases incident to the period of teething, such as Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Wind Colic, &c., we have never seen its equal.

We have always been, and still are, opposed to the practice of drugging infants. This article has no deleterious effects whatever, and from our own experience (we speak advisedly) we have every confidence in it, and can heartily recommend it to all mothers. Take our advice—use it—and you will as strongly recommend it to others as we have to you.

When we say that MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP acts like a charm, we do but reiterate the language of every person who ever used it for their children, for all diseases incident to the period of teething, such as Dysentery and Diarrhœa, Wind Colic and Cholera Infantum. It will produce quietude and rest, relieve all suffering, and the infant will awake invigorated and refreshed, and not with the dull and stupefying effects of preparations of opium.

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the excruciating pain of cutting teeth? If so, go at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately—depend upon it; there is no mistake about it. There is not a mother on earth who has ever used it who will not tell you at once that it will regulate the bowels, and give rest to the mother and relief and health to the child, operating like magic. It is perfectly safe in all cases, and pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States.

During the thirty years of unprecedented and increasing popularity of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP, innumerable "CORDIALS" and other nostrums, prepared by pretended M.D.'s, have sprung up and lived but a mushroom existence, the SOOTHING SYRUP has been constantly increasing in popularity, and become a household word, and for the health of their children, by the use of her invaluable article.

THOUSANDS OF MOTHERS THANK

MRS. WINSLOW

PRICE 20 CENTS PER BOTTLE.

For sale by

THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St., N.Y

TIME, MONEY, AND LABOR SAVED,

BY USING

B. T. BABBITT'S

SUPERIOR FRENCH

CHEMICAL ERASIVE SOAP,

Made and improved by the ORIGINAL INVENTOR of the German and Austrian Chemical Erasive or Detersive Soap, of which the real and genuine article has, since its first introduction to the American public, been most favorably known, as the Best and Cheapest Washing Soap in the market, and with the present improvement, which is not known to any other manufacturer, we CHALLENGE THE WORLD to produce a better article.

1. One pound of it will accomplish as much as three pounds of any other soap.

2. But one quarter the time and labor are required to do the same amount of washing, as with the best of family soap.

3. It does not injure the most delicate fabric; will tend to set the colors, and wash cleaner than any other soap in use.

4. Clothes need no boiling, and but little rubbing with the hands, thus avoiding their wear upon the wash-board.

5. Paints, Grease, Tar, and stains of every description vanish as by magic, before its wonderful, searching, erasive powers.

6. It is invaluable to Machinists, Printers Painters, and all others using Inks, Oils, etc. for washing hands; it does not chap them (like other soaps,) but will cleanse and soften the skin.

7. It may be used in hard or soft water, and is adapted for use in all climates.

Put up in one pound bars, sixty bars in each Box.

For sale by the bar or box by

THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman Street.

MEDICAL.

THE BEST MEDICINES IN THE WORLD!!!

The following invaluable medicines may be obtained of

THOMAS HAMILTON, 48 Beekman St.

DR. CLARKE'S

VEGETABLE SHERRY-WINE BITTERS,

Are composed of Sarsaparilla, Dock-root, Rheubarb Thoroughwort, Dandelion, Prickly Ash, Bark, &c they should be taken not only in the Spring, but at all seasons of the year, as they operate directly on the liver, removing from it all coating of morbid matter, and restoring it to its normal action; also opening the bile ducts, causing the requisite flow of bile so essential to good health. Their influence upon the kidneys, also, is advantageously felt; at the same time they operate upon the blood, cleansing it from all impurity or taint of any kind. Humors of long standing are eradicated from the blood, thereby speedily curing jaundice, headache, weak stomach, sore eyes, nervousness, and other chronic diseases arising from impurity of the blood.

The palatableness of these bitters renders them agreeable to every one, and being composed entirely of vegetables, they may be used by all classes of people with safety.

Sold for the low price of 25 cents per pint bottle.

DR. CLARKE'S

SUGAR-COATED HERB PILLS.

These pills are made mostly from a valuable herb that grows on the proprietor's farm.

Warranted to cure Bilious Stomach, Bilious Bowels, Bilious Colic, Bilious Fever, and all diseases which arise from a bilious state of the system viz, Jaundice, Headache, Heartburn, Sour Stomach Liver Complaint, Weak Stomach, Pain in the Stomach, Costiveness, Loss of Appetite, and a host, of diseases too numerous to mention, as their number is legion.

Warranted to cure diseases peculiar to the female sex

Warranted at all times safe and efficient.

Waranted for a gentle family physic not to have an equral in America, operating without pain.

Warranted not to contain calomel, aloes, gamboge colocynth, or other drastic poisonous drugs, which always do the system more hurt than good, and by their continued use are sure to cause a derangemen of the liver, bring on costiveness, and its inevitable consequence, piles, and dyspepsia, and finally break down the constitution, and cause the victim to drag out a miserable existence. Touch not, taste not, handle not the wily poison. Your life is your own,—preserve it. Take a simple herb, sure in its effects, but safe and pleasant,—no wrenching pains, no ill effects, and made pleasant to take by a fine coat of sugar. Children love them, ladies admire them, fools and wise men cannot do without them, doctors prescribe them,—and every body takes them. Yes, every body; from the honest farmer and mechanic to the most learned philosopher. And why? Simply because they are good, excellently good; and will do you good.

PRICE, 25 CENTS PER BOX.

DR. CLARKE'S COUGH AND CROUP SYRUP.

It is the most wonderful, effective and extraordinary medicine for the lungs ever used by man. It is perfectly safe and pleasant to take, and gives relief immediately. Thousands have been cured by its use, and tens of thousands will be again. All who use it pronounce it to be the best lung remedy ever discovered. Common coughs and colds are dispelled by the use of only a few doses, and children can be cured of croup at once if taken in its first stage. Long-standing diseases require perseverance, but a cure will be guaranteed. No medicine before ever possessed such excellent healing and curative power for the lungs. It seems, with almost magic power, to dispel the most severe cases of cough and throat ail.

Vocalists and public speakers should not fail to keep a bottle on hand at all times. A small quantity taken occassionally renders the voice beautifully clear and the lungs extremely strong. Words cannot fully express the great benefit to be derived from the use of the world-renowned remedy. Delay not, but procure a bottle at once. Use it if needed and if not, keep it till necessity requires its use, as all, sooner or later, are overtaken by some unpleasant affection of the lungs or throat.

PRICE, 25 CENTS PER BOTTLE.

BOOKS.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE ANGLO-AFRICAN MAGAZINE, BOUND.

PRICE.—In half Morocco $1,25; half Morocco, gilt edges, $1.50. Muslin, $1.00

CONTENTS;

EMBELLISHMENT.—Portrait of Alexander Dumas.
MUSIC.—By A. J. R. Connor.
Apology.
A Statistical View of the Colored Population of the United States, from 1790 to 1850.
African American Picture Gallery.—Anon.
American Caste and Common Schools,—by J. Holland Townsend.
A Review of Slavery and the Slave Trade,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
A Good Habit Recommended,—by Sarah M. Douglass.
A Chapter in the History of the African Slave Trade,—by Edward W. Blyden
Anglo-Saxons and Anglo-Africans.—Anon.
A Word to Our People.
Blake; or the Huts of America,—by Martin R. Delany.
Books &c.
Civilization—Its Dependence on Physical Circumstances.
Colored American Patriots,—by Wm. C. Nell
Comets,—by M. R. Delany.
Citizenship—by James Mc'Cune Smith.
Claude Brihudas De Salas,—Selected.
Communication from N. Y. Society for the Promotion of Education among Colored Children.
Chess.
Dumas.—Alexander.
Effects of Emancipation in Jamaica, by Robert Campbell.
Fragments of Thought,—by D. A. Payne.
Fancy Sketches,—Anonymous.
Gone to God—Poetry—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
Intellectual Culture —by Robert Gordon.
In the Constitution of Man there exists a Religious Element,—by Robt. Gordon.
Lines—Poetry—by Grace A. Mapps.
Mrs. Partington and Mrs. Freshington.—Anon
Our Greatest Want,—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
Our Duty in the Conflict,—by J. Holland Townsend.
On the Fourteenth Query of Thos. Jefferson on Notes on Virginia.
On the Personality of the First Cause,—by Robt. Gordon.
Patrick Brown's First Love.
Poetry—Anonymous.
Selected Items.
Struggles for Freedom in Jamaica—by Robert Campbell.
The Attraction of Planets—by M. R. Delany
The German Invasion, by James M'Cune Smith
Trifles, by Mary A. S Cary.
The Coming Man—Poetry—by Wm. J. Wilson
The Educational Wants of the Free Colored People, by Martin H. Freeman.
Thomas L. Jinnings.
The Teacher and his Pupil—Poetry—by Wm J. Wilson.
Thoughts on Hayti, by James T. Holly.
The Successive Advances of Astronomy, by G B. Vashon.
The Oberlin Wellington Rescue, by J. Mercer Langston.
The Shadows of Intemperance,—by James Fields.
The Dying Fugitive—Poetry—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
The Anglo-African and the African Slave Trade.
The Two Offers, by Frances Ellen Watkins.
The Re-opening of the Slave Trade—Anonymous.
The First Colored Convention.
The Self-Redeeming Power of the Colored Races of the World,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
The Policy that we should Pursue,—by J. Holland Townsend.
The Education of the Colored People,—by Amos Gerry Beman.
The Great Conflict requires Great Faith,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
The Outbreak in Virginia.
The Sentinel of Freedom—Poetry,—by J. Sella Martin.
The Nat Turner Insurrection.
The Execution of John Brown.
The Anglo-African Magazine for 1860.
The Watering Places.—Anonymous.

Orders should be addressed to
THOMAS HAMILTON,
48 Beekman street,
New York

PUBLICATIONS FOR SALE BY
THOMAS HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE ANGLO-AFRICAN MAGAZINE, Bound,—Price—In half Morocco, $1.25; half Morocco, gilt edges, $1.50; Muslin, $1.00. CONTENTS: Embellishments—Portrait of Alexander Dumas. Music, by A. J. R. Conner. Articles by Bishop D. A. Payne, James M'Cune Smith, M. D., Prof. Geo. B. Vashon, Dr. Martin, R. Delany, Mrs. Sarah M. Douglass, Prof. Robert Campbell, Prof. Wm. J. Wilson, Rev. J. W. C. Pennington, D. D., Rev. J. Theo. Holly, Mrs. Frances Ellen Watkins Harper, Prof. M. H. Freeman, Rev. Edward W Blyden, Rev. Robert Gorden, Prof. Chas. L. Reason, Mrs M. A. Shadd Cary, Dr. James Fields, Rev. Amos Gerry Beman, Miss Grace A. Mapps Rev. J. Sella Martin, Wm. C. Nell, Esq. J. Mercer Langston, and J. Holland Townsend Esq.,

The Life of Captain John Brown
The Liberator of Kansas, and the Hero of Harper's Ferry. By James Redpath. An elegant 12mo. volume of 400 pages, illustrated and embellished with a superb Steel Portrait of the Glorious Old Man. Price $1.00.

My Bondage and My Freedom.
By Fredrick Douglass. One vol., 12 mo., 464 pp. Illustrated. Price $1.00, postage 22 cts.

Life of Jermain W. Loguen.
The great Underground Railroad King. Price $1.00.

The Martyrs and the Fugitive.
By the Rev. S H. Platt. A thrilling work on slavery and the slave trade, detailing the capture of a family in Africa by the slave-dealers, their fearful journey to the coast, the horrors of the "middle passage," their sale in America, and subsequent martyrdom; the slavery of their son, his terrible sufferings and perilous escapes. Sent, postpaid, upon the receipt of 38 cts.

Twelve Years a Slave.
The Narrative of Solomon Northrup, a citizen of New York, kidnapped in Washington City in 1841 and rescued in 1853, from a cotton plantation near Red River, Louisiana. Seven Illustrations, 336 pp. 12mo. Price $1,00, postage paid.

Our National Charters.
For the Millions. Including—1. The Federal Constitution of 1787-9. 2. The Articles of Confederation, 1787. 3. The Declaration of Independence, 1776. 4. The Articles of Associatian 1775. With notes showing their bearing on salvery, annd the relative powers of the State and National Governments. Also a summary of Legal Opinions collected from the highest authorities, is prefixed to the Constitution. An Appendix contains extracts from State Constitutions and Bills of Rights; Ordinance of 1787, excluding Slavery from the North-west Territory: also, Sentiments of the Revolutionary Fathers, &c. By mail, postage prepaid, single copy, 15 cts.; four copies, 50 cts.; nine copies $1,00.

The American Slave-Code,
In Theory and Practice: Its Distinctive Features Shown by its Statutes, Judicial Decisions, and Illustrative Facts. 430 pp., 12mo. Price 75 cts postage paid.

Unconstitutionality of Slavery.
By Lysander Spooner. In paper, 291 pp., 8vo Price 75 cts., or postage paid 86 cts.

Review of Lysander Spooner's Essay on the Unconstitutionality of Slavery.
By Wendell Phillips. Price 25 cts. Postage 5 Cts.

The Revelations of a Slave Smuggler.
Being the Autobiography of Captain Richard Drake, an African trader for fifty years, from 1807 to 1857. The work is handsomely illustrated, with graphic representations of scenes as they actually occur on the slave ships and on shore. Illustration No. 1 is a large cut, 16x23, representing a slave market on the Coast of Africa. Illustration No. 2 represents a scene in the Hold of a Slaver (middle passage). Then there is a large plate, giving views of a slave vessel betwen decks, regulation slave-deck, regulation packing, &c. The work is handsomely printed—contains one hundred large 8vo. pages, and is published at a price which places it within the reach of the masses—viz: 25 cents a copy. When sent by mail the postage (six cents must be added.

The Nat Turner Insurrection.
A full and reliable account. Copies will be sent to any address on the receipt of five cents.

Uncle Tom's Cabin.
By Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe. Two volumes in one. Price, $1,25.

The Kidnapped and Ransomed,
Being the personal recollections of Peter Still, and his wife, Vina, after forty years of slavery by Mrs. Kate E. R. Pickard, with an introduction by Rev. S. J. May, Illustrated. 12mo. cloth $1,25.

Gerrit Smith in Congress.
"Slavery has no right but to die!" A work of over 400 pages, containing all his speeches delivered in Congress; also, an accurate likeness. Price, only 80 cents per copy, and postage paid.

The Dream;
Or, the true history of Dea Giles's Distillery and Dea. Jones's Brewery. By George B. Cheever, D.D. Price per single copy 10 cents, $1 per doz. or $7 per hundred.

A Summer on the Carribbean Sea.
By J. Dennis Harris. With an introduction by Geo. William Curtis. Sent by mail on receipt of $1.

A Pilgrimage to my Motherland;
An account of a journey among the Egbas and Yorubas of Central Africa, in 1859-60. By Robert Campbell, one of the Commissioners of the Niger Valley Exploring Party; late in charge of the Scientific Department of the Institute for Colored Youth, Philadelphia; and member of the International Statistical Congress, London. Price, 63 cents. When sent by mail, the postage (10 cents) must be added.

Turner's (J. A) Cotton Planter's Manual,
Being a compilation of facts from the best authorities on the culture of cotton, its natural history, chemical analysis, trade and consumption, and embracing a history of cotton and the cotton gin. Price, $1. Postage, 15 cents.

The Manual of the Wardrobe.
00 large octavo pages, in paper, by Mrs. Pullan. Price, 25 cents. Sent, postpaid, upon receipt of the price. It comprises a thorough dissertation upon taste in dress, an explanation of the different kinds of stitches made in sewing, remarks upon the various kinds and qualities of fabrics used in the wardrobe, with complete directions for cutting and fitting all kinds of garments for women's and children's wear; the preparation of table, toilet and bed linen. Illustrated by nearly one hundred tofacrnsedett and mode s.

The Weekly Anglo-African.

"MAN MUST BE FREE!—IF NOT THROUGH LAW, WHY THEN ABOVE THE LAW."

VOL. I. NO. 11. NEW YORK, OCTOBER 12, 1861. PRICE FOUR CENTS.

The Weekly Anglo-African.
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY SATURDAY,
BY ROBT. HAMILTON,
No. 48 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW YORK.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
Two Dollars per year, or Four Cents per copy, payable on delivery.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.
Six Cents a line for the first insertion, and Three Cents for each subsequent insertion.
Notices of Births, Marriages, Deaths, Public Meetings, &c., inserted for twenty-five Cents provided they do not exceed five lines; if more than that, Five Cents for each additional line.
All communications for the paper must be addressed ROBT HAMILTON,
48 Beekman st. New York.

BETTER LATE THAN NEVER.

Life is a race where some succeed
While the others are beginning:
'Tis luck at times, at others speed,
That gives an early winning.
But if you chance to fall behind,
Ne'er slacken your endeavor,
But keep this wholesome truth in mind,
'Tis better late than never.

If you can keep ahead, 'tis well
But never trip your neighbor;
'Tis noble when you can excel
By honest, patient labor;
But if you are outstripped at last,
Press on as bold as ever;
Remember, though you are surpassed,
'Tis better late than never.

Ne'er labor for an idle boast
Of victory o'er another;
But while you strive your uttermost,
Deal fairly with a brother.
Whate'er your station, do your best,
And hold your purpose ever;
And if you fail to beat the rest,
'Tis better late than never.

Choose well the path in which you run,
Succeed by noble daring;
Then, tho' the last, when once 'tis won,
Your crown is worth the wearing.
Then never fret if left behind,
Nor slacken your endeavor,
But ever keep this truth in mind—
'Tis better late than never.

[Reported for the Anglo-African.]

SERMON BY REV. W. JOHNSON ALSTON.

The following sermon was preached in St. Philip's Church, in this city, on Thursday the 26th of September—on the NATIONAL FAST DAY—by the minister in charge, the Rev. William Johnson Alston; he hoping that the humble explanation and exhibition of the Divine Word may lead us all to right thought and action in this trying crisis through which we are passing:—

Isaiah, 58: 6, 7. "Is not this the fast that I have chosen to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? When thou seest the naked that thou cover him, and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?"

Beloved brethren and hearers, is not the question, viz: Why have we assembled ourselves together been and perhaps even now is struggling for audible—verbal expression? Feeling that such may be the case, we hasten to give what we deem to be a reasonable answer to the anticipated interrogation. And the first is, viz: That our Chief Magistrate, the President of the United States has been solicited by the unanimous voice of Congress, both of the Senate and House of Representatives, to proclaim and set forth a day of National Humiliation, Fasting and Prayer!

2nd. The Governor of the State of New York, coinciding with the expressed wish of the President, has called upon the loyal citizens to observe the same.

3d. That every citizen of our Modern Babylon might observe this fast, our Mayor has issued a proclamation requesting a strict observance of the day; and for this end he has sent a circular to all the heads of departments in the city, especially asking "that they will close their offices and shops to-day" (this we quote from a city paper).

4th. Our chief officer in the church—the Bishop—have sent a request to the clergy under his jurisdiction to open their churches for the observance of the fast, and also appointed the portions of Holy Scripture, &c., for the same—among which the 3d chapter of the prophecy of Jonah, which we read as the first lesson for this morning. The other lesson from the Old Testament is the 58th chapter of the prophecy of Isaiah, from which our text is taken.

Now this is done on the part of our National, State and Church Officers, viz: That it may be with us as a nation it was with the inhabitants of the great city of Nivevah who were threatened with destruction by reason of their great iniquity! Hence Jonah in obedience to the Heavenly Command exclaimed aloud within that city, viz: "Yet forty days and Nivevah shall be overthown! So the people believed God, and proclaimed a fast, and put on sackcloth from the greatest of them even to the least of them. And the king said "let man and beast be covered with sackcloth and cry mightily unto God; yea, let them turn every one from his evil way and from the violence that is in their hands."

And the king gave his reason for so doing, viz: "Who can tell if God will turn and repent, and turn away from His fierce anger, that we perish not!" Then as an evidence of the sincerity of their repentance we read in the verse following, viz: "And God saw their works, that they turned from their evil way; and God repented of the evil that He had said that He would do unto them; and He did it not!"

Now in this striking example of the Nivevites, we see the forbearance and long-suffering of God towards sinful people and nations, viz: that they are spared from impending Divine judgments on their timely and sincere repentance.

But the question may have arisen in the minds of not a few among ourselves, viz: Why should colored people in the loyal States] observe the fast? Here let us ask ourselves the question contained in the geography of our country, viz: "What forms the American Nation? the answer is the whole of the people of the United States."

Now this answer gives a reason for our observing the day—we are men! As colored citizens of the United States, we are, or should be, deeply interested in the struggle going on in the land, as we shall at once see by looking at the cause of the trouble—which is African Slavery—as now being fully admitted by all! The free people of color in the North, as a race, are identified with the enslaved, and we suffer by reason of that identification; because slavery has cursed every descendant of Africa, we all feel the weight of that curse upon us to-day, and that it will so continue until the shackles of the inhuman system are broken, and every man enjoy the heaven-born gift—Freedom!

But again, as colored citizens, we should be interested in the great National conflict now going on, because the signs of the times are ominous of good to the slave! They indicate that his galling chains and fetters are loosening and that the foundation of the brutal Institution (to master and slave) is giving way! and like the once giant of the forest (the oak) from the effects of age, incapacitated to stand the howling storm and wind, like a drunken man reels and rocks and is now ready to fall!—to which every colored man, woman and child, and also every true philanthropist, from the bottom of their heart can say, amen, amen!

Hence all men of every race should welcome the fall of slavery.

But do American citizens asks why?—we answer still in addition to what we have already, viz: Because the existence and continuance of African Slavery in America is contrary to the spirit and genius of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of these United States. The former is the foundation of the latter; therefore the same spirit pervades and breathes through both, and that spirit is seen in the following clause of the Declaration, viz: "We hold these truths to be self-evident,(so plain that the mere child may understand) that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

All men are created with an equal right to employ their faculties of body or of mind in such manner as will promote their own happiness either in the present or in the world to come. That every man has the right to use his own powers of body or of mind, in such manner as he will, provided he do not use them so as to interfere with the rights of his neighbor. And he, therefore, who for the gratification of his own pleasure places his fellow-man under any other conditions of existence is guilty of the most odious tyranny, and seems to me (says Mr. Wayland, in his Moral Philosophy) to arrogate to himself the authority of the most High God!

The system of slavery being contrary to the spirit and genius of the Declaration and Constitution of the United States, is there fore contrary to the views and designs of the framers of these instruments of freedom. Jefferson and Madison, as also the fathers of our country, including George Washington, their leader.

To get a true idea of the preciousness and worth of freedom, on the part of the fathers of our country, notice the force and effect of his words, who by them fired the breast and nerved the arms of his country men to break their fetters and cast off their yoke of bondage, viz: "As for me give me liberty or give me death!"

George Washington showed clearly what were his views on the subject of African Slavery, in that before his death, he was careful not to let death overtake him with his own and the responsibilities of others at the bar of judgment where men must give an account of the deeds done in the body while upon earth and be accordingly rewarded or punished, he made arrangements for the emancipation of all of his slaves.

Having been engaged in the holy war of freedom, and achieved a triumphant victory, he has left on the page of history his bright example concerning the enslaved.

And that example had, for a while, its proper and intended effect—State after State declared its slaves free, until the spirit by which Washington and the Revolutionary fathers were actuated by, died, and a spirit diametrically opposed, have taken its place, a spirit that craves to blight and curse the whole land!

As an evidence of this, to-day as a nation, we are in a state of rebellion and actual warfare.

All with unerring certainty may trace the origin of our present National troubles to that section of our dearly blood-bought country, where the children who have been nourished and brought up and protected by kind parents, have actually risen up against the Government and the holy principles upon which it was founded, viz: Religious, Political and Civil liberty—and doubtless but for a lack of true principle on the part of ourselves in the free States in going to combat with the enemy, the success which crowned the Revolutionary fathers, would have long ere this, been the heritage of the great Northern army.

But beloved brethren and hearers, let us not despair, but on the centrary, be encouraged to hold up our head that we may behold with joy the visible hand of Divine Providence in this matter.

From the long and uninterrupted existence of slavery in the land as a National Institution, we have become basely corrupted in morals; for our wealthy and influential citizens, in both sections of the country, (with some honorable exceptions) just previous to the fall of Sumter, were a unit on the subject of slavery, whereas to-day, contrary to the most distant expectations of both sections, we are divided and in battle array, each against the other. We are to-day suffering under one of the worse calamities that ever befell a nation, viz: At war with itself!

And He in whom we live and move, and have our being, has taken the matter into His own hands, because of the injustice of our rulers, both in the State and the Church. Hence He says to us by His servant, Jeremiah, viz., "A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land; the Prophets prophesy falsely, and the Priests bear rule by their means, and my people love to have it so; and what will ye do in the end whereof?"

And since our civil and religious authorities have failed to deal justly with their fellow-men, all of them, so as to conform and harmonize with the teaching with "the first and great commandment, to love the Lord our God with all the heart, mind and strength, and the second, which is like unto it: to love our neighbor as ourself.

The Almighty seemingly has taken the matter into his own hands to show that while He ordinarily makes use of men as humble instruments to accomplish His righteous ends upon earth, yet He is at the same time wholly independent of man. And, my hearers, to-day the American nation is convinced of this fact. We all, rulers and subjects, begin to realize that God exercises power over the affairs of heaven and earth.

We have an unmistakable evidence of this in the fact of our being assembled here, and the purpose for which we are gathered together, viz., at this very moment the loyal part of our Government are, as it were, bowed before heaven in "sackcloth and ashes!"

By this very act we acknowledge that we have sinned against God, and violated the laws of humanity. Our position is a becoming one, but oh, unless there is something more than form in this matter, unless our hearts are sincere, we but aggravate our guilt by attempting to mock him, to whom all hearts are open, all desires known, and from whom no secrets are hid. Let us remember that "Whatsoever a man sows, that shall he also reap." So that those words in the chapter from which our text is taken, may not be applicable to us, viz., "Behold ye fast for strife and debate, and to smite with the fists of wickedness; ye shall not fast as ye do this day to make your voice to be heard on high." But on the other hand may our hearts be in perfect harmony with the spirit and teaching of the text, viz., "Is not this the fast that I have chosen to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? When thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh!"

In the first place the plain and practical lesson to be learned from the text on the part of the now acknowledged Chief Magistrate and his constituents is, to declare the general act of Emancipation throughout the length and breadth of the country, so that the 4,000,000 of slaves may in the first place be brought to the liberty of manhood, physically and intellectually; so that, secondly, they may be brought to the liberty of the glorious gospel.

Again, the plain practical lesson taught by the second verse of the text seems to apply most happily to our rulers respecting their conduct towards the poor fugitive in his flight from oppression and chains, and panting and fainting for the glorious boon of freedom. The text warns us not to continue as we have been, and are at present doing, viz., seizing and rending him whom God has created in His own image, and after his likeness, back to his cruel oppressors; but on the contrary to supply his wants, to take him out of the position of a brute, and to place him in that of a rational and intelligent and accountable being, remembering that God has made of one blood all the nations that dwell on the face of the earth. Hence we all are brethren!

These, beloved, are the lessons which, if received and practically carried out, will redeem the nation from the threatened destruction, and soon we shall be entitled to the remark made respecting Great Britain and her West India emancipation, viz., "Time, which develops the freedom that act created, adds continually to its luster; and long after England's highest achievements in acts or in arms shall have been forgotten, this grant of liberty shall testify to the grandeur of her power, and to the magnanimity of her people."

Oh! nation threatened with ruin from on high hearken to, and for our salvation, comply with His words as seen in the text, where He seems to speak to our President and his loyal subjects, viz., "Is not this the fast that I have chosen to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke!"

And to encourage us so to do, He in the eighth verse tells us what will be the happy result, viz., "Then shall thy light break forth as the morning, and thy health shall spring forth speedily; and thy righteousness shall go before thee, the glory of the Lord shall be thy reward! then shalt thou call, and the Lord shall answer; thou shalt cry, and He shall say, Here I am."

Finally let us all bear in mind the solemn fact that no expressions of humiliation can make that man a true penitent who does not "loose the bands of wickedness!" That no man's faith justifies him which does not "work by love," and that he who loves God will love his brother also. Indeed the consciousness of our love for the whole human race, and especially those of the household of faith, this is to the Christian one of the unmistakable evidences of his acceptance with the Father, true discipleship with our blessed Saviour, and in communion with the Holy Ghost. If, therefore, we love our brother in the heaven-taught sense of the term, we shall not dare to enslave, or in any way wilfully or intentionally injure him, but on the other hand strive to elevate and do him good.

And, beloved, if we, as a part of the oppressed, have our hearts and minds conformed to the will of heaven and the spirit and teaching of the text, though we may not go personally into the field and heat of the battle, yet even here, and at our family altar, we may have power with Him in whose hands are the destinies of all things and all men.

Do you ask how? We answer—By humbling ourselves before Him in deep humiliation, fasting and prayer.

See the case of the children of Israel in their flight from their cruel oppressors in Egypt. Behold the effect of the prayer of Moses to God in their behalf. The enemy was in their rear; on either side were impassible barriers, and in front was the Red Sea! But in this dilemma Moses, their leader, cried unto God in prayer, and in answer to that faithful supplication the sea was divided, and a highway of escape was opened up for them!

See again the instance of St. Peter by his enemies cast into prison, and the time set for his execution, but the Church prayed for him, and in answer to which an angel came down from heaven and liberated him.

Lastly see the case of Paul and Silas in the prison at Philippi. At midnight they prayed and sang praises to the Most High God, and the foundations of the prison were shaken, their place of confinement was opened, their bands broken, and they were by Divine power liberated.

In our prayers let us remember the bond, as bound with them, to the glory of God, and their temporal and spiritual salvation for the Redeemer's sake, Amen!

TRIALS AND PERILS OF A BLACK SHOWMAN.

Having wandered a respectful distance from the more public thoroughfares, the Hudson river and the Hudson river railroad, to find as I might hope to do, audiences whose appetites were seldom feasted with the novelty of art or satiated with exhibitions of fancy; a casual glance as I entered the village of F———, at the primitively constructed buildings, and the predominance of that peculiar costume of German attire—a short gown and petticoat—assured me that was the place. A secluded and out-of-the-way one indeed, at the foot of the Catskill mountains, which, however, might have been taken for one at the foot of the Harz Gebirge in Germany. I found but little difficulty in getting a hall and an audience.

Elated with the success I had met the first night, and encouraging anticipations of greater the next, without further delay, I sought and obtained accommodations with a respectable colored family, and retired early with visions of quarters, shillings and dimes flitting before my excited imagination the whole night long. Welcome intruders pressed on every side, money gingled in every pocket, and glistened between delicate fingers, until all that could had gained admission. My only regret was, that, not so many persons—but so many shillings should be left outside.

The scenes I exhibited were "Uncle Tom's Cabin," naturally calculated to excite, but doubly more so, when aided by the additional influence the hope of gain inspires. My debut, I was assured, was a happy and successful one. "The lecture," said the village parson, "was excellent."

With these impressions of passed success, and the hope of future, without further preparation or posting, I had concluded to indulge the privilege of enjoying my repose, until a late hour, as I was weary and fatigued from constant travel and excessive labor. It was in August and I disencumbered myself of every garment but one, and drew the sheet over my face to exclude the light from a crevice in the window. My sleep then seemed sweeter and sounder than ever. Yet still I was not oblivious to essential precautions. As the crowd pressed with their quarters, shillings and dimes I urged them (I thought,) to be patient—not to push the door down. Still they increased, and insisted on being at once admitted, and pressed the harder. Each fearing he might be left out, and each striving to get in first. Bang, bang, bang went a dozen weapons in the hands of determined and anxious boys. I sprang (I thought,) just as the door gave way before them to arrest their progress and receive the charge.

The spring awoke me, and sure enough there I stood confronting a crowd of a dozen or so of women, young and old, armed and equipped, and in the most hostile and defiant attitude. The effect of this transition was beyond conception. Instead of a crowd of smiling and pleasing countenances, and money gingling in full pockets, and between delicate fingers, there actually stood a crowd whose features were distorted with rage, and each grasping firmly some rude weapon of ancient and uncivilized warfare which each manifested both the determination and the capacity to use, I cannot say without ceremony, for it seemed all ceremony on their part, and all seemed to be taking a part in it, by the use of the most incomprehensible gingle I ever heard. I gazed astounded, and affrighted. I was not only speechless but dead; yes dead in the literal acceptation of that lifeless term. So I concluded it was the only reasonable solution I could give of my condition, and the new order of things around me. So I began as far as I had the power of concentration of thought to exercise it systematically and logically in the investigation of my case.

First.—Who am or who was I?

Ans.—Was A. B., am now (I expect,) his spirit!

Second.—Where am I?

Ans.—Must be in one of the spheres of the spirit world!

Third.—How come I here, or when did I die?

Ans.—Didn't die, must have got killed, run over by the railroad, or blown up by a steamboat!

Who are these, (not in white with palms in their hands) but in short gowns and petticoats and broom-sticks, tongs, pokers, &c. in their hands?

Ans.—The inhabitants of one of the spheres. It is not the infernal [illegible] it heaven.

During these instantaneous [illegible] and conclusions, though [illegible] the rapidity of spiritual powers, the babble and gabble was going on, accompanied with all kinds of menaces, grimaces and wry faces, and hostile demonstrations.

I said nothing, I could say nothing, I was speechless. I was unquestionably dead, and it appeared doomed too, and the sentence about to be executed. But how did I get killed? again thought I, between my shivers and shakes. Let us see (as I retreated,) I left "Schynowhatopeck" in the train yesterday at 4 o'clock, P. M. I know I did; paid the fare, fifty cents—know I did. Arrived at 2—know I did. Exhibited and lectured—know I did. Took in nine fifty—know I did, for I counted it over nine times; have got it in my pocket under the pillow—know it is, or was. Put up with an old colored lady in G Street—can't think of her name. That's nothing. How can I—strange—aint acquainted. Went to bed at eleven—know I did. Let us see. Have I been run over? is any bones broke? gesticulated with arms and feet, made faces, spit on the floor, winked, scratched my head, and made all kinds of manœuvres and contortions to discover the masticated member, but in vain. Must have died in a fit, then thought I. Never was mortal in such a critical dilemma. Ah! but am I a mortal? was the question I was trying to settle before I could determine on the propriety of prayer, the last resort of mortals. I indicated by a complacent and indifferent smile that (if dead) I had been sent to the wrong place; and also indicated by motion that I was quite aware of the fact, but that I was only passing through to a much higher one. But this seemed but to increase their dissatisfaction, and confirm them in the determination to deal out to me the punishment of those in that sphere.

They all seemed to say the same thing at the same time, and a dozen things at the same time, and approached me in as many directions, with as many uplifted weapons. While there I stood naked, dead and doomed. When killed? how killed? or by whom must be left to future consideration. My doom, however, seemed certain and inevitable. Just as I yielded to receive it, some one seemed to have made a discovery. All hands with exultation instantly sprang at the box containing my exhibiting apparatus and sheet or canvas on which I exhibited, and instantly tore the latter from the box, on seeing which all instantly sprang at me with imprecations, and I instantly shrank under the bed with the ease and rapidity of a spirit, as I thought I was. But the expectation of the surprise that drew them to the box proved a disappointment. They thought they had discovered what they sought; but they had not, and again instantly surrounded me under the bed, and by a most fierce and vigorous assault, front and rear, and sides as well, with pokers, broomsticks, tongs, &c., compelled me to come out. But O, dear! I made an ineffectual attempt to fly. Then I tried to become invisible, but I could perform none of those mysteries that spirits are supposed to be capable of. Then I thought I might be in purgatory, where spirits are not in possession of their full powers. The Romanist may be right after all.

But I had no time to settle this solution neither by fact nor philosophy. After emerging from my place of retreat, one of the persons or spirits made another instantaneous movement right at me. I certainly came very near flying this time. She caught hold of and elevated to my armpits, the only garment I had on. It now, for the first time, suggested itself to me that something was lost, and I was supposed to have it. During all this time, which, though was but a few moments, a young man who entered or came to the door with them, yet remained in the door as stern and as unmoved as a statue, was now seen to bite his lips evidently to suppress laughter. This I saw, and I looked at him imploringly. He smiled visibly and expressively. Never did the assenting smile of lover afford such relief as that smile did to me. I spoke for the first time, I had seen him over night and knew he spoke good English.

"For God sake, Mr.," said I, "what's the matter?"

He laughed outright, as if he would burst. The features of all were instantly changed. Then he spoke for the first time, "Aunt Betty has lost her smock." (German for undergarment.)

"My God," said I, "I have not got [illegible] Schmock, schmock, I don't know [illegible] schmock is; tell 'em so, won't you? [illegible] quick, do.

He was yet roaring with [illegible] patiently waited on their [illegible] ley should terminate.

"Well," he [illegible] [illegible] most solemn manner that I was innocent—that I had not "Aunt Betty's schmock," never seen Aunt Betty's schmock, and did not know what a schmock was. It now occurred to me that when I first woke in the morning, just after light, on going to close more closely one of the shutters, I saw a New York German rag-picker in the yard. This fact I mentioned to the young man, and he in German communicated it to them. The siege was instantly raised; all at once started in the direction I pointed, and left me there as I had been all this time with nothing on but my shirt.

Trembling and shaking I drew on my clothes, and followed to see the fun.

He was soon overhauled in one of the lanes leading out of the village. On seeing them he certainly must have apprehended their designs. But nothing daunted, he made ready for battle, against such fearful odds by facing about so as to afford protection to his rear, and placed himself in the most hostile and defiant attitude. Without farther preparation or parley hostilities commenced. Broomsticks, pokers, tongs, the ready weapons of women-fighters fall thick and fast, and rattled in terrible confusion over the head and shoulders of the poor, ill-fated rag-picker. His only weapon was his gutter-hook, too light and too short for effective service. Some of the younger women not insensible to the advantages of a rear insult, scaled the fence and got hold of his bag as it swung from his shoulders, and pressed him close against the fence. Finding his arms confined by the pulling on the bag, he threw them up to relieve himself, which effort caused the strap to slip up around to his throat. By this strategical manœuvre of the girls in the rear, and the fierce assault in front, there was no alternative but unconditional surrender a prisoner of war, and suffer himself to be sacked. The latter, therefore, was made to disgorge its ill-gotten contents, viz., three undergarments, seven house-cloths, two old bedquilts, three dead cats, two short gowns, five petticoats, and any number of old socks, dish-rags and other rags too numerous to mention; a claimant for each of which appeared as they were dragged forth; each dealing the poor half-dead rag-picker a severe blow as the just reward of unsuccessful plunder.

It is needful to say that I was entirely exonerated and restored to confidence.

BARNUM.

[For the Anglo-African.]

A VISIT TO MONTROSE, PENNSYLVANIA.

MR. EDITOR:—

I arrived in this beautiful village on the 26th ult., and preached twice on the Sabbath to large congregations. We had truly a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Our people here appear to be in a pretty good condition, many of them by industry and economy have succeeded in accumulating considerable property. Mr. Edmund Bacon keeps a first class grocery store, and is doing business on quite an extensive scale. He also owns several very fine houses. Mr. William Wares is carrying on a soap and candle factory, and is doing an extensive business, and is the owner of a large and commodious dwelling. Mr. Edward Williams is a miller by trade, and has been quite successful in business—he owns three very handsome dwellings. Mr. William Smith is a first class plasterer, and is doing a fine business. Messrs. Washington & Dorsey are moulders in Mr. Sear's foundry, and have constant employment. Mr. Singer is a blacksmith, and is considered an excellent workman. There is considerable real estate owned by Messrs. Hammond, Gilmore, Bowie, Stout, Nelson, Dorsey and others. Messrs. Charles Morris, Jackson, Lacy, William [illegible] wife and four children left here on the [illegible] ult., for Hayti—several others talk of [illegible] next month.

There are two colored [illegible] Churches, namely, Zion and [illegible] appear to be in a [illegible] The colored public [illegible] white lady, and is [illegible] dition.

There are [illegible] Order of [illegible]

[illegible]

Montrose, Pa., Oct. [illegible]

The Weekly Anglo-African.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 12, 1861.

☞ Advertisements for this paper must be accompanied by the cash.

☞ Copies of this paper can be purchased of the news-dealers everywhere.

A NOBLE PROPOSITION.

ROBERT HAMILTON Esq.,

Dear Sir:—I congratulate you at the appearance once more of the Anglo-African,—a paper that gained, for the time it existed, more prestige than any other that had preceded it.

Now sir, the glorious question is, "Shall it live? I call it glorious, from the immense importance of the hour that is now upon us.

It will live if we bring our patriotism, our love for the truth, not to a boiling, but a moderate heat. Let each brother and sister, father and child, do what they can—take stock in it at a fair premium. The premium to be paid in Hallelujahs when its work as a Journal for Freedom is over.

Sir, I propose to unite with some in investing Five Dollars to begin with; what will others answer? I propose no plan upon which it is to be paid, but leave that to your better judgment—but I suppose you need the money as soon as you can get it, I therefore pay immediately. Now who will be the next customer,—if not for five, for four—for three—for two—for one! for fifty cents? Keep in remembrance, friends, that this stock pays glorious in-premiums, however small be the investment. Yet you must still remember, that greater the investment, more glorious the premium!

Now sir, I believe I have said enough: perhaps more than enough—for, after all, all that is requisite is but for the people to know your need, and they are ready to nobly respond.

Yours in behalf of the good cause,

J. N. GLOUCESTER.

The following are responses to the above proposition, including Mr. Gloucester's subscription:

J. N. Gloucester.	$5
H. Highland Garnet.	1
Henry M. Wilson,	1
Ezekiel H. Dias,	1
"A Friend,"	1
Robert H. Vandyne,	1
Miss Susan Tindall	1

Memorial of the People to Congress.

"PROCLAIM LIBERTY THROUGHOUT ALL THE LAND, TO ALL THE INHABITANTS THEREOF."

To the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned, citizens of ———, State of ———, respectfully submit—

That as the present formidable rebellion against the General Government manifestly finds its root and nourishment in the system of chattel slavery at the South; as the leading conspirators are slaveholders, who constitute an oligarchy avowedly hostile to all free institutions; and as, in the nature of things, no solid peace can be maintained while the cause of this treasonable revolt is permitted to exist: your honorable body is urgently implored to lose no time in enacting, under the war power, the total abolition of slavery throughout the country—liberating unconditionally the slaves of all who are rebels, and, while not recognizing the right of property in man, allowing for the emancipated slaves of such as are loyal to the Government a fair pecuniary award, as a conciliatory measure, and to facilitate an amicable adjustment of difficulties; and thus to bring the war to a speedy and beneficent termination, and indissolubly to unite all sections and all interests of the country upon the enduring basis of universal freedom.

We copy the above petition from the ANTI-SLAVERY STANDARD, and congratulate our friends of the old organization for the getting up of this highly practical and important measure. We join them with all our heart, soul and might, in the endeavor to obtain signatures to this excellent petition.

Every name attached to it is a death-blow at the heart of slavery. If signed by a hundred thousand petitioners, Congress will notice it, if by five hundred thousand, Congress will respect it, if signed, as it should be, by two millions of persons some shrewd man will attain the glory of introducing the bill to declare IMMEDIATE EMANCIPATION, and it will pass by a large majority. If the President signs it, well, if he refuse, it will be passed over his veto!

Here then is anti-slavery and anti-rebellion work directly before us. Every man, woman and child can strike a blow: there will be no rejection on account of color: a black man's signature is as good as a white man's, and will strike slavery just as severely. Getting signatures to this petition is especially our work. If they will not let colored men use the arm of flesh against slavery, let us show them our devotion by pressing the less potent arm of peaceful petition. We may thus keep it before the people that we are alive and in earnest about this war: that we seek the way and follow it, by which we can be of the greatest service to our country. It is meet and right that we should seek the emancipation of our brethren in bonds.

However much disposed to find fault with the Government for its pro-slavery conduct, we must remember that it has hitherto been surrounded almost exclusively by pro-slavery influences. The President was born in a slave State, and only escaped being a slaveholder by the providential poverty of his parents. He is from one of the lowest, most God forsaken classes in all the country—the poor whites of the slave States. His Cabinet are either slaveholders or were born, and to a large extent, brought up in slave States, and the crooked ways of politics, by which they gain power and place, has engrafted slavery-worship into the very marrow of each one of them. It is expecting little less than a miracle, nay the greatest of miracles, if we look for anti-slavery acts from such men. We might as well expect moles to see with their sightless germ-orbs.

This President, however, and his Cabinet can be made to hear. The mighty voice of an aroused people calling for Immediate Emancipation would awaken a new and stronger sensation than Parrot guns or rifled cannon. Even the icy heart of Seward would be touched as with fire, would swell up with the finest apostrophe to liberty ever dressed in words. Let us to work, then brethren, while it is yet day, cut out the memorial from our paper, paste it on a sheet of paper, sign it yourself, and call upon your neighbor to do likewise. Let us work while it is yet day, for unless this emancipation be proclaimed, the night cometh, the night of slavery, dark, terrible overshadowing this and many following generations.

This vs. That.

GENERAL BUTLER writes in behalf of the "contrabands," and he is genteelly cashiered into a department (New England) where neither war nor slaves are likely to be troublesome.

GENERAL FREMONT proclaims emancipation to the slaves of rebels, and he is snubbed by the President, and the pipe is laid which will inevitably lay him upon the shelf.

COMMODORE STRINGHAM gives emancipated slaves a chance to work a gun against slaveholders at Hatteras Inlet, and he is turned out of his command (after a victory gained) and is replaced by a Marylander, whose command is at once distinguished by two great gifts of arms and medicines to the enemy, one by capture and the other by running the blockade.

Per Contra.

GENERAL MCCLELLAN announced his willing- to put down slave-insurrections in Western Virginia, and he is made virtually Commander-in-Chief of the army of the United States

GENERAL BANKS returns fugitive slaves across the Potomac, and he is ranked Major General, and civilian that he is, is kept in a most important post in the army.

COLONEL DURYEA sends back fugitive slaves from Baltimore, and he is advanced to the rank of Brigadier General.

We Should Not Drill.

MR. EDITOR,

In your issue of the 5th inst. the "leader" advocates zealously and intelligently the great necessity now existing for our people to "prepare for war," by our young men organizing themselves into military companies for the purpose of drill; which is all very well, provided we can get arms, ammunition and accoutrements, at this trying time, for the government is unable to supply the pressing needs of the white troops now in the field.

But, if every arsenal in the country was filled to repletion with arms, &c., I would most humbly yet determinedly demur to our young men organizing for the purpose of drill, until we compel our white brethren to remove all obstacles now in the way of our gaining more thorough scientific and mechanical knowledge; for what would appear more droll, or excite greater well-deserved ridicule than a Broadway parade of a regiment of our young men armed with all the implements of warfare, and not two in the whole regiment understanding the process of manufacturing a fire-arm, an accoutrement, or even the simple ammunition.

But it is infinitely of greater importance that we strain every energy to drill our young men into habits of sobriety, frugality, chastity and economy that they may attain to wealth, education and unity, that they may acquire force of character, positions of influence and the high standard of self-respect, that they may develop enterprise, talent, and other exemplary traits of character, and that they may all practically prove day by day that their highest unswerving hopes lie within a life of truth and righteousness.

Men make soldiers, ergo, the best type of men must make the best soldiers. When the exigency overtakes us, in which we will need our young men as soldiers, we will require the bravest and most intelligent: for the cause which we will be called to defend will be as much more sublime and holier than the war of our Revolutionary Fathers, as that was in comparison to the present pro-slavery rebellion.

Our army then must be of the most perfect physical, intellectual, and moral soundness and purity, and to aid in attaining to that high standard of all excellence we should all immediately lay hold with might and strength, not first to drill as military companies, but in the more important essentials, to the formation of character, so when in the Providence of God, the time comes when we must act, that we may be all fully prepared to do our part in totally annihilating the demon slavery, and all other unrighteous systems.

REC. IN CUR.

Newark, N.J., Oct. 7, 1861.

Letter of Daniel Fraser to Rev. Dr. Pennington, and Reply Thereto.

NEW LEBANON, N. Y., Sept. 4, 1861.

Respected Friend—

I have learned (through the public prints) that a society has been formed in New York with the view of forming a colony in Africa. If I have a correct idea of the purposes of that society, its members seek the extinction of slavery and the foreign trade thereof. With many others, I greatly desire that all efforts to give every human soul a right to its own body, will be successful, and if I rightly judge of the signs of the times, providential agencies are at work with more than ordinary energy to that effect, against various phases of human vassalage.

Feeling much interest in your projected colony, I hope you will bear with me in offering a few suggestions relative thereto. I have learned that in transplanting a tree there may be a good head and a straight, fresh looking stem, yet if the roots are not in proportion, and are denuded of their ramifications, the tree may possibly live in a low degree, but it will be greatly exposed to die. In planting a colony the case is similar in a higher degree. A great many tender roots of feeling and ties of association are broken up, therefore it is needful to exercise great care for those that remain. The ~~life and~~ prosperity of a community is much dependent on the tender ties which connect its members; hence during the process of transplanting, I would suggest that persons of fatherly and motherly tendencies gather up and protect the tender sensibilities of the intended colonists, particularly while at sea, so that when planted the fruit of the young colony may blossom effectively, and have a favorable effect on the surrounding communities. If my feelings are correct, Africa will be best won through her effections. A little self-sacrifice, or a little self-seeking, on the part of the founders of the colony, will go a great way for good or for evil.

No doubt the attention of the colonists will, with as little exception as possible, be directed the first year to the raising of food, so as to render the people mostly independent of foreign supplies. Spare no pains to make labor honorable; the leading men and women can do so if they will; those who cannot do much can do a little—can cultivate at least one patch of beans, or other life-sustaining plants; the boys and girls should also be encouraged to do the same; and if each of them should raise half a bushel of Lima beans the first season, it would have a good effect upon them to reward them with a fruit tree for planting near their home. Boys from ten to fourteen, if their labor is properly directed, can maintain themselves and pay for their education. If you succeed in rendering labor honorable in your colony, it will be of immeasurable benefit in all coming time, and will go a great way towards abolishing slavery in Africa. Jesus taught his disciples to perform what is called menial offices. He took water and washed his disciples feet; in that water will be found the true solution of human vassalage. There is a continual tendency in all communities to form an upper crust; Jesus never recognized it. On the contrary He instituted the nobility of Heaven, to attain to which the great had to become little. As a beginning to that end, let your upper crust be those who pulverise the crust of well cultivated fields. Nothing can impart so healthy a tone to a young community as to know that they raise their own bread, and that they mean to do so, having faith in God, and in their own muscles and bones, to that effect. The people of Liberia suffered greatly by betaking themselves to buying and selling, and neglecting their land. Depend not on trade and commerce over much, but rather let trade and commerce depend on you, as they always have done and always will do, on those who raise their own food and can supply the wants of others.

No doubt the selection of food for your colony, till it can provide for itself, has occupied your attention, and that that which is suitable to the climate will be preferred. Europeans introduced into the West Indies, along with some other bad habits, salt pork, meats, fish, &c. The consequence is, that diseases which ought not to exist anywhere, obtain there among all classes. Correct physical and dietic habits are of more importance to individuals and communities than is generally accorded to them. In old settled countries hundreds and thousands may die from the effects of false dietic habits, and their place will soon be filled up. Not so in a colony; the death of a few important men may prove a serious loss; and a prevailing sickness would soon blast your fondest hopes. From many years attention to cases of disease, from lengthy personal experience and collected facts, embracing the habits of many nations, and animated with a desire for your success, I feel constrained to state that the nearer you can bring your people to living on parenaceous substances with suitable addition of fruit, the better it will be for them as regards health, clearness of intellect, and morality. And your young colonization people, if brought up on a plain unstimulating diet, I venture to assert, will exceed the boys and girls of New York in the use of letters and figures, and before them in morality, so far at least as passional emotions are concerned, and in being governed and trained to a life of sobriety and order.

It is of importance that an ample supply of field and garden seeds be on hand at the right time and place. In the shipment of seeds cause them to occupy an airy part of the vessel; and in packing seed take the packing-box to a tinsmith to be lined with tin, all the joints to be soldred, and when full, solder on the lid, and then nail up the box. A failure of seed would be a very serious and discouraging accident. And, when the ground is ready, I hope an abundant supply of yams, tanyas and sweet potatoes will be provided. The sweet potato is deserving of special notice; in eight weeks from planting a crop can be gathered, if planted according to the West India method. There the tuber is not planted to yield shoots to plant from, as is done in this country, but a piece of the stem merely is broken off and laid in the ground, a few inches being left out. This mode of planting has another advantage, viz., before the first crop is gathered other stems are furnished for planting. Yams are excellent food, but take a long time to perfect their crop; they will grow from a piece of any part of the tuber.

To maintain your cultivated land in a state of fertility will bye-and-bye call for attention. Nearly all the cultivated land in this country and in the West Indies, has been recklessly managed. Land which formerly yielded paying crops of sugar are now worthless for that purpose. This arises primarily from false conceptions of the uses to which land ought to be applied. Land has been sugared, tobaccoed and cottoned to destruction, to gratify the depraved appetites, tastes and whims of the so-called lords and ladies of creation, till it has become almost worthless. Land was given to be lived upon, and whatever is taken from it in the shape of food, should be returned as manure. Land so treated will increase in fertility, because the primary constituents of the soil do progress, providing it has rest occasionally. The Mosaic law enjoining rest for all cultivated lands at stated periods, was founded in the nature of things, and ought to be religiously observed. To rob land of its fertility is theft. There is a piece of land before me, at present, which has been under the plow for the last fifty years. I think I can safely affirm that, had it rested one year in seven, in forty-three years, the crops thereof would have been greater in bulk and better in quality, than those of the fifty continuous years. Hence there would have been a saving of seven years labor during that period. Land continually under the plow loses the mechanical condition favorable to fruitfulness, and insect life is thereby greatly increased also; very minute creatures attack the leaves of the tender plants, and sometimes a certain crop will be nearly destroyed; while the same kind of plants the same season on land less injudiciously treated, will yield a remunerative crop. Some plants are more subject to the attacks of insects than others; cotton is, I believe, one of them. In China two successive crops is as much as the land will bear.

It will be found advisable not to plant a great width of any one plant at first, rather let the colonists feel their way; slow but sure, is the voice of experience in agricultural matters. Neither is it advisable to grow any one plant, even if it be a food-yielding one, very exclusively; and if it is not food-yielding, the objection is still greater. Ireland depended on the potato, and her population was swept off by the million; Madeira cultivated the vine, and her people were beggared. Virginia cultivated tobacco, and where do we find her? breeding human beings for sale!!! and is at this moment drinking to the dregs the fiery cup herself has prepared—exhausted land, slavery, and civil war; and the end is not yet.

No people should place their reliance on one class of plants. Suppose cotton is a leading crop, let the aggregate be at least three fourths, and that of cotton one fourth, or perhaps one sixth of cotton would be all that could be safely borne.

The land and climate of the western coast of Africa yield products for exportation which pay as well, and I presume better than cotton can do. Ground nuts for oil are largely exported, perhaps one hundred thousand bushels annually. Medical plants, roots, barks, capsules, and dye stuffs might be looked to; also dried and preserved fruits. Lima beans are worth, in New York, from four to six dollars a bushel.

The great secret of success is in sticking to the land, to the plough-handle and the hoe; living on plain, wholesome fare, avoiding showy houses and dress, keeping at work, and "gathering up the fragments that nothing be lost," with heart centering in God, desiring his blessing, to enable you to live in peace with your neighbors, and one another.

In dividing your colony into neighbor hoods, if the face of the land will admit of it, locate them due east, west, north and south of your house of worship; this will help to impress order on the minds of the people, and enable them to assemble speedily in all cases.

Cleanliness of person and of dwelling, embracing the sanitary condition of the colony will call for your attention. No excremental matter should be suffered to lie about uncovered; health of body, a pure sense, and fertility of land, are alike involved. Indolent habits of mind as well as of the body, require attention in a warm climate; every one, as far as practical (or in rotation) should have an office of some kind in which to serve the public. It is of great importance to society to have children brought up to a regular and practical discharge of their little duties. Children so brought up, as a general thing, always make efficient men and women, and if, in addition, they are trained to correct physical habits, you will find that a good foundation has been laid for moral and spiritual righteousness. If the physical habits are wrong, all the moral and religious instruction is liable to be set aside.

It would give me much pleasure to be able to hope that the religious conventionalities of New York would not be imported into Africa, and that in your colony there would be room for the demonstrations of the Spirit and the power thereof. The African character requires a goodly degree of personal religious freedom; cramping the Spirit is grieving the Spirit. External demonstrations of the Spirit should not be stifled, they have a great effect for good on the young. Staid, sleepy sermons shut up the avenue of spiritual revelation to the individual soul, and shuts out the light of the oil of life. A little religious noise now and then will not hurt anybody. Whenever the Spirit works after the penticostal manner, there will be external demonstrations; they may indeed seem foolish, but the seeming foolishness of the Spirit reaches the human soul, where the wisdom of the wise cannot go. The white race (so called) try to worship God through their intellect, the colored more through their effections. In this particular they are superior to the white race. Therefore give free course to the Spirit, for it will work, if not hindered, according to the proper gifts of every man or woman. Every neighborhood should have its own religious element, or center, or church in miniature, a government, a police, a sanitary committee, and a physical, moral and mental educational board for itself; the central government exercising the same functions as those of the neighborhoods; the people would thereby be trained to self-government, and the settlement of a new colony, and the formation of a government would be simultaneous.

Let me hope that in all your intercourse with the natives, every one will deal fairly with them even in all small matters, and that all will feel responsible for the peace of the colony. The nations of the earth will yet be made to feel that righteousness is a strong tower, that justice is a wall of defense, and that the principles of peace are stronger than those of war, even as truth is stronger than error.

Yours, very respectfully,

DANIEL FRASER.

Dr. Pennington's Reply.

RESPECTED FRIEND,

When I first received the above letter addressed to me, I was impressed with the belief, that you intended it for some other individual. I have no acquaintance with you personally; and the only connection I have at the Bible House is as a life member of the Society who owns that building.

So far as regards the formation of the Society to which you refer, as you do not give the name of said body, I shall not attempt to guess what Society you mean.

So far as regards the colony, I think you should make thorough inquiries of parties about the Bible House before you embark in the scheme.

I have seen a letter addressed by Lord Alfred S. Churchill, of London, England, March 16th, 1861:—To the editor of The Record newspaper of that city, in which his lordship states that a company of above one hundred christian men and women has been formed in this city to go to Africa, under the leadership of a prominent colored minister, that they call skilful sugar and cotton growers. Lord Alfred S. Churchill is not the man I know to make such a statement, unless he had received information of such a nature from a party in New York, much less would he predicate upon it an appeal to the British public for funds to carry out the object, as he does in said letter.

And here I may state to you, that I have no personal knowledge of any such company as Lord Churchill speaks of, or any such colony as you speak of; and I am told by those most likely to know, that there is no prospect of forming a colony that will meet the expectations of the British cotton merchants, who are being looked to for money.

But my friend, as your letter contains your experience which will be valuable to both white and colored colonies in other parts of the world as well as Africa; allow me to give it thus to the public, as I am sure many will thank you for the excellent suggestions.

Yours very respectfully,

J. W. C. PENNINGTON.

312 W., 26th street, N.Y., Oct. 7, 1861.

Letter from Rev. W. H. Bishop.

MR. EDITOR:

Sir,—Some time has passed away since I have had the privilege of seeing the ANGLO-AFRICAN. Sir, I have just closed my labors as Superintendent in the second or Southern district of the Zion connexion. My recent visit to Baltimore, Md., and Washington, D. C., was very pleasant. I found the Churches in the District of Columbia in very good condition, temporally and spiritually, notwithstanding the great excitement in the Government, &c. Our people seem to enjoy more peace and greater privileges than ever; indeed they seem to be looking up in anticipation of still better times. The Church in Baltimore is very much embarrassed by reason of a very heavy debt upon her; but spiritually in good condition. Having closed my labors in the second district, I have entered upon my official duties as superintendent of the first district of the A. M. E. Zion Church.

COTTON.

The ship John Bright, from Liverpool, arrived at this port on Wednesday, Oct. 2d, having 108 bales of cotton on board as freight.

This simple announcement made by the daily papers on Thursday, without note or comment, is well calculated to bring reflection to many minds, but there is no class so deeply interested in this statement as is the people for whom this paper is published.

This is not the first arrival of foreign cotton at this port since the commencement of the war, but is the beginning of a trade that is well calculated to strike the slave power at the South with terror, while it will bring joy and gladness to the cabins of the enslaved there, and thankfulness unspeakable to us who are but partially free.

The efforts made by Great Britain and France to raise cotton in their possessions to rid themselves of the dominion of the slave-holders of this country, has been greatly ridiculed by the pro-slavery press, and the efforts of these governments have been pronounced to be a failure; but behold the result! Not only are they not a failure, but they are a glorious success, and a success, too, at the very time most desired. Surely the hand of God is in it. Who could have imagined at the commencement of this enterprise that at the very time that it was most desirable that those efforts should succeed, that the MAD men of the South would so act as to unwittingly show the world that they are entirely impotent for harm. That their cotton can be dispensed with is no longer a question of time; it is a reality. If any doubt this, let them doubt no longer. The seeming desire of Great Britain to uphold the Southern Confederacy was not a fact, but it was only a stratagem of the manufacturers to make assurances doubly sure until they could weather the point which lies a few days journey ahead on the ocean of time. They now announce that they have cotton enough on hand, that, by little prudence on their part, will last them a year, by which time Africa, India, Egypt and the islands of the sea, will have yielded such a crop as to entirely overwhelm the cotton-growers of the South.

Who is there that will not shout "GLORY TO GOD IN THE HIGHEST," at such a result.

When it is recollected that this grand revolution has been brought about by peaceful means, that not one drop of blood has been shed to accomplish it, but that on the contrary the beneficent influences of Christian civilization have thereby permeated the dark regions of the earth, and men have thus first learned their duties and obligations to the world, the mind instinctively turns to Him who is the Giver of every good and perfect gift, and in adoration humbly ascribe all the praise.

LETTER FROM NEW BEDFORD.

MR. EDITOR,

It affords me much pleasure to communicate the fact that we are still making rapid progress in those things that help make society desirable, and give tone and character to the same.

Our city, in spite of the dullness of the times, and the absence of business with our people, has been unusually gay with summer festivities.

The Old Folks' Concert, forming one of the most prominent features, under the direction of Mr. John Freeman, given at Liberty hall, Sept. 27th, 1861, with a troup of 25 performers, was a grand success—there being present about six hundred persons of all shades.

The above named hall is one of the largest and most central in our city, and is fitted up with all the paraphernalia for a theatre; but is used principally for Lectures, Concerts, &c., &c. It would have astonished most of the readers of your paper, in New York City, to have seen the numbers of "Anglo-Africans" occupying the best seats in the hall, while others, who were not so fortunate, were obliged to use their opera glasses, which I am happy to say, were there in great profusion, so as to get a better view of the stage.

The concert gave general satisfaction, and from what I learn, many are anxious for a repetition.

General business is much depressed on account of the war, yet our people do not seem to heed it much, for all that, judging from the numberless pic-nics, sociables and pleasure parties they have been having during the Summer season.

T. S. B.

NEW BEDFORD, Oct. 1st, 1861.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE ENTERTAINMENT AT WILLIAMSBURG for the benefit of the Rev. Mr. Manning, given on Thursday evening, October 3rd, was, deservedly, a perfect success. We say deservedly, for no pastor in the "Burg" has labored more assiduously for the welfare of his congregation than has Mr. Manning; deservedly, for success should certainly have crowned the earned efforts of the committee of ladies having the affair in hand, and whose constant desire is to contribute to the creature wants of their esteemed pastor. May every effort of theirs prove equally successful.

The company was large and respectable, comprising many of our best citizens, among whom we are pleased to say were Rev. Messrs. James Hamilton, Edward Matthews, and Thomas A. Davis. The pecuniary result of the affair was certainly satisfactory, the committee being enabled to place in the hands of Mr. Manning nearly twenty eight dollars.

ZION CHURCH, WILLIAMSBURG.

MR. EDITOR,

The Zion M.E. Church had their regular quarterly meeting on Sunday, the 6th inst. The church was opened for "Love Feast" as early as 6 o'clock in the morning. There was quite a large number present, and among them was ex-Bishop Rush, Right Rev. William Bishop, Rev. William Pitts, and a host of friends from New York. The Love Feast was opened by the Pastor, with a very suitable hymn, and the services throughout evinced the sincerity of the participants. It was continued till a late hour in the morning. Preaching by the Rev. Thomas Elliott. In the afternoon the house was crowded—the Rev. William Pitts delivered a very good discourse, after which the Lord's Supper was administered by the Right Rev. William Bishop, assisted by several other ministers, the rite of Baptism was conferred by the Pastor to one infant. In the evening the ex-Bishop Rush preached to an immense concourse of persons, who seemed delighted to hear the "old man eloquent" once more—everything passed off satisfactorily, and I think it the best quarterly meeting they have had this year.

A. W.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE BAPTIST CONVENTION.—On our fourth page will be found a synopsis of the proceedings of this important body. It reached us too late, we regret to say, for our last issue.

THE public evening schools now being open, and the old band of faithful teachers at their posts, let there be a grand attendance; by this means we will not only show that we appreciate the opportunity, but that we honor those who have so long and so faithfully served the public as teachers. No charge for tuition or books.

MR. BROWN AND DR. DELANY.

In reference to these gentlemen last week, the last paragraph of the article might have been better understood, had it read. We have never seen any communication either private or public from Dr. Delany while absent, in any manner referring to his position; but we do remember seeing in the columns of the different anti-slavery papers letters from Mr. Brown, telling that he had taken by the hand, the Minister Detocquville, and Lady and Victor Hugo of France.

COLORED REGIMENTS.

MR. EDITOR:—

In your issue of September 28th appears an able and elaborate article on the "Formation of Colored Regiments." I have no desire for contention at a time like this, with those who differ honorably from me in opinion; but I think it but just once in a while to speak out and let the world know where we stand on the great issue of the day, for it is by this means that we have to succeed in arousing our people from a mistaken policy of inactivity, at a time when the world is rushing like a wild tornado in the direction of universal emancipation. This inactivity that is advocated is the principle that has ever had us left behind, and will leave us again unless we arouse from lethargy and arm ourselves as men and patriots against the common enemy of God and man. For six months I have labored to arouse our people to the necessity of action, and I have the satisfaction to say not without success. I have seen companies organized and under the most proficient modern drill in that time. I have seen men drilled among our sturdy going colored men of the rural districts of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, in the regular African Zouave Drill, that would make the hearts of secession traitors, or prejudiced northern Yankees quake and tremble for fear.

Now, I maintain that for all practical purposes whatever be the turn of the war preparation on our part by the most efficient knowledge of the military art and discipline, is one of the most positive demands of the times. No nation ever has or ever will be emancipated from slavery, and the result of such a prejudice as we are undergoing in this country but by the sword, wielded too by their own strong arms. It is a foolish idea for us to still be nursing our past grievances to our own detriment when we should as one man grasp the sword—grasp this most favorable opportunity of becoming inured to that service that must burst the fetters of the enslaved and enfranchise the nominally free of the north. We admit all that has or can be said about the meanness of this government towards us—we are fully aware that there is no more soul in the present administration on the great moral issues involved in the slavery question and the present war; than has characterised previous administrations; but, what of that? it all teaches the necessity of our making ourselves felt as a people at this extremity of our national government worthy of consideration and of being recognized as a part of its own strength. Had every State in the Union taken active steps in the direction of forming regiments of color; we should now instead of numbering eight regiments or about eight thousand five hundred men have numbered seventy-five thousand—besides awaking an interest at home and abroad, that no vascilating policy of the half hearted semi-secessionists of the North could have suppressed.

It would have relieved the administration of so much room for cavil on the slavery question and colored mens right to bear arms, &c. It is a strange fact that now when we should be the most united and decided as to our future destiny; when we should all have our shoulders to the wheel in order to enforce the doctrine we have ever taught of self-reliance and ourselves striking blows for freedom; that we are most divided, most inactive, and in many respects most despondent of any other period of our history. Some are wasting thought physical and intellectual in counseling emigration, (which I have nothing against when done with proper motives,) other are more foolishly wasting time and means in an unsuccessful war against it; while a third class and the most unfortunate of the three, counsel sitting still to see the salvation of God. Oh, that we could see that God will help no one that refuses to help himself; that God will not even help a sinner that will not first help himself. Stretch forth thy hand said the Saviour to the man with a withered hand. He did so and was healed. Take up thy bed and walk, said he, and the man arose; go and wash said he to the blind man, and he did it. How many are the evidences of this kind. God is saying to us to-day as plainly as events can be pointed out,—Stretch forth thy hand; but we sit idly with our hands folded, while the whole world, even nations thousands of miles distant across the ocean, are maddened by the fierceness of this American strife; which after all is nothing less than God's means of opening the way for us to free ourselves by the assistance of our own enslavers if we will do it.

Can we be still under such circumstances [illegible] if ever colored men plead for rights, or fought for liberty, now of all others is the time. The prejudiced white men [illegible] South never will respect us until they are forced to do it by deeds of our own. Let us draw upon European sentiment as well as unbiassed minds in our own country, by presenting an undaunted front on the side of freedom and equal rights; but we are blindly mistaken if we think to draw influence from any quarter by sitting still at a time like this; the world must know we are here, and that we have aims, objects and interests in the present great struggle.

Without this we will be left a hundred years behind this gigantic age of human progress and development. I never care to reply to such views as those which set up the plea of previous injustice or even of present injustice done to us as a reason why we should stand still at such a time as this. I have lived long enough to know that men situated like ourselves must accept the least of a combination of difficulties; if, therefore, there is a chance for us to get armed and equipped for active military service, that is one point gained that never can be gained in a time of peace and prosperity in this country, and that could have been done months ago, and can now be done in a few weeks if we adopt the measure of united effort for its accomplishment.

Does any one doubt the expediency of our being armed and under military discipline even if we have always been sufferers at the hands of those claiming superiority? But enough of this. As to public demonstrations of this kind weakening the arm of the Federal Government, I must say that I was prepared to hear that remark among Democratic Union savers; but I am startled to hear it from among our own ranks of unflinching abolitionists.

Indeed, sir, the longer the government shrinks the responsibility of such a measure the longer time she gives the rebel government to tamper with the free colored people of the South, and prompt and prepare their slaves for shifting the horrors of Saint Domingo, from the South to the North, and in such an event could we rid ourselves from the responsibility of entering the field more than any other northern men whom the government choose to call into active service?

Could we more effectually exercise proper discretion without arms, without drill, without Union, than by availing ourselves of all these at the present time looking boldly forward to that auspicious moment.

The South (as I have said in an article written for the Philadelphia "Press," and copied into several popular journals,) can mean nothing less than emancipation, by the act of her having thousands of free colored men as well as slaves, even now under the best military discipline. England and France of course would favor such a project, should the South thus snatch the key to a termination of this rebellion from the hands of the Federal Government. But what better off would we be, sitting here like Egyptian mummies, till all this was done, and then be drafted and driven off undisciplined, to meet well-disciplined troops, who will then truly be fighting for freedom; and while we could have no other motive than to help conquer a peace for the Union still in its perfideous unregenerate state, tell me not that it will be optional with us, in the event of emancipation by the South, whether we fight or not. On the contrary, there is no possible way to escape it, but to either commit [illegible] Africa, the the climate of [illegible] would not be cool enough [illegible] ardor of fighting Abolitionists against the hell-born prejudice of the North and the cowardly black man who would sit here quietly with his arms folded (instead of taking advantage of the times) till even the emancipated slaves of the South, vigorous in their majesty, force him to rise and flee to Canada to save his unsavory bacon. Let us then sir, hear no more of these measures of actual necessity, inaugurating a "dilemma, inviting enmity, and obstruction to the few, both North and South, among our people enjoying partial freedom." That is a work that cannot be accomplished by loyal patriotic efforts to prepare a hundred thousand men to do service for God, for freedom, for themselves. Sitting still, shirking the responsibility God has thrown upon our shoulders, alone can engender such a dilemma.

Your correspondent also asks whether: "Once under any discipline, subject to the control of the government officers or military orders, we could dictate when and where the blow should be struck? Could we enter upon Quixotic crusades of our own projecting; independent of the constituted authorities or these military chiefs? Sir it appears to me that under whatever changes of governmental policy; our favor would be courted more under such circumstances; and our dictation received with more favor and regard both by the authorities, chiefs, and the people at large, than by our weak effeminate pleadings for favor on the merits of our noble ancestry, rather than nerving our own arms and hearts for a combat that we have long half-heartedly invited by our much groanings and pleadings at a throne of grace.

The issue is here; let us prepare to meet it with manly spirit, let us say to the demagogues of the North who would prevent us even now from proving our manhood and forsight in the midst of all these complicated difficulties; that we will be armed, we will be schooled in military service; and if our fathers were cheated and disfranchised after nobly defending the country, we then [illegible] have the manhood to defend the right and the sagacity to detect the wrong [illegible] enough to secure to ourselves the primary interest we have in the great and moving cause of the great American Rebellion. I am as ever yours for truth and justice.

ALFRED M. GREEN.

FRIENDS INDEED.

Before and since we commenced the publication of this Journal, we had the promise of many influential gentlemen that we should have their assistance in its publication.

They said that our people were without a weekly organ through which their grievances would be stated, and hence the absolute necessity of such a paper.

We knew that with their assistance our task would be a comparatively easy one, and that our undertaking would soon be a splendid success.

We are pleased to announce that while many of the promises made have failed, parties unpledged, both ladies and gentlemen have come forward and seeing our necessities, have done what they could to hold up our hands, among whom we take great pleasure in mentioning the following: The Reverends J. J. Clinton, J. W. Loguen, S. V. Berry, J. N. Gloucester and Mr. Philip A. White, Druggist. Messrs. Clinton and Loguen have sent in quite a number of subscribers, always refusing to take the percentage, and Mr. Berry has been instrumental in making our weekly sales in New Haven large. Mr. White has greatly assisted us as his advertisement will show. For these evidences of desire for our success, these friends will please receive our grateful thanks.

UNION CAMP MEETING.

A Union Camp Meeting was held in the village of Craigville, Orange county, September 12th, under the auspices of the A. M. E. Zion Church, although the Committee whose names were attached to the call was partly composed of white persons.

The Rev. William McFarland, was the elder in charge, assisted by the Reverends Messrs. John Tappan, John Anderson, George Washington, and local preachers, George Harden and Samuel Defries.

We are pleased to hear that the best of order prevailed, and that the meeting was a great success.

MORE NEW JERSEY CIVILIZATION.

In our last paper we copied from the Bordentown Register, an account of a street fight between two females in that town, which was relished so much by the order-loving citizens that it was suffered to continue "until one or both gave out from sheer exhaustion;" we now give our readers, from the Newton Democrat, another illustration of the high state of civilization existing in that region:

"On Sunday evening, at the close of a highly successful Camp Meeting near Stillwater, conducted by a celebrated colored preacher, named "Brother Hannibal, late from Richmond," the Camp was stormed by a detachment of troops belonging to the army of his satanic majesty, and seriously troubled; the attack was opened by a shower of shells from a masked battery, and a large quantity of boiled eggs were thrown, causing a general scattering of the worshippers. "Brother Hannibal, late from Richmond," was struck by one of these missiles in the breast, and his shirt front, as well as his equanimity seriously injured. Nobody was hurt, but the camp was broken up and the army of worshippers [illegible] to retreat under cover of the [illegible], leaving the ground [illegible]."

ECCLESIASTICAL.—At a meeting of the Quarterly Conference [illegible] Church, New [illegible] evening, September 1[illegible], 1861, [illegible] purpose of hearing and deciding certain charges preferred by the Rev. Wm. H. Decker, of Poughkeepsie, against the Rev. Alexander Posey of Sag-Harbor, which charges were as follows, to wit: 1st, insubordination; 2d, rebellion; 3d, schism, which charges being thoroughly investigated, and established by evidence produced, the committee agreeing thereto, being confirmed by the Quarterly Conference, on motion:

Resolved, that the Rev. Alexander Posey be suspended from all official standing until the ensuing Annual Conference.

Signed in behalf of the Quarterly Conference and committee.

Rev. David Stevens, Chm'n,
Jenkins Williams, Sec'y.

ANGLO AFRICAN WAR ITEMS.

A correspondent of the Port Jarvis (N. Y.) Union Writing from Port Tobacco, (Md.) says:

"Large numbers of slaves run away from the fields as we pass, and continue to remain with the troops until reclaimed by their owners, who have never failed to make their appearance in due time, carrying away their terror stricken property. Poor fellows! some of them, after cutting their hair, and adopting other methods of disguise, and perhaps for several days escaping detection, have after all, while happy in fancied security, been discovered, and with tears of disappointment, not unmingled with those of fear, claimed and taken away. One of our boys, a few miles back, was asked by, and immediately became the protector of the brightest little Ebony you ever saw. I never shall forget how delighted the little fellow was when told to come along and he would be cared for. He was with us for a day or two, and had become quite a favorite. Congratulations were expressed that he was safe, while the assumed owner with great pride would point him out as his boy. He was found and snatched by his master at last, however, and amidst the groans and hisses of the whole Regiment, and the sobs of the victim, he was hurried away from our presence. Of course we possess no right, though we may the inclination, to take these applicants with us. We can not afford to say "come along," while on their knees they beg to go; but we know full well that they will be followed, and carried back, where in all probability a dreadful punishment awaits them.

SUMMARY.

At the trial in New London of a colored man named Abraham Peterson and his two daughters on the charge of keeping a house of ill fame, the eldest of the daughters made an evident impression upon the court and the spectators by frankly declaring (as her reason for declining the services of counsel which were considerately tendered her) that she could "lie fast enough" herself!

In Philadelphia on Friday, 27the ult., a little colored girl, about twelve years of age, residing on Fifth street, near John, was badly burned by her clothes taking fire from a grate. In her fright she ran into the street, the flames enveloping her whole person, and forcing from her cries of the greatest agony. As soon as possible the flames were extinguished, but not until the child had been so badly burned that there are but little hopes of her recovery.

The Harrisburg Patriot makes the following statement and claims that the transaction is "a nuisance"—"a sore grievance."

Very few of our readers are aware that recently the Directors of the North Ward School district have removed their colored school from the rear of the State Capitol to the building occupied as a school in Broad street. A school for white children is held in the room up stairs, and that for the colored children on the first floor.

The bridge over the canal, on Mitchell Street, Binghamton, was carried off on Sunday 22nd ult, by being run against by the boat Alida. Both stringers were broken and a complete wreck made of the structure. The boat was under the command of James Jackson, of Binghamton—a colored man. He was arrested, and judgment found against him by Esquire Wescott for $50. His boat was running without any loading, and stood very high out of water.

We clip the following from the Baltimore Clipper of the 23rd ult.

Three negroes named John Carter, Henry Sorrell and James Jackson were arrested, charged with being runaways, by officers of the Southern District. Upon threatening and questioning them, it was ascertained they were runaways from Virginia, and had made their way to Baltimore in a canoe. They state their masters had been pressed into the service of the South, and they were told they would have to fight or be killed, and rather than let the Yankees have them, they would hang them. The poor negroes say they would sooner try their fortunes in attempting to escape. They were sent to jail by Justice Showacre.

Mr. F. Murrell of Bridgewater at an Agricultural Fair recently held at Beaver, Pa., exhibited a lot of spoons, ladles, bowls, &c., carved from wood. They were disposed upon a fantastic wooden rack, which was in itself quite a curiosity.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati "Commercial," writing from Leesburg, O., under date of Sept. 28th says:

"While the down train was stopping at this station this P. M., some five or six of Captain Sosman's company, made an unprovoked assault upon a quiet and inoffensive colored man by the name of Williams, beating him with clubs and stones, and to make sure work, shooting him in the jaw, leaving him for dead. A dispatch was sent to Chief of Police Dudley who arrested the whole company on their arrival at the L. M. Depot. It is hoped the guilty ones may be ferreted out and brought to justice."

The Elkton (Md.) "Democrat" of 28th ult. contains the following:

"Report reached here yesterday from Sassafras Neck, that a young negro man named Frederick, belonging to Capt. M. C. Pearce, of this town, committed a rape on a young lady about fourteen years of age in Sassafras Neck, on Thursday last. He was arrested taken to Cecilton, and the matter investigated, and from thence taken to a tree in the vicinity of the act, and hung. These are the facts as reported to us."

The Goshen [illegible] states:

On Saturday [illegible] 14th ult., near New Windsor, [illegible] boys, named Charles E. [illegible] Johnson, were drowned [illegible] dock. Simmons fell [illegible] attempted to save him. [illegible] and twelve:

The Haverstraw Messenger of the 2[illegible] ult.

On Wednesday evening last, a Ball was held in the Wigwam by the colored population of this village, when during the evening, Edward Foreman, who was well and favorably known, not only in this village put throughout the County, was frolicking with some of his companions, when he fell and received such a serious injury, as to cause his death on Saturday.

The Sunday School connected with the Methodist Church Greenport L. I., gave a concert on Wednesday evening 25th ult. for the benefit of the pastor of the church, Rev. Clinton Leonard. The programme was well executed.

We find the following in the Philadelphia Press of Sept. 26th.

A colored man, named William Miller, was admitted to the Pennsylvania Hospital yesterday morning, having received a compound fracture of the arm under the following circumstances: It seems that Miller had been employed by the volunteers of one of our camps near the city to cook rations, and had been away from his home for some days. Upon his return to his house, in the vicinity of Sixth and Carpenter streets, he found a man in his wife's company, whom former jealousy had aroused a suspicion against. Miller at once attempted to remove him from the house, but the other resisted, and, seizing a hatchet, dealt Miller a powerful blow on the left arm, causing a very serious compound fracture of the bone, three large pieces having been extracted by the surgeon yesterday morning. The perpetrator of the act has been arrested and committed to await the result of the injury.

On Tuesday afternoon 17th ult. while some boys were crabbing on one of the ice-breakers at the Railroad drawbridge, a short distance above Peekskill, one of them, a colored boy, by the name of Henry Howard, aged about 15 years, accidentally fell in and was drowned. It was some time before his comrades missed him, and when they did they immediately gave the alarm. Joseph Keyser went to the place where he was supposed to have fell overboard, and procured a boat and boat-hook, and after grappling a short time succeeded in procuring the body. It had been in the water about an hour.

About seven o'clock P. M. on the 4th instant, says a Nova Scotia exchange, while Henry Hudson, of Annapolis, constable, was in the act of serving a process at the house of one Schanks, a mulatto, at the Bay Shore Granville, a son of Schanks, about fifteen or sixteen years of age, deliberately levelled a gun at Hudson, and, melancholy to relate, shot him through the head, killing him instantly. An inquest has been held on the body, and a verdict returned in accordance with the facts. The boy has been apprehended and now lies in jail.

On Wednesday night, the 25th ult., a colored man named Isaac S. Stephens, while returning to Newark from Patterson in a wagon, was attacked by two men near Bloomfield, one of whom seized the horse by the bridle while the other dragged him from the vihicle, beat him severely, and robbed him of about ten dollars. The rascals made good their escape.

A colored boy named James Marsh, who lived in the family of Capt. Thos. Brownell of Newport R. I., was drowned on Saturday morning, 21st ult., by being knocked overboard, by the boom of a yacht in which he was sailing with the Captain. His body was recovered on the following Monday morning, near the place where he was lost. It was conveyed to the house of Capt. Brownell and buried therefrom. He had been in Capt. Brownell's employ for several years, and had won for himself the esteem and attachment of the family and others who knew him, for his natural vivacity, "smartness," and docility of disposition.

At Baltimore, Wednesday morning, 25th ult., a colored man named James E. Mitchell, employed in an oyster packing establishment near the Bonded Warehouse, at Canton, was arrested, charged with stabbing Jeremiah Boston, also colored, in the right leg with an oyster knife. The quarrel grew out of an apron which Boston wore, and which the accused asserted was his property. Justice Griffin committed Mitchell to jail for court.

MARRIED.

THOMPSON—GROOVER.—In Tarrytown, Sept. 28th, by the Rev. Dr. Todd, Mr. Elijah F. Thompson to Miss Mary M. Groover, of Hagerstown, Md.

RAANKINS—DOBBINS.—On Sunday evening, Oct. 6, by Rev. M. Manning, Mr. Thomas C. Rankins, of New York city, to Miss Rebecca Dobbins, of Williamsburgh.

SMITH—HAMMOND.—On Tuesday evening, Oct. 8th, by Rev. M. Manning, Mr. Samuel B. Smith, of Africa, to Sarah Ann Hammond, of Williamsburgh.

HARDING—CARMAN.—Married, Oct. 10th, by Rev. Wm. Johnson Alston, Mr. James Harding, of Philadelphia, Penn., to Mrs. Caroline E. Carman, of New York city.

DIED.

BOARDLEY.—At Saratoga Springs, on the 30th of September, after a severe attack of rheumatism on the brain, Simon Boardley, in the 43d year of his age.

Special Notices.

T. B. VOORHEES'
GRAND
INTRODUCTORY SOIREE
Will take place
On Monday Ev'g, Oct. 14th,
AT CONVENTION HALL, 177 WOOSTER STREET.
Leader of the Orchestra,
PROF. ROBERT H. BROWN.
Tickets 25 Cents.

This Soiree will be the opening assembly for the season, during which there will be a rehearsal every Monday and Thursday evening, after 10½ P.M. Private class for subscribers, every Thursday evening, from 8 to 10½ P.M.

For further particulars see future advertisements in this paper.

[illegible]ENTION COMPANY!

[illegible], march to 178 [illegible] St., [illegible] 14th, at 7½ o'clock.

By order of [illegible], Capt.

AGENCY
FOR TROY AND VICINITY.

Mr. James R. Benham is the regularly appointed Agent for the Anglo-African for Troy, Lansingburg, Waterford and vicinity. All orders or communications for the paper may be left with Mr. Benham on board of the steamer "Cornelius Vanderbilt."

Copies of Anglo-African can be obtained of Mr Samuel Bayard, 61 Union Street, New Haven opposite the Railroad depot.

DONATION.

The Annual Donation for the benefit of Rev. Henry M. Wilson, will take place at the Lecture Room of the Seventh Avenue Presbyterian Church, on Thursday evening, Oct. 23, 1861. An efficient committee of gents and ladies, whose names will be published in next week's issue, will manage this Benefit.

Mrs. Caroline Bess, 131 Le Roy St.,
" Dianah Colbourne, 97 W. 33d St.,
" Abigail Till, 18 Greene St.,
" Elizabeth Jackson, Bergen, N. J.
" Charlotte Houseman, 97 W. 33d St.,
" P. Lawrence, 97 W. 33d St.,
" Jane A. Riley, 106 Green St.

Miss Susan Tindall, 56 W. 17th St.,
" Elizabeth A. Schenck, Bergen, N. J.
" Sarah Thompson, 12 Lexington Av.
" Matilda Schenck, Bergen, N. J.
" Margaret Thompson, 67 E. 29th St.,
" Rachel Schenck, Bergen, N. J.

GENT'S COMMITTEE.

Mr. J. Bess, 131 Le Roy St.,
" S. F. Colbourne, 97 W. 33d St.
" [illegible] W. 53d St.,
" [illegible]
" [illegible] W. [illegible] St.,
" [illegible] King St.
" [illegible] Sousa, 25 [illegible] St.

AN IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The members of the N. Y. African Society for Mutual Relief are earnestly requested to attend an important meeting of the Society on Monday evening, Oct. 14th, at the Old Hall, 42 Baxter Street.

J. J. ZUILLE, Sec.

FIRST COLORED AMERICAN CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

Rev. L. Tilmon, pastor, worship in the Hall, 194 Green Street, between Amity and Bleecker Streets. Hours of worship: 10 1-2 o'clock, A. M.; 3, P. M.; and 7 1-2, P.M. 11—1y

UNION CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

REV. ELI N. HALL, Pastor, cor. DeKalb and Hudson Avenues, Brooklyn.

Hours of worship:
10½ o'clock, A. M.
3 " P. M.
7½ " P. M.
10 4t.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

PAIN-KILLER.

We can recommend on the best authority, PERRY DAVIS' PAIN-KILLER, as a remedy unsurpassed for the cure of Sudden Colds, Coughs, DIPTHERIA and Sore Throat, Asthma, Dyspepsia, Headache, Rheumatic and Neuralgic Affections, Chilblains and Frosted Feet, Burns and Scalds, Tooth and Face Ache, Pains in the Back, Joints, Limbs and Side, Felons, Boils, and all kindred diseases.

Dr. Ware, of Columbus, Ga., says, for Neuralgia of the Back, or Lumbago, it surpasses any medicine I have ever used.

Dr. Sweet says it is excellent to remove the soreness after bone-setting.

Dr. Hall recommends it as an excellent linament for Rheumatism.

Dr. Nelson recommends it as a linament.

Dr. Walton writes from Coschocton County, Ohio, Nov. 28, 1860: "Your Pain-Killer cures this new disease, DIPTHERIA, or Sore Throat, that is so alarmingly prevalent here; and it has not been known to fail in any instance when used in time. This fact you should make known to the world." [It is used in this disease as a gargle and lotion as well as a tonic and stimulant.]

Rev. H. L. Van Meter, writing from Burmah says: "The Pain-Killer has become an almost indispensable article in my family."

Hundreds of missionaries give similar testimony of its virtues.

Rev. J. G. Stearns writes: "I consider it the best remedy for Dyspepsia I ever knew."

Rev. Jabez Swan says: "I have used it for years in my family, and consider it an invaluable remedy."

Rev. A. W. Curtis: "By its use I entirely cured a felon in a few days."

The Salem Observer says, "It is a medicine every household should have at hand in case of accident or sudden attack of disease."

The New York Examiner says, "We have used the Pain-Killer, and consider it an indispensable article in the family medicine box."

The N. Y. Independent says, "We have used it, and it proves to be all it professes."

Sold by Druggists and Dealers everywhere.

PERRY DAVIS & SON, Proprietors.

10—13t

HATS CAPS & FURS
IN THEIR VARIETY.
First Premium for Misses and Children's HATS, CAPS AND [illegible] RIDING HATS.
The Clergy supplied at a discount.
KELLOGG, 381 Canal St., N. Y.
10 1y.

VALUABLE TOWN LOTS

For sale in the township of Rye, Westchester Co., N. Y. Size 25 by 100 feet.

Apply to L. TILMON, 70 East 13th St., one door east of 4th Avenue N.Y.
10 5t

CLOTHING! CLOTHING!!

Gentlemen if you want a Nice, Fashionable, well-fitted Garment at a much Lower Price than can be bought at any other establishment in this or any other city, please call at the Merchant Tailor Establishment,

168 EWEN STREET,
BET. STAGG & WYCKOFF STS., WILLIAMSBURG
Where you will find a splendid assortment of seasonable goods, as BROADCLOTHS,
CASSIMERES
AND VESTINGS
of every description. Also constantly on hand a well-selected stock of Ready-Made
MEN AND BOY'S CLOTHING.
[illegible]
168 EWEN ST.,
9-1y. Williamsburg.

JUST PUBLISHED
"THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE IN LIBERIA."

The Anniversary address, on the 26th July, 1860, in Cape Palmas, Liberia, by the Rev. Alex. Crummell, B.A.

For Sale at the Anglo-African Office, 48 Beekman St., New York. Price 15 cents. 8 4t.

TO LET, A FRONT ROOM ON THE FIRST Floor of house No. 61 Leonard Street, Williamsburg. Inquire on the premises. 10 tf.

MRS. ANDERSON,
CLAIRVOYANT & DOCTORESS
Has Removed from 106 Washington St. to 7½ Prospect St., (up stairs) cor. of Stewart, Brooklyn. 10 5t.

A NEATLY FURNISHED FRONT ROOM to let to one or two single gentlemen, without board at No. [illegible] Sullivan Street. Inquire on the premises. 11—tf

ST. PHILIP'S CHURCH.—[illegible] seats to let in the body of St. Philip's Church (Episcopal). Apply to [illegible] Wooster Street.

TO LET.—THE UPPER PART OF HOUSE No. 277 South Fourth St., Williamsburg, consisting of front and back parlors, and a large bed room, with the back basement. Rent nine dollars a month, to be paid strictly in advance. Inquire on the premises, or at the office.

LODGINGS.—MRS. LANE CAN ACCOMODATE a few gentlemen with pleasant apartments at her residence, No. 192½ Green Street, in the rear. Terms moderate. 9 13.

CLOCKS, WATCHES, JEWELRY and Musical Boxes carefully Repaired by Wm. C. H. Curtis, No. 153 Thompson St., N. Y. Silver Plating and Fine Gilding. 8 tf.

A NEW WORK
REPORT OF THE NIGER VALLEY
EXPLORING PARTY;
BY
M. R. DELANY, CHIEF COMMISSIONER
TO AFRICA.

CONTENTS.
Political Movements.
Succeeding Conventions.
History of the Project.
Arrival and reception in Liberia.
[illegible]
[illegible] Remedy.
[illegible]
Cotton Staple.
Success in Great Britain.
Commercial Relations in Scotland.
The time to go to Africa.
Concluding Suggestions.

Complete in sections (chapters) consecutively from I to XVII, being most conveniently arranged in cut-in or side marginal notes, embracing every subject therein treated, so that in an instant any point or paragraph of interest may be at once cited to.

A learned and candid gentleman who has resided many years in Africa, after glancing over the proof sheets, pronounced it the most interesting and instructive work ever issued on that subject, and should be in the hands of every friend of Africa. It is a complete text-book.

The work contains 76 large pages, and will be sold at the low price of

TWENTY-FIVE CENTS PER COPY.

All Orders should be addressed to the Publisher,

THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St, N. Y.

THE ZOUAVE AND SLAVE ENVELOPE Price per thousand $5; per hundred 60 cents; packages of 25 each, 20 cents.

Orders should be addressed
THOS. HAMILTON
48 Beekman Street, N. Y

PRIVATE BOARDING HOUSE
BY
MRS. W. S. WILKINS & Co
610 PINE, ABOVE SIXTH STREET,
PHILADELPHIA 7-13t.

LADIES' FURNISHING STORE.
CHILDREN'S CLOTHING
READY-MADE AND MADE TO ORDER, BY
MRS. S. WILKINS & CO.,
610 Pine, above Sixth Street, Philadelphia.
7-13t.

A SCHOOL WANTED.—A YOUNG LADY, a graduate of one of the High Schools of this State, and who is fully qualified as a teacher, is desirous of obtaining a school where the salary would not be less than $200 a-year. Address Thos. Hamilton, 48 Beekman St., N.Y.

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION. THE UNdersigned respectfully announces that he is now prepared to give instruction in the ART OF SINGING. He will be at home at 187 Navy Street, Brooklyn, on MONDAY EVENING, and at ZION CHURCH, N. Y., on THURSDAY EVENING, of each week. Ladies or Gentlemen desiring instruction, will please apply immediately. Singing schools taught and private instruction given on moderate terms.

3tf. ROBT. HAMILTON,

NEW SAILOR'S HOME. CHARLES M. FORTUNE has opened a pleasant home for Seamen, at 26 MULBERRY STREET, N.Y., Seamen will find this a very desirable house, as it is in a central location, and every provision made for their comfort.

Boarding by the day or week. Terms moderate. 31y

WANTED AT TILMAN'S AGENCY, NO. 70 East 13th Street, one door east of 4th Ave., first class colored help, and none else. Cooks, house-workers, chambermaids, waitresses and laundresses, coachmen, waiters, &c. Now is the time; fall is near and good help wanted for city and country. 5—4t.

MRS. E. CLARKE, IS HAPPY TO ANnounce to her friends and the public, that she has opened her new BOARDING HOUSE, and will be very thankful for their patronage, at No. 66 SULLIVAN STREET, NEW YORK. 4-13

DENTISTRY.

BEAUTIFUL ARTIFICIAL SETS OF TEETH on gold or silver plate on the most improved style. All other Surgical operations, performed to entire satisfaction, on very moderate terms by G. H. GRICE, Surgeon Dentist.

79 Thompson St., N. Y

MRS. E. LEONARD,
FASHIONABLE
DRESS MAKER,
25 SULLIVAN STREET, NEW YORK.
Receives monthly the latest Paris Fashions.
3tf.

BOARDING AND LODGING

BY MRS. MARY JOHNSON, 120 West 20th Street, New York. This house is very pleasantly situated in a very healthy and convenient part of the city.

Boarding for Ladies, $2.50
" Gentleman, 3.00
Lodging per week, 75
y13t.

JAMES F. W. LEONARD,
CARD AND JOB PRINTER,
219 Centre Street, New York.

THE BEST DRESSING FOR THE HAIR during warm weather, is White's vegetable extract. For Sale at 18 Sullivan and 20 Grand Sts. 2 tf.

BOARDING AND LODGING ON THE [illegible]. Mrs. Gant can accommodate a few [illegible] and Gentlemen, at her residence, 182 Suffolk [illegible]. Terms very moderate.

BROWN'S POPULAR [illegible]

The undersigned takes this [illegible] his friends and the public generally [illegible] he has recently fitted up his SALOON [illegible] is now prepared to furnish them with

Ice Cream, Fruit, and other Delicacies.

[illegible] F. BROWN,
70 Bleecker St
between Broadway & Crosby St. 4t.

WARRANTED TO CURE A HEADACHE in 10 [illegible], White's Vegetable extract. For sale at [illegible] West Broadway, and cor. Gold and Frankfort Sts.

P. A. W[illegible]
[illegible]
GENERAL
COMMISSION MERCHANT
CONSTANTLY ON HAND
A FRESH AND PURE ASSORTMENT
OF
DRUGS, MEDICINES, CHEMICALS,
GENUINE
LUBIN'S EXTRACTS
AND OTHER PERFUMERY,
FANCY SOAPS, [illegible]
BRUSHES, PURE WINES [illegible]
DIES FOR MEDICINAL PURPOSES,
FAMILY ARTICLES, HAVANA
SEGARS, &C., &C.

All his articles are purchased [illegible] are warranted to be pure, fresh, and genuine.

MEDICINE CHESTS carefully made up.

All orders promptly attended to on receipt of the CASH.

Physicians prescriptions carefully prepared.

WHITE'S
VEGETABLE EXTRACT FOR THE HAIR
FOR THE PRESERVATION, BEAUTY, GROWTH,
AND RESTORATION OF THE HAIR.

After many years of study and experiment the undersigned now presents it to the public. This valuable preparation excites the scalp to a new and healthy action, cleanses it from Scurf and Dandruff, prevents the hair from falling off or becoming prematurely Grey.

The question often arises, why the hair turns gray, rusty, and coarse, harsh and unpleasant in appearance, and finally falls off?

Each hair has a root in the skin, and is itself a hollow tube through which there is a constant circulation of blood. By this circulation the hair is nourished, its glossy color is given and preserved, and it is covered with oil. Any [illegible] which injures the skin of the head, or diverts [illegible] takes away the blood from it, will prevent or impede the circulation through the tubes of the hair, stop its growth, and cause it to fall or turn gray, or both. Hence it is that any cause which obstructs or weakens the circulation of the blood through the skin, or that diverts the blood to other parts of the system, will take away the healthy, fresh, and youthful appearance of the hair, arrest its growth, turn it gray sooner or later, and in thousands of cases cause premature baldness.

For this reason, all kinds of fevers, dyspepsia, low spirits, dissipation, and excessive [illegible], allowing the hair to grow too long without cutting, long and continued headache, neglected condition of the scalp and hair, great mental anxiety, etc., etc., will always, unless proper remedies are used, produce general or partial Baldness or gray hair. The cure is perfectly effected by preserving a healthy and brisk circulation of the blood through the skin of the scalp and head; could this always be done, the hair would never fall off or turn gray.

The EXTRACT will produce this cure, and for the toilet it will be found an admirable article as it gives luxuriant brilliancy to the hair.

Persons taking sea-voyages will find this a most valuable assistant for preserving the health of the hair, which at those times is so apt to fall.

Many persons, both ladies and gentlemen, find their hair apt to become dirty and greasy and full of dandruff, so as to soil dresses, caps, bonnets, coats, etc. The use of the EXTRACT as directed will correct all this, and make the hair all that most refined taste could require.

DIRECTIONS FOR USING.

Let the hair be brushed with a good stiff hair brush, until the scalp is considerably excited, and the dandruff and dirt removed; this will open the pores of the skin to the direct action of the EXTRACT. Then apply the EXTRACT, in small quantities, at the time, rubbing it in with a brush, particularly where the hair is thin or weak, or shows a disposition to fall off, always brushing the way it will go, not backward and forward. The EXTRACT should be used at least three times a week. Avoid the use of soaps or alkalies, Alcohol, Cologne Water, Bay Rum, or water, as they remove the natural oil, make the hair harsh and coarse, cause it to split and break, and will more or less change its color. Dandruff is the result of a languid, unhealthy condition of the scalp and surface vessels, whereby the perspiration becomes thick and clammy and adheres to the surface, which, drying, forms a scurf or dandruff. The frequent application of the EXTRACT will soon free the head from it.

In conclusion I would add that cases [illegible] will no doubt occur, arising from causes beyond the reach of remedies. Yet I am convinced that if the EXTRACT were faithfully and persevering ly applied, a large majority of cases of baldness might be cured.

BADEAU'S
STRENGTHENING PLASTER.
AN INVALUABLE REMEDY FOR
LAME OR WEAK BACK, PAIN OR WEAKNESS IN THE SIDE, CHEST, STOMACH, OR LIMBS. A CERTAIN CURE
FOR RHEUMATISM, DYSPEPSIA, ASTHMA, PLEURISY, LIVER OR KIDNEY
COMPLAINTS,
SPRAINS, BRUISES, [illegible]

Persons disposed [illegible]

[illegible] SPRAINS they are [illegible] immediately and without fail.

For RHEUMATISM there is no external application equal to them, [illegible]

PREVENTING A RETURN

[illegible] you will be deceived.

P. A. WHITE, Sole Proprietor.

Poetry.

THE GERMS OF THE BEAUTIFUL.

Scatter the germs of the beautiful,
By the wayside let them fall,
That the rose may spring by the cottage,
And the vine by the garden wall;
Cover the rough and the rude of earth
With a veil of leaves and flowers,
And mark with the opening bud and cup
The march of summer hours.

Scatter the germs of the beautiful
In the holy shrines of home:
Let the pure, the fair, and the graceful there
In their loveliest lustre come:
Leave not a trace of deformity
In the temple of the heart,
But gather about its hearth the germs
Of Nature and of Art.

Scatter the germs of the beautiful
In the temples of our God—
The God who starred the uplifted sky,
And flowered the trampled sod;
When he built a temple for himself,
And a home for his priestly race,
He reared each arch in symmetry,
And curved each line in grace.

Scatter the germs of the beautiful
In the depths of the human soul:
They shall bud and blossom, and bear the fruit,
While the endless ages roll:
Plant with the flower of charity
The portals of the tomb,
And the fair and the pure about thy path
In Paradise shall bloom!

BAPTIST CONVENTION AT NEW BEDFORD.

Trenton, N. J., Oct. 2, 1861.

To the Anglo-African,

Having returned home from a tour down East, I thought perhaps it might not be uninteresting to give you some slight account of things said and done by the American Baptist Missionary Society—one of the institutions of the day—regularly incorporated by the Legislature of the State of New York.

This Institution has done much good already, and bids fair to do still more. Our Annual Meeting convened at Salem St. Baptist Church, in the city of New Bedford, on Sept 19 1861. The convention was called to order by Rev. Jerh. Asher, Corresponding Secretary. In the absence of the preacher and his alternate, the introductory sermon was preached by Rev. Wm. E. Walker, from Matt. 6; and last clause of 24th verse, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Stern fidelity to God the only surety of success.

There was quite a number of attendants, especially when we consider the present crisis in financial matters and how exceedingly difficult it is to turn attention to anything but the war question.

The convention was permanently organizen by the appointment of officers for the ensuing year, consisting of Revds. Sampson White of Brooklyn, New York, as President; John S. Kenny of Philadelphia, Pa. Vice President; Wm. E. Walker of Trenton, N. J., as Secretary; Jacob Day of New York, as Treasurer; Rev. Jeremiah Asher of Philadelphia, Pa., as Corresponding Secretary. Executive Board, Wm. Nichols, New York; Wm. Thomas, Philadelphia, Pa.; Thos. Watkins, West Philadelphia; Geo. M. Dixon, New York; James Fells, Philadelphia.

The usual committees were appointed, and reported (together with the report of the Rev. John Barnett, missionary from Africa, who has been in the employ of the convention near two years,) which after some very interesting remarks were adopted. The embarrassed state of the convention prevented their keeping a missionary any longer in the field at present. Rev. Wm. E. Walker was appointed as missionary of the State of New Jersey. A Committee was also appointed on national affairs, who reported as follows through their chairman, Rev. Wm. E. Walker:

Whereas, the national difficulties under which we now labor are the result of a gross violation of the laws of God and humanity: We, therefore, feel under grateful sense of acknowledgement to Almighty God in thus verifying his promise, by executing righteousness and judgment for all that are oppressed.

And whereas, we further regard this affliction as a wise and just visitation of God's Providence to the end that this nation may repent of their sins, and make restitution for the wrongs done.

Therefore, be it Resolved, that in view of the national difficulties which now afflict the country, brother fighting against brother, [illegible] concomitant evils growing out of [illegible] recognise in it the hand of God [illegible] this nation have oppressed the [illegible] the person of our brethren, by [illegible] bondage, and by the [illegible] both by law and public [illegible] free colored population [illegible] breath of the country.

Resolved, that while the very [illegible] of the Government are shaken by the [illegible] overthrow of Republican institutions are threatened, the national government [illegible] to regard us a [illegible] citizens, by not allowing colored men [illegible] arms in defence of free [illegible] own most sacred rights [illegible] their persons [illegible] which are in jeopardy.

Resolved, that we [illegible] assumption of the national administration as unwarrantable and unjust, inasmuch as we have ever been peaceable, loyal, and inoffensive.

Resolved, that while we are thus deprived of this privilege and right, we desire it to be distinctly understood that although we shall have to stand still, we cherish the hope that we may see the salvation of the Lord, in the deliverance of the oppressed and the full and entire recognition of all our rights when peace shall ensue.

Resolved, that while we deprecate all the evils which now exist in the country and ardently desire their final overthrow, yet there are many things in the government which we both love and cherish, and hope will be perpetuated.

Resolved, that we recommend to each church and individual the necessity of offering their devout prayers to Almighty God to stay his judgments, restore peace to our distracted country, and so over-rule this affliction as to cause the national government to be admitted on the principles of justice, right and equality.

Rev. Wm. E. Walker,
Rev. Edmund Kelly,
John Oliver.
} Committee.

A committee also on Haytian Emigration were appointed, consisting of brethren John Oliver, Boston, Rev. L. H. Grimes, Boston and Wm. Jackson of New Bedford, who reported adversely, which report, after some lengthy discussion and considerable alteration, was adopted.

The preaching during the convention was of an able and interesting character. The convention closed its session on Wednesday evening the 20th inst., with the usual interesting ceremony, communion of the Lord's supper, to meet on the Thursday before the 4th Sunday in August, 1862, in Philadelphia.

WM. E. WALKER.

TRAVELS AND RESEARCHES IN AFRICA.

Mr. Robert Hamilton:

Dear Sir,—I have been perusing the Report on the Niger Valley, by Dr. Delany, just published by Thomas Hamilton, and also the recent work of Chaillu, containing his hunting observations, &c., &c. The book of Dr. Delany is a document of great force and language terse—clear and to the point, and quite equal in style to the best competitors for such honor among the white writers; and I hope those gentlemen who so perseveringly assert the defective literary organization of the whole colored race will spend twenty-five cents in the purchase of the Report. It will, perhaps, throw a ray of light on this mooted point. I have been struck with the many narrations in Chaillu of the superstitions obtaining every where in Africa in respect to witchcraft. And though this has been adduced in proof of the supposed inferiority of the blacks, to me it furnishes a very different train of thought, and I wonder that writers and travelers in Africa have treated the matter so flippantly.

The discoveries in animal magnetism or mesmerism have elevated that topic above the jeer of ridicule among the facts of real life, if not into the classification of science; and it would be worth investigation, perhaps, to see whether modern spiritualism is not so closely allied in its marvels to the demonology and witchcraft of Africa as to open up a new method of leading the Fetish devotees to a better understanding of the true philosophy of the facts which they discover so crudely, and which designing men among them, as elsewhere, pervert so lamentably.

The following from Chaillu will set this matter clearly before your readers.

Before leaving Goumbi, a grand effort was made by the people to ascertain the cause of their king's sufferings. Quengueza had sent word by my men to his people to consult Ilogo, a spirit said to live in the moon. The rites were very curious. To consult Ilogo, the time must be near full moon. Early in the evening the women of the town assembled in front of Quengueza's house, and sung songs to and in praise of Ilogo, the spirit of Ggonayli (the moon,) the latter name being often repeated. Meantime a woman was seated in the centre of the circle of singers, who sung with them, and looked constantly toward the moon. She was to be inspired by the spirit, and to utter prophecies.

Two women made trial of this post without success. At last came a third, a little woman, wiry and nervous. When she seated herself the singing was redoubled in fury; the excitement of the people had had time to become intense, the drums beat: the outsiders shouted madly. Presently the woman, who, singing violently, had looked constantly toward the moon, began to tremble. Her nerves twitched; her face was contorted; her muscles swelled; and at last her limbs straightened out, and she lay extended on the ground, insensible.

The excitement was now intense and the noise horrible. The songs to Ilogo were not for a moment discontinued. The words were little varied, and were to this amount:

"Ilogo, we ask thee!
Tell who has bewitched the king!

"Ilogo, we ask thee,
What shall we do to cure the king?

"The forests are thine, Ilogo!
The rivers are thine, Ilogo!
The moon is thine!
O moon! O moon! O moon!
Thou art the house of Ilogo!
Shall the king [illegible] O Ilogo!
O Ilogo! M moon! O moon!"

These words were repeated again and again, with little variation. The woman, who lay for some time insensible, was then supposed to see things in the world of Ilogo, and was expected to bring back a report thereof. When she at last came to, after half an hour's insensibility, she looked very much prostrated. She averred that she had seen Ilogo; that he had told her Quengueza was not bewitched; that a remedy prepared from a certain plant would cure him; and so on. I am convinced the woman believed what she said, as did all the people. It was a very curious instance of the force of imagination and extreme excitement.

H.

SUBDUING A REBEL.

A STORY FOR OUR OWN TIMES.

There lived in a certain neighborhood not far distant from here, a roystering, rowdy bully, Jim Blander. Jim was "sum" in a fight, a kind of pugilistic Napoleon. Many and bloody were the affairs he had in his lifetime, and had invariably come off best. Jim not only considered himself invulnerable, but all the fighting characters in the surrounding country conceded it was no use in fighting Jim, as he was considered to be a patent threshing machine, that could not be improved on. In Jim's neighborhood had settled quite a number of Quakers. From some cause or other, Jim hated the "shad-bellies," as he called them, with his entire heart; he often declared that to whip one of these inoffensive people would be the crowning glory of his life. For years Jim waited for a pretext. One of Jim's chums overheard a young Quaker speak in disparaging terms of him. The report soon came to Jim's ears, not a little magnified. Jim made desperate threats what he was going to do with Nathan, the meek follower of Penn, on sight; besides various bruises and contusions he meant to inflict on Nathan's body, in his chaste language he meant to "gouge out" both his eyes and, "chaw off" both his ears.

Nathan heard of Jim's threats, and very properly kept out of his way, hoping that time would modify Jim's anger. It seems, however, this much-to-be-desired result did not take place. One day friend Nathan was out riding, and in passing through a long lane, he espied Jim entering the other end. Nathan might have turned and fled, but his flesh rebelled at this proceeding.

"I will pursue my way peaceably," said the Quaker, "and I hope the better sense of the man of wrath will not permit him to molest me or allow him to do violence to my person." Nathan's calculations as to the lamb-like qualities of his adversary were doomed to be disappointed.

"O, ho," thought bully, as he recognized Nathan, "I have him at last. Now I'll make mincemeat of shad-belly. I will salt him and pickle him, too."

"Wilt thou please dismount from thy horse?" said Jim, seizing the bridle of Nathan's horse and imitating his style; "my soul yearneth above all things to give thee the biggest mauling man ever received."

"Friend James," replied Nathan, "thou must not molest me, but let me go on my way in peace. Thy better judgment will surely tell thee that thou canst not be possibly benefitted by personally injuring me."

"Get down in a moment," thundered Jim; "get down you canting, lying, mischief-making cowardly hypocrite. I'll drag you down if you don't dismount."

"Friend James, I remonstrate against thy proceedings and against thy language," replied Nathan. "My religion teaches me sincerity; I am neither a liar, a mischief-maker, nor a hypocrite; I am no coward, but a man of peace; I desire to pursue my way quietly—let me pass on."

"Get down," persisted Jim, "down with you; I want to beat some of your religion out of you; I must give you a flogging before I leave you. I think by the time I am through with, you'll pass for a tolerably decent man; I'll teach you a short and easy lesson on the importance of minding your own affairs and the risk you run in slandering your neighbors."

"I will not dismount," said Nathan, firmly, "loosen thy hold from the bridle."

"You won't, won't you!" said Jim; "then here goes," and he made a desperate plunge to collar the Quaker.

Nathan was on his feet in an instant, on the opposite side of the horse. The Quaker, although of much smaller proportions than his persecutor, was all sinew and muscle, and his well-knit form denoted both activity and strength. His wrath was evidently kindled.

"Friend James," he implored, "thy pertinacious persistence in persecuting me is annoying; thou must desist, or peradventure I may so far forget myself as to do thee some bodily harm."

"By snakes!" said Jim, coming toward Nathan, "I believe there is fight enough in broad-brim to make the affair interesting. I wish some of the boys were here to see the fun. Now, friend Nathan, I am going to knock off the end of your nose; look out!"

Suiting the action to the word, Jim, after various pugilistic gyrations with his fists, made a scientific blow at the nasal formation of our Quaker friend; but Tom Hyer couldn't more scientifically have warded it off.

Jim was evidently disconcerted at the ill success of his first attempt; he saw he had undertaken quite as much as he was likely to accomplish. Jim, however, straightened himself out, and approached Nathan more cautiously. The contest began again. Nathan stood his ground firmly and warded off the shower of blows skillfully, which Jim aimed at him.

"Friend James," said Nathan, in the heat of the contest, "this is mere child's play. I see there is but one way of bringing this scandalous and wicked affair to a close, and that is by conquering thee; in order to do this, I will inflict a heavy blow between thine eyes, which will prostrate thee." Following out the suggestion, Nathan struck Jim a tremendous blow on his forehead, which brought him senseless to the ground.

"Now," said Nathan, "I will teach thee a lesson, and I hope it will be a wholesome lesson, too. I will seat myself astraddle of thy breast; I will place my knees upon thy arms, thus, so that thou cannot injure me when thou returnest to consciousness. I hope I may be the humble instrument of taming thy fierce, warlike nature, and make a better and more respectable man of thee."

As the Quaker concluded, Jim began to show some signs of life. The first impulse of Jim, when he fairly saw his condition, was to turn Nathan off. He struggled desperately, but he was in a vice—his effort was unavailing.

"Friend, thou must keep still until I am done with thee," said Nathan. "I believe I am an humble instrument in the hands of God to chastise thee, and I trust when I am done with thee thou wilt be a changed man. Friend James, does thee not repent of attacking me?"

"No," said James; "let me up and I'l show you."

"I will not let thee up, thou impious wretch," replied Nathan; "darest thou profane the name of thy Maker—I will punish thee for that—I will check thy respiration for a moment."

Nathan, as good as his word, clutched him by the throat. He compressed his grip, and a gurgling sound could be heard; Jim's face became distorted; a tremor ran through his frame. He was evidently undergoing a process of strangulation. The Quaker relaxed his hold, but not until the choaking process had sufficiently, as he thought, tamed the perverse spirit of Jim. It took some moments for Jim to inhale sufficient air to address the Quaker.

"I will knock under," said Jim; "enough, let me up."

"No, thou hast not got half enough," replied Nathan. "Thou art now undergoing a process of moral purification, and thou must be contented to remain where thou lyest until I am done with thee. Thou just profaned thy Maker, friend James," continued Nathan, "confess, dost thou repent thy wickedness?"

"No, hanged if I do," growled Jim.

"Thou preverse man," replied Nathan, in an imploring tone, "say that thou repentest thy wickedness."

"I'll be hanged if I do," growled Jim.

"Wilt thou not," replied the Quaker, "must I use compulsory means? I will impress thy windpipe again unless thou givest me an answer in the affirmative—say quick, art thou sorry?"

"No, I—y-e-s," shrieked Jim in a gurgling tone, as the Quaker's grip tightened, "Yes I am sorry!"

"Is thy sorrow a godly sorrow," inquired Nathan.

Jim rather demurred, giving an affirmative answer to this question, but a gentle squeeze admonished him he had better yield.

"Yes," replied Jim, "now let me up."

"I am not done with thee yet?" said Nathan.

"Thou hast been a disturber of the peace of this neighborhood time out of memory—thy hand has been raised against every man—thou art a brawler. Wilt thou promise me that in future, thee will lead a more peaceable life, that thou wilt love thy neighbor as thyself?"

"Yes," answered Jim, hesitatingly, "all but the Quakers."

"Thou must make no exceptions," replied Nathan.

"If I say yes to that—I'll die first."

A struggle now ensued between the two, but Jim had his match.

"Thou must yield James," said Nathan, "I insist on it," and he again grasped Jim by the throat. "I will choke thee into submission; thou must answer affirmatively—say after me, 'I promise to love my neighbors as myself, including the Quakers.'"

"I promise that?" said Jim, I'll be cursed if I do."

"I will check thy respiration if thou don't," replied Nathan. "Wilt thou yield?"

"No, I won't; I'll be blasted if I do," answered Jim.

"Thee had better give in," replied Nathan, I will check thee again if thee does not—see my grip tightens."

And Nathan did compress his grip, and the choking process went on. Jim's face first became distorted, then purple—his tongue lolled out, and his eyes protruded from their sockets—his body writhed like a dying man's. Nathan persisted in holding his grip until Jim became entirely passive; he then relaxed his hold. Jim was slow in recovering his speech and his senses; when he did, he begged Nathan for mercy's sake to release him.

"When thee will make the promise I exact from thee, I will release thee, but no sooner," replied Nathan.

Jim saw that he was powerless, and that the Quaker was resolute. He felt it was no use to persist in his stubbornness.

"I will give in," he replied, "I will promise to love my neighbor as myself."

"Including the Quakers?" insinuated Nathan.

"Yes, including the Quakers," replied Jim.

Thou mayest arise then, friend James," answered Nathan, "and I trust the lesson thou has learned to-day will make a more peaceable citizen of thee, and I hope a better man."

Poor Jim was completely humbled; he left the field with his spirits completely cowed. Not long after this occurrence the story became bruited about. This was more than Jim could bear. He soon after left the scene of his many triumphs and his late defeat, and emigrated to the "far west." The last I heard from him he was preparing to make another move. Being pressed for his reason why he again emigrated, he said a colony of Quakers were about moving into his neighborhood. He was under an obligation to love them, but he was of the opinion that distance would lend strength to his attachment.

A MEDICAL COMPLICATION

Not long since the Doc. was "called in" to prescribe for my grandmother. Taking the old lady's wrist between his fingers and requesting her to run out her tongue, he "opened out."

"Ma'am," said he; "the diaphragm of your occipital flamingo has united with the diagnosis of your metscarpal lusus naturæ, which has brought about a multicaulus of your opthalmia, thus producing an inflammation of the secondary slogan, and a total collapse of the elementary perihelion belonging to the os-knee-pan."

"Sakes and mercy on me! how did I ketch it so bad?"

"And, ma'am," continued the doctor, spreading out grandly, "I discover by the superincumbent flatulence of the pulsation in the left lobe of your wrist, a slight tincture of antimony, which must be checked."

"Sakes! will it swell?"

"And further, ma'am—there is a large abscence gathering in the lacteal region of your sponsorial curriculum, which has been accumulating in the lower fangs of your solar system, and spreadin' generally."

"What on earth 'll cure me?"

"Well, you must bathe your epigram in hot water, soak your ears in cotton lozengers, which will dispel your constitutional marasmus and restore your apocalypse to its natural conjunctions. Then take three of these pills every two minutes for two days, or until perspiration ensues. It'll sooner or later burst out like an eruption of Mount Vesuvius."

"Corruption of Count Pegasus! What's that?"

"After which rub yourself with the compound extract of the carbonate of old gin; take a dose inwardly, and then go to bed ahem!"

The doctor coughed again, but the old lady never raised her head. She was asleep and her blackened pipe lay broken at her feet. The doctor gave one more loud "ahem!" buttoned up his coat, pulled on his gloves, and so departed.

He had talked her into the land of dreams.

Children.—Blessed be God for all that the children enjoy! Did you ever think of it, how independent children are of circumstances? How the children of the poor are as happy with a penny toy, with a bit of broken china, a rag-baby, or their mud pies, as the offspring of the rich with their endless variety of playthings, selected with so much care from the most expensive shops? Do you know how ready children are to find employment in any condition, with a contentment and cheerfulness which grown up people may indeed envy? It is not until they become acquainted with the conventionalities of the world, and find they lack what is most important in the world's eye, that discontent creeps into the heart, and dissatisfaction takes the place of this blessed state.

Lord Macauly, passing one day through Seven Dials, bought a handful of ballads from some street singers, who were bawling out the contents to a gaping audience. Proceeding on his way home, he was astonished on suddenly stopping, to find himself surrounded by half a score of urchins, their faces beaming with expectation.

"Now, then," said the historian, "what is it."

"Oh! that's a good 'un," replied the little boys "after we've come all this way"

"But what are you waiting for?" said Macauley, astonished at the lads' familiarity.

"Waiting for? Why, for you to sing, to be sure."

Sir Walter Scott wrote, "The race of mankind would perish did we cease to help each other. From the time the mother binds the child's head, till the moment that some kind assistant wipes the dew of death from the brow of the dying, we cannot exist without mutual help. All, therefore, that need aid have a right to ask for it of their fellow mortals, and no one who has it in his power to grant, can refuse without incurring guilt."

A Western clergyman, in presenting a revolver to one of the volunteers, said: "If you get into a tight place and have to use it, ask God's blessing if you have time, but be sure and not let the enemy get the start of you. You can say amen after you shoot."

"May I leave a few tracts?" asked a missionary of an elderly lady who responded to his knock. "Leave some tracks? Certainly, you may," said she, looking at him most benignly over her specs; "leave them with the heels toward the door, if you please."

"Did you ever see an elephant's skin," asked a teacher in an infant school in a fast neighborhood.

"I have!" shouted a six year old at the foot of the class.

"Where?" inquired old specks, considerably amused at his earnestness.

"On the elephant," shouted prodigy, gleefully.

"The times are hard, wife, and I find it difficult to keep my nose above water." "You can easily keep your nose above water, husband, if you didn't keep it so often above brandy."

"Now, gentlemen," said Sheridan to his guests, as the ladies left the room, "let us understand each other. Are we to drink like men or like beasts?" Somewhat indignantly, the guests exclaimed, "Like men, of course." "Then," he replied, "we are going to get jolly drunk, for brutes never drink more than they want."

MISCELLANEOUS.

MRS. WINSLOW'S
SOOTHING SYRUP.

Every mother should be prepared to act in the capacity of both nurse and physician to her children she can, if she will, discharge these duties much better than any one she can employ. If she does not, she ought to know that there is a Medicine prepared by an old nurse and female physician which has stood the test of many, many years, and is the most perfect thing on earth for children teething; it also cures Wind Colic, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, and is sure to regulate the bowels. We say to every mother, do not let your own prejudices, or the prejudices of others stand in the way of the relief that will be sure—yes, absolutely sure—to follow the use of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP certainly does, as the name implies, "soothe" the little sufferer into a quiet, natural sleep, from which it awakes invigorated and refreshed. And for the cure of diseases incident to the period of teething, such as Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Wind Colic, &c., we have never seen its equal.

We have always been, and still are, opposed to the practice of drugging infants. This article has no deleterious effects whatever, and from our own experience (we speak advisedly) we have every confidence in it, and can heartily recommend it to all mothers. Take our advice—use it—and you will as strongly recommend it to others as we have to you.

When we say that MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP acts like a charm, we do but reiterate the language of every person who ever used it for their children, for all diseases incident to the period of teething, such as Dysentery and Diarrhœa, Wind Colic and Cholera Infantum. It will produce quietude and rest, relieve all suffering, and the infant will awake invigorated and refreshed, and not with the dull and stupefying effects of preparations of opium

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the excruciating pain of cutting teeth? If so, go at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately—depend upon it; there is no mistake about it. There is not a mother on earth who has ever used it who will not tell you at once that it will regulate the bowels, and give rest to the mother and relief and health to the child, operating like magic. It is perfectly safe in all cases, and pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States.

During the thirty years of unprecedented and increasing popularity of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP, innumerable "Cordials" and other nostrums, prepared by pretended M.D.'s, have sprung up and lived but a mushroom existence, the SOOTHING SYRUP has been constantly increasing in popularity, and become a household word, and for the health of their children, by the use of her i valuable article.

THOUSANDS OF MOTHERS THANK
MRS. WINSLOW

PRICE 20 CENTS PER BOTTLE.

For sale by

THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St., NY

TIME, MONEY, AND LABOR SAVED,
BY USING
B. T. BABBITT'S
SUPERIOR FRENCH
CHEMICAL ERASIVE SOAP,

Made and improved by the Original Inventor of the German and Austrian Chemical Erasive or Detersive Soap, of which the real and genuine article has, since its first introduction to the American public, been most favorably known, as the Best and Cheapest Washing Soap in the market, and with the present improvement, which is not known to any other manufacturer, we Challenge the World to produce a better article.

1. One pound of it will accomplish as much as three pounds of any other soap.
2. But one quarter the time and labor are required to do the same amount of washing, as with the best of family soap.
3. It does not injure the most delicate fabric; will tend to set the colors, and wash cleaner than any other soap in use.
4. Clothes need no boiling, and but little rubbing with the hands, thus avoiding their wear upon the wash-board.
5. Paints, Grease, Tar, and stains of every description vanish as by magic, before its wonderful, searching, erasive powers.
6. It is invaluable to Machinists, Printers Painters, and all others using Inks, Oils, etc. for washing hands; it does not chap them (like other soaps,) but will cleanse and soften the skin.
7. It may be used in hard or soft water, and is adapted for use in all climates.

Put up in one pound bars, sixty bars in each Box.

For sale by the bar or box by

THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman Street.

MEDICAL.

THE BEST MEDICINES IN THE WORLD!!!

The following invaluable medicines may be obtained of

THOMAS HAMILTON, 48 Beekman St.

DR. CLARKE'S
VEGETABLE SHERRY-WINE BITTERS,

Are composed of Sarsaparilla, Dock-root, Rheubarb Thoroughwort, Dandelion, Prickly Ash, Bark, &c they should be taken not only in the Spring, but at all seasons of the year, as they operate directly on the liver, removing from it all coating of morbid matter, and restoring it to its normal action; also opening the bile ducts, causing the requisite flow of bile so essential to good health. Their influence upon the kidneys, also, is advantageously felt; at the same time they operate upon the blood, cleansing it from all impurity or taint of any kind. Humors of long standing are eradicated from the blood, thereby speedily curing jaundice, headache, weak stomach, sore eyes, nervousness, and other chronic diseases arising from impurity of the blood.

The palatableness of these bitters renders them agreeable to every one, and being composed entirely of vegetables, they may be used by all classes of people with safety.

Sold for the low price of 25 cents per pint bottle.

DR. CLARKE'S
SUGAR-COATED HERB PILLS.

These pills are made mostly from a valuable herb that grows on the proprietor's farm.

Warranted to cure Bilious Stomach, Bilious Bowels, Bilious Colic, Bilious Fever, and all diseases which arise from a bilious state of the system viz, Jaundice, Headache, Heartburn, Sour Stomach Liver Complaint, Weak Stomach, Pain in the Stomach, Costiveness, Loss of Appetite, and a host, of diseases too numerous to mention, as their number is legion.

Warranted to cure diseases peculiar to the female sex

Warranted at all times safe and efficient.

Warranted for a gentle family physic not to have an equal in America, operating without pain.

Warranted not to contain calomel, aloes, gamboge colocynth, or other drastic poisonous drugs, which always do the system more hurt than good, and by their continued use are sure to cause a derangement of the liver, bring on costiveness, and its inevitable consequence, piles, and dyspepsia, and finally break down the constitution, and cause the victim to drag out a miserable existence. Touch not, taste not, handle not the wily poison. Your life is your own,—preserve it. Take a simple herb, sure in its effects, but safe and pleasant,—no wrenching pains, no ill effects, and made pleasant to take by a fine coat of sugar. Children love them, ladies admire them, fools and wise men cannot do without them, doctors prescribe them,—and every body takes them. Yes, every body: from the honest farmer and mechanic to the most learned philosopher. And why? Simply because they are good, excellently good; and will do you good.

PRICE, 25 CENTS PER BOX.

DR. CLARKE'S COUGH AND CROUP
SYRUP.

It is the most wonderful, effective and extraordinary medicine for the lungs ever used by man. It is perfectly safe and pleasant to take, and gives relief immediately. Thousands have been cured by its use, and tens of thousands will be again. All who use it pronounce it to be the best lung remedy ever discovered. Common coughs and colds are dispelled by the use of only a few doses, and children can be cured of croup at once if taken in its first stage. Long-standing diseases require perseverance, but a cure will be guaranteed. No medicine before ever possessed such excellent healing and curative power for the lungs. It seems, with almost magic power, to dispel the most severe cases of cough and throat ail.

Vocalists and public speakers should not fail to keep a bottle on hand at all times. A small quantity taken occassionally renders the voice beautifully clear and the lungs extremely strong. Words cannot fully express the great benefit to be derived from the use of the world-renowned remedy. Delay not, but procure a bottle at once. Use it if needed and if not, keep it till necessity requires its use, as all, sooner or later, are overtaken by some unpleasant affection of the lungs or throat.

Price, 25 Cents per Bottle.

BOOKS.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE ANGLO-AFRICAN MAGAZINE, BOUND.

Price.—In half Morocco $1,25; half Morocco, gilt edges, $1.50. Muslin, $1.00

CONTENTS;

Embellishment.—Portrait of Alexander Dumas.
Music.—By A. J. R. Connor.
Apology.
A Statistical View of the Colored Population of the United States, from 1790 to 1850.
African American Picture Gallery.—Anon.
American Caste and Common Schools,—by J. Holland Townsend.
A Review of Slavery and the Slave Trade,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
A Good Habit Recommended,—by Sarah M. Douglass.
A Chapter in the History of the African Slave Trade,—by Edward W. Blyden.
Anglo-Saxons and Anglo-Africans.—Anon.
A Word to Our People.
Blake: or the Huts of America,—by Martin R. Delany.
Books &c.
Civilization—Its Dependence on Physical Circumstances.
Colored American Patriots,—by Wm. C. Nell
Comets,—by M. R. Delany.
Citizenship—by James Mc'Cune Smith.
Claude Brihndas De Salas,—Selected.
Communication from N. Y. Society for the Promotion of Education among Colored Children.
Chess.
Dumas—Alexander.
Effects of Emancipation in Jamaica, by Robert Campbell.
Fragments of Thought,—by D. A. Payne.
Fancy Sketches,—Anonymous.
Gone to God—Poetry—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
Intellectual Culture—by Robert Gordon.
In the Constitution of Man there exists a Religious Element,—by Robt. Gordon.
Lines—Poetry—by Grace A. Mapps.
Mrs. Partington and Mrs. Freshington.—Anon
Our Greatest Want,—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
Our Duty in the Conflict,—by J. Holland Townsend.
On the Fourteenth Query of Thos. Jeffers Notes on Virginia.
On the Personality of the First Cause,—by Robt. Gordon.
Patrick Brown's First Love.
Poetry—Anonymous.
Selected Items.
Struggles for Freedom in Jamaica—by Robert Campbell.
The Attraction of Planets—by M. R. Delany.
The German Invasion, by James M'Cune Smith
Trifles, by Mary A. S. Cary.
The Coming Man—Poetry—by Wm. J. Wilson
The Educational Wants of the Free Colored People, by Martin H. Freeman.
Thomas L. Jinnings.
The Teacher and his Pupil—Poetry—by Wm J. Wilson.
Thoughts on Hayti, by James T. Holly.
The Successive Advances of Astronomy, by G B. Vashon.
The Oberlin Wellington Rescue, by J. Mercer Langston.
The Shadows of Intemperance,—by James Fields.
The Dying Fugitive—Poetry—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
The Anglo-African and the African Slave Trade.
The Two Offers, by Frances Ellen Watkins.
The Re-opening of the Slave Trade—Anonymous.
The First Colored Convention.
The Self-Redeeming Power of the Colored Races of the World,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
The Policy that we should Pursue,—by J. Holland Townsend.
The Education of the Colored People,—by Amos Gerry Beman.
The Great Conflict requires Great Faith,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
The Outbreak in Virginia.
The Sentinel of Freedom—Poetry,—by J. Sella Martin.
The Nat Turner Insurrection.
The Execution of John Brown.
The Anglo-African Magazine for 1860.
The Watering Places.—Anonymous.

Orders should be addressed to
THOMAS HAMILTON,
48 Beekman street,
New York

PUBLICATIONS FOR SALE BY
THOMAS HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE ANGLO-AFRICAN MAGAZINE, Bound,—Price—In half Morocco, $1.25; half Morocco, gilt edges, $1.50; Muslin, $1.00. Contents: Embellishments—Portrait of Alexander Dumas. Music, by A. J. R. Conner. Articles by Bishop D. A. Payne, James M'Cune Smith, M. D., Prof. Geo. B. Vashon, Dr. Martin, R. Delany, Mrs. Sarah M. Douglass, Prof. Robert Campbell, Prof. Wm. J. Wilson, Rev. J. W. C. Pennington, D. D., Rev. J. Theo. Holly, Mrs. Frances Ellen Watkins Harper, Prof. M. H. Freeman, Rev. Edward W Blyden, Rev. Robert Gorden, Prof. Chas. L. Reason, Mrs M. A. Shadd Cary, Dr. James Fields, Rev. Amos Gerry Beman, Miss Grace A. Mapps Rev. J. Sella Martin, Wm. C. Nell, Esq. J. Mercer Langston, and J. Holland Townsend Esq.,

The Life of Captain John Brown
The Liberator of Kansas, and the Hero of Harper's Ferry. By James Redpath. An elegant 12mo. volume of 400 pages, illustrated and embellished with a superb Steel Portrait of the Glorious Old Man. Price $1.00.

My Bondage and My Freedom.
By Fredrick Douglass, One vol., 12 mo., 464 pp. Illustrated. Price $1.00, postage 22 cts.

Life of Jermain W. Loguen.
The great Underground Railroad King. Price $1.00.

The Martyrs and the Fugitive.
By the Rev. S H. Platt. A thrilling work on slavery and the slave-trade, detailing the capture of a family in Africa by the Slave-dealers, their fearful journey to the coast, the horrors of the "middle passage," their sale in America, and subsequent martyrdom; the slavery of their son, his terrible sufferings and perilous escapes. Sent, postpaid, upon the receipt of 38 cts.

Twelve Years a Slave.
The Narrative of Solomon Northrup, a citizen of New York, kidnapped in Washington City in 1841 and rescued in 1853, from a cotton plantation near Red River, Louisiana. Seven Illustrations, 336 pp. 12mo. Price $1,00, postage paid.

Our National Charters.
For the Millions. Including—1. The Federal Constitution of 1787--9. 2. The Articles of Confederation, 1787. 3. The Declaration of Independence, 1776, 4. The Articles of Association 1775. With notes showing their bearing on salvery, annd the relative powers of the State and National Governments. Also a summary of Legal Opinions collected from the highest authorities, is prefixed to the Constitution. An Appendix contains extracts from State Constitutions and Bills of Rights; Ordinance of 1787, excluding Slavery from the Northwest Territory: also, Sentiments of the Revolutionary Fathers, &c. By mail, postage prepaid, single copy, 15 cts.; four copies, 50 cts.; nine copies $1,00.

The American Slave-Code,
In Theory and Practice: Its Distinctive Features Shown by its Statutes, Judicial Decisions, and Illustrative Facts. 430 pp., 12mo. Price 75 cts postage paid.

Unconstitutionality of Slavery.
By Lysander Spooner. In paper, 291 pp., 8vo Price 75 cts., or postage paid 86 cts.

Review of Lysander Spooner's Essay on the Unconstitutionality of Slavery.
By Wendell Phillips. Price 25 cts. Postage 5 Cts.

The Revelations of a Slave Smuggler.
Being the Autobiography of Captain Richard Drake, an African trader for fifty years, from 1807 to 1857. The work is handsomely illustrated, with graphic representations of scenes as they actually occur on the slave ships and on shore. Illustration No. 1 is a large cut, 16x23, representing a slave market on the Coast of Africa. Illustration No. 2 represents a scene in the Hold of a Slaver (middle passage). Then there is a large plate, giving views of a slave vessel betwen decks, regulation slave-deck, regulation packing, &c. The work is handsomely printed—contains one hundred large 8vo. pages, and is published at a price which place it within the reach of the masses—viz: 25 cents a copy. When sent by mail the postage (six cents) must be added.

The Nat Turner Insurrection.
A full and reliable account. Copies will be sent to any address on the receipt of five cents.

Uncle Tom's Cabin.
By Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe. Two volumes in one. Price, $1,25.

The Kidnapped and Ransomed,
Being the personal recollections of Peter Still, and his wife, Vina, after forty years of slavery by Mrs. Kate E. R. Pickard, with an introduction by Rev. S. J. May, Illustrated, 12mo. cloth $1,25.

Gerrit Smith in Congress.
"Slavery has no right but to die!" A work of over 400 pages, containing all his speeches delivered in Congress; also, an accurate likeness. Price, only 80 cents per copy, and postage paid.

The Dream;
Or, the true history of Dea Giles's Distillery and Dea. Jones's Brewery. By George B. Cheever, D.D. Price per single copy 10 cents, $1 per doz., or $7 per hundred.

A Summer on the Carribbean Sea.
By J. Dennis Harris. With an introduction by Geo. William Curtis. Sent by mail on receipt of $1.

A Pilgrimage to my Motherland;
An account of a journey among the Egbas and Yorubas of Central Africa, in 1859-60. By Robert Campbell, one of the Commissioners of the Niger Valley Exploring Party; late in charge of the Scientific Department of the Institute for Colored Youth, Philadelphia; and member of the International Statistical Congress, London. Price, 63 cents. When sent by mail, the postage (10 cents) must be added.

Turner's (J. A.) Cotton Planter's Manual,
Being a compilation of facts from the best authorities on the culture of cotton, its natural history, chemical analysis, trade and consumption, and embracing a history of cotton and the cotton gin. Price, $1. Postage, 15 cents.

The Manual of the Wardrobe.
00 large octavo pages, in paper, by Mrs. Pullan. Price, 25 cents. Sent, postpaid, upon receipt of the price. It comprises a thorough dissertation upon taste in dress, an explanation of the different kinds of stitches made in sewing, remarks upon the various kinds and qualities of fabrics used in the wardrobe, with complete directions for cutting and fitting all kinds of garments for women's and children's wear; the preparation of table, toilet and bed linen. Illustrated by nearly one hundred [illegible] and mode[illegible]s.

The Weekly Anglo-African.

"MAN MUST BE FREE!—IF NOT THROUGH LAW, WHY THEN ABOVE THE LAW."

VOL. I. NO. 12. NEW YORK, OCTOBER 19, 1861. PRICE FOUR CENTS

The Weekly Anglo-African.
IS PUBLISHED
EVERY SATURDAY,
BY ROBT. HAMILTON,
No. 48 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW YORK.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
Two Dollars per year, or Four Cents per copy, payable on delivery.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.
Six Cents a line for the first insertion, and Three Cents for each subsequent insertion.
Notices of Births, Marriages, Deaths, Public Meetings, &c., inserted for twenty-five Cents provided they do not exceed five lines; if more than that, Five Cents for each additional line.
All communications for the paper must be addressed ROBT HAMILTON,
48 Beekman st., New York.

Poetry.

THE WORLD FROM THE SIDEWALK.

Have you ever stood in the crowded street,
In the glare of the fitful lamp,
And marked the tread of the million feet
In their quaintly musical tramp?
As the surging throng move to and fro,
'Tis a pleasant sight, I ween,
To mark the figures that come and go
In the ever changing scene:

Where the sinner treads with the publican proud,
And the priest in his gloomy cowl,
And Dives walks in the motley crowd,
With Lazarus cheek by jowl;
And the daughter of toil, with her fresh, young heart,
As pure as her spotless name,
Keeps step with the women that make their mart
In the haunts of sin and shame.

How gaily steps the country lass
In the midst of the city's ills,
As freshly pure as the daisied grass
That grows on her native hills;
And the beggar, too, with his hungry eye,
And his sad wan face and crutch,
Gives a blessing the same to the passer by,
An' he gives him little or much.

When night has beaten the world's tattoo,
And in dusky armor dight,
Is treading, with echoless footsteps, through
The gloom of the silent night,
How many of these shall be daintily fed,
And will sink to slumbers sweet,
Yet many shall go to a sleepless bed,
And never a crumb to eat!

Ah, me! when the hours go joyfully by,
How little we stop to heed
Our brothers and sisters' despairing cry,
In their woe and their bitter need!
Yet, such a world as the angels sought
This world of ours we'd call,
If the brotherly love that the Father taught
Were felt by each for all.

Yet a few short years, and this motley throng
Will all have passed away,
And the rich and the poor, and the old and young,
Will be undistinguished clay:
And lips that laugh and lips that moan
Will in silence alike be sealed,
And some will be under a stately stone,
And some the Potter's Field.

But the sun will be shining just as bright,
And so will the silver moon,
And just such a crowd will be here at night,
And just such a crowd at noon:
And men will be wicked and women will sin,
As ever since Adam's fall,
With the same old world to labor in,
And the same God over all.

A. R. D.

WHAT ARE WE COLORED PEOPLE DOING? OR LIKELY TO DO.

Mr. Editor,

The present condition of affairs in this country, cannot but arrest the attention of the most indifferent observer, and in view of such condition the question has been, and is still being asked, what are we colored people doing? or are likely to do.

In our humble estimation we are not called upon to put forth any exertions in the present contest looking to its arrest.

We have had no finger in stirring up the water of secession. We have all along maintained the even tenor of our way, struggling to show to our oppressors everywhere, that we needed only an opportunity to exhibit how well we could come up to the true standard of citizenship, which would demonstrate our right to the full enjoyment of all rights, known to white men under the constitution.

No people better than the American, understand the real, intrinsic worth of the blacks. And this knowledge is not of yesterday, but it has lived upon the page of history since the days of the revolution.

In that great contest for self-government, our fathers did dare upon the battle field, to place their feet towards the enemy, as far as others who dared to step most far. No one will question this, for no one doubts it. Indeed we have the immortal satisfaction to know that a black man was the first to fall in the conflict, which in reality commenced in the streets of Boston, and which ended in severing the thirteen colonies from the mother country. Every school boy knows of "the giant of a negro Crispus Attucks." Then descending the scale, if you please, we have yet to learn the name of the black who deserted his colors upon any revolutionary battle field, or shrunk from the fight upon Lake Erie, under Perry, or who like a sneak and coward refused to bear arms gallantly under the lead of Jackson, at New Orleans.

We claim to have done our share in rendering this republic great, and by our sweat and toil made princely rich those who have not yet ceased to enslave, villify, and degrade us.

Are these the rewards due to brave men for great services? Is it thus that we are to be treated? And shall we, the descendents of noble sires, now fly to arms and sacrifice our lives to bind new chains upon our already fettered limbs? No! God forbid. We have a lamp to guide our feet, and that lamp is the history of the past, its memory is eternal, its teachings are irresistable.

Since the adoption of the Federal Constitution up to the present what has been our country's record upon the question of slavery?

A few negroes were liberated in Maryland and Virginia. The more northern states afforded to be generous and enacted emancipation bills, because the institution from reason of the climate would not pay

Since then how many states have abolished slavery? Not one.

The African slave-trade was vigorously gone into, and men, women and children were stolen to serve strangers in a strange land.

The Florida war provoked simply because the Indian not so religious as his white neighbors, gave protection to fugitives.

In 1850, the passage of the Fugitive Slave Bill. Oh! ye powers of darkness did there ever go forth from your gloomy chambers an enactment which could rival this in pains, in penalties, in bloody cruelty!

Then the Dred Scott decision putting it beyond the possibility of a black to have any rights, and consequently to have nothing in common with humanity.

Then the revival of the slave trade, and the popular heart, and the popular sentiment seem to have culminated upon it.

This revival was not alone advocated by the loathsome politicians, but it found admirers and supporters in the American pulpit.

And jus there is the great trouble—that had slavery been kept among the political parties, and not allowed to scatter its poison, things would have worn a different face, and we could have relied upon the Church to uproot the evil. But her high walls and spires are made of cotton bales, the priest fattens upon the unpaid toil of Eve's children. Her sacrament which in the beginning was intended to remind us of the Last Supper, in these hypocritical times better represents the mangled flesh, and warm blood of the murdered negro, than it calls to mind the elements distributed by a Saviour's hand.

The administration which is the exponent of the people dont claim the present struggle to be a war for emancipation, but simply to bring back the seceded States to their old allegiance, and crowning slavery with her usual rights.

This is Mr. Lincoln's theory and practice, but he is extremely dull who solaces himself with the idea that the revolted States are going to return, with the old basis for a platform. Secession is a fixed fact so far as the South understands it.

We blacks must learn wisdom, and bide our time. God's handiwork is as clearly manifested in this war, as ever it was in the days of Pharaoh and Moses. He lead the children of Israel by a way they knew not of, and He is determined to break our chains, if in so doing he destroys the Republic. If this be God's programme (and every day's developments makes it more clear), who dares say him nay?

We have nothing to gain, and everything to lose, by entering the lists as combatants. In the first place the authorities have not called upon us, next to force ourselves upon the people uninvited, would be to defeat the grandest ends the world has ever seen worked out.

And suppose we were invited, what duty would we then owe to ourselves and our posterity? We are in advance of our fathers. They put confidence in the word of the whites only to feel the dagger of slavery driven still deeper into the heart throbbing with emotions of joy for freedom. We are not going to re-enact that tragedy. Our enslaved brethren must be made freedmen, and the right to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" solemnly and religiously stipulated in the bond. We of the North must have all rights which white men enjoy; until then we are in no condition to fight under the flag which gives us no protection.

The edict has gone forth, and like the Medean and Persian Law, it cannot alter, viz., The North must conquer the rebellious States, or in turn be overrun by slavery. The South fights with an earnestness so terrible that it brings down a foe at every shot. The North starts with determination, but retreats ere the fight is decided.

Now while these two serpents are eyeing each other from the opposite banks of the Potomac, preparatory to the fatal spring, we who in times past have been educated to wait, wait a little longer, for we can afford it. Our cause is safe. Mr. Lincoln, if Davis drives him hard, as a matter of self-defence must proclaim freedom throughout all the land, and to all the inhabitants thereof. If upon the opposite Davis discerns the hand-writing upon the wall, rather than be conquered, will blow freedom's trump from the highest summit of the everlasting Blue Ridge, and gather around his standard millions of brave souls, whom no bayonet could ever again reduce to bondage.

Five month's since no man North of Mason and Dixon's line ever dreamed that to-day would find this Union a frail bark floating simply by mercy's consent. Mr. Lincoln expected to have "crushed out" Secession with his three months' men. How short sighted are human calculations! He little knew the indomitableness of the Secession devil that had been gaining strength for thirty years. He knows it now, but alas! too late!

Thank God the final issue is beyond the control of administrations. Upon each day the conflict deepens, and exceeds in proportions the growth of Otos and Ephialtes, mentioned in Heathen mythology. The two contending parties are but the instruments of a "Higher Law." They may capture and return fugitives, but the "irrepressible conflict" becomes none the less formidable.

God lives! He yet controls in the affairs of men. He still directs the lightning's course, and the thunderbolt which annihilates slavery he holds in his own right hand.

IVANHOE.

Troy, Oct. 7, 1861.

THE SAD EXPERIENCE OF A YOUNG EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Mr. Editor:—

In presenting my experience, permit me to say, for the satisfaction of your city readers, that the incidents related below did not happen in this city or State. My sad misfortunes I charge not to any lack of patriotism on their part, for they happened in a part of the country where our people had not the advantages that those of this city have, and therefore upon consideration of these melancholy facts, I now entertain a forgiving spirit, believing that as I hope myself to be forgiven, so should I entertain the like feeling for those who have so seriously wronged me and mine. Having naturally a philanthropic spirit, I from my earliest recollections promised to devote my life to the good of those whose sorrows and sufferings were more or less closely connected or immediately identified with my own in this country, consecrated to human slavery by the degenerate sons of the first great Revolution of the United States. To give you an idea of my earliest predispositions, I must tell my story in my own simple manner:

In my days of boyhood glee I sought the open fields, the sea-girt shore, the apple orchard or the tall forests of oak, chestnut and walnut trees. While listening to the hum of bees, or the roaring of the boisterous waves, as they broke upon the long beach, to be seen in the distance, or upon the uneven shore sparsely lined with small trees and underbrush, or when basking beneath the tall forest shade, enjoying the heavenly music of a thousand warblers of its feathery inhabitants; how I longed for the arrival of that time when manhood's morn should dawn upon me that I might contribute my share towards that leaven which leaveneth the whole lump! At the age of fifteen though seemingly but a youth, and in fact but one in either experience or age, the strong desire to share the responsibilities of those many years my senior, I entered the arena claiming that respect and consideration due only to those twice my own age and acknowledged capabilities; but having made the bold step impressed by duty, I determined not to retract, but to meet it, cost what it might.

By perseverance and industry, regularity in all my habits, unassumed dignity, with an aspiring disposition, it was my fortune soon to hold position in society, only conferred upon those whose experience in life's various changes and knowledge of human nature entitled them to such, a mind well developed by such education as those who have looked forward and grasped the glittering tokens that of old bedecked the warrior, the champion returning flushed with hard-fought victories from the din of battle; or the eminent statesman who leads his country through a crisis, which but for his wisdom would have foundered.

While endeavoring to know and understand the wants of those suffering with myself from a thousand or more disabilities, I found myself often brought in contact with those whose education and zealous efforts in our behalf entitled them to my respect, and their advice worthy of acceptance as a guide to that end for which we were willing and self-sacrificing co-workers. After listening to the advice of many, and considering the practicability of the different plans, I resolved upon one that coincided with my own predetermination, should it seem possible of accomplishment—one that had long engrossed my anxious mind before the mention of it by my adviser, a philanthropic talented friend, whose cause was our cause.

That idea was the publishing of a journal to be issued weekly, and inviting one and all among our people of every mental capacity and cultivation to contribute to its columns; but not without knowing to some extent the many difficulties I should be obliged to encounter, the task and great patience necessary in overlooking, correcting, etc., before setting up in form the many contributions of manuscripts which I had reason to believe would follow the invitation, from some anxious to benefit their fellow men by good advice and example—others to cast in their mite, their all, to fill the columns of a sheet published by one of their own people whose efforts they would happily encourage.

Well, to be as brief as possible, that you may not weary in this recital, I will without going into minute details inform you of my progress and result in philanthropic experimentalism. Having been of an industrious turn, economical in my expenditures, it was my fortune to have laid aside quite a little sum, called rainy day stores.

The sum necessary for the object before me, after investing rainy day stores, I was encouraged to believe, would be forthcoming from my numrous patrons as a spontaneous out-pouring of Christian hearts for a benefit beyond ~~estimation, conferred upon a~~ down trodden race, each arguing that it would cost less sacrifice of comfort, life, health, money and time on the part of the supporters of the journal than any other project brought forward for our adoption. The many epistles of value from cultivated intellects from different sources, flowing with an abundance of interesting and useful information which I had reason to believe existed, but hidden from the masses for the want of that journal to carry the tidings far and wide, encouraged me, and it only remained with me to make the commencement. Whether my ideas were air built castles or facts realized, I leave you to draw your own conclusions. No doubt you know the patriotism of this great people as well perhaps, if not better than my humble self. At all events the confidence I entertained in my inexperienced but well-disposed heart towards my people, that success must attend so beneficial a project with blessed results, impelled me to not only invest all I had, but to assume responsibilities, which if not discharged by the assistance of those I would benefit, must ruin me forever. But sir the object was great, and the hazard necessarily must be great. Full of confidence in a people who I had been told once ranked first in arts, science and literature, and all that creates and makes great, what had I to fear but my own abilities? With these feelings I buckled on my armour. My first step was to Herald the glorious news throughout the Union thus:—A new channel is this day opened to you, my heart crushed, poor, despised brothers—it is for you to say whether it shall live as your mouth-piece, your recorder—my services are at your bidding, my paper is yours, one object is ours, one common destiny, live or die shall mark our course. Give me your voice, your helping hand. Upon the reception of this, cheers and prayers went up from every fire-side, from every heart. The longed for means was now at hand, glory to God's holy name.

For a season, though short, permit me to inform you, my encouragement was all that I could ask, but gradually the object of the paper was lost sight of. The very persons, loudest in their hallelujahs, wanted a paper to compete with the Ledger. The New York Ledger—supported by not only an immense capital, but the first and highest cultivated intellects of this country. Instead of information in relation to our people's wants, of their general welfare and progress, they wanted stories to amuse them, written by a Cobb, or a Fanny Fern, an Edward Everett, or I could not have their patronage. What a blow was that my countrymen! That indeed was "the unkindest cut of all."

My poorly supported journal lived two years—it beggared me and mine—it involved me almost irretrievably; I struggled and bore up while there was a straw to lean upon. At last disappointed and ruined, I was obliged to resign my efforts in that direction and apply myself to such labor as the times offered for the sustenance of my family whom I had robbed of their dependance for the good of those who little appreciated my sacrifices or my project. Driven to my wits' end for a sustenance, in times similar to the present, after seeking every where for employment day after day and finding none, my children crying for bread, distracted and crazed beyond endurance, upon a cold and stormy night I rushed into the street, made my way to the dock re*solving to end my misery by making one* less to burden society with his troubles. After offering up a fervent prayer for my wife and children I gave the last fatal leap, as I supposed, into the deep, deep waters.

As I felt the cold waters freezing my limbs, and choking the life out of me, I suddenly awoke from my slumber. I had only been dreaming. The whole that I have related was but a dream, brought on by much thought upon the many difficulties a poor editor must naturally contend with, who for the good of his people devotes his whole means and attention. You may imagine, sir, my gratification when I found that I was not an editor, and was still well and upon terra-firma, free from those disagreeable recollections forced upon an unfortunate editor, ruined by his love of philanthrpoy lured away by glittering promises and glorious hallelujahs.

R. H. V.

THE VIRGINIA FREEDMEN:

THEIR MORAL AND INTELLECTUAL IMPROVEMENT.

To The Editor of the Anglo-African:—

Mr. Lockwood, the missionary of the American Missionary Association, writes from Fortress Monroe, under date Sept. 27th and 28th, and says:

"Yesterday ~~being Fast-day, servile work~~ was generally suspended. I held two preaching services and one prayer-meeting. Two or three other meetings were held by the people themselves. All were deeply interesting. The heartiest prayers went up by the freedmen for the President, the Generals, and the Union, associated as they are with their fond hopes. In the afternoon, one of the exhorters named Thorten held a meeting at Old Point, while I had a service at the Seminary. Tuesday and Wednesday I established a good school at the Fortress, under the instruction of Mrs. Bailey, assisted by Miss Jennings, and James, a bright boy, who acts as monitor. These are all colored persons, and Mrs. Bailey is a free woman. The number of scholars will range from forty to sixty. I have also established a private school for the colored adults and children in the Hygeia Hospital, (in a part of the hotel,) under the instruction of a crippled man.

"I have distributed a large number of Union Primers; and it is interesting to see the workmen on the road and elsewhere taking out their books at every leisure interval, and teaching one another to read. Men, women and children evince an ardent thirst for knowledge, especially for Scriptural knowledge. As soon as they can spell out words, they want a Testament, so that I have already distributed seventy-five. Still we have, like the apostle, some if not 'many adversaries.' I am happy to express my obligations to Capt. Burleigh, and all at the seminary, and to all the officers and other friends in and about the Fortress, who speak well of me and my work, and in various ways give me aid and comfort. But there are those about here, and some in official posts, who do not relish these 'new measures.' The spirit of slavery, though slumbering here, is not dead. It is manifested toward the freedmen, as well as toward those who are trying to benefit them. Attending solely and discreetly to the business for which I came here, I possess my soul in patience, assured that God can make the wrath of man to praise him, and the remainder of wrath restrain."

Before Gen. Butler left the command here he took a decided stand with the claimants for runaway slaves. On one occasion, when the claimant and fugitive were both before him, Gen. B. asked the latter if he wanted to go with his old master. The man replied, "No, sir." "Well, then," said Gen. B., "you need not go. Sir, you cannot have him." Gen. Wool, one day, when a "contraband," claimed by his old master, was summoned before him, asked him "if he was willing to go back," and received for answer, "I do not wish to, sir." "Then," said the General, "you shall not be forced to go, and if any man attempts to molest you, come to me." This is noble! But the same stand has not been taken in every case.

One of the "contrabands" said to Mr. Lockwood, "If one is returned, why may not all be? and if I am to be returned, let me be returned now, and not kept in suspense as to my fate." Another said, "Masters have tried to make us believe that the Yankee only wished to sell us to Cuba, to get money to carry on the war." Some say that masters who now pretend to be Union men were strong Secessionists; and they shake their heads when told they have changed their sentiments, shrewdly suspecting that it is only to regain their slaves. It requires steady and undeviating firmness and consistency to inspire these "strangers" with confidence in Government, and sympathy for its success. Mr. L. does all he can to quiet their fears, repress their complaints, and inspire them with confidence and trust. He writes, under date of Sept. 28th:—

"I want, to the extent of my ability, to co-operate in good faith with those in authority; and I am happy in having secured the good will of so many. The Lord continue to give me favour among officers and people, and save me from the evil designs of adversaries! Our school was this afternoon visited by two naval officers. One of them spoke approvingly of the undertaking, and thought it would be good for the children on their return to slavery, to which he thought they were inevitably doomed. He thought the war would soon terminate, and that then the slaveholders would have a just claim to their property. And this officer is a New Englander! Chaplain Jones of the U. S. ship Minnesota subsequently called, and said he had seen a favourable notice of the enterprise in the papers, and was much pleased to see the thing started. He had had it in his heart himself to do something for this people.

"After the reading exercises the children sung, 'There is a happy land,' and then, all kneeling, Chaplain Jones led, and the children followed in the Lord's prayer. He afterwards prayed extemporaneously, and offered fervent petitions for the children and the enterprise. We all felt gratified. Col. Wardrop of the Coast Guard, in a friendly manner, said he had seen a favourable notice of our work in a Boston paper."

Under date of Sept. 30th, Mr. Lockwood writes:—

"Yesterday was a good day for us. Attended a refreshing sunrise prayer-meeting. At 9 1-2 attended Sabbath-school at Ex-President Tyler's house. A goodly number of children and adults were present. At 11 o'clock held a preaching service at Brother Davis's, in a large building built for a mill, and called Dr. Wood's Mill. Quite a large concourse. I preached on God's household covenant and family religion. ~~Married four couples, including Peter~~ Herbert, an exhorter, whose wife at the commencement of their living together assigned as a reason for their not being particular in regard to regular marriage, that 'the master could separate them the next day.' In administering the rite I lay great stress upon the clause, 'What God hath joined together, let no one put asunder,' and I most fervently pray that no power on earth may come between them to separate those whom God has made one.

"At 3 o'clock, at the Seminary, preached on the Gospel marriage feast, and married six more couples. The occasion was one of signal interest. One aged man could not refrain from rising and uttering praise and glory to God for the privilege of living to see this day. He seems to feel like good old Simeon. In the evening married eleven more couples at the Fort, and explained the nature and obligations of the ordinance, and the peculiar circumstances in their case demanding it. I showed the evils of polygamy, as illustrated in the quarrels and other disorders in Jacob's family, in the corruptions of heathenism, and the impurities of Mormonism; spoke of Christ's sanction of marriage at Cana, etc. . . . I think my teachings and administering in this matter are having a striking effect on the tone of morals here. Expect to unite in marriage a number of others next Sabbath. The course pursued has vexed some corrupt soldiers, but the authorities here has quelled their opposition. Please send me a hundred engraved marriage certificates, such as are sold in Nassau Street. They will tend to deepen the sense of the importance of the rite."

Under date of October 1st, Mr. Lockwood writes:

"I have just visited the school of Mrs. Peake, (the colored teacher,) near the Seminary, with great satisfaction. Am delighted at the good order and rapid improvement in so short a time. The school numbers forty-five children, and others are expected. She offers to teach a school for adults in the afternoon. The school for children occupies from nine till twelve o'clock. She has several classes that spell well in the book and out of it. She is also teaching writing and the elements of arithmetic with encouraging success. She intersperses the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments, catechetical exercises, singing, etc. It is certainly a model school, considering the circumstances. She surely deserves compensation, though she began without any such expectation, feeling that she should be fully rewarded in having the privilege of doing good in this way. Both the teacher and scholars seemed to appreciate my remark that their's was a favored lot, in enjoying what their parents did not, the privilege of assembling Sabbath and week-days for instruction, without fear or molestation. I closed the school with prayer, during which the children all kneeled and observed the strictest silence and order. This is not a day of small things, though the beginning of days, but already a day of great things. To God be all the praises."

Mr. Lockwood says there is some instruction given by several on a smaller scale near Hampton. He wishes to have a good teacher for that section. Mr. Davis, the eloquent exhorter, he says, would make a good teacher, and if compensated would take charge of that district. He is at present supporting his family by labor. Mrs. Baily is doing quite well in the school at Fortress Monroe, but she has not the experience of Mrs. Peake. If she continues in charge of the school she will need compensation, as she was burned out in Hampton, and is a widow. "Please forward two hundred copies of the Infant's Primer, and four hundred of the Pictorial Primer. Card multiplication tables would be very acceptable, with slate cards. We hope, by and by, to get black boards made. I find the variety of large reading cards very useful in enabling the whole school to be engaged simultaneously a part of the time in following the pointing of the teacher, in spelling and reading. After a time elementary geographies will be in place. So Providence leads, and we must follow. Affectionately your's in the Lord."

Contributions, in money or clothing, can be sent to Lewis Tappan, Treasurer, No. 61 John Street, New York, or to Rev. L. C. Lockwood, care of Captain Burleigh, Seminary, near Fortress Monroe, Virginia, by mail or express.

[From the Argus, Chatham, C. W., October 8th, 1861.]

HAYTIAN EMIGRATION AT A DISCOUNT IN CHATHAM.

A large meeting of our colored citizens assembled last evening in the old Princess Street Church, to oppose the expatriation, or Haytian Emigration scheme, originated for the purpose of colonizing such colored persons in Canada and the United States, as could be induced to go through the wily plan now endeavored to be carried out by James Redpath, in his book, "The Haytian Guide," and his newspaper—"The Pine and Palm," both of which are burdened with beautifully exciting stories of the great advantage of Hayti, as the most desirable and future home of the colored people of Canada and the United States.

The meeting was organized by appointing J. Holden, Chairman, and I. D. Shadd, Secretary.

After the Chairman had stated the object of the meeting, Mrs. M. A. Cary was called for to address the audience, which she did with a force usual to her sex. She compared the present emigration movement to the old worn-out and thrown off scheme of African colonization, and compared Redpath's "Guide to Hayti" with old colonization documents, from both of which she read extracts, to the derision of the scheme and the contempt of Redpath and his agent, all or whom were shown up to be unsettling and removing the people for the pay they get.

Mr. J. H. Harris made appropriate remarks, and called on the friends of Hayti, as he believed one or more advocates were present, to speak out and present Hayti's claims.

Mr. Menard—who is one of the contributors to the emigration paper—"The Pine and Palm," came forward with his usual rhodomontade; but finding his work rather up hill, shortly resumed his seat. Mr. W. H. Wilson, who it is claimed always takes the negative, seemed rather diffident about attacking the subject, and like Mr. Menard, vacated the floor.

Mrs. Carey's resolutions which, by the by, composed the subject of discussion, were put to the house and carried with but three dissenting voices.

We give the resolutions as adopted:

Whereas, extraordinary exertions are now being put forth, to induce the colored people of these Provinces to emigrate to the Island of Hayti, through specious representations of paid agents of the Haytian Government, thereby causing a too confiding people to forego the certainties of a healthy climate, British nationality, individual prosperity, and the fullest exercise of religious freedom, for the doubtful advantages of complexional nationality with its attendant evils, among the Haytians, a people woefully divided upon complexional, social and political grounds, and who can give no guarantee of security to life, liberty and property, by reason of the same, therefore

Resolved, That while we concede the right of individual emigration, duty to God, ourselves and our neighbor, which is paramount to all rights, imperatively enjoins the obligation to inquire into the advantages to be derived from residence in the countries to which we are invited, before promoting an emigration which may prove disastrous to colored people.

Resolved, That in the information to be derived from the past history and present condition of Hayti, by facts elicited from the "Guide" by James Redpath, by statements from returned emigrants, and from the well-known fatality of climate in the Tropics to masses from Temperate regions, we see nothing to commend the Haytian scheme to favorable consideration, but on the contrary, upon the evidence thus afforded, record our condemnation of those who encourage the removal from Canada of our agriculturalists and laborers, our most sturdy and responsible classes, without the certainty of opportunities in Hayti as favorable as those they forsake.

Resolved, That the indignation of an insulted and injured people in Canada and the United States, should point out as men greatly to be suspected, the hired agents in this movement, whether black or white, who so shamefully tamper with the best interests of a once sorely oppressed people, and who on the pretence of destroying slavery by the cultivation of free cotton in Hayti, travel throughout the land, unsettling the people by their specious but dangerous theories, receiving and accepting unblushingly, at the same time, the congratulations of our enemies, for unparalled success in the nefarious work of expatriating the free colored people from this Continent; the work in which "Clay and Webster"—known Colonizationists, long ago failed.

It is quite evident from the resolutions that the thinking portion of our colored population are not to be led astray by this new fangled movement of Mr. Redpath and his coadjutors.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 19, 1861.

Advertisements for this paper must be accompanied by the cash.

Copies of this paper can be purchased of the news-dealers everywhere.

A NOBLE PROPOSITION.

ROBERT HAMILTON Esq.,

Dear Sir:—I congratulate you at the appearance once more of the Anglo-African,—a paper that gained, for the time it existed, more prestige than any other that had preceded it.

Now sir, the glorious question is, "Shall it live? I call it glorious, from the immense importance of the hour that is now upon us.

It will live if we bring our patriotism, our love for the truth, not to a boiling, but a moderate heat. Let each brother and sister, father and child, do what they can—take stock in it at a fair premium. The premium to be paid in Hallelujahs when its work as a Journal for Freedom is over.

Sir, I propose to unite with some in investing Five Dollars to begin with; what will others answer? I propose no plan upon which it is to be paid, but leave that to your better judgment—but I suppose you need the money as soon as you can get it. I therefore pay immediately. Now who will be the next customer,—if not for five, for four—for three—for two—for one! for fifty cents? Keep in remembrance, friends, that this stock pays glorious in premiums, however small be the investment. Yet you must still remember, that greater the investment, more glorious the premium!

Now sir, I believe I have said enough; perhaps more than enough—for, after all, all that is requisite is but for the people to know your need, and they are ready to nobly respond.

Yours in behalf of the good cause.

J. N. GLOUCESTER.

The following are responses to the above proposition, including Mr. Gloucester's subscription:

J. N. Gloucester,	$5
H. Highland Garnet,	1
Henry M. Wilson,	1
Miss Mary A. Chambers,	1
Ezekiel H. Dias,	1
"A Friend,"	1
Robert H. Vandyne,	1
Miss Susan Tindall,	1
Austin Steward,	25

An Archbishop on the War.

Archbishop Hughes is not unknown to the political history of our city and State: the charge of his fold in Christ, has been too quiet a walk for his active, not to say ambitious mind: if the State by its organic law has determined that it can get along very well without the help of the priest, this priest has found it utterly impossible to keep his fingers from meddling in State affairs: he evidently believes in a church militant, and is ever itching to give vent to his proclivities. With some hundred thousand voters and votes at his absolute command, he is of course "a power" among politicians, if not in the State.

Yet he is a sort of malaprop in political matters, or rather, with reverence be it spoken—a pig, like the one in the story whose owner was driving it to Cork—the efforts of his Grace go by contraries. Some twenty years ago he buttonholed Wm. H. Seward in the grave-yard of St. Patrick's Cathedral in Mott Street, about Catholic fingers in the school-fund-pie, and that touch, like the black pudding in the story, has clung to Seward's nose dragging him down and down and down with a pertinacious suasion which cost him the nomination at Chicago: for the native American party had just life and venom enough to sting the wily Secretary to death on that occasion. So in this instance the Archbishop politically destroyed his friend by meddling in politics. In like manner some eighteen years ago Bishop Hughes went to Carrol Hall to put down sectarian or protestant education at the public expense: out of which effort there has grown up the splendid school system of our city a thousand times stronger than it could have been but for the evil-intended movement of our malaprop prelate.

To day, the Archbishop steps forth

"—by merit raised
To that bad eminence,"

as the sole defender of American slavery amid the ruins and disasters which slavery has brought upon the land: like the "arch-angel ruined" whom Milton describes, or rather in consonance with his malaprop character, it is to be hoped that he may blast with his foetid breath, the cause he undertakes to defend. The ostensible occasion for the Archbishop's essay in favor of slavery, is the article of Mr Brownson, on emancipation, which appeared in the last number of "Brownson's Quarterly Review," a Catholic magazine. He commences by stating that Mr. Brownson maintains "that the end and purpose of the war is not, or at least should not be, merely to sustain the Constitution, Government, and Laws of the country, but to abolish slavery in the Southern States." Let us see what Mr. Brownson says in his own words: we quote from the Review, p. 512 "certainly we said in the article on "The Great Rebellion," in our last Review, the North has not taken up arms for the destruction of Negro-slavery, but for the maintenance of the Federal Government, the enforcement of the laws, and the preservation of the Union, This is true. The liberation of the slave is not the purpose and end of the war in which we are now engaged. The war is a war against rebellion engaged in by the rebels for the purpose of making this a great slaveholding Republic, in which the labor of the country shall be performed by slaves, either black or white; and if to defeat the rebellion, the destruction of slavery is rendered necessary and be actually effected, it will change nothing of the character or purpose of the war. It will have been necessitated by the rebellion, and the rebels will have only themselves to thank for the destruction or abolition they force us to adopt in defence of liberty, the Union, and the authority of the government."

As Mr. Brownson says just the contrary to what the Archbishop accuses him of saying, we must set down the latter, not as a common, but as [illegible] Archiepiscopal liar: he tells a tall lie, which is none the better for being a mitred lie.

THE ARCHBISHOP ON CAUSES—(CASUISTRY?)

"Even our Catholic Dr. Brownson holds that slavery is the cause of the war. This happens to be simply impossible, except in the sense that a man's carrying money on his person is the cause of his being robbed on the highway. Slavery existed since the Declaration of Independence and before; and if it ever could have been the cause of civil war, should have broken out say eighty or one hundred and twenty years ago. Slavery therefore is not the cause of the war."

We have heard that there is a quiet and retired prison in Rome, where drunken, driveling or otherwise debauched priests are quietly placed, so that they may not bring further scandal upon the Church. The above paragraph indicates not only the propriety of such a prison, but moreover that there is at least one priest too many at large therefrom.

THE ARCHBISHOP ON "KEEPING A HOTEL."

"In the South, free blacks are sometimes the keepers of respectable hotels, and wealthy planters choose to patronize them. In the North, if a black man was rich enough to purchase the Astor House, he would have no white guests."

How happened it that the South grew so ferocious at the report, that one HAMLIN, a so-called mulatto, was about to be assistant-keeper of the White House at Washington?

The Archbishop has evidently led a very secluded life—gastronomically as to eatables—in New York. Only think of a man in New York, forty years, and yet never heard of Downing's! We do not wonder that his reverence can lie: how could a man tell the truth, in Gotham, whose tongue has never come in contact with a good oyster? We have seen it recorded that his reverence has visited Newport in "the season." Did he ever hear of such a place as the "Sea Girt House." If not, he is a meeker prelate than we take him for; and he must have "convived" in some Irish shanty on potato and salt for dinner.

THE ARCHBISHOP ON THE SIXTH AVENUE RAIL-ROAD.

"Even in this great city of New York, though their (colored people's) money is just the same as that which white people use, they cannot be admitted into an omnibus or railroad car, occupied by white people, without being reminded by a printed sign that it is a privilege and not a right."

True for you Archbishop! But there happens to be five lines of railroad cars in New York city wherein colored persons are admitted without question or sign. There is but one line of cars which disgraces the city as you state. Now if your reverence will give a helping hand in the right direction—that is, PRAISE the Sixth Avenue Company for its bad manners—the sign will be forthwith abolished!

THE ARCHBISHOP ON PERPETUAL SLAVERY.

"THE TERRIFIC PART OF THE QUESTION IS, THAT NOT ONLY THE INDIVIDUALS BROUGHT TO THE AMERICAN CONTINENT OR ITS LANDS ARE THEMSELVES TO BE SLAVES, BUT THEIR POSTERITY IN LIKE MANNNER, FOR ALL TIME TO COME. THIS IS THE ONLY TERRIFIC FEATURE ABOUT AMERICAN SLAVERY. AND YET IT IS NOT ALIEN FROM THE CONDITION OF MANKIND IN GENERAL. ORIGINAL SIN HAS ENTAILED UPON THE HUMAN RACE ITS CONSEQUENCES FOR TIME AND ETERNITY. AND YET THE MEN WHO ARE LIVING NOW HAD NO PART IN THE COMMISSION OF ORIGINAL SIN. THE DRUNKARD, THE THIEF, THE BAD MAN OF ANY DESCRIPTION, ENTAILS UPON HIS POSTERITY EVILS WHICH THE FORFEITURE OF HIS OWN PERSONAL LIFE CANNOT PREVENT OR REPAIR."

Now, according to another part of his paper the Archbishop says "the American slave became such by falling a prisoner of war in Africa, and by sale to the trader"—neither of which was a crime nor even a fault, but simply a misfortune on the part of the slave. What possible analogey does this bear to original sin? Is misfortune a sin? Then there must be some hard Irish sinners now down in Dixie's land; and the gallant Colonel Corcoran, whom the Archbishop so justly praises, must be a leading sinner. Should the South condemn this Colonel and his gallant fellow prisoners to slavery, will the Archbishop admit that the perpetual enslavement of their children, and children's children, will be guaranteed and defended by the Catholic Church, as one of the just analogies of original sin.

THE ARCHBISHOP "DON'T SEE" LIBERIA, NOR LAGOS, NOR ABBEOKUTA.

"Africa, it is well known, is a country of savages, not having the slightest gleam of hope as to prospective civilization. We may say that in all the Southwestern section of Africa there is no such thing known as a natural freeman."

We would like to know what our distinguished and learned friend, the Rev. Alexander Crummell has to say to this. He states that the noblest specimens in mien, port and gait, of freemen, he has ever seen, are the Congoes, the aboriginals of this portion of Africa. What has our African traveller Delany, known to the uncircumcised as Dr. Delany, to say to this? What has his unbreeched friends ALAKE, Ogubonna and other lords of the soil, to say?

Nay, if there is not a "natural freeman" in all this part of heaven's footstool, are they all natural slaves? If so, where are their masters?

THE ARCHBISHOP ENDORSES CHARLES O'CONOR.

"We cannot go so far as to agree with an eminent Catholic jurist and lawyer, in saying that slavery is a Divine institution. The rest of his eloquent dissertation is far from being out of harmony with the principles of the Catholic Church. It is at least a Divine permission of God's providence."

So, probably, is hell. We see that in Charles O'Conor's school for educating the North into the belief that "Slavery is right, and just," Archbishop Hughes takes position as an eminent professor.

THE ARCHBISHOP ON MADAME RESTELL.

"We are aware, indeed, that on the score of morality much can be said with truth against slavery. The marriage bond, creating the relation between husband and wife among slaves is not always respected by their masters. . . . We would ask, is there a moralist even of the abolition school, who does not know that there is pervading all our free States (and possibly many of those in which slavery is recognized), an occult science by which, in order to protect an unmarried female from public shame, both the mother and her unborn child hre destroyed by a brutal, barbarous operation. The degraded condition of thousands of females in our large cities in the free States furnishes a hint that it is for those who are without sin to cast the first stone."

We have done with this archiepiscopal defence of Slavery.

It is remarkable that with all his affluence of knowledge and observation, his Grace shuns the daylight of science, education, development, and all the sweet charities of life, when he seeks examples wherewith to defend and uphold slavery, and plunges into the dark, desperate and criminal abodes of vice and lechery for instances whereon to rest his argument. It might have occurred to one whose position should make him pure-minded, that that institution could hardly be worth the defending which dragged his pure and holy mind into the haunts of vice and crime in search of its analogies.

The slur upon abolitionists in relation to vice in our northern cities, his Grace knows to be utterly undeserved; it is a lie by implication, and he knows it. He knows full well that moral reform, the higher reform which seeks to elevate and dignify woman in her noblest sphere in life, sprang from the hot-bed of abolitionism, and is upheld by the Garrisons, the Phillipses, the Gerrit Smiths, the William Goodells, the Frederick Douglasses, the Parker Pillsburys, the Stephen Fosters, and their glorious condjutors in the work of abolitionism. He knows, too, that the noblest Romans of them all, the Tappans, almost a quarter of a century ago by their diligent and expensive researches, and publication of the facts, in regard to prostitution in the city of New York, laid the foundation to those principles of social science which now occupy the attention of the most learned and philanthropic minds in England and France.

We pity the sorrows of the poor old man, who with mitred brow, and the holy cross forever resting on his breat, can find no fitter theme for his trembling pen than a defence of chattel slavery. We pity the feebleness of the poor old mind which can find no holier employment than lying and misrepresantation, as a means of keeping down the already down-trodden. "Forasmuch as you have refused a cup of cold water unto the least of these, you have refused it also to me"

We pity, we grieve, but we do not despair. "The stars in their courses fight against Sisera." We feel it through the earth, and the air, and the heavens, that slavery is doomed.

Two pictures rise up before our mental vision; the one is of a prelate in his episcopal mansion on Murray-hill, surrounded by a pliant priesthood, the golden insignia of his office, and all the appliances with which learning and the wealth of old can surround him, the out-door air around him bristling with the spires of church palaces which his energy and genius have almost created out of this metropolitan See—and he is pleading for a continuance of slavery, for another lease of a thousand years to Satan upon earth. The other picture is "away down South in Dixie," in the solemn woods, and under the solemn stars; it is a dark browed man, bent down by years, his back scarred and seamed with the lash, and his joints knotted with years of toil—he is alone, all alone, for his wife was long since snatched from his bosom to minister to his master's lusts, and his children, two boys sold away, far away, and his girls one by one seized in the early bloom of youth and damned to the bitter fate of their dead mother—this old and bereaved and bruised man, in broken accents, exclaims "How LONG, O LORD, HOW LONG!" And if there be in all this Universe a God of Justice and of Mercy, to whom will he bend His ear, to the negro slave, or to the Archbishop?

POPULAR LECTURES.

The Rev. Mr. Hall, Pastor of Bethel Church, is now delivering a course of lectures on the Different Races of Mankind.

We are pleased to hear that on each Thursday night the lecture-room of the Church is crowded by a very intelligent audience, whose close attention makes manifest their deep interest in the subject.

LETTER FROM REV. H. H. GARNET.

Office of the African Civilization Society,
New York, Oct. 14th, 1861.

DEAR ANGLO:—

The accompanying letter having been transmitted for publication, I hasten to forward the same to you, that the wings of your deeply interesting and valuable paper may soon bear it to the eyes of every friend of God, and bleeding, neglected Africa.

With much respect, I am yours, &c.,

HENRY M. WILSON,
Sec. Af. Civ. Society.

50 BAKER STREET, PORTMAN SQUARE,
London, Sept. 27, 1861.

REV. H. M. WILSON:—

I am again in the great English metropolis, among kind and generous friends, who without stint give me evidences of their sympathies for my injured race. At my lodgings I found my worthy friend, Professor Robert Campbell, and his interesting family, and had the happiness to congratulate him upon the birth of a fine daughter, which event gives to Britain another subject. The mother and child are doing well. It was also my pleasure to meet at the Anti-Savery Office our eloquent friend, the Rev. J. Sella Martin, of Boston, who has been so fortunate as to meet with marked attention from many of the leading men who conduct the reformatory enterprises of the city. Mr. Campbell's efforts in the great work which engages his attention, have been crowned with complete success, and in a few weeks he will be able to sail for his "mother land." He has received the countenance and approval of many of the best men in the kingdom, who respect him, and love the cause which he has espoused. Among the philanthropists of England the motto is, "Universal emancipation, negro nationality, the extermination of the slave-trade, and the redemption of Africa." A glorious career is before Mr. Campbell, and it is my opinion that he will make his mark upon the shores of time if it shall please God to spare his life, which will challenge the admiration of the whole race in ages yet to come. Let the young men of America arise from the dust, for the day is breaking, and darkness is taking its flight. The set time has come when the numerous promises of God to Africa is about to be fulfilled. The system of negro slavery is rapidly passing away, and ere long it will thunder to the ground. If "Cotton is King," it seems to be the opinion of the combined powers of Europe that it has no divine right to reign in America, where we boast of having "a State without a King." By recent intelligence we learn that the King of Lagos has fully ceded that important sea-port to the Crown of England, and thus that portion of the African coast which is destined to command the trade and commerce of the whole Niger Valley, is henceforth to be under the watchful eye of Great Britain, who will not only encourage the development of the vast resources of Central Africa, but will also introduce Christianity, and drive the accursed slave-traders from those shores. An English Governor is actually appointed at Lagos, and a Consul at Abbeokuta. It is likewise stated, by those who are in a position to know, that the British Government are now organizing a powerful and a very extensive plan of operations by which the slave trade in Dahomey will be effectually destroyed.

Lieutenant Glover, late of the Niger Expedition, is now exploring the waters in the neighborhood of Porto Novo, with the view of operating against Abomey, the capital of Dahomey, should the King persist in his nefarious trade in human flesh. Indeed it seems to be the policy of the British Government to introduce agricultural improvements into Africa, on an extensive scale, especially in the department of cotton, accompanied by the various appliances of Christian civilization. All these grand stupendous measures have been dictated not solely by humane considerations, but likewise to a very great extent by self-interest applied to trade and commerce. Jeff. Davis and his rebel gang have done much towards urging the British people to look for new cotton fields. They must have cotton, and the slave States, they clearly see, will not soon be in a condition to give the requisite supply, and therefore they intend to seek it elsewhere. The two hundred millions of dollars which they annually pay to the United States for cotton will pass into other channels, and Africa will get her share; and thus in the providence of God the plant which has been the curse of her exiled children, will by intelligent labor become the blessing of her children at home.

The people of England are divided into three classes as to their opinions upon the American war. Number one have no sympathy with it while the Government fail to make the abolition of slavery the plain and acknowledged issue, and if they never do this, this class do not care which conquers. Number two are with the Administration for law and order. Number three go for the South generally, and cotton in particular. In the first are found the vast majority of the English people; in the second are found a few, who are ultra in their conservatism; and the third is composed of those whose consciences are locked up with their treasures, and who see everything through cotton.

I found on my arrival, not at all to my surprise, but greatly my disgust, that an agent who was sent out here by the African Civilization Society two years ago, had preceded me with his libelous letters, in which he vainly attempted to depreciate me, and our cause. The first act of kindness that I received from my friends in London, especially intended to assure me of their undiminished confidence in me, was the presentation of these infamous letters. One gentleman gave me a wolfish letter of this person, and said he did not want it, and that he despised the spirit in which it was written. I have the production in my possession, and shall put it in my cabinet of curiosities, and shall give it a place next to an extracted fang of a slain viper. Another gentleman to whom he wrote, remarked that "he would lay up his epistle as evidence against him in some future day." I have learned, too, that his approval and recommendation would have resulted in my certain defeat. He began to write here against me as early as last June, and was aided in his disreputable work by an unfortunate old negro, a Presbyterian minister of New York. They are suitable associates for each other, and no one in this country who know them, envies them. I see now why my coming to England was so much dreaded by certain individuals. I am armed with facts and documentary evidence, which some people will find it hard to meet, if I am spared to return.

The "African Aid Society," the "Jamaica Cotton Company," the "African Civilization Society" of England, the "London Emancipation Committee," and that veteran corps of anti-slavery friends, "The British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society," have all received me most cordially. Among those to whom I am particularly indebted, I would mention Gerard Ralston, Esq., Counsel General of Liberia; F. Fitzgerald, Esq., Dr. Hodgkin, G. W. Alexander, Esq., L. A. Chamerovzou, Robert Campbell, Esq., Lyons McLoud, and General Depuy, Minister from Hayti, and Stephen Bourne, Esq.

The kindness and noble sentiments of the people here are very gratifying. It seems to me that I am in another world, and among another and a better race of beings than those with whom I have fought for these two score years and five. Coming from scenes of continual conflict, I am now enjoying a few moments of peace, only, however, to renew my strength to enter the field again—for I am enlisted for the war.

I am, my dear brother, yours truly for God, universal liberty, African civilization, and negro nationality.

HENRY HIGHLAND GARNET.

HAYTIAN EMIGRATION IN CANADA.

MR. EDITOR:

A celebrated anti-slavery orator tells with capital effect a story of an old man who presented a petition for the abatement of some nuisance, again and again, but without effect. Driven, at last, to desperation, he nailed his petition to the counter of the session chamber, before the gaze of the indifferent custodians of the public weal, and it was a constant reminder of their remissness.

The old man's prayer, it is needless to say, was granted. To the mind of many in this country the old man's example should be imitated by the people, would they do away with the nuisance of the hour Haytian Colonization. By nailing the petition to the counter, by keeping an agitation against it before the gaze of the world—by holding it up as they did its elder sister, African Colonization, to unutterable loathing—as with the old evil—its proportions must and will be diminished; and it will have to slink away into the covert the ultimate end of such schemes, without the ability to work out the great mischief its promoters seem determined, if unchecked, to accomplish.

There is an uprising of wrath invoked by the managers of this Haytian enterprise, that they little dream of, and that will, unless they take heed in time, descend upon the heads of their children in the long coming future. "Curses, like chickens, come home to roost," says an old adage, and, interpreting the signs, now very plain hereabouts, one can only cry out, beware! to those who, for pelf, run around seeking whom this scheme may devour. The people begin to realize, somehow or other, that white men, who so mercifully "mince" up the colored men who have for years pointed to the shoals and breakers in their voyage, bear watching; and that after all, with but few noble exceptions, all the oppression—all, all! is traceable to these same white men, with a few colored Judases to make it effective. They say it is so South and North, and ever has been so; and they talk loudly, here, about "a pound of preventive" being "better than a pound of cure" for the Hayti fever in Canada.

After all, we must thank the itinerant mercenaries—the paid agents of the Haytian government. I mean not a little. They have done as much unwittingly in this region—and as shown by the Pine and Palm, elsewhere, to create a doubt as to the fidelity of the movement, as all else by the peculiar way they prosecute their work.

It was all very well to send agents, and to scatter publications throughout the land in mid-winter; then, the name of a warm country made the chilly blood circulate more freely. It was a master-stroke of policy to engage the services of such men as John Brown, junior, (who is now, thank his stars, safely out of the advocacy,)—but to send Tray, Blanche, Sweetheart and ever so many besides—crowding one another upon the heels, and in indecent haste to insist upon marching on to Hayti

"Where colored men are free."

when the thermometer has been eighty degrees in the shade,—when Mr. Holly is calling those "Who are not afraid to die."

and when a returned emigrant, well-known says that in his colony of less than one hundred, twenty-one had died, and forty more were sick when he left, is quite another matter.

In the winter men and women had began to "fix" for a start, and along through the season horses, sheep, cattle and utensils were quietly passing into other hands for a mere song.

Your noble young folks inaugurate festivals in order to open up the settlement, the long ago granted Smith lands—a grand movement and worthy of them; here, through the modern vandalism of this Haytian dispensation—valuable farms have, to use the popular expression, "been given away." I have in mind one nicely cultivated little farm, which was thrown away for an old silver watch and three dollars. Said the agents in cold weather, "Give away your farms and improvements rather than stay in Canada, you will never feel the loss;" and upon the hint some noble places were worse than sacrificed.

But, we trust that the beginning of the end is here. The warm weather instalment of agents, with their henchmen subs, esquires, and what not, all like Pharaoh's locusts now in the land, and wander there and here—some of whom have voted, aye, upon nearly every scheme good or doubtful for ten, yea, twenty years. Abolition, Central Africa, Roots and "Yerbs," Central America, Jamaica, Dominica, Laugh and grow fat, the Fugitives in Canada, and what not.

They preach, lecture, write, doctor a little, and to repeat a lady of the Baptist persuasion at the last Haytian meeting here. "How they do lie! Their crooked speeches, out of all proportion, unhinged and jointless, their extraordinary burlesques of our people throughout Canada and in the States; their mimicry of spoken language so unlike the truth; a sublime indifference to the lines and angles of fact and figure, in our actual condition, and not least the ill-concealed anxiety to nurse up droves for the next ship, &c., &c., cause the thoughtful among intending emigrants to inquire if Haytian gold is not at the bottom? Thus, you see, they are unwittingly furnishing the pound of preventive. But in addition to this aid from a quarter not expected, facts given by Mr. Newman, and lastly another emigrant well-known here, confirming Mr. Newman's statements, have caused many to pause to sound an alarm. One man of family sold farm and stock—but has since repurchased: another "right off for Hayti;" will soon build a barn; others will not go yet a while, &c.

A large and enthusiastic Anti-Haytian meeting was held here last night, the 7th instant.

In my next I will refer to those "sweet potatoes," and furnish a few interesting items from the returned emigrant's "carpet bag," which afford an "inside view" of Hayti.

M. A. S. CAREY.

"THE MORNING COMETH."

MR. EDITOR:

What a joy it is to escape from the busy bustling city; from the din of martial music, the resounding tread of regiments of cavalry, the roll of artillery, and the heavy tramp of infantry; to rest awhile in the haunts of nature, and give our spirits a temporary freedom from the strife and turmoil of daily life, from the smoke and stir of

"This dim spot which men call earth."

Was ever an autumn more beautiful than this! It has come like a triumphant Emperor arrayed in gorgeous robes of Tyrian dye, and the soft sunlight has wrought the chariot on which he rides, and the west winds musical as an Eolian lyre are his coursers. If ever life could seem rich, and full and ardent, or the spirit rest from its wearying struggles, and find within itself a sweet and placid repose, it would be here under these forest trees on this mild October day, while the sky is full of a tender mixture of blue and silver clouds, and the dreamy tremulous light has fallen into a delicious trance, and the sunshine is shaded down to a hue like the tinted hollow of a sea shell.

There is no incitement in such an atmosphere, nothing bidding us away to our daily warfare, to the torturing struggle for fame or the vain pursuit of happiness, no harsh voice telling o'er and o'er again—how full of sorrow and bitterness, and disappointment in life—none of this, but only peace and love.

One of our sweetest poets has termed the autumn days melancholy, "the saddest of the year." There is nought of sadness in this gorgeous landscape spread before me in the brilliancy of mingled coloring far far away until it is lost in the union of earth and sky.

The maples are all aglow in their flame colored leaves, the oaks and elms wear their imperial robes of purple and crimson, and the beech trees by some subtle alchemy, are transmitted to gold, while over all rests a dreamy haze like the halo of golden light with which the old missal painters were wont to surround the heads of the saints and apostles. No, there is nothing saddening but much that is bright and cheerful, much that fills our souls with gratitude to the great Creator, and our lips are ready to ejaculate with rapture and reverence, Oh, beautiful earth! Oh, beneficent God!

Would that we could attune our hearts to the harmony of nature, and keep them thus through all the fair autumnal months, but alas, we cannot, "the world calls us forth," and the booming of cannon, the rattle of musketry, and the clash of steel, are sounds far more familiar than the gentle minstrelsy of the forest. Brave men have gone forth to battle, not yet for God and humanity, but ere long, we know that He whose throne is holiness, will place in their hands a banner of his own choosing, and none will dare say nay. Many of those who love liberty are inclined to look distrustfully upon the government and grow despondant because of the slow progress of events. It is natural that we should distrust mere human agencies when great interests are involved, yet we should not forget the record of history.

No revolution was ever inaugurated which stoped where its agents intended it should. When thoroughly aroused and in earnest men pause not to ask, Whither are we tending? A resistless tide bears them onward, and each individual finds that within himself which in a measure sanctifies his action and arouses an energy and determination which renders restraint impossible.

When Martin Luther remonstrated against the sale of indulgences by the Dominican monk he did not contemplate a powerful and irresistible onslaught upon the See of Rome—when Cromwell and the British Parliament sought to check the tyranny of the Stuart monarchy they never dreamed of bringing the king to trial for high treason against the realm—when the patriots disguised as Indians threw the tea into Boston harbor they meant only to prevent the payment of an unjust tax, and thought not of separating the colonies from the mother country. And yet the Papal supremacy was overthrown—Charles the First beheaded in his own capital—and the declaration of American independence promulgated.

Again and again I find myself repeating those significant words of the old prophet: "Watchman, what of the night?" and the watchman said,—"The morning cometh." "The morning cometh," and the insignificant hand of man, the combined strength of principalities and powers cannot prevent its glorious appearing. "The morning cometh;" faith has no fear, and we know that truth and justice, and love and mercy are attributes of an infinite God. Though the progress of events may be slow, and the character of each action but dimly or imperfectly evolved, the hand of Omnipotence controlls all, and the work will be carried forward through a sure development to its perfect end.

How glorious the thought that we shall yet behold the freedom of the fettered millions upon our soil! That the loathsome image of slavery must ere long fall from its pedestal and give place to liberty, pure and perfect, instinct with life, a living breathing presence! "Hope is patient, time is slow," and we can calmly wait to see the establishment of the unity and indivisibility of the States, purged from their guilt and complicity with slavery by the blood of their slain thousands, purified and redeemed by a baptism of fire. It will be a bitter atonement but in no wise disproportioned to the nations crime.

The political heavens may appear overcast with gloom, and clouds fill the horizon, yet behind them is the light of Divine Providence still shining, and the full effulgence of that day will yet burst upon us

"When man to man no more shall kneel
And God alone be God."

CLEVELAND, O., Oct. 14, 1861. S. G. S.

LETTER FROM NEWARK.

NEWARK, N J., Oct. 8, 1861.

MR. EDITOR:

The Young People's Christian Association, a society founded for improving the young, both morally and intellectually continues to prosper. Lectures, essays and poems are regularly written and delivered by its members, both male and female. Within the past year there has been established by the young men a debating society, where questions of interest and importance are ably discussed by its members—furnishing proof that New Jersey is not entirely out of the world.

Your correspondent being a member of the Young People's Christian Association feels that the Society was underrated in the communication of Mr. Isaac Timbrook, in the issue of the 5th instant, where it states that the Association was preparing for a declamatory exhibition. I would like the readers of the "Anglo-African" to understand that the members are persons of talent and intellect, and with their school-boy days have forgotten exhibitions, and have turned their minds to something higher.

There are numerous beneficial societies among us, one of the most important of which is the Friendship Benevolent Society which held its third Anniversary on last Wednesday evening. It was a grand affair—the exercises consisted of two addresses—the first by the Rev. J. N. Gloucester, of Brooklyn, who embodied in his address by the past history of Newark, its societies and churches. The speaker alluded in glowing terms to the Plane Street Presbyterian Church, and of the life and character of its former pastor, the Rev. E. P. Rogers, who died in Africa, and paid a high tribute to his memory;—after which the Rev. J. V. Thomas was introduced to the audience, and proceeded to deliver an interesting address. At its conclusion the band played some beautiful airs, and the audience all joined in a grand promenade. Everything passed off agreeably.

D. J.

Letter from Paterson.

PATERSON, N. J., Oct. 14, 1861.

MR. EDITOR:—

Permit me to drop a few lines in regard to Paterson affairs. Rev. Geo. Treadwell has returned to this city, and resumed the pastoral charge of Zion M. E. Church. His labors, so far, have given much satisfaction to the members. Some of our young men are arranging for a course of lectures during the winter, and are also agitating the subject of the formation of a (P)reserved Guard for home defence, the captaincy of which will be offered to your able correspondent "Occasional." Mr. Samuel Gouldbeck, a young man whose gentlemanly deportment has won for him a host of friends during his short stay here, will sail for Liberia next month.

Y. H.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—R. H. V's reply to Professor A. M. Green, owing to its great length, is laid over until next week. We would here suggest to correspondents that in order to have an early insertion, their articles must be brief. The communications of "Hopeful," "H. H. H.," and John Willis Menard have been received.

ERRATA.

MR. EDITOR,

In your publication of the synopsis of the Baptist Convention's doings, I discovered two typographical errors, which not only destroys the force, but the sense intended. You will please do me the justice to correct the same in this weeks' issue. I noticed in the second paragraph after quoting the text—"Ye cannot serve God and Mammon," you make me say stern fidelity to God, the only surety of success. Whereas it should be THEME—Fidelity to God, the only surety to success. Also in the last resolution:—Resolved—That we recommend to each church and individual, the necessity of offering their devout prayers to Almighty God, to stay his judgments, restore peace to our distracted country, and so over-rule this affliction as to cause the national government to be administered on the principles of right, justice, and equality, you have instead of, administered made it read (ADMITTED.)

WM. E. WALRER.

Trenton, N.J., Oct. 14, 1861.

OBITUARY.

Died in Williamsburg, on Monday morning, Oct. 14th, after a severe illness of several months' duration, Mrs. Mary Hodges, the faithful and affectionate wife of Rev. William J. Hodges, aged 58 years and 3 months. Mrs. Hodges was of highly respectable parentage, her father (Mr. Tippon) being an Excise Officer and a Deacon of the Baptist Church, Bromley, near London, where she was born, and her mother was of the Elliott family, one of the leading families of Washington, D. C. She was the sister of Mrs. Taylor and Mrs. Crouch (deceased) of Brooklyn, Mrs. Hodges had been a member in good standing of the Baptist Church of Williamsburg for eighteen years, and was much esteemed by all with whom she was associated. She was the mother of three children, who lose in her a kind and indulgent parent.

Her funeral took place last Wednesday from her late residence, 9 Broadway, on which occasion a sermon was preached by Prof. Whiting. Her remains were interred in the Cemetery of the Evergreens.

Departure of Dr. Pennington.

BOARD OF STEAMER EDINBURGH,
Pier 44 N. R., Oct. 12, 1861.

MR. EDITOR:

Bag and baggage aboard. I am just departing on my third tour to the old country. I hope by the will of God to have a prosperous voyage as on the previous occasion. Be pleased to assure your readers that whatever I may have to communicate to them, of general interest, will be given through your columns and other acceptable sources of information. Farewell.

Yours, truly,
J. W. C. PENNINGTON.

A Wedding.

The Sixteenth Street Branch of Zion Church was crowded to its utmost capacity on Tuesday evening last, to witness the marriage of the chorister, Mr. Asa Francis.

The ceremony was performed by the Reverend David Stevens. The bridal party made a splendid appearance, and everything passed off very pleasantly.

TIGHT ROPE WALKING.—Quite a respectable number of ladies and gentlemen assembled in Hanft's Myrtle Avenue Park, on Monday afternoon, the 14th instant, to witness performances on a tight rope, by Professor LaMatieu, a young colored man. As the courtesies usually extended to the press were withheld on this occasion, we are unable to speak from personal observation, but learn that many wonderful feats were performed to the full satisfaction of the audience.

We are informed that the Professor intends leaving for the West Indies at an early day.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—As Cornelius Jackson was proceeding to his work in one of the Third Avenue cars on Wednesday morning, he was thrown from the front platform by a sudden lurch of the car, and had his foot crushed by the forward wheel. The injured man was taken to the Bellevue Hospital, where he died on Friday from exhaustion, consequent upon the injury in question. Coroner Jackson held an inquest upon the body, when the jury rendered a verdict of accidental death.

Deceased was fifty-six years of age, and was a native of this country.

WAR CORRESPONDENCE. We have just received a letter from an able correspondent (now near Bladensburg, Md., but who expects soon to be on the "sacred soil" of Virginia,) in which kind assurances are given, that regular correspondence from that quarter may be expected.

ZION CHURCH, FLUSHING. The Trustees of this church are making an appeal to the public for aid to purchase a lot on Grove street, on which to erect a meeting house. The Society is now under the pastoral charge of Rev. John Washington. The Trustees of the congregation are Stephen Smith, Chairman, John Schuyler, Secretary, George Seaman, Peter Harden, Elkinah Jackson, and George Watkins, Treasurer and Collector. The object is a worthy one, and we hope the citizens of Flushing will give the project that attention and aid which it deserves.

HINT TO AMERICANS PEDLING IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

A German went into one of the popular "Drug Stores" the other day to solicit orders for an article he had for sale. Not speaking English, he made motions which led us to believe he wanted to know the person to whom he was selling or the name and number of the Street; the proprietor politely handed him a label (being busy at the time,) pointing at the number and name of the street. The label happened to be marked "Arrow Root, from the Drug Store, No. ——— Street, New York. The next day he came with the article, presented his bill which read [illegible]

New York, Sept. 25th, 1861.

Mr. Bermuda Arrow Root,
Bought of A. B. & Co.

Half Dozen of ——— a eighty cents per dozen, ——— 40

Paid A. B. & Co.,
W. Y.

Americans should be careful in pedling in pedling in foreign countries not to commit similar errors.

ALOES.

HOW WE LOOK ABROAD.

Whatever we may think of the London Times, and our opinion of it is but little better than of the New York Herald; yet we must say that the following picture of this nation, drawn by it, is extremely just.

What a sorry figure we must cut in the eyes of the world; with what loathing and disgust will we be looked upon in the future, if we do not embrace the opportunity now offered for the nation's emancipation.

It must be remembered that the North has now lost the chance of establishing a high moral superiority by a declaration against Slavery. That ground might have been taken with infinite credit at an earlier period, but after the tenderness with which the South and its institutions have been treated up to the present moment, it is too late to allege Negro emancipation as the real object of the war, or to claim the merit of so lofty a principle of action. No body could shut his eyes to the fact that this principle was suppressed as long as it was thought possible that the insurgent States could be brought back, slaves and all, to the great American Union, and that its avowal was reserved for a moment when it was expected to subserve the operations of the campaign. The thorough-going Abolitionists of the North may welcome the consummation, however and whenever arriving, and we in this country also might, no doubt, hold that it was never too late to begin, and might accept with little scruple any policy tending to the extirpation of this infamous institution. That, in fact, will probably be the feeling on which the policy is based, if it is adopted at all. The Unionists will hold that while the country is convulsed, and the whole fabric of Government disorganized, the opportunity might well be taken to expel this noxious and ever threatening element from the heart of the nation. They will desire at any rate, to establish the doctrine of Free Soil, and to remove the blemish of Slavery from the American Union, whatever form the Union may take. The public, too, in this country would rejoice to see an end made of slaveholding, and so far the North might gain. It is impossible, however, to blink the fact the adoption of this doctrine would make any pacific agreement with the South utterly impracticable, would divide the great body of Unionists among themselves, and might deplorably aggravate, in all probability, the horrors of this unfortunate war.

ANGLO-AFRICAN WAR ITEMS.

A correspondent of the Portland "Transcript," in giving an account of a tramp through Calvert County, Maryland, writes:—

As we neared a large tobacco plantation about noon, the slaves, about thirty in number dropped their work and stood gazing, and clapping their hands, till we had passed from sight. Conspicuous among the group was an old woman, of perhaps sixty years, who knelt down and leapt in air alternately, exclaiming with clasped hands, "Bless de Lord! jes what I'se been praying for dese six months."

Having accomplished our object here, we started on our return—at nearly every plantation we were joined by one or more slaves, who expressed a determination to reach the free States if possible. Although we pitied the poor fellows, we could give them no encouragement. Maryland as a State is still loyal, and it is not for us to interfere with her Institutions, however much we may dislike them. We had gone some ten miles when their masters began to make their appearance in our rear, at first shy, as if fearing the reception Massachusetts men might give slave hunters, they followed on behind us hoping some opportunity would present itself for them to regain their "peculiar property." The Colonel, however, having assured them that his mission was not to "steal niggers," and that they were at liberty to take them wherever they could find them, a general stampede followed; the slaves struck out for the woods, their angry masters in hot pursuit; as far as we could see, the former had the best of it. One young master, whose appearance did not indicate half the intelligence of his slaves, returned unsuccessful, but boasted of having a "hound" at home, that would "fetch him out of them woods."

A correspondent of the Wisconsin State "Journal," writing from Washington, furnishes the following item:—

We left Harrisburg at six A. M., of September 25th, in very poor cars, but the best that could be furnished. Nothing of importance transpired until within ten miles of Baltimore—here four "contrabands" jumped aboard while the cars were running very slow, up grade. Each had an "instrument"—tamborine, guitar, bones and a triangle—and entertained the officers and men with music and singing. They sung several Union and Liberty songs, moving from car to car, collecting several dollars of loose change.

A Captain of Volunteers in General Sickle's brigade, on his return from a tour of duty through the intensely Pro-Slavery counties of Maryland below Washington, writes to a friend in this city as follows:—

"Many whole families fled on our approach to Virginia, leaving their fine houses, estates, cattle, furniture, &c., to the sole care of their negroes, who were all rejoiced to see us, supposing that we would set them free at once, which we should have done, as they are all for the Union, and the only real Unionists we met in that region."

A Washington dispatch of Oct. 9th, reads:

A fugitive slave was restored by a Pennsylvania regiment, and to make the surrender sure, he was escorted two miles beyond our lines by a file of soldiers.

Another contraband, belonging to a rebel officer, died in the City Jail yesterday.

In a despatch from Louisville it is stated that the Federal prisoners sent to New Orleans were escorted to their quarters in that city by a colored company.

A SLAVE ON FREMONT'S PROCLAMATION. We find in a Western exchange the following:

As an illustration of what may occur by reason of the modification of Fremont's Proclamation by President Lincoln, we give the following letter from Frank Lewis, the slave of the rebel Snead, to General Fremont:

"To Major General Fremont:

HONORED SIR: I was the slave of Thomas L. Snead. When I was confiscated with his property you gave me my freedom. I hear that this is not good, for I never have borne arms against the Government, and am therefore, in consequence of the modification of your proclamation, made by President Lincoln, not legally free. I intend, therefore, to go and fight in the rebel army until my freedom is fully and legally secured.

Yours, with respect,
FRANK LEWIS."

Upon which the editor of the Newark "Zeitung" says:

"That is quite right. The law of Congress summons the slaves to fight against the Union, because they can get their freedom in no other way. Prudent gentlemen, these Congressmen!"

SUMMARY.

In the report of the Court proceedings of the Trenton, N. J., Gazette, appears the following:

"David Jackson was next placed at the bar of the Court, charged in separate indictments, with the robbing of Mrs. Atkinson's boarding-house, and Dr. Charles Hodge's residence.

"The prisoner is a colored man of considerable intelligence, and created some amusement in the Court by refusing the assistance of counsel and managing his own case—cross examining the witness and arguing the case to the jury. He, however, met with the usual success of clients who are their own lawyers, and was convicted on both counts."

The following appears in the Syracuse Courier of the 28th ult.:

"Lost in this city, Saturday afternoon, a Gold Medal, presented by Her Majesty Queen Victoria, to Wm. Smith, a young colored man now in this city. It was enclosed in a velvet case, and had the name of the owner engraved upon one side, with the head of Queen Victoria on the reverse. The finder will be liberally rewarded on returning the medal to Rev. Dr. Beach or Rev. S. J. May."

The Cincinnati Times of the 24th inst., says:

About ten o'clock last night, a negro man, about 20 years of age, whose name we were unable to learn, and who was employed as a cook by the Hawthorne Guards, of Covington, was shot, at Camp King (Cole's Garden), by Samuel Brogan, of the Taylor Guards, of Newport, who was performing sentinel duty at the time. There is but one cistern in the camp, and the sentinels were ordered to keep especial guard upon it, as there are known to be Secessionists in the vicinity, and fears were entertained that it might be poisoned.

When the negro, who was unknown to the sentinel, approached the cistern, he was commanded to halt, but be continued to go on, regardless of the injunction, and the sentinal discharged his musket at him, the contents of which—a bullet and three buck shot—lodged in the unfortunate man's back, so that he died in about three hours.

The night was so dark, that Brogan could not discover the intruder's face, and he believed him to be a certain noted Secessionist in the vicinity, and Brogan was put under arrest, and will be court martialed, as a matter of course, but there can be little question that he did simply a soldier's duty and no more.

The Kinderhook Rough Notes states that Peter Cæsar a colored man, was shot on Guinea Hill by another colored man named Jacob Cæsar, Tuesday forenoon, and very dangerously wounded. It appears that Peter accompanied by another colored man, whom he had engaged to move his furniture to a house he had rented in the outskirts of this village, in passing the house of Jacob, (who was his uncle,) stopped and watered the horse. While Peter and his comrade were at the well, an altercation took place between him and his uncle, who ordered him off his premises, at the same time ran into the house and returned armed with a shotgun loaded with slugs and shot.—Approaching within ten feet of Peter, Jacob ordered the man aside, when he deliberately raised his gun and discharged its contents into the left side and arm of Peter, inflicting a dangerous, if not a fatal wound. Three or four slugs entered his abdomen causing internal hemorrhage, which his physician thinks will cause his death. It is stated that an old grudge existed between the parties, Peter having nearly pounded the life out of his uncle two years ago. Jacob was arrested, and the matter is now undergoing an investigation.

The Pittsburg "Dispatch" of Oct. 22nd, says:

A crazy man named Wally Sheldon, well-known in the city, particularly in the Sixth Ward, from the fact of his periodically becoming crazed, invariably from the effects of liquor, was arrested by officer Smithson, of the Mayor's police, on Monday evening. He attacked without cause and most cruelly beat a colored girl, on Bedford Street, and would have killed her but for the interference of neighbors. He was released from the Pennsylvania Hospital some weeks since, and went to St. Louis, from which place he returned a few days ago. He was committed to jail by Mayor Wilson, but will be immediately removed to the insane department at the city Poor Farm.

The fine schooner of Captain John Johnson, of Albany, was run into by one of the Hunter's Point Ferry boats on Thursday, the 10th instant, and badly damaged. She was immediately sent to the yard of the Ferry Company to be repaired, and is now probably in running order again. Had it not been for the presence of mind of the estimable lady of Captain Johnson, who took the name of the Ferry boat during great consternation, the Capt. would not have obtained any redress.

A colored woman by the name of Seymour was found dead along side of her bed on Sunday morning last, at her residence, near the corner of Union Avenue and Meserole Street, Williamsburgh. Coroner Murphy held an inquest upon the body, and the jury's verdict was that she came to her death by congestion of the brain, superinduced by intemperance.

On Saturday night, 5th instant, a colored man named John Cole, residing near the head of Saint Clement's Bay, Saint Mary's County, Maryland, was stabbed in an affray by a young man by the name of Chas. Thompson, and died from the effects of the wound the following Monday. Thompson up to last accounts had not been arrested.

PERSONAL.

Rev. J. W. Loguen is still hard at work. He writes us under date October 2d:—"I am having some of the largest and best anti-slavery meetings that I have had for years. The people seem ready and very willing to hear all that is presented to them on the subject. Now is our time, the accepted time, to make this guilty nation hear the story of the slave's wrong. I am now holding meetings between Syracuse and Binghamton, a distance of about seventy miles. I spoke twice last Sabbath in McGrawville, and since that twice in Freetown, and last night in Marathon. I am now in Lisle. I expect to be in Binghampton next Sabbath, when I will spend several days, and from there I will return to Syracuse.

The Rev. Alexander Posey publishes a card in the Sag Harbor Express of the 10th inst., giving his version of the difficulty in the Methodist Church of said place.

Dr. Delany will remain with us but a few days more. He is stopping at Mrs. Jinnings' Empire State Hotel, 541 Broome Street.

MARRIED.

BROWN—MUNDY.—In New York city, on Tuesday evening, 15th inst., by Rev. Wm. Johnson Alston, Mr. Enos Brown to Mrs. Rosanna Mundy, both of New York city.

BRICKERS—JONES.—At Weeksville, L. I., October 2, by Rev. George W. Le Vere, Isaac Brickers, of New York, to Margretta Jones, of Jamaica.

MYERS—NICHOLS.—Also Benjamin W. Myers, of Buslington, Pa., to Nancy Nichols, of Newtown, L. I.

DIED.

BOARDLEY.—At Saratoga Springs, on the 30th of September, after a severe attack of rheumatism on the brain, Simon Boardley, in the 43d year of his age.

BOND.—In this city, October 8, of consumption, Catherine Bond, aged 28 years.

JACKSON.—In this city, on Friday morning, October 11, Cornielus Jackson, aged 56 years.

RICHARDSON.—In St. Marks, Island of Hayti, in August, of consumption of the lungs, Geo. V. Richardson, aged 20 years and 1 month.

BRADFORD.—In this city, October 10, of old age, Fanny Bradford, aged 76 years and 10 months.

Special Notices.

GRAND CONCERT
AND EXHIBITION.

The public are respectfully informed that the SABBATH SCHOOL attached to the A. M. E. CHURCH, Bridge Street, Brooklyn, will give its

ANNUAL EXHIBITION AND CONCERT,

On Tuesday Evening, October 22nd,

in said Church, for the benefit thereof.

The Church being greatly in need of funds it is hoped that this effort will meet with a generous response.

MICHAEL THOMPSOM, . . . Sup't.

PROF. S. C. WALDRON

Will preside at the Piano.

HENRY WILSON, . . Master of Ceremonies.
ROBT. HAMILTON, . . Musical Director.

ADMISSION 15 CENTS.

NO POSTPONEMENT.

Doors open at half-past six o'clock.

At the conclusion of the exercises the ladies of the Church will serve a SPLENDID REPAST in the Basement of the Church which will equal any TEA ever given in Brooklyn.

Admittance only Six Cents.

NOTICE.

To the Gentlemen and Ladies of the city and vicinity of New York: most respectfully we solicit your company at 102 W. THIRTIETH ST. on

MONDAY, OCT. 21ST TO 25TH,

Daily, from 4 to o clock, P.M., to attend

A GRAND

MENTAL FEAST
AND FAIR,

To be held by the undersigned Ladies of the 2nd A.M.E. Bethel Church, under the Pastoral charge of Rev. Wm. M. Watson.

The profits of the Fair to aid the Trustees in liquidating the indebtedness of the Church.

The Ladies will have on hand a variety of Goods both useful and ornamental, which they will offer for sale at low prices to suit the time and a Refreshment Table flowing with every variety of the season.

An exquisite Pianist will preside at the Pianoforte.

ADMISSION SIX CENTS.

COMMITTEE OF ARRANGEMENTS:

Mrs. M. Ricks
Mrs. S. Houseman,
Mrs. J. Houseman,
Miss E. Johnson,
Mrs. A. Wright,
Mrs. M Bailey,
Miss A. Ward,
Miss S. Williams, Sec.

AGENCY

FOR TROY AND VICINITY.

James R. Benham is the regularly appointed Agent for the Anglo-African for Troy, Lansingburg, Waterford and vicinity. All orders or communications for the paper may be left with Mr Benham on board of the steamer "Cornelius Vanderbilt."

WILLIAMSBURG AGENCY.

Copies of the "Anglo-African" can be had at an early hour after it is issued, of Louis Delsart, 148 South 6th street, Williamsburg.

NEWARK AGENCY.

Mr. Isaac Tembrook, 143 Newark street, is the regular agent for the "Anglo-African" for the above named city. All orders for the paper left with him will be faithfully attended to.

A MASS MEETING

To consider measures with reference to a settlement of the

GERRIT SMITH LANDS,

will be held, agreeable to adjournment, at Prince Street Hall, on Monday evening October 28, 1861. The public are invited to attend. The meeting will be addressed by a person who has resided three years upon his grant.

Charles L. Reason, Ch'mn.
J. H. Townsend, Sec'y.
Jeremiah Powers,
Chas. B. Ray,
Peter Vogelsang,
Henry Ross,
James P. Miller,
A. Roberts,
Theo. Giles,
Wm. H. Leonard,
James R. W. Leonard.

LECTURES.

The Rev. Alex. Crummell, of Liberia, W.A., is prepared to deliver the following Lectures, either singly or as a course, during the months of November and December:

1. The customs, genius, and characteristics of native tribes in Western Africa.
2. The growth of civilization along the Western Coast of Africa.
3. The progress and prospects of the Republic of Liberia.

Letters are to be addressed to Rev. A. Crummell, 217 Sullivan Street, New York. 12—4t

FAST DAY.

The Seventh Avenue Presbyterian Church, by Divine permission will observe next Sabbath, the 20th inst., as a day of fasting, humiliation, and prayer to Almighty God, for the revival of religion and his people, the conversion of souls, and the overthrow of oppression.

The exercises of the day being as follows: At 9 1-2 o'clock, A. M., Union prayer meeting; 10 1-2 A. M., Sermon by Rev. George W. Le Vere, of Brooklyn; 12 1-2 P. M., Union prayer meeting; 3 1-2 P. M., services by the pastor, assisted by Rev. Mr. Le Vere and others; 6 1-2 P. M., Union prayer meeting; 7 1-2 P. M., services by Rev. Charles H. Thompson, of Brooklyn, assisted by Rev. Mr. Alston, of this city.

N. B.—The prayer meetings will be in part conducted by the Elders and Deacons of this and other churches.

The donation takes place on Wednesday evening 23d inst.

John Bogart, } Elders.
B. F. Fisher, }
HENRY M. WILSON, Pastor.

CHURCH DIRECTORY FOR NEW YORK AND BROOKLYN.

UNION CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

REV. ELI N. HALL, Pastor, cor. DeKalb and Hudson Avenues, Brooklyn.

Hours of worship:

10½ o'clock, ... A. M.
3 " . . . . P. M.
7½ " . . . . P. M.

10 4t.

FIRST COLORED AMERICAN CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH,

Rev. L. Tilmon, pastor, worship in the Hall, 194 Green Street, between Amity and Bleecker Streets. Hours of worship: 10 1-2 o'clock, A. M.; 3, P. M.; and 7 1-2, P.M. 11—1y

Residence of the Pastor: 120th St., Harlem

AFRICAN UNION CHURCH,

28th Street, near 8th Avenue; Rev. John Frisby, Pastor. Residence: 69 Madison Avenue.

HOURS OF WORSHIP:

10 1-2 o'clock, ... A. M.
3 " . . . . P. M.
7 1-2 " . . . . P. M.

12—1y

DONATION.

The Annual Donation for the benefit of Rev. Henry M. Wilson, will take place at the Lecture Room of the Seventh Avenue Presbyterian Church, on Wednesday evening, Oct. 23, '61.

Mrs. Caroline Bees, 13½ Le Roy St.,
" Dianah Colbourne, 97 W. 33d St.,
" Abigail Till, 18 Green St.,
" Elizabeth Jackson, Bergen, N. J.
" Charlotte Housman, 97 W. 33d St.,
" P. Lawrence, 97 W. 33d St.,
" Jane A. Riley, 106 Green St.

Miss Susan Tindall, 56 W. 17th St.,
" Elizabeth A. Schenck, Bergen, N. J.
" Sarah Thompson, 13 Lexington Av.
" Matilda Schenck, Bergen, N. J.
" Margaret Thompson, 57 E. 29th St.,
" Rachel Schenck, Bergen, N. J.

GENT'S COMMITTEE.

Mr. J. Bees, 13½ Le Roy St.,
" S. F. Colbourne, 97 W. 33d St
" H. W. Bogart, 25 W. 53d St.,
" S. M. Till, 18 Green St.,
" J. Housman, 97 W. 33d St.,
" S. Van Horn, 5 King St.,
" A. Souza, 25 3d St.

ATTENTION COMPANY!

File right! Forward, march to 178 Prince St., on Monday evening, October 21st, at 7½ o'clock.

Copies of Anglo-African can be obtained of Mr Samuel Bayard, 61 Union Street, New Haven opposite the Railroad depot.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

FASHIONABLE

DRESS MAKING,

SHIRT MAKING, EMBROIDERING, AND QUILTING.

Mesdames F. A. HAMILTON, O. A. NEWTON, and Miss A. M. HAMILTON,

187 Navy Street, Brooklyn.

Ladies' and Childrens' dresses cut and made in the most fashionable style and warranted to fit.

SHIRTS of all paterns made, and plain sewing executed with neatness; and durability of work guaranteed. Orders for EMBROIDERING promptly attended to, and QUILTING executed with dispatch.

Public patronage is respectfully solicited.

12-tf.

HENRY G. LEASK,
HATS, CAPS, STRAW GOODS
AND FURS,
COR. PEARL & CHATHAM STS., N. Y.

Shipping Furs Bought. 12-tf.

MASONIC HEAD QUARTERS,
EMPIRE STATE HOTEL
AND UNION HOUSE,
541 BROOME STREET,
Between Sullivan & Varick Sts., N.Y.,

On an improved plan, by widow T.L. JINNINGS successor to Mrs. RAMSEY.

Board by the Day, Week, or Month, on moderate terms.

Pease call and examine the premises

BOARDING IN BROOKLYN.

MRS. S. PLANT (formerly RICHARDSON) RESPECTFULLY announces that she has opened a first class Boarding and Lodging House at No. 97 HIGH STREET, Brooklyn, where she is prepared to accommodate the public on the most reasonable terms.

Her house being located in a very pleasant part of the city and within 5 minutes walk of Fulton Ferry makes it a very desirable and convenient place

CLOTHING! CLOTHING!!

Gentlemen if you want a Nice, Fashionable, well-fitted Garment at a much Lower Price than can be bought at any other establishment in this in any other city, please call at the Merchant Tailor Establishment,

168 EWEN STREET,
BET. STAGG & WYCKOFF STS., WILLIAMSBURG

Where you will find a splendid assortment of seasonable goods, as

BROADCLOTHS,
CASSIMERES
AND VESTINGS

of every description. Also constantly on hand a well-selected stock of Ready-Made

MEN AND BOY'S CLOTHING.

DON'T FORGET,
168 EWEN ST.,
9 1y. Williamsburg.

HATS CAPS & FURS
IN THEIR VARIETY.

First Premium for Misses and Children's HATS, CAPS AND LADIES' RIDING HATS. The Clergy supplied at a discount.

KELLOGG, 381 Canal St., N. Y.
10 1y.

VALUABLE TOWN LOTS

For sale in the township of Rye, Westchester Co., N. Y. Size 25 by 100 feet.

Apply to L. TILMON, 70 East 13th St., one door east of 4th Avenue N.Y.

10 5t

JUST PUBLISHED
"THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE IN LIBERIA."

The Anniversary address, on the 26th July, 1860, in Cape Palmas, Liberia, by the Rev. Alex. Crummell, B.A.

For Sale at the Anglo-African Office, 48 Beekman St., New York. Price 15 cents. 8 4t.

PRIVATE BOARDING HOUSE
BY
MRS. W. S. WILKINS & Co
610 PINE, ABOVE SIXTH STREET,
PHILADELPHIA 7-13t.

LADIES' FURNISHING STORE.
CHILDREN'S CLOTHING
READY-MADE AND MADE TO ORDER, BY
MRS. S. WILKINS & CO.,
610 Pine, above Sixth Street, Philadelphia.
7-13t.

MRS. ANDERSON,
CLAIRVOYANT & DOCTORESS

Has Removed from 106 Washington St. to 7½ Prospect St., (up stairs) cor. of Stewart, Brooklyn. 10 5t.

ST. PHILIP'S CHURCH.—Single seats to let in the body of St. Philip's Church (Episcopal). Apply to Peter H. Stevens, 207 Wooster Street. 11—3m

TO LET, A FRONT ROOM ON THE FIRST Floor of house No. 61 Leonard Street, Williamsburg. Inquire on the premises. 10 tf.

TO LET.—THE UPPER PART OF HOUSE 277 South Fourth St., Williamsburg, consisting of front and back parlors, and a large bedroom, with the back basement. Rent nine dollars a month, to be paid strictly in advance. Inquire on the premises, or at this office.

LODGINGS.—MRS. LANE CAN ACCOMODATE a few gentlemen with pleasant apartments at her residence, No. 192½ Green Street, in the rear. Terms moderate. 9 13.

CLOCKS, WATCHES, JEWELRY and Musical Boxes carefully Repaired by Wm. C. H. Curtis, No. 153 Thompson St., N. Y. Silver Plating and Fine Gilding. 8 tf.

A SCHOOL WANTED.—A YOUNG LADY, a graduate of one of the High Schools of this State, and who is fully qualified as a teacher, is desirous of obtaining a school where the salary would not be less than $200 a-year. Address Thos. Hamilton, 48 Beekman St., N.Y.

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION. THE UNDERSIGNED respectfully announces that he is now prepared to give instruction in the ART OF SINGING. He will be at home at 187 Navy Street, Brooklyn, on MONDAY EVENING, and at ZION CHURCH, N. Y., on THURSDAY EVENING, of each week. Ladies or Gentlemen desiring instruction, will please apply immediately. Singing schools taught and private instruction given on moderate terms.

3tf. ROBT. HAMILTON,

NEW SAILOR'S HOME. CHARLES M. FORTES, has opened a pleasant home for Seamen, at 26 MULBERRY STREET, N. Y., Seamen will find this a very desirable house, as it is in a central location, and every provision made for their comfort.

Boarding by the day or week. Terms moderate. 31y

WANTED AT TILMON'S AGENCY, NO. 70 East 13th Street, one door east of 4th Ave., first class colored help, and none else. Cooks, house-workers, chambermaids, waitresses and laundresses, coachmen, waiters, &c. Now is the time; fall is near and good help wanted for city and country. 5—4t

MRS. E. CLARKE, IS HAPPY TO ANNOUNCE to her friends and the public, that she has opened her new BOARDING HOUSE, and will be very thankful for their patronage, at No. 66 SULLIVAN STREET, NEW YORK. 4-1t

DENTISTRY.

BEAUTIFUL ARTIFICIAL SETS OF TEETH on gold or silver plate on the most improved style. All other Surgical operations, performed to entire satisfaction, on very moderate terms by G. H. GRICE, Surgeon Dentist.

79 Thompson St., N. Y.

MRS. E. LEONARD,
FASHIONABLE
DRESS MAKER,
25 SULLIVAN STREET, NEW YORK.
Receives monthly the latest Paris Fashions.
3tf.

BOARDING AND LODGING

BY MRS. MARY JOHNSON, 120 West 20th Street, New York. This house is very pleasantly situated in a very healthy and convenient part of the city.

Boarding for Ladies,	$2,50
" " Gentleman,	3,00
Lodging per week,	75

y13t,

JAMES R. W. LEONARD,
CARD AND JOB PRINTER,
219 CENTRE STREET, NEW YORK.

THE BEST DRESSING FOR THE HAIR during warm weather, is White's vegetable extract. For Sale at 19 Sullivan and 40 Grand Sts, 2 tf.

BOARDING AND LODGING ON THE EAST Side. Mrs. Gant, can accommodate a few Ladies and Gentlemen, at her residence 182 Suffolk Street. Terms very moderate. 10 1y.

BROWN'S POPULAR RESORT.

The undersigned takes the privilege to inform his Friends and the public generally that as he has recently fitted up his SALOON anew, he is now prepared to furnish them with

Ice Cream, Fruit, and other Delicacies.

BENJ. F. BROWN,
70 Bleecker St
between Broadway & Crosby St. 4t

WARRANTED TO CURE A HEADACHE in 10 minutes, White's Vegetable extract. For sale at 55 West Broadway, and on Gold and Frankfort Sts.

P. A. [illegible]

Corner of Frankfort & Gold [illegible]

GENERAL

COMMISSION MERCHANT,

KEEPS CONSTANTLY ON HAND

A FRESH AND PURE ASSORTMENT

OF

DRUGS, MEDICINES, CHEMICALS,

GENUINE

LUBIN'S EXTRACTS

AND OTHER PERFUMERY

FANCY SOAPS, FINE HAIR AND TOOTH BRUSHES, PURE WINES AND BRANDIES FOR MEDICINAL PURPOSES,

FAMILY ARTICLES, HAVANA SEGARS, &C., &C.

All his articles are purchased with great care, and are warranted to be pure, fresh, and genuine.

MEDICINE CHESTS carefully made up.

All orders promptly attended to, on receipt of the CASH.

Physicians prescriptions carefully prepared.

WHITE'S
VEGETABLE EXTRACT FOR THE HAIR.

FOR THE PRESERVATION, BEAUTY, GROWTH,
AND RESTORATION OF THE HAIR.

After many years of study and experiment the undersigned now presents it to the public. This valuable preparation excites the scalp to a new and healthy action, cleanses it from Scurf and Dandruff, prevents the hair from falling off or becoming prematurely Gray.

The question often arises, why the hair turns gray, rusty, and coarse, harsh and unpleasant in appearance, and finally falls off?

Each hair has a root in the skin, and is itself a hollow tube through which there is a constant circulation of blood. By this circulation the hair is nourished, its glossy color is given and preserved, and it is covered with oil. Any thing which injures the skin of the head, or diverts or takes away the blood from it, will prevent or impede the circulation through the tubes of the hair, stop its growth, and cause it to fall off, turn gray, or both. Hence it is that any cause that obstructs or weakens the circulation of the blood through the skin, or that diverts the blood to other parts of the system, will take away the lively, fresh, and youthful appearance of the hair, arrest its growth turn it gray sooner or later, and in thousands of cases cause premature baldness.

For this reason, all kinds of fevers, dyspepsia, low spirits, dissipation, and excessive thought, allowing the hair to grow too long without cutting, long and continued headache, neglected condition of the scalp and hair, great mental uneasiness, etc., etc., will always, unless proper remedies are used, produce general or partial Baldness or gray hair. The cure is perfectly effected by preserving a healthy and brisk circulation of the blood through the skin of the scalp and head; could this always be done, the hair would never fall off or turn gray.

The EXTRACT will produce this cure, and for the toilet it will be found an admirable article as it gives luxuriant brilliancy to the hair.

Persons taking sea-voyages will find this a most valuable assistant for preserving the health of the hair, which at those times is so apt to fall.

Many persons, both ladies and gentlemen, find their hair apt to become dirty and greasy and full of dandruff, so as to soil dresses, caps, bonnets, coats, etc. The use of the EXTRACT as directed will correct all this, and make the hair all that most refined taste could require.

DIRECTIONS FOR USING.

Let the hair be brushed with a good stiff hairbrush, until the scalp is considerably excited, and the dandruff and dirt removed, this will open the pores of the skin to the direct action of the EXTRACT. Then apply the EXTRACT in small quantities, at the time, rubbing it in with a brush, particularly where the hair is thin or weak, or shows a disposition to fall off, always brushing the way in which it lies, not backward and forwards. The EXTRACT should be used at least three times a week. Avoid the use of soaps or alkalies, Alcohol, Cologne Water, Bay Rum or water, as they remove the natural oil, make the hair harsh and coarse, cause it to split and break, and will more or less change its color. Dandruff is the result of a languid, unhealthy condition of the scalp and surface vessels, whereby the perspiration becomes thick and clammy and adheres to the surface, which, drying, forms a scurf or dandruff. The frequent application of the EXTRACT will soon free the head from it.

In conclusion I would add that cases of failure will no doubt occur, arising from causes beyond the reach of remedies. Yet I am convinced that if the EXTRACT were faithfully and persevering ingly applied, a large majority of cases of baldness might be cured.

BADEAU'S
STRENGTHENING PLASTER.
AN INVALUABLE REMEDY FOR

LAME OR WEAK BACK, PAIN OR WEAKNESS IN THE SIDE, CHEST, STOMACH, OR LIMBS. A CERTAIN CURE FOR RHEUMATISM, DYSPEPSIA, ASTHMA, PLEURISY, LIVER OR KIDNEY COMPLAINT, SPRAINS, BRUISES, &C. &C.

Persons disposed will find this plaster particularly serviceable.

Dyspeptic persons will find a permanent [illegible] from its use, as it keeps [illegible] the stomach without [illegible] gaged in sedentary pursuits [illegible] constantly, as they give strength [illegible] by constant sitting and stooping.

For SPRAINS and SPRAINS [illegible] affording relief immediately [illegible]

For RHEUMATISM there is [illegible] tion equal to them, [illegible] tion, and [illegible]

PREVENTING A [illegible]

of the excruciating pain.

[illegible]

P. A. WHITE.

Poetry.

OUT IN THE COLD.

With blue cold hands and stockingless feet,
Wandered a child in the cheerless street,
Children we e many, who housed and fed,
Lovingly nestled, dreaming in bed,
Carroled their joy in a land of bliss
Without a thought or care of this,
They were warm in humanity's fold,
But this little child was out in the cold—
Out in the cold.

Bleak blew the wind thro' the cheerless street,
Dashing along the merciless sleet.
All furred and shawled, man, woman, and child,
Hurried along for the storm grew wild,
They could not bear the icicles blast,
Winter so rude on their pathway cast,
Alas, none pittied—no one consoled
This little wanderer out in the cold—
Out in the cold.

She had no father—she had no mother;
Sister none, and never a brother,
They had passed on to the star-worlds above,
She remained here with nothing but love.
"Nothing but love"—ah! men did not know
What wealth of joy that child could bestow,
So they went by and worshipped their gold,
Leaving the little one out in the cold—
Out in the cold.

Wandered she on till the shades of the night
Veiled her shivering form from sight,
Then with her cold hands over her breast,
She prayed to her Father in Heaven for rest.
When hours had fled, 'neath the world's dark frown,
Hungered and chilled she laid herself down—
Laid down to rest, while the wealth rolled,
In carriages passed her out in the cold—
Out in the cold.

Out in the cold, lo! an angel form
Bro't her white robes that were rich and warm.
Out in the cold, on the sleeping child,
The sainted face of a mother smiled,
A sister pressed on her brow a kiss,
Led her 'mid scenes of heavenly bliss;
And angels gathered into their fold
That night, the little one out of the cold—
Out of the cold.

THE BLACK MEN OF THE REVOLUTION AND WAR OF 1812.

The following statement of facts were published in the National Era July 9, 1847. They are from the able and polished pen of John G. Whittier. Let them them be remembered.

The return of the festival of our National Independence has called our attention to a matter which has been very carefully kept out of sight by orators and toast-drinkers. We allude to the participation of colored men in the great struggle for freedom. It is not in accordance with our taste or our principles to eulogize the shedders of blood, even in the cause of acknowledged justice; but when we see a whole nation doing honor to the memories of one class of its defenders, to the total neglect of another class, who had the misfortune to be of darker complexion, we cannot forego the satisfaction of inviting notice to certain historical facts, which, for the last half century, have been quietly elbowed aside, as no more deserving of a place in patriotic recollection, than the descendants of the men to whom the facts in question relate have to a place in a Fourth of July procession.

Of the services and sufferings of the colored soldiers of the Revolution, no attempt has, to our knowledge, been made to preserve a record. They have had no historian. With here and there an exception, they have all passed away, and only some faint tradition of their campaigns under Washington, and Greene, and Lafayette, and of their cruisings under Decatur and Barry, lingers among their descendants.

Yet enough is known to show that the free colored men of the United States bore their full proportion of the sacrifices and trials of the Revolutionary war.

The late Gov. Eustis, of Massachusetts, the pride and boast of the Democracy of the East—himself an active participant in the war, and therefore a most competent witness—Gov. Morrill, of New Hampshire, Judge Hemphill, of Pennsylvania, and other members of Congress, in the debate on the question of admitting Missouri as a slave State into the Union, bore emphatic testimony to the efficiency and heroism of the black troops. Hon. Calvin Goddard, of Connecticut, states that in the little circle of his residence, he was instrumental in securing under the act of 1818, the pensions of nineteen colored soldiers. "I cannot," he says, "refrain from mentioning one aged black man, Primus Babcock, who proudly presented to me an honorable discharge from service during the war, dated at the close of it, wholly in the handwriting of George Washington. Nor can I forget the expression of his feelings, when informed after his dischare had been sent to the War Department, that it could not be returned. At his request it was written for, as he seemed inclined to spurn the pension and reclaim the discharge." There is a touching anecdote related of Baron Steuben, on the occasion of the disbandment of the American army. A black soldier, with his wounds unhealed, utterly destitute, stood on the wharf just as a vessel bound for his distant home was getting under weigh. The poor fellow gazed at the vessel with tears in his eyes, and gave himself up to despair. The warm-hearted foreigner witnessed his emotion, and, inquiring into the cause of it, took his last dollar from his purse, and gave it to him with tears of sympathy trickling down his cheeks. Overwhelmed with gratitude, the poor wounded soldier hailed the sloop, and was received on board. As it moved out from the wharf, he cried back to his noble friend on shore, "God Almighty bless you, master Baron!"

"In Rhode Island," says Governor Eustis, in his able speech against slavery in Missouri, 12th of 12th month, 1820, "the blacks formed an entire regiment, and they discharged their duty with zeal and fidelity. The gallant defence of Red Bank, in which the black regiment bore a part, is among the proofs of their valor." In this contest it will be recollected that four hundred men met and repulsed, after a terrible and sanguinary struggle, fifteen hundred Hessian troops, headed by Count Donop. The glory of the defence of Red Bank, which has been pronounced one of the most heroic actions of the war, belongs in reality to black men; yet who now hears them spoken of in connection with it? Among the traits which distinguished the black regiment, was devotion to their officers. In the attack made upon the American lines near Croton river, on the 13th of 5th month, 1781, Colonel Greene, the commander of the regiment, was cut down and mortally wounded; but the sabres of the enemy only reached him through the bodies of his faithful guard of blacks, who hovered over him to protect him, every one of whom was killed. The Rev. Dr. Harris, of Dunbarton, New Hampshire, a revolutionary veteran, stated in a speech at Francestown, New Hampshire, some years ago, that on one occasion the regiment to which he was attached was commanded to defend an important position which the enemy thrice assailed, and from which they were as often repulsed. "There was," said the venerable speaker, "a regiment of blacks in the same situation—a regiment of negroes fighting for our liberty and independence, not a white man among them but the officers—in the same dangerous and responsible position. Had they been unfaithful, or given way before the enemy, all would have been lost. Three times in succession were they attacked with most desperate fury by well-disciplined and veteran troops, and three times did they successfully repel the assault, and thus preserve an army. They fought thus through the war. They were brave and hardy troops."

In the debate in the New York Convention of 1821, for amending the Constitution of the State, on the question of extending the right of suffrage to the blacks, Dr. Clarke, the delegate from Delaware county, and other members, made honorable mention of the services of the colored troops in the revolutionary army.

The late James Forten of Philadelphia, well known as a colored man of wealth, intelligence, and philanthropy, enlisted in the American navy under Captain Decatur, of the Royal Louis, was taken prisoner during his second cruise, and with nineteen other colored men, confined on board the horrible Jersey prison ship. All the vessels in the American service at the period were partly manned by blacks. The old citizens of Philadelphia to this day remember the fact, that when the troops of the north marched through the city, one or more colored companies were attached to nearly all the regiments.

Governor Eustis, in the speech before quoted, states that the free colored soldiers entered the ranks with the whites. The times of those who were slaves was purchased of their masters, and they were induced to enter the service in consequence of a law of Congress, by which, on condition of their serving in the ranks during the war, they were made freemen. This hope of Liberty inspired them with courage to oppose their breasts to the Hessian bayonet at Red Bank, and enabled them to endure with fortitude the cold and famine of Valley Forge. The anecdote of the slave of General Sullivan, of New Hampshire, is well known. When his master told him that they were on the point of starting for the army, to fight for liberty, he shrewdly suggested that it would be a great satisfaction to know that he was indeed going to fight for his liberty. Struck with the reasonableness and justice of this suggestion, General Sullivan at once gave him his freedom.

The Honorable Tristam Burgess, of Rhode Island, in a speech in Congress, first month, 1828, said: "At the commencement of the Revolutionary war, Rhode Island had a number of slaves. A regiment of them were enlisted into the Continental service, and no braver men met the enemy in battle; but not one of them was permitted to be a soldier until he had first been made a freeman."

The celebrated Charles Pinckney, of South Carolina, in his speech on the Missouri question, and in defiance of the slave representation of the South, made the following admission:

"They (the colored people) were in numerous instances the pioneers, and in all the laborers of our armies. To their hands were owing the greatest part of the fortifications raised for the protection of the country. Fort Moultrie gave at an early period of the inexperience and untried valor of our citizens, immortality to the American arms. And in the Northern States numerous bodies of them were enrolled, and fought side by side with the whites at the battles of the Revolution."

Let us now look forward thirty or forty years to the last war with Great Britain, and see whether the whites enjoyed a monopoly of patriotism at that time.

Said Martindale, of New York, in Congress, 22d of first month, 1828: "Slaves, or negroes who had been slaves, were enlisted as soldiers in the war of the Revolution; and I myself saw a battalion of them as fine martial looking men as I ever saw, attached to the Northern army in the last war, on its march from Plattsburg to Sackett's Harbor."

Hon. Charles Miner, of Pennsylvania, in Congress, 2d month 7th, 1828, said: "The African race make excellent soldiers. Large numbers of them were with Perry, and helped to gain the brilliant victory of Lake Erie. A whole battalion of them were distinguished for their orderly appearance."

Dr. Clarke, in the Convention which revised the Constitution of New York, in 1821, speaking of the colored inhabitants of the State, said:

"In your late war they contributed largely towards some of your most splendid victories. On Lake Erie and Champlain, where your fleets triumphed over a foe superior in numbers and engines of death, they were manned in a large proportion with men of color. And in this very House, in the fall of 1814, a bill passed receiving the approbation of all the branches of your Government, authorising the Governor to accept the services of a corps of 2000 free people of color. Sir, these were times which tried men's souls. In these times it was no sporting matter to bear arms. These were times when a man who shouldered his musket did not know but he bared his bosom to receive a death wound from the enemy ere he laid it aside; and in these times, these people were found as ready and as willing to volunteer in your service as any other. They were not compelled to go; they were not drafted. No: your pride had placed them beyond your compulsory power. But there was no necessity for its exercise; they were volunteers; yes, sir, volunteers to defend that very country from the inroads and ravages of a ruthless and vindictive foe, which had treated them with insult, degradation, and slavery."

On the capture of Washington by the British forces, it was judged expedient to fortify, without delay, the principal towns and cities exposed to similar attacks. The Vigilance Committee of Philadelphia waited upon three of the principal colored citizens, viz: James Torten, Bishop Allen, and Absalom Jones, soliciting the aid of the people of color in erecting suitable defences for the city. Accordingly, 2,500 colored men assembled in the State-house yard, and from thence marched to Gray's ferry, where they labored for two day's, almost without intermission. Their labors were so faithful and efficient, that a vote of thanks was tendered them by the committee. A battalion of colored troops were at the same time organized in the city, under an officer of the United States army; and they were on the point of marching to the frontier when peace was proclaimed.

General Jackson's proclamations to the free colored inhabitants of Louisiana are well known. In his first, inviting them to to take up arms, he said:

"As sons of freedom you are now called on to defend our most inestimable blessings. As Americans, your country looks with confidence to her adopted children for a valorous support. As fathers, husbands, and brothers, you are summoned to rally round the standard of the Eagle, to defend all which is dear in existence."

The second proclamation is one of the highest compliments ever paid by a military chief to his soldiers:

"To the People of Color.

"SOLDIERS! When on the banks of the Mobile I called you to take up arms, inviting you to partake of the perils and glory of your white fellow citizens, I expected much from you; for I was not ignorant that you possessed qualities most formidable to an invading enemy. I knew with what fortitude you could endure hunger and thirst, and all the fatigues of a campaign. I knew well how you loved your native country, and that you, as well as ourselves, had to defend what man holds most dear—his parents, wife, children, and property. You have done more than I expected. In addition to the previous qualities I before knew you to possess, I found among you a noble enthusiasm, which leads to the performance of great things.

"Soldiers! The President of the United States shall hear how praiseworthy was your conduct in the hour of danger, and the representatives of the American people will give you the praise your exploits entitle you to. Your General enticipates them in applauding your noble ardor."

It will thus be seen, that whatever honor belongs to the "heroe of the Revolution," and the vounteers in "the second war for independence," is to be divided between the white and the colored man. We have dwelt upon this subject at length, not because it accords with our principles or feelings, for it is scarcely necessary for us to say that we are one of those who hold that

"Peace hath her victories
No less renowned than war."

and certainly far more desirable and useful, but because in popular estimation the patriotism which dares and does on the battle-field, takes a higher place than the quiet exercise of the duties of peaceful citizenship; and we are willing that colored soldiers, with their descendants, should have the benefit, if possible, of a public sentiment which has so extravagantly loaded their white companions in arms. If pulpits must be desecrated by eulogies of the patriotism of bloodshed, we see no reason why black defenders of their country in the war for Liberty should not receive honorable mentian, as well as white invaders of a neighboring Republic, who have volunteered in a war for slavery. For the latter class of "heroes," we have very little respect. The patriotsm of two many of them forcibly reminds us of Dr. Johnson's definition of that much-abused term: "Patriotism, sir! 'tis the last refuge of a scoundrel."

"What right, I demand," said an orator of the Colonization Society some years ago, "have the children of Africa to a homestead in the white man's country?"—The answer will in part be found in the facts which we have presented in this paper. Their right, like that of their white fellow citizens, dates back to the dread arbitrament of battle. Their bones whiten every stricken field of the Revolution; their feet tracked with blood the snows of Jersey; their toil built up every fortification south of the Potomac; they shared the famine and nakedness of Valley Forge, and the pestilential horrors of the old Jersey prison ship. Have they then, no claim to an equal participation in the blessings which have grown out of the national independence for which they fought? Is it just, is it magnanimous, is it safe even to starve the patriotism of such a people—to cast their hearts out of the treasury of the Republic, and to convert them, by political disfranchisement and social oppression, into enemies.

BARGAINING FOR A WIFE.

THE BLACK PIG AN' THE LINEN LOOM.—A swarthy, hard-visaged, "slab-sided" fellow, resident in a county district of this Union, lately attended at the Registrar's office in Dallymena, announcing that he had called for the purpose of giving official notice of his intended marriage with a young woman of interesting appearance, who, with her father, a decent-looking old linen weaver of the same neighborhood, accompanied him on the occasion. After a minute inquiry respecting the costs and procedure of the meditated ceremonial, the cautious applicant, without thinking it necessary to consult the opinion of the female party, selected the more tedious but less expensive course, with all the acuteness of a Yankee pedlar. The Registrar was about to make the usual entry when the intended bridegroom requested that he would "hould a wee"—for he had "a word to say to the auld man." "An' what hae ye to say to the auld man, Johnny?" asked the father of the intended bride. "I hae just this to say," replied the other—with a most unexpected change of the countenance, and a mulish obstinacy of tone and attitude—"I say that you're come to the dyke at last, an' ey maun either loop it noo or spraughle into the shough; for afore I pit pen to paper I maun hae yer decided answer aboot the black pig an' the linen-loom. Ye telt me that ye wad maybee gie them wi' Betty, an' that ye wad maybee gie mair—but there are no May bees fleein' noo! A bargain's a bargain, ye ken; an if I take Betty I'll hae baith the loom an' the pig wi' her, an' a bargain be't; if no, why ye hae yer ain yet, an' there's nay harm done to onybody!" The poor old man appeared to be completely thunderstruck at the unparalleled effrontry of his intended son-in-law, and well he might, considering the time and circumstances of the demand—for the unmannerly lout had evidently calculated upon wringing parental compliance with his selfish views, at a moment when proceedings in connection with the matrimonial engagement had at a point from which no young woman, under ordinary circumstances, would willingly recede. Betty's color suddenly mounted from a pale pink to that of full blown peony.—She flashed one lightning glance upon the lover—of her father's black pig; and, after a minute's earnest gaze upon her gutta percha slippers, she rose without uttering a word. Her father, when his astonishment permitted utterance, reproached the bargain-seeking bachelor with his duplicity, and then left the fellow to his meditations—who, after all, appeared excessively annoyed at the ill success of his scheme to secure possession of the coveted property. But Betty had two strings to her bow. She appeared at the Registrar's office on the following morning with another smart-looking young bachelor, right glad to have her "as she stood;" and, after due attention to all the preliminaries, they were united in the silken bonds of matrimony last week—the "auld owners of the black pig" being one of the subscribing witnesses.

COOL.—A gentleman residing in a village, finding that the diminution of his wood-pile continued after his fires were out, lay awake one night in order to obtain, if possible, some clue to the mystery. At an hour when all honest folks should be in bed, hearing an operator at work in the yard, he cautiously raised the chamber window, and saw a lazy neighbor endeavoring to get a large log into his wheelbarrow.

"You're a pretty fellow," said the owner, "to come here and steal my wood while I sleep."

"Yes," replied the thief, "and I suppose you would stay up there and see me break my neck with lifting, before you'd offer to come and help me."

A Boston lady riding in an omnibus recently, was well nigh overwhelmed by the outspread skirts of a neighbor of the same sex, and when she had put them firmly but quietly aside only to have them again deposited upon her person, she remarked, in tones that could not have been wholly devoid of bitterness, "My own clothing keeps me sufficiently warm to-day, and you will oblige me by keeping yours to yourself," which should have collapsed the intruding crinoline.

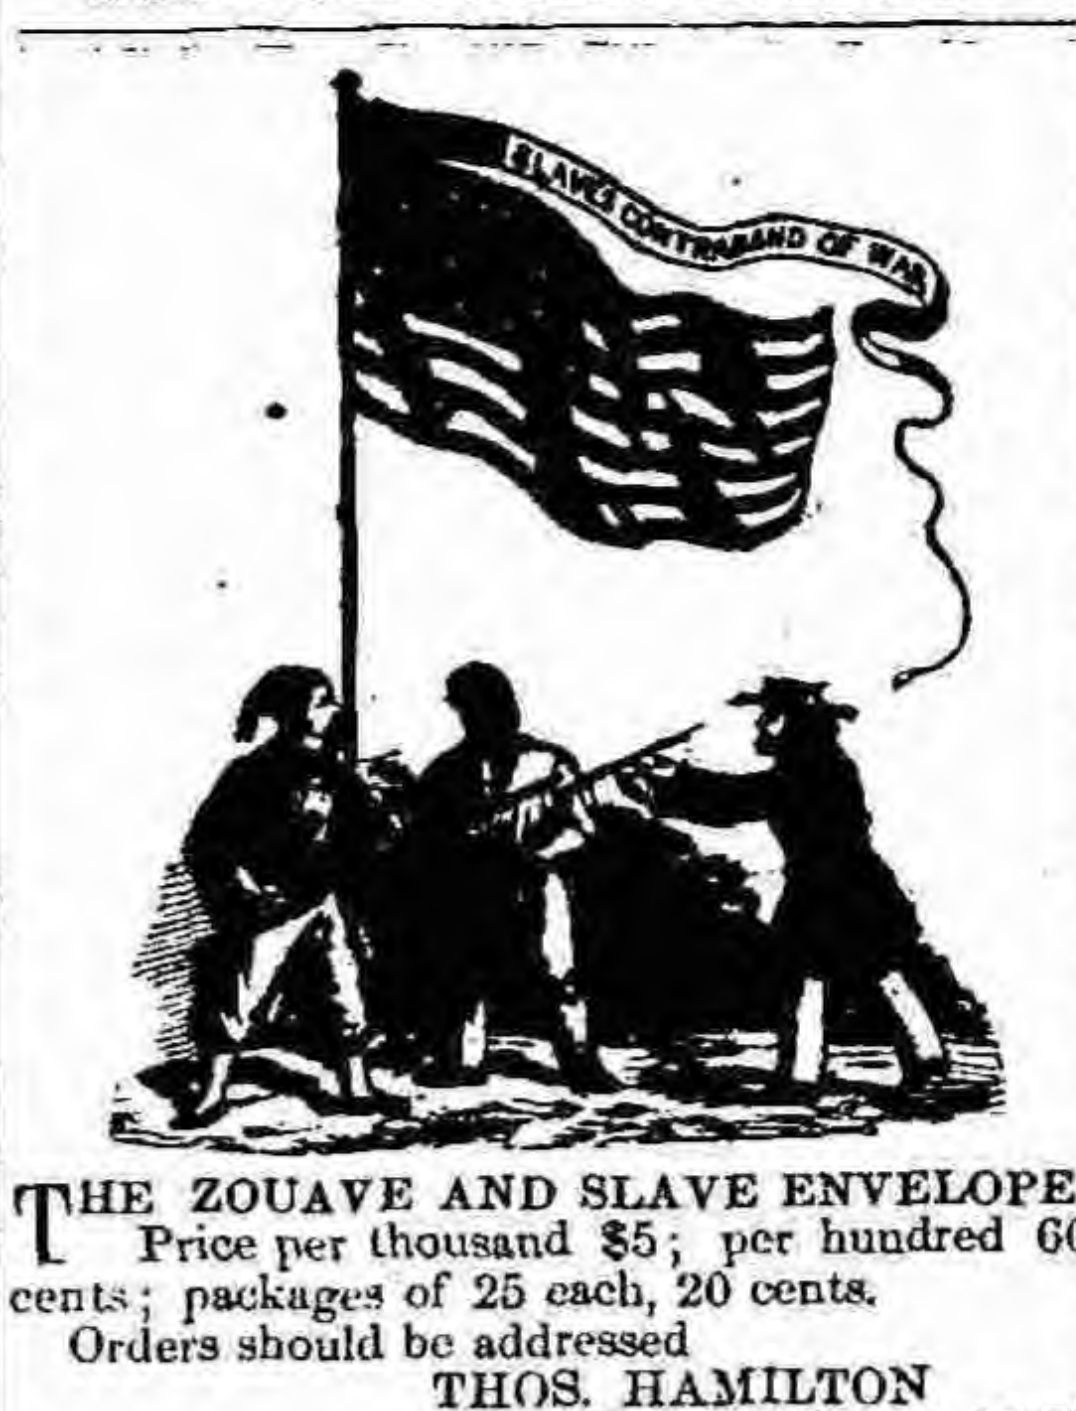
"Mr. Potter, I have been with you three months and you have not paid me. I am very poor, and in debt for my board. My landlord says if I do not pay him to-day he will put me in jail."

"Well, my boy," answered Potter, coolly, "you know if he puts you in jail you won't have to pay any board." That must have been consoling.

In Alexander Hamilton's first political speech, occur these words:

"The sacred rights of mankind are not to be rummaged for among old parchments or musty records; they are written as with a sunbeam, in the whole volume of human nature, by the hand of divinity itself, and can never be erased or obscured by mortal power."

MISCELLANEOUS.



THE ZOUAVE AND SLAVE ENVELOPE
Price per thousand $5; per hundred 60 cents; packages of 25 each, 20 cents.
Orders should be addressed
THOS. HAMILTON
48 Beekman Street, N. Y

MEDICAL.

PAIN-KILLER.

We can recommend on the best authority, PERRY DAVIS' PAIN-KILLER, as a remedy unsurpassed for the cure of Sudden Colds, Coughs, DIPTHERIA and Sore Throat, Asthma, Dyspepsia, Headache, Rheumatic and Neuralgic Affections, Chilblains and Frosted Feet, Burns and Scalds, Tooth and Face Ache, Pains in the Back, Joints, Limbs and Side, Felons, Boils, and all kindred diseases.

Dr. Ware, of Columbus, Ga., says, for Neuralgia of the Back, or Lumbago, it surpasses any medicine I have ever used.

Dr. Sweet says it is excellent to remove the soreness after bone-setting.

Dr. Hall recommends it as an excellent linament for Rheumatism.

Dr. Nelson recommends it as a linament.

Dr. Walton writes from Coschocton County, Ohio, Nov. 28, 1860: "Your Pain-Killer cures this new disease, DIPTHERIA, or Sore Throat, that is so alarmingly prevalent here; and it has not been known to fail in any instance when used in time. This fact you should make known to the world." [It is used in this disease as a gargle and lotion as well as a tonic and stimulant.]

Rev. H. L. Van Meter, writing from Burmah says: "The Pain-Killer has become an almost indispensable article in my family."

Hundreds of missionaries give similar testimony of its virtues.

Rev. J. G. Stearns writes: "I consider it the best remedy for Dyspepsia I ever knew."

Rev. Jabez Swan says: "I have used it for years in my family, and consider it an invaluable remedy."

Rev. A. W. Curtis: "By its use I entirely cured a felon in a few days."

The Salem Observer says, "It is a medicine every household should have at hand in case of accident or sudden attack of disease."

The New York Examiner says, "We have used the Pain-Killer, and consider it an indispensable article in the family medicine box."

The N. Y. Independent says, "We have used it, and it proves to be all it professes."

Sold by Druggists and Dealers everywhere.
PERRY DAVIS & SON, Proprietors.
10—13t

TIME, MONEY, AND LABOR SAVED,
BY USING
B. T. BABBITT'S
SUPERIOR FRENCH
CHEMICAL ERASIVE SOAP,

Made and improved by the ORIGINAL INVENTOR of the German and Austrian Chemical Erasive or Detersive Soap, of which the real and genuine article has, since its first introduction to the American public, been most favorably known, as the Best and Cheapest Washing Soap in the market, and with the present improvement, which is not known to any other manufacturer, we CHALLENGE THE WORLD to produce a better article.

1. One pound of it will accomplish as much as three pounds of any other soap.

2. But one quarter the time and labor are required to do the same amount of washing, as with the best of family soap.

3. It does not injure the most delicate fabric; will tend to set the colors, and wash cleaner than any other soap in use.

4. Clothes need no boiling, and but little rubbing with the hands, thus avoiding their wear upon the wash-board.

5. Paints, Grease, Tar, and stains of every description vanish as by magic, before its wonderful, searching, erasive powers.

6. It is invaluable to Machinists, Printers Painters, and all others using Inks, Oils, etc. for washing hands; it does not chap them (like other soaps,) but will cleanse and soften the skin.

7. It may be used in hard or soft water, and is adapted for use in all climates.

Put up in one pound bars, sixty bars in each Box.

For sale by the bar or box by
THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beckman Street.

MRS. WINSLOW'S
SOOTHING SYRUP.

Every mother should be prepared to act in the capacity of both nurse and physician to her children she can, if she will, discharge these duties much better than any one she can employ. If she does not, she ought to know that there is a Medicine prepared by an old nurse and female physician which has stood the test of many, many years, and is the most perfect thing on earth for children teething; it also cures. Wind Colic, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, and is sure to regulate the bowels. We say to every mother, do not let your own prejudices, or the prejudices of others stand in the way of the relief that will be sure—yes, absolutely sure—to follow the use of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP certainly does, as the name implies, "soothe" the little sufferer into a quiet, natural sleep, from which it awakes invigorated and refreshed. And for the cure of diseases incident to the period of teething, such as Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Wind Colic, &c., we have never seen its equal.

We have always been, and still are, opposed to the practice of drugging infants. This article has no deleterious effects whatever, and from our own experience (we speak advisedly) we have every confidence in it, and can heartily recommend it to all mothers. Take our advice—use it—and you will as strongly recommend it to others as we have to you.

When we say that MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP acts like a charm, we do but reiterate the language of every person who ever used it for heir children, for all diseases incident to the period of teething, such as Dysentery and Diarrhœa, Wind Colic and Cholera Infantum. It will produce quietude and rest, relieve all suffering, and the infant will awake invigorated and refreshed, and not with th dull and stupefying effects of preparations of opium

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your res by a sick child suffering and crying with the excruciating pain of cutting teeth? If so, go at once and get a bottle of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately—depend upon it; there is no mistake about it. There is not a mother on earth who has ever used it who will not tell you at once that it will regulate the bowels, and give rest to the mother and relief and health to the child, operating like magic. It is perfectly safe in all cases, and pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States.

During the thirty years of unprecedented and increasing popularity of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP, innumerable "CORDIALS" and other nostrums, prepared by pretended M.D.'s, have sprung up and lived but a mushroon existence, the SOOTHING SYRUP has been constantly increasing in popularity, and become a household word, and for the health of their children, by the use of her i valuable article.
THOUSANDS OF MOTHERS THANK MRS. WINSLOW

PRICE 20 CENTS PER BOTTLE.

For sale by
THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St., N.Y.

THE BEST MEDICINES IN THE WORLD!!!

The following invaluable medicines may be obtained of
THOMAS HAMILTON, 48 Beekman St.

DR. CLARKE'S
VEGETABLE SHERRY-WINE BITTERS,

Are composed of Sarsaparilla, Dock-root, Rheubarb Thoroughwort, Dandelion, Prickly Ash, Bark, &c they should be taken not only in the Spring, but at all season's of the year, as they operate directly on the liver, removing from it all coating of morbid matter, and restoring it to its normal action; also opening the bile ducts, causing the requisite flow of bile so essential to good health. Their influence upon the kidneys, also, is advantageously felt; at the same time they operate upon the blood, cleansing it from all impurity or taint of any kind. Humors of long standing are eradicated from the blood, thereby speedily curing jaundice, headache, weak stomach, sore eyes, nervousness, and other chronic diseases arising from impurity of the blood.

The palatableness of these bitters renders them agreeable to every one, and being composed entirely of vegetables, they may be used by all classes or people with safety.

Sold for the low price of 25 cents per pint bottle.

DR. CLARKE'S
SUGAR-COATED HERB PILLS.

These pills are made mostly from a valuable herb hat grows on the proprietor's farm.

Warranted to cure Bilious Stomach, Bilious Bowels, Bilious Colic, Bilious Fever, and all diseases which arise from a bilious state of the system viz, Jaundice, Headache, Heartburn, Sour Stomach Liver Complaint, Weak Stomach, Pain in the Stomach, Costiveness, Loss of Appetite, and a host, of diseases too numerous to mention, as their number is legion.

Warranted to cure diseases peculiar to the female sex

Warranted at all times safe and efficient.

Warranted for a gentle family physic not to have an equal in America, operating without pain.

Warranted not to contain calomel, aloes, gamboge colocynth, or other drastic poisonous drugs, which always do the system more hurt than good, and by their continued use are sure to cause a derangemen of the liver, bring on costiveness, and its inevitable consequence, piles, and dyspepsia, and finally break down the constitution, and cause the victim to drag out a miserable existence. Touch not, taste not, handle not the wily poison. Your life is your own,—preserve it. Take a simple herb, sure in its effects, but safe and pleasant,—no wrenching pains, no il effects, and made pleasant to take by a fine coat o sugar. Children love them, ladies admire them, fools and wise men cannot do without them, doctors prescribe them,—and every body takes them. Yes, every body; from the honest farmer and mechanic to the most learned philosopher. And why? Simply because they are good, excellently good; and will do you good.

PRICE, 25 CENTS PER BOX.

DR. CLARKE'S COUGH AND CROUP SYRUP.

It is the most wonderful, effective and extraordiary medicine for the lungs ever used by man. It is perfectly safe and pleasant to take, and gives relief immediately. Thousands have been cured by its use, and tens of thousands will be again. All who use it pronounce it to be the best lung remedy ever discovered. Common coughs and colds are dispelled by the use of only a few doses, and children can be cured of croup at once if taken in its first stage. Long-standing diseases require perseverance, but a cure will be guaranteed. No medicine before ever possessed such excellent healing and curative power for the lungs. It seems, with almost magic power, to dispel the most severe cases of cough and throat ail.

Vocalists and public speakers should not fail to keep a bottle on hand at all times. A small quantity taken occassionally renders the voice beautifully clear and the lungs extremely strong. Words cannot fully express the great benefit to be derived from the use of the world-renowned remedy. Delay not, but procure a bottle at once. Use it if needed and if not, keep it till necessity requires its use, as all, sooner or later, are overtaken by some unpleasant affection of the lungs or throat.

PRICE, 25 CENTS PER BOTTLE.

BOOKS.

A NEW WORK
REPORT OF THE NIGER VALLEY
EXPLORING PARTY;
BY
M. R. DELANY, CHIEF COMMSIONER
TO AFRICA.

CONTENTS.
Political Movements.
Succeeding Conventions.
History of troject.
Arrival and reception in Liberia.
Liberia—Climate, Soil, Productions.
Diseases—Cause, Remedy.
The Interior.—Yoruba.
Topography, Climate, &c.
Diseases of this part of Africa.
Treatment, Hygeine, &c.
Missionary Influences.
What Africa now Requires to Direct Legitimate Commerce.
Cotton Staple.
Success in Great Britain.
Commercial Relations in Scotland.
The time to go to Africa.
Concluding Suggestions.

Complete in sections (chapters) consecutively from I to XVII, being most conveniently arranged in cut-in or side marginal notes, embracing every subject therein treated, so that in an instant any point or paragraph of interest may be at once cited to.

A learned and candid gentleman who has resided many years in Africa, after glancing over the proof sheets, pronounced it the most interesting and instructive work ever issued on that subject, and should be in the hands of every friend of Africa. It is a complete text-book.

The work contains 76 large pages, and will be sold at the low price of
TWENTY-FIVE CENTS PER COPY.

All Orders should be addressed to the Publisher,
THOS. HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St, N. Y.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE ANGLO-AFRICAN MAGAZINE, BOUND.

PRICE.—In half Morocco $1,25; half Morocco, gilt edges, $1.50. Muslin, $1.00

CONTENTS;
EMBELLISHMENT.—Portrait of Alexander Dumas.
MUSIC.—By A. J. R. Connor.
Apology.
A Statistical View of the Colored Population of the United States, from 1790 to 1850.
African American Picture Gallery.—Anon.
American Caste and Common Schools,—by J. Holland Townsend.
A Review of Slavery and the Slave Trade,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
A Good Habit Recommended,—by Sarah M. Douglass.
A Chapter in the History of the African Slave Trade,—by Edward W. Blyden.
Anglo-Saxons and Anglo-Africans.—Anon.
A Word to Our People.
Blake; or the Huts of America,—by Martin R. Delany.
Books &c.
Civilization—Its Dependence on Physical Circumstances.
Colored American Patriots,—by Wm. C. Nell
Comets,—by M. R. Delany.
Citizenship,—by James Mc'Cune Smith.
Claude Brihndas De Salas,—Selected.
Communication from N. Y. Society for the Promotion of Education among Colored Children.
Chess.
Dumas,—Alexander.
Effects of Emancipation in Jamaica, by Robert Campbell.
Fragments of Thought,—by D. A. Payne.
Fancy Sketches,—Anonymous.
Gone to God—Poetry—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
Intellectual Culture —by Robert Gordon.
In the Constitution of Man there exists a Religious Element,—by Robt. Gordon.
Lines—Poetry—by Grace A. Mapps.
Mrs. Partington and Mrs. Freshington.—Anon
Our Greatest Want,—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
Our Duty in the Conflict,—by J. Holland Townsend.
On the Fourteenth Query of Thos. Jefferson's Notes on Virginia.
On the Personality of the First Cause,—by Robt. Gordon.
Patrick Brown's First Love.
Poetry—Anonymous.
Selected Items.
Struggles for Freedom in Jamaica—by Robert Campbell.
The Attraction of Planets—by M. R. Delany.
The German Invasion, by James M'Cune Smith
Trifles, by Mary A. S Cary.
The Coming Man—Poetry—by Wm. J. Wilson
The Educational Wants of the Free Colored People, by Martin H. Freeman.
Thomas L. Jinnings.
The Teacher and his Pupil—Poetry—by Wm J. Wilson.
Thoughts on Hayti, by James T. Holly.
The Successive Advances of Astronomy, by G. B. Vashon.
The Oberlin Wellington Rescue, by J. Mercer Langston.
The Shadows of Intemperance,—by James Fields.
The Dying Fugitive—Poetry—by Frances Ellen Watkins.
The Anglo-African and the African Slave Trade.
The Two Offers, by Frances Ellen Watkins.
The Re-opening of the Slave Trade—Anonymous.
The First Colored Convention.
The Self-Redeeming Power of the Colored Races of the World,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
The Policy that we should Pursue,—by J. Holland Townsend.
The Education of the Colored People,—by Amos Gerry Beman.
The Great Conflict requires Great Faith,—by J. W. C. Pennington.
The Outbreak in Virginia.
The Sentinel of Freedom—Poetry,—by J. Sella Martin.
The Nat Turner Insurrection.
The Execution of John Brown.
The Anglo-African Magazine for 1860.
The Watering Places.—Anonymous.

Orders should be addressed to
THOMAS HAMILTON,
48 Beekman street,
New York.

PUBLICATIONS FOR SALE BY
THOMAS HAMILTON,
48 Beekman St.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF THE ANGLO-AFRICAN MAGAZINE. Bound,—Price—In half Morocco, $1.25; half Morocco, gilt edges, $1.50; Muslin, $1.00. CONTENTS: Embellishments—Portrait of Alexander Dumas. Music, by A. J. R. Conner. Articles by Bishop D. A. Payne, James M'Cune Smith, M. D., Prof. Geo. B. Vashon, Dr. Martin, R. Delany, Mrs. Sarah M. Douglass, Prof. Robert Campbell, Prof. Wm. J. Wilson, Rev. J. W. C. Pennington, D. D., Rev. J. Theo. Holly, Mrs. Frances Ellen Watkins Harper, Prof. M. H. Freeman, Rev. Edward W Blyden, Rev. Robert Gorden, Prof. Chas. L. Reason, Mrs M. A. Shadd Cary, Dr. James Fields, Rev. Amos Gerry Beman, Miss Grace A. Mapps Rev. J. Sella Martin, Wm. C. ell, Esq. J. Mercer Langston, and J. Holland Townsend Esq.,

The Life of Captain John Brown
The Liberator of Kansas, and the Hero of Harper's Ferry. By James Redpath. An elegant 12mo. volume of 400 pages, illustrated and embellished with a superb Steel Portrait of the Glorious Old Man. Price $1.00.

My Bondage and My Freedom.
By Fredrick Douglass, One vol., 12 mo., 464 pp. Illustrated. Price $1.00, postage 22 cts.

Life of Jermain W. Loguen.
The great Underground Railroad King. Price $1.00.

The Martyrs and the Fugitive.
By the Rev. S H. Platt. A thrilling work on slavery and the slave-trade, detailing the capture of a family in Africa by the Slave-dealers, their fearful journey to the coast, the horrors of the "middle passage," their sale in America, and subsequent martyrdom; the slavery of their son, his terrible sufferings and perilous escapes. Sent, postpaid, upon the receipt of 38 cts.

Twelve Years a Slave.
The Narrative of Solomon Northrap, a citizen of New York, kidnapped in Washington City in 1841 and rescued in 1853, from a cotton plantation near Red River, Louisiana. Seven Illustrations, 336 pp. 12mo. Price $1,00, postage paid.

Our National Charters.
For the Millions. Including—1. The Federal Constitution of 1787–9. 2. The Articles of Confederation, 1787. 3. The Declaration of Independence, 1776. 4. The Articles of Association 1775. With notes showing their bearing on salvery, aand the relative powers of the State and National Governments. Also a summary of Legal Opinions collected from the highest authorities, is prefixed to the Constitution. An Appendix contains extracts from State Constitutions and Bills of Rights; Ordinance of 1787, excluding Slavery from the Northwest Territory: also, Sentiments of the Revolutionary Fathers, &c. By mail, postage prepaid, single copy, 15 cts.; four copies, 50 cts.; nine copies $1,00.

The American Slave-Code,
In Theory and Practice: Its Distinctive Features Shown by its Statutes, Judicial Decisions, and Illustrative Facts. 430 pp., 12mo. Price 75 cts postage paid.

Unconstitutionality of Slavery.
By Lysander Spooner. In paper, 291 pp., 8vo Price 75 cts., or postage paid 86 cts.

Review of Lysander Spooner's Essay on the Unconstitutionality of Slavery.
By Wendell Phillips. Price 25 cts. Postage 5 Cts.

The Revelations of a Slave Smuggler.
Being the Autobiography of Captain Richard Drake, an African trader for fifty years, from 1807 to 1857. The work is handsomely illustrated, with graphic representations of scenes as they actually occur on the slave ships and on shore. Illustration No. 1 is a large cut, 16x23, representing a slave market on the Coast of Africa. Illustration No. 2 represents a scene in the Hold of a Slaver (middle passage). Then there is a large plate, giving views of a slave vessel betwen decks, regulation slave-deck, regulation packing, &c. The work is handsomely printed—contains one hundred large 8vo. pages, and is published at a price which places it within the reach of the masses—viz: 25 cents a copy. When sent by mail the postage (six cents must be added.

The Nat Turner Insurrection.
A full and reliable account. Copies will be sent to any address on the receipt of five cents.

Uncle Tom's Cabin.
By Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe. Two volumes in one. Price, $1,25.

The Kidnapped and Ransomed,
Being the personal recollections of Peter Still, and, his wife, Vina, after forty years of slavery by Mrs. Kate E. R. Pickard, with an introduction by Rev. S. J. May, Illustrated. 12mo. cloth $1,25.

Gerrit Smith in Congress.
"Slavery has no right but to die!" A work of over 400 pages, containing all his speeches delivered in Congress; also, an accurate likeness. Price, only 80 cents per copy, and postage paid.

The Dream;
Or, the true history of Dea Giles's Distillery and Dea. Jones's Brewery. By George B. Cheever, D.D. Price per single copy 10 cents, $1 per doz., or $7 per hundred.

A Summer on the Carribbean Sea.
By J. Dennis Harris. With an introduction by Geo. William Curtis. Sent by mail on receipt of $1.

A Pilgrimage to my Motherland;
An account of a journey among the Egbas and Yorubas of Central Africa, in 1859-60. By Robert Campbell, one of the Commissioners of the Niger Valley Exploring Party; late in charge of the Scientific Department of the Institute for Colored Youth, Philadelphia; and member of the International Statistical Congress, London. Price, 63 cents. When sent by mail, the postage (10 cents) must be added

Turner's (J. A.) Cotton Planter's Manual
Being a compilation of facts from the best authorities on the culture of cotton, its natural history, chemical analysis, trade and consumption, and embracing a history of cotton and the cotton gin. Price, $1. Postage, 15 cents.

The Manual of the Wardrobe,
00 large octavo pages, in paper, by Mrs. Pullan. Price, 25 cents. Sent, postpaid, upon receipt o the price. It comprises a thorough dissertation upon taste in dress, an explanation of the different kinds of stitches made in sewing, remarks upon the various kinds and qualities of fabrics used in the wardrobe, with complete directions for cutting and fitting all kinds of garments for women's and children's wear; the preparation of table, toilet, and bed linen. Illustrated by nearly one hundre tofacrnedvtt and mode s.

The Weekly Anglo-African.

"MAN MUST BE FREE!—IF NOT THROUGH LAW, WHY THEN ABOVE THE LAW."

VOL. I. NO. 13. NEW YORK, OCTOBER 26, 1861. PRICE FOUR CENTS.

The Weekly Anglo-African.

IS PUBLISHED
EVERY SATURDAY,
BY ROBT. HAMILTON,
No. 48 BEEKMAN STREET, N. YORK.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
Two Dollars per year, or Four Cents per copy, payable on delivery.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.
Six Cents a line for the first insertion, and Three Cents for each subsequent insertion.

Notices of Births, Marriages, Deaths, Public Meetings, &c., inserted for twenty-five Cents provided they do not exceed five lines; if more than that, Five Cents for each additional line.

All communications for the paper must be addressed ROBT HAMILTON,
48 Beekman st., New York.

Poetry.

THE FUGITIVE-SLAVE LAW.

BY WILLIAM B. FOWLE.

Restore the Fugitive! Ay, when
The Son of God descends again
And bids me never more to do
As I would fain be done unto.

Restore the Fugitive! I will
When God's own voice in man is still,
And wrong is right by God's decree,
And light and air no longer free.

Restore the Fugitive! No, ne'er
While I've a home, a shelter, where
The persecuted one may bide,
Castle or grave, and side by side.

Restore the Fugitive! The law
Is like the cords that Samson wore,
And nature, were each thread a chain,
Would snap a thousand such in twain.

Independent.

FORMATION OF COLORED REGIMENTS.

MR. EDITOR,

That it is the duty of every one advancing propositions for public adoption, inviting scrutiny and analysis, counseling a policy, to assign competent reasons I am sensibly convinced: and that Mr. A. M. Green, in your issue of the 12th, was disposed to combat my ideas—I could only accept as a compliment—differing, no doubt, from what it was intended. It raises me in my own estimation to think that one like myself, of so feeble an intellect, of so little cultivation, should have provoked the notice of so able a man as my literary opponent. I therefore bow to it, and for the last time upon this subject, proceed to reiterate in substance my former sentiments, while I attempt to reply to my worthy antagonist, though co-worker, who has the advantage of me in assuming the leadership or acting the spokesman for our race in this country.

Mr. Green says:—

"But I think it but just, once in a while, to speak out and let the world know where we stand on the great issue of the day, for it is by this means that we have to succeed in arousing our people from a mistaken policy of inactivity &c., &."

The policy which he recommends is certainly one which if followed must destroy every vestige of that power which by our united influence has so long troubled the plotters of our ruin and extinction to the detriment of their wily schemes.

If his sentiments are those of our people generally, I am heartily sorry, and must differ with them though I stand alone as the only advocate of the policy of peace measures or neutral action in the great struggle.

He also says that "this inactivity that is advocated is the principle that has ever had us left behind and will leave us again, unless we arouse from our lethargy and arm ourselves as men and patriots against the common enemy of God and man."

I admit that there is less activity in the right direction than advisable or beneficial to our cause, but never have our people displayed more wisdom than the present in refraining from initiating or making demonstrations of war measures. In that particular, discretion has marked their action—I for one must give them credit. That grasping the sword will emancipate us from prejudice, from slavery, may be well enough to declaim, but willl it bear questioning? He intimates that it will emancipate us from our now unhappy and heart crushing disabilities, will take the manacles from our limbs, remove the obstacles that debar our elevation to the equality we aspire.

I have yet to learn that these are practical established facts; it may be clear to the mind of Mr. G., but he must make it appear so by something more than simple declamation.

Who accuses us of cowardice? No one! unless it be my honorable opponent. Can we purchase freedom and independence by the sacrifice of thousands of our unfortunate people in belligerent opposition to those who have the pre-eminence in position, power and influence; whose numerical strength is ten times that of our own? We may sell our lives dearly, carry havoc and destruction into the ranks of our enemies, but the numerical preponderance, the unlimited means at their control, must force us to succumb or cease to exist on this continent as a race. All reason and experience will decide that—look at it as you may. The history of the Aborigines of this country must satisfy you of the force of this mode of reasoning.

To contend against the Government then with any hope of success, is vain and not worthy of the time we spend in discussing it.

Admitting, for mere argument, that the Government would accept our services, how could we more than the Commander of the West, General Fremont, influence the policy of the administration to our liberation or emancipation from prejudice and slavery? No, my friends, your reason must answer No!—no fighting will emancipate you from prejudice. Will any one tell me that today a poor man of little or no intellectual cultivation, from the Independent Government of Hayti, will be more respected in this or any country than one of the native born of this country of our color? Did they not wield both fire and sword fiercely, madly, to desperation, for the liberties they now enjoy? But to command respect, wealth and education must do it—they will do more towards destroying that prejudice which darkens our existence than all the fighting we can effect under the most favorable circumstances.

Mr. G. tells us that we should make ourselves felt. In that I agree with him; but may we not question the manner in which we can do it the more effectually.

I am told the object of the exhibitors at the Great Exhibition in London, the World's Fair, in 1851, was to make themselves felt by the exhibition of their great advancement in Arts and Science; the object of those nations contributing their quota by invitation, was the same. The Fair was, we are told, a complete success. That should satisfy us that the cultivation of peace, of Arts and Science, will go equally as far as an unsuccessful war, to produce that high respect we are advised to fight for. I, for one, am satisfied that other means of making ourselves felt at less sacrifice of existence and more beneficial to the desired end than wielding the sword can be found. That impression that awards us credit and challenges not only competition as equals, but commands that respect which an array or force of arms, situated as we are, can never force upon this or any other nation whose interests are immediately identified with the institution of slavery, and the safety of that depending, to an extent, upon the crushing despotism and deprivations, visited upon those dangerous to its progress or stability—is what we want to make ourselves felt. No unarmed, ununiformed masses of colored men, parading through the streets, will ever produce or tend to produce such impression.

Mr. G. takes this stand: (I give his own language word for word, as follows.) "Now I maintain that for all practical purposes whatever be the turn of the war, preparation on our part by the most efficient knowledge of military art and discipline is one of the most positive demands of the times."

As an off-set to that position, I here take my stand; That the encouragement of every pursuit of industry and education, aside from war matters, are deserving and should (more especially at this time while the usurpers of our rights and liberties are engaged in desperate conflict) meet our most vigorous and undivided co-operation! That, that policy, adopted, realised, and perfected, alone can produce the requisite means to establish our claim to the respect we need; to open the many avenues of wealth, prominence, political and civil equality, without which, no display of military drill of hordes of unarmed or armed men, ignorant of every other necessary qualification as servicable citizens will command.

Momentary admiration for exhibitions of well drilled men and military tactics, which I believe would follow, would create sensation among the sight-lovers who swarm in all thickly populated districts; but that indellible impression mighty to move the hearts of men to action, but when moved, calls forth imperishable convictions, lasting as time itself, must eminate from something deeper, more reliable, than brute force or the chance life of military campaigning, of soldiers ungarnished by the more essential qualities that make the man the citizen. As to military displays creating respect by efficient drill, especially among us, I have my doubts. The most ignorant unprincipled desperado, or tyrant or usurper that disgraces humanity by his villiany, may be the most perfectly disciplined soldier, may be daring, regardless of danger either to limb or life, his daring may create admiration, but his infamous reputation as a man of dishonorable proclivities, dissipation and barbarity, will blast his reputation, however bravely won on the field of battle.

Mr. G. says: "Had every State in the Union taken active steps in the direction of forming regiments of color, we should now, instead of numbering eight regiments of about eight thousand five hundred men, have numbered seventy-five thousand, besides awakening an interest at home and abroad, that no vacilating policy of the half-hearted semi-secessionists of the North could have suppressed. It would have relieved the Administration of so much room for cavil on the Slavery question, and colored men's right to bear arms," &c., &c.

Permit me to ask of any candid thinker who, perhaps, is better informed than myself on this matter, whether the States can independently force any number of men upon the General Government contrary to the wish or will of the constituted authorities, who I suppose had the power of either accepting or rejecting white or colored men as prudence, interest, or necessity dictates, or who were disqualified by legal restrictions?

If the States cannot constitutionally do this, would not then the encouragement of raising those regiments environ the administration in complications and force that cavil which friend G. would obviate?

Mr. Green also informs us that "the evidences of God's demands upon our patriotism as warriors, are so strong, that none need mistake them." I have yet to see the evidences of God's will or demands upon us in that direction, to take up arms for our own destruction, to destroy our bond brother, or to assist those who are contending in spirit against His righteous mandates, the principal of which is "Love thy neighbor as thyself." If, then, the result of that policy advocated by Mr. G. cannot effect the desired end he would have we, must, if ever entertaining it, abandon it at once, and pursue that policy which reason teaches is not only the safest but the wisest.

I am satisfied that recruiting, drilling or fighting will never break this inate prejudice, imbedded in the hearts of this nation.

The admiration we might win by bravery, &c., when brought into action as soldiers, might easily be overshadowed by one act or false accusation brought against us by those jealous of our gallant exploits when in active service.

With all respect for Mr. Green's literary accomplishments and scholar-like production, he is still in the dark, and may with propriety cry out as one in times gone by, "Lord! that I may receive my sight."

Supposing that we with one accord enter upon that fallacious policy of raising regiments for the war, could we do it without it becoming a public feature, noticeable by foes as well as friends!

With Southern emissaries thronging our hotels, thoroughfares, stores, &c., would not the Confederates be likely to gain this important information with equal facility as they obtain other news that enables them to counter balance every move made by the National forces? If we admit this, why may we not from the knowledge we have of their (the Southerners) disposition, believe that as a direful retaliation they would arm their free and enslaved colored men, and compel them to fight against us on the field of battle, while such patriots as A. M. G., who we could not well afford to lose, would have the unpleasant duty assigned to him and his associates in arms, of destroying those whom he might now benefit, by adopting a policy contrary to the misguided suicidal course he so eloquently advocates.

If I have the honor to be termed one of those unfortunates who are willing to wait and see the salvation of God, by Mr. G., I accept the conferred honor with many thanks.

The wisdom of the course I advocate, and that advocated by A. M. G., time alone will decide. Patiently, however, I abide time, clinging to my avowed policy, humbly trusting in Him who I have every reason to think has taken the cause of the oppressed of our people in this land out of our weak hands, and has or is about to answer our many appeals in his own glorious way, while we continue to lift our hearts, our hands, in praise and thanksgiving to His holy name.

R. H. V.

MOON INFLUENCE NOTIONS.

The collection of "moon notions" published below, were sent to a Philadelphia paper by a writer who takes interest in such matters. They are interesting from the fact that thousands place implicit reliance on the influences supposed to be exercised by the moon on mundane affairs.

Root crops should be planted in the dark of the moon.

All sorts of vegetables, trees and plants designed to grow vigorously, should be planted in the new or light of the moon.

All crops that produce their yield above the surface of the ground should be planted in the new or light of the moon, while those that produce theirs in the ground should be planted when the moon is on the wane.

Beans should be planted at the full of the moon, and lentels at the time of new moon.

All sorts of trees should be grafted and pruned during the increase of the moon's light.

If the fruit trees blossom in or during the dark of the moon, we will have but few or no apples, peaches, cherries, pears, &c., but plenty if such blossoming occurs in and during new moon.

All vines, such as cucumbers, melons, &c., produce more fruit when they blossom and commence bearing when there is full moon than when the nights are dark.

Grain intended for immediate use should be harvested at the time of full moon, while the grain intended for preservation should be gathered at the time of the new moon.

Hogs should be butchered in full moon or a little before it, as the pork will then not only be better, but will also swell up and enlarge in boiling, while that butchered at an opposite phase of the moon will be poor and shrink in boiling.

The roofs of houses, barns and other buildings should be shingled, and wooden rail fences staked when the horns of the moon point downward, as the shingles and stakes will then not rise up as they otherwise will.

Fences should be made and repaired when the horns of the moon point upward, as fences then made will not sink into the ground.

Timber cut when the moon is full or rapidly increasing in her light will be full of sap, soft and spongy and so soon become worm-eaten or destroyed by rot.

Timber trees, to be durable, should be cut in the dark of the moon, or during the decline or decrease of its lights in the month of February.

Timber cut in the old of the moon in August will not be eaten with worms, nor snap in burning, and will last much longer than if cut at any other time.

Hickory poles, to make good hoops, should be cut when the moon is new or increasing in her light, or they will soon get so worm-eaten as to be worthless.

Weeds, briars, bushes and other noxious plants should be mown off or grubbed up in the dark of the moon, or during its decline of light in August, to make their destruction sure.

Weeds, briars and bushes cut off in the old of the moon in August, when its place is in Leo (sign of the lion,) will be more certainly destroyed than if done at any other time.

To see the new moon for the first time in the South is a sign that the weather will be warm and pleasant; but if then seen high in the sky the contrary weather will happen.

To see the new moon for the first time over the right shoulder is a sign that you will succeed in your undertakings, while seeing it over your left shoulder is a sure presage of your failure or want of success.

Dung should be spread over grass land when the horns of the moon point downwards, as the manure will then sink into the ground, otherwise not.

Candles should be dipped only when the moon is on the increase.

A BEAUTIFUL JEWISH ALLEGORY.

The following Talmudic allegory, relating to David, the "Sweet Singer of Israel" is from the Hebrew Review, vol. 3, page 95, and is entitled, "The Songs of the Night:"

As David in his youthful days was tending his flocks on Bethlehem plains, the spirit of the Lord came upon him and his senses were opened and his understanding enlightened, that he might comprehend the songs of the night. The Heavens proclaimed the glory of God; the glittering stars all formed one chorus. Their harmonious melody resounded on earth and the sweetest fullness of their voices vibrated to its uttermost bounds.

"Light is the countenance of the Eternal," sung the setting sun. "I am the hem of his garments," responded the rosy tints of twilight.

The clouds gathered and said, "We are his nocturnal tent;" and the waters in the cloud, and the hollow voice of the thunders joined in the lofty chorus: "The voice of the Eternal is upon the waters; the God of glory thundereth; the Lord is upon many waters."

"He did fly upon my wings," whispered the wind, and the silent air replied, "I am the breath of God, the aspiration of his benign presence."

"We hear the songs of praise," said the parched Earth; "all around is praise; I alone am silent and mute!" And the falling dew replied, "I will nourish thee, so that thou shalt be refreshed and rejoice, and thy infants shall bloom like the young rose."

"Joyfully we bloom," replied the refreshed meadows. The full ears of corn waved as they sung, "We are the blessing of God; the hosts of God against famine."

"We bless you from above," said the moon; "We bless you," responded the stars, and the grasshopper chirped, "Me, too, he blesses in the pearly dew drop."

"He quenched my thirst," said the roe, "and refreshed me," continued the stag; "and he grants our food," said the beasts of the forest; "and he clothes my lambs," gratefully sung the sheep.

"He heard me," croaked the raven, "when I was forsaken and alone;" "He heard me," said the wild goat of the forest, "when my time came and I calved."

"And the turtle-dove cooed, and the swallows and all the birds joined their song. "We have found our nests, our houses; we will dwell on the altar of the Lord, and sleep under the shadow of his wing in tranquility and peace"—

"And peace"—echoed the night, and echo prolonged the sound—till chanticleer awoke the dawn and crowed, "Open the portals, the gates of the world! The King of glory approaches. Awake! arise! ye sons of men; give praise and thanks to the Lord, for the King of Glory approacheth."

* * * *

The sun arose, and David awoke from his melodious rapture. And as long as he lived the strains of creations harmony remained in his soul, and daily he recalled them upon the strings of his harp.

THE CLERICAL CHILD THIEF.

From "Chattanooga," a work for sale at this office.

The Reverend Theophilus Blowhard died unmarried, and without any relations for whom he cared to provide, and by his last will he left all his property to his well-beloved and faithful friend, Jabez Clitters, to be sold, and the proceeds, after payment of his debts and expenses of administration, to be applied to sundry benevolent purposes, especially to aid in building a new meeting-house, and for the Missionary Society.

Jabez took it to a lawyer and learned that Minna's child was included in the provisions of the will, and as a faithful executor, he immediately went to work to recover possession of the property. His first care was to find McGee, and, if possible, to obtain a re-payment of the hundred dollars, and a re-conveyance of the ten acres of land; but he learned McGee had moved very soon after Blowhard's death, to the town on the Mississippi where the ten acres of land was situated. Nothing was left, therefore, but to discharge, as he said with a sigh, his duty as an executor to his diseased friend, and to capture the child without delay.

"I feel a deep sense of duty, brethren," he said, to his friends, "in this matter—duty, as executor of that holy man who has gone before us over the dark rolling waters of Jordan's turbid stream, which separates that happy land from ours, and of duty as a patriot and a Christian, because you see, brethren, slavery is essential to the happiness and well-being, and prosperity of the state, nation, and people, and because it is a Bible institution. Abraham was a slave-holder, and had men servants, and women servants, and asses, and camels, and silver, and gold. Isaac was a slave-holder, and had men servants, and maid servants, and asses, and camels, and silver, and gold. Jacob was a slave-holder, and had men servants, and maid servants, and asses, and camels, and silver and gold. Slaveholding is right. By means of it the treasuries of our societies are replenished, and filled up with gold, and silver, and bank-notes. Brethren," said he, with a groan, "I don't intend to rust out, but to wear out, and however great, and severe, and arduous, and difficult the work and labor, and care, and toil may be, I feel in duty bound, in conscience bound, in honor bound as an executor, and as a patriot, and as a Christian, and as a philanthropist, and as a man, to catch that little negro.

His friends, who stood weeping around him, now looked up and smiled; two or three of the men said, "Amen." Some others, however, of the members of the church stood aloof, and said they would take no part in the matter, one way or the other. He might catch it if he could, but without their aid.

Another hunt was determined upon, and a day appointed for the purpose. Men were sent out to invite the neighbors to take part in the hunt, and it was found on this occasion, as it had been before, that those who drank the most whiskey, were the best patriots.

Norton was a candidate for the legislature; of course he was foremost in the cause, and almost as zealous as the Reverend Jabez Clitters himself in supporting the system of slave-holding. His arguments were different from those of the reverend gentleman, although they both came to the same result. All who were opposed to slavery, were fools and mad men, and in favor of dissolving the Union, of ruining the masters, and burning their houses over their heads, and destroying their wives and children, and, therefore, ought to be burnt or hung.

Norton was leader of the party, and directed the whole company to the mountains. They made an early start and reached them before sunrise. The party was not large, and their proceedings had been conducted with great secrecy. A loud shout was heard, and a tin horn was blown, which was answered by a dozen more, and the party collected at the mouth of the cave. Very soon Bill Harris came out, leading blind Minna and holding in his arms the little half clad child. A loud shout made the mountains echo around them, and the Reverend Jabez Clitters crossed his hands over his breast, and raised his eyes so high, that only the white of them could be seen.

Old Minna, too, crossed her hands upon her breast, and stood in silence. She raised her white eyeballs to heaven, and the big tears followed each other rapidly down her scarred cheeks.

They gathered around her; "Oh, men!" she said, "for de Lord's sake—for marcy's sake, don't take from me all the child I'se got. I'se had five children, and one arter another has been sold, and now de good Lord, for to comfort me, has gin me one more; dis little one; don't tar it from me—it will kill me. My heart is a'most broke already. It's mighty hard, men, for a mother to have her own child tuk away from her."

"It's none of your child," said the Reverend Jabez Clitters. "You have neither bought it, nor paid for it. You have given neither silver, nor gold, nor bank-notes, nor he asses, nor she asses, nor horses, nor camels for it. It is my property, to be applied for the propagation and extension of the gospel in foreign parts and nations, and to build a new meeting-house. It has been left, and devised, and bequeathed to me by the last, and only will and testament of Father Blowhard, now deceased, and dead, and buried, and gone to glory, and to heaven, of which will and testament I am the executor, and in duty bound as such, and as a patriot, and as a Christian, and as a philanthropist and a man, to carry it into full and complete effect and operation. How dare you have the impudence and audacity, and fool-hardiness, and wickedness, and depravity to assert, and state, and declare that this nigger is your child? You're a thief, and rob, and steal, from the church of God."

"Master, I did not mean no harm to the church in what I said. The Lord gin me the child, and I thought it was mine."

"You thought, eh. Who gave you—you a negro woman—the right to think, or opine, or conjecture, or deliberate, or have opinions? Your impudence and audacity exceeds all limits and bounds. You are, I repeat, trying to rob and steal from, and embezzle the property of the Missionary Society for the propagation and extension, and diffusion of the light, and blessings, and benefits and privileges of the glorious and blessed gospel of free grace in foreign lands, and nations, and people, and the property of the church."

"Master, do forgive me. I did not mean no harm to the gospel."

"Ask God to forgive you, woman, and don't ask such a thing or request from a poor, weak, sinful mortal, and fallable man, and feeble worm of the dust as I am."

Poor old Minna was sad. She groped her way to a tree, and leaned against it.

"You, and your husband and consort, and partner in crime," said the Reverend Jabez Clitters, "have not only broken and set at naught, and violated the law of God, in stealing and running away with, and carrying off the property of the Missionary Society, for the extension and spread of the glorious and blessed gospel of free grace in foreign parts, and among strange people who have never heard its glorious sound, and felt its blessed, and benign, and healthful, and soul-reviving influences and effects, but you have broken and violated, and trampled on the laws of the State of Tennessee, which enact and forbid the harboring, aiding, abetting, or supporting of a runaway, fugitive slave, and you must go to the penitentiary for so doing, and doing so. It's my bounden duty, as executor, and as a Christian, and a patriot, and a man, now to have you seized, and taken, and captured, so that you may be examined, and tried, and convicted, and sentenced, and punished as an example, and terror to all others, in like cases, and in like manner found offending, and doing as you have done."

Minna put her apron over her eyes, and leaned heavily against the tree.

A man came up to the Reverend Jabez Clitters, touched his elbow, and led him aside. "Have you not done enough, my friend? You have the child. Why should you trouble the woman any further, she is old and blind; it will not do any good to send har to the penitentiary."

"Brother," said the Reverend Jabez Clitters, "it's a case of conscience, and honor, and patriotitm, and good demeanor toward the State. The offence of which this womrn is guilty, is a deep, and a grievous, and a horrible sin. She has stolen church property, which is a sacrilege, you know, and deprived the church of it for months, when the money for which the child might have been sold, is so greatly wanted and needed to propagate and extend the blessed and glorious gospel in foreign parts, and among heathen nations, and foreign people, and to build a new meeting-house. I would if I could, and dare forgive the erring, and sinful, and wicked creature; but it is a case of conscience, and honor, and duty, brother," here he sighed, "and I must go on with it and proceed."

"Very well, sir. But do you know that you have no right to apply the money in your hands to carry on the prosecution? You can proceed, if you choose, but you must do so at your own cost"

The Reverend Jabez Clitters put his hand to his forehead, and deliberated, and thought, and studied for one minute, and then said: "Brother, I thank you for the information, and advice, and council you have given me. Woman," he said, approaching Minna, "I forgive you, and remit the offence of which you have been guilty against the dignity, and power, and peace, and honor of the State of Tennessee, and I hope and expect that this act of mercy and forgiveness on my part, will have its due and proper effect on your heart, and character, and life, and conduct. A man of the world would not have done so; but I am a Christian, and must be merciful and forgiving even as I hope for mercy and forgiveness,"

"Thankee, master," said Minna, courtsying to him. "Aint you gwine to gin me my child back?"

"Why you wicked, and ungrateful, and obstinate, and hard-hearted old creature. In the very act and moment that you receive forgiveness, you want me to help you rob the church and Missionary Society, for the propagation and extension of the gospel among heathen nations in foreign parts, and among strange people, of its goods and chattels, rights, credits, and property, and effects. Oh, brothers," he said, looking around him, "see the shocking depravity of the human soul and heart, and how prone it is to evil—'specially in niggers."

"Master," said Minna, "that child is mine. God gave it to me. If your church takes it, your church is a thief and robber. God is not so far off as some people think. He is looking right down on you, and sees my child in your hand as he does a sparrow when it falls to the ground. If you take my child away, you will ruin it, and kill me. Murder and robbery is no light thing in God's sight."

"Knock her down," said one of the men; "stop her impudence."

"Kill me, if you chose—kill me. I had rather die than live. I beg you to kill me at one, and put me out of my misery. It would be merciful in you to do so, but I will talk while I've life and breath. I tell yyu now that I'll take this whole thing and lay it afore the the Lord, and tell him all you have said and done, and I'll leave the whole matter in his hands."

"Woman," said the Reverend Jabez Clitters, "it's my blessed lot, and privilege, and duty, to be a preacher of the gospel, and on next Sabbath, providence permitting, I intend and expect to preach in the Pisgah meeting-house on the sin, and iniquity of covetousness, and if you and your husband will come there, you may sit on one of the back benches, and hear me, and be enlightened on that subject on which, at this present time, you are in gross and heathenish darkness. Come, woman, and bring your erring and sinful husband with you. It may be a permanent and everlasting blessing to both of you, and, in the meantime, I will pray and entreat the Lord that you may be forgiven your great and heathenish sin, and iniquity, and transgression. You see now what a great and glorious thing it is to be a Christian. A worldly minded man would not be so merciful to you. But I forgive you and even pray for you. Go thy way, woman, and sin no more."

The men started with the child. Minna, guided by the noise of their footsteps, and the cries of the child, followed them, shrieking aloud, groping and stumbling in her blindness, until she could no longer hear them, and then fell into a deep ravine.

"This is a fine, hearty child," said the Reverend Jabez Clitters, who had it in his arms. "Worth at least four hundred dollars in cash. Father Blowhard was a real and sincere benefactor to the church. He has proved his zeal in the cause by his good works, and charity, and beneficence, which are remembered, and will be had in mory long after his decease and death."

"Don't you think," said Stebbins, the lame tailor who was limping by his side," "that it is a kind of hard to take that ar child from its own mother."

"My dear Brother Stebbins, the thought you have just uttered is a suggestion of Satan, and the devil, and of the evil one. Tell him, and command him to get behind you and to retire, and go away from you. And, like a fiend and enemy of mankind, and of the human race, as he is, he has struck at, and assailed, and hit the very point, marrow, and gist of the whole question and controvery between the friends and patrons, and supporters of our beloeed and time-honored, and Christian institution of slavery, and the foes and enemies of that institution; because if the mother and father have a better right and title to, and interest in and for the child, than the master and owner on the day and hour it was born, that better right, and title, and interest will continue, and remain, and exist, till the child grows up to be a man, and of full age. If we do not own and possess them when they are infants and babies, we can not do so when they become youths and adults, and men, and women, and in their old age."

"I see it now," said Stebbins; "if you have no sight to the babies, you have none when they grow up to be men and women."

"Exactly and precisely so, Brother Stebbins. I am glad and rejoiced that I have been able in so few words to explain and unravel the whole matter and thing to you, so that you do clearly and fully comprehend, and understand, and know it."

"But she said, sir, that God gave her the child."

"The laws and constitution of the State of Tennessee, and the customs of the country, and the Constitution of the United States, and the laws of the United States, give this child to its master and owner, and that master and owner, therefore, and for that reason, has the right and title of it, and to have and to hold the use and the possession, add the benefit thereof, and of it."

"I see it now," said Stebbins. "Laws of God give it to its father and mother, and tue laws of men give it to the master."

"Precisely and exactly so, Brother Stebbins. In this world we are governed and controlled by the laws of man. In the next world we must and will obey, and be governed by the laws of God."

"Yes; that's it. If you'll preach that doctrine, you will have a great many hearers."

"I have no time, Brother Stubbins, to turn aside to preach that doctrine. My hands are now full with a controversy and question, I have just now and at this time, with the Universalists, and when I shall have routed, and beaten, and driven them from the field, perhaps I may turn my attention, and give my time to other and less important matters."

THE WEEKLY ANGLO-AFRICAN may be had at 187 Navy St., Brooklyn, and at Mrs. Garnett's store, 170 West 30th St., New York.

A man died of apoplexy the other day in Michigan. The next day the Coroner held an inquest, when the following verdict was returned: "Died from a visitation [illegible] beefsteak, eight cold potatoes and a [illegible] pie.

A Yankee has invented a [illegible] plan for boarding [illegible] mesmerizes the rest [illegible] meal—the mesmerized [illegible] sympathy.

The Weekly Anglo-African.

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 26, 1861.

☞ Advertisements for this paper must be accompanied by the cash.

☞ Copies of this paper can be purchased of the news-dealers everywhere.

A NOBLE PROPOSITION.

Robert Hamilton Esq.,

Dear Sir:—I congratulate you at the appearance once more of the Anglo-African,—a paper that gained, for the time it existed, more prestige than any other that had preceded it.

Now sir, the glorious question is, "Shall it live? I call it glorious, from the immense importance of the hour that is now upon us.

It will live if we bring our patriotism, our love for the truth, not to a boiling, but a moderate heat. Let each brother and sister, father and child, do what they can—take stock in it at a fair premium. The premium to be paid in Hallelujahs when its work as a Journal for Freedom is over.

Sir, I propose to unite with some in investing Five Dollars to begin with; what will others answer? I propose no plan upon which it is to be paid, but leave that to your better judgment—but I suppose you need the money as soon as you can get it, I therefore pay immediately. Now who will be the next customer,—if not for five, or four—for three—for two—for one! for fifty cents? Keep in remembrance, friends, that this stock pays glorious in premiums, however small be the investment. Yet you must still remember, that greater the investment, more glorious the premium!

Now sir, I believe I have said enough; perhaps more than enough—for, after all, all that is requisite is but for the people to know your need, and they are ready to nobly respond.

Yours in behalf of the good cause,
J. N. Gloucester.

The following are responses to the above proposition, including Mr. Gloucester's subscription:

J. N. Gloucester,	$5
H. Highland Garnet,	1
Miss Mary A. Chambers,	1
Ezekiel H. Dias,	1
"A Friend,"	1
Robert H. Vandyne,	1
Miss Susan Tindall,	1
Austin Steward,	25

PASSING FOR—COLORED.

Thirty years of thinking, talking, and writing about caste, by a hundred thousand or two of freed blacks, in the free States, have not only failed to exhaust the subject, but have failed even to examine it so as to know what it really is—that is to say, what we are complaining about. Hence our leading men, with more force than forethought, gyrate, exclaim and explode when they approach the subject of caste-hate. A striking instance of this occurs in our last issue, wherein our talented brother Garnet, turns up like a strong young whale, blowing for "negro-nationality"—with a United States Passport in his pocket, which he had just exhibited to the astonished Londoners, in proof of his American citizenship! Which is about the same thing as if the signers of the Declaration of Independence had gone to France and exhibited, in high glee, their passports as British subjects!

Now we venture to affirm, that what is called American prejudice against color is not American in its origin, nor in its character; that it is not the most violent nor persistent of American prejudices; and that it has passed through its worst period and has actually gone into a re-action.

1. Prejudice against color is as old as the time when Moses married an Egyptian woman: Shakespeare who died before the first African slave landed at Jamestown, knew as much about it as any colonizationist or free black of the present day. In the British and French West Indies before the abolition of slavery, every phase of prejudice against color was developed, and had been hardened into sumptuary laws. To-day, in Hayti, if we may believe Mr. Redpath, there is a more violent, persistent and bitter prejudice against color between blacks and mulattoes, than can be found in the United States between whites and colored. According to this gentleman, so deeply rooted is this caste-hate in Hayti, that he would not credit—in a given occurrence, say a fracas between them—what the mulatto would say about the black, nor the black about the mulatto. Indeed no unprejudiced black man can rise from the perusal of his letter to the Tribune on this subject without thanking God that he has only the comparatively mild American prejudice to battle against. In fact, the "invitation" of Geffrard, distinctly pronounces the existence of this caste in Hayti, in the following words:—"Listen then, all ye negroes and mulattoes who in the vast continent of America, suffer from the prejudices of caste!" Now we venture the assertion, that any man, black or white, who would get up in any of our public meetings and exclaim ye "negroes and mulattoes" would be promptly hissed down. And why? because there is no caste-hate or prejudice of this kind in the free States, while there is such in Hayti.

And, so far from being a field in which there is no caste-hate, we find Hayti to be a locality in which a new and less excusable—if there be excusable—form of caste exists. There are those differences, besides, between American caste-hate, and Haytian caste-hate. In the United States, caste is upheld by the existence of slavery, in Hayti it is maintained more than half a century after the abolition of slavery, and the virtual banishment of the whites from that territory. In 1803, Dessalines, in a proclamation, said to the Haytians:

"Blacks and men of color, whom the perfidious policy of the Europeans has so long sought to divide, you who are now united and form only one family, doubtless it was necessary that your reconciliation should be sealed with the blood of your murderers. The same calamities hang over your proscribed heads: the same ardor to smite your enemies has signalized you: the same destiny is reserved for you; and your common interests ought in future to render you inseparable. Preserve this precious record—this happy union; it is the pledge of your liberty, of your success, of your felicity; "it is the secret of your being invincible."

But this splendid advice was not followed, and we find Hayti in 1859, according to Mr. Redpath, torn with this very prejudice against color, and in 1861 a disgraced nationality, worse "kicked and cuffed" by Spain than any black man in New York by the dominant race, and so submissive under this Spanish insult, that we wonder that the bones of Dessalines did not rise in wrathful rebuke.

Whilst caste-hate has been thus persistent in Hayti, who will deny that it has greatly diminished in our free States during the same half century. Look at traveling by rail or in steamboats for colored persons thirty years ago and to-day; look at Miss Crandall's school in Canterbury in 1833—5, and Miss Miner's school in Washington in 1861? Or at the common schools in all Connecticut and Massachusetts open to colored children. Nay, so greatly has caste-hate diminished among us, that the hireling agents, for our expatriation to Hayti, are obliged to strain their eyes to see, and their imaginations to describe, and their voices to shout out a few feeble instances to aid and abet their unpatriotic labors. One individual in particular has a much harder time in thus earning his "pieces of silver" from Geffard, than he had while getting pay for a like sale to Thurlow Weed!

2. We affirm, moreover, that prejudice against color, is not the most violent nor persistent of American prejudices, for the prejudice of Americans against the Irish and Germans, forces these classes to live in certain proscribed localities in all our large, and even medium sized, cities. The Irish quarters, and the Dutch quarters are as isolated as crow hills, &c. We speak from facts when we assert that genuine American families refuse to live in the same houses with dutch and Irish as firmly and fiercely as if with colored persons. Have none of our readers seen the same flushed face and angry scowl on the part of a German when called a "Dutchman," as they have manifested themselves when called "nigger?" What did the "native American party" say as to their relative preference of native-born blacks or of foreign-born citizens? Whom do the confederates love best, Northern white men or Southern colored men?

3. That American prejudice against color has passed through its worst phase, and tends to a healthy reaction in favor of its victims, but few will deny. One strong proof is the fact hinted at in the title of this article, to wit—there are not a few white men, as well as men almost white, who are industriously endeavoring to—pass for colored! This will be made a matter of consideration next week.

HAYTIAN EMIGRATION.

Mr. Editor:

Those Haytian sweet potatoes about which I proposed to speak, being extra fine, I am told, can afford to wait for the present to give place to other and less palatable fare.

Since my last we have had unusually interesting and exciting times here, over the new expatriation momement. The "Pine and Palm," the great Mogul (newspaper,) of the scheme is also on hand, setting forth that a large emigration from Canada is expected—one hundred from Buxton alone. Some time ago it required five hundred from Buxton, and five thousand from Canada to make a large emigration. These gentlemen seem to be thankful for small favors. Let me assure your numerous readers, that there will be but little more rejoicing by these persons, over instalments from Buxton. "Not another one will go from Buxton," said a gentleman from that settlement to-day; neither did the expected one hundred go.

Two emigrant cars crowded with men, women and little children, one hundred and sixteen in number left the station here on the 14th, destined for Hayti and other countries—the majority was from Buxton, but two families were from the Rond Eau, several persons from Sandwich, and one family at least from Illinois—besides single persons from Chicago. The scene was in every sense humiliating. There they were, young men and women—aged, poorly clad, dingy-looking men, and toddling children thronging the platform, and passing in and out of a drinking saloon up to a short while before the train started. The railway servants were ordering them out of their way. I. N. Carey taking names, superintending the departure generally, assisted by one Spencer, who by his pert and turbulent demeanor suggested Haytian intolerance of the humble poor, and J. C. Brown an elderly citizen, who has entered with all the energy of an old man into the enterprise, and should be rewarded by an agency, as to the knowledge of quondam agents, he solicited such a post as early as last spring.

"Only temperance men for Hayti," said agents last year; on this occasion, about which I write, the proprietor of the saloon, finally drove out the emigrants, and closed his house, as the liquor sold was beginning to make itself understood.

The scene in the cars was without a parallel in the history of the colored people in this part of Canada—some were laughing, some crying; the atmost phere was foul, and the solitary tallow candle, with its fitful feble light, and the surrounding gloom seemed a precursor of the valley of the shadow of death, to which many of them unexpectedly but evidently were going.

One young man who would not go was crying aloud, as only a despairing one could at the grave of an only friend; his father, Elder Jacobs, an infatuated old man, replied with the utmost indifference, when asked if that was his son: "Somebody said its my son." The Reverend gentleman, in anticipation, doubtless, of that polygamy in Hayti, about which Dr. Hawks writes, and returned emigrants talk, seemed completely happy in the contemplation of a bride of a few days, a self-sacrificing elderly "white lady," who leaves behind another husband, and goes as help-mate to this minister, who also leaves behind a wife, the mother of the youth so sorrow-stricken at his departure.

Tell me not of the immorality fostered by slavery—of the forcible separation of parents and children by the slave-trafficer, when, up in these high latitudes a scheme is prosecuted with unparalleled impudence by bringing a moral, or if you please, an immoral force to bear upon an illiterate people, as irresistible to an escaped slave, or to the free colored man, as the physical force of the South when backed up by the pro-slavery hordes of the North; I mean this subsidizing of the entire Republican and anti-slavery Press of the United States,—the illiberal reform and Tory Press of Canada,—I mean too the silence, the indifference of the entire anti-slavery mass of both countries, while a few reckless men, in the livery of anti slavery, and with the tattered stolen mantle of martyred old John Brown around them, ship them off; these foolish old people, these feeble little ones, soon to be orphans and at the tender mercies of an hourly expected insurrection of people opposed to their coming; ship them off with as much ceremony as do practised slave-traders on the coast of Guinea.

While pious men are binding up the bruised, instructing the ignorant, joining in marriage those whom slavery has forced to a life of shame—the friends and relatives of your "contrabands" are deluded to an inconsiderable island in mid-ocean, with no means of escape to travel the waste of waters between them and Christian lands—to an island where six hundred thousand people now revel in worse than heathen superstition, make "sacrifices to the God that gives them rain,"—practice polygamy, and die both natives and emigrants in frightful numbers with malignant fevers—and all that some one who is "wondrous wise" may carry out the experiment of ridding the continent of the free negroes; the disgraceful work in which Clay and Webster failed.

Not ridding the continent say they, however, with as much truth as the other, and numberless falsehoods they brazenly publish about colored men and women who have the sovereign contempt for them that their superiors, the slaves of the South have for "dead poor white folks," but who are in duty obliged to call attention to this their public crime, and to work for its abatement as they would for any other gigantic nuisance.

Not even in favor of emigration, says this Redpath, if it were not that there is organization. Who believes him! What cares yellow fever for organization? What cares Haytian despotism for organization. How does he intend to benefit the Haytian natives by their organizations? Not at all, and he knows it; if he does not, he knows less than his own servants, the under-agents in this business, some of whom publicly proclaim altogether another doctrine; and he should go to the foot for assumed incapacity—not be at the head of any movement. No, Mr. Editor the world is too far along to believe falsehood, though proclaimed by Redpath. As mendacious as the world is charged with being, it has too much commen sense to believe its own "files"—to swallow without a grimace the abortions of the Agent General for Hayti.

Mr. Simon T. J. Spencer, the person before alluded to, whose name and status are set forth in the Palm, and who told a large audience here that he was sent from Hayti, because Mr. Redpath had written out to the Government that emigrants were "writing back complaints;" Mr. Spencer, who, a returned emigrant says, left Hayti for his country's good, seems to have been appointed to the work, for his special fitness in every way for such a doubtful task. Not, mark you, sir, to reform abuses practised upon the emigrants, but it would seem to deny every truthful allegation of their experience in suffering and deception; and to "correct certain statements out here about Mr. Redpath." Very questionable business for eight hundred dollars a year. His injudicious tongue let slip several important statements, which for his cause, he had better have left unsaid, and the emigrant before referred to supplied what he omitted. At this public meeting, called by him previously for Monday evening, a very large audience honored him with their presence; but for finished impertinence and vulgarity of speech, his harangue never had an equal here. He told the people they might question him, but he should not reply: must get their own place; that he "was a man;" he would take care of himself, and much more in that strain; repeated the falsehood about the New Haven Colony; set forth his discovery of a gold mine; said that Haytian republicanism shot men for stealing a sheep, and that people were invited to go to Hayti (not to benefit Haytians) to take the Island; "10,000 of you will be able to do it," says this wise man from the Bureau. Mr. Abraham D. Shadd, of Raleigh, questioned him so admirably that by his own bungling answers his scheme was divested of the least possible merit. The Rev. Mr. Young reprimanded him for insults to his audience, and the emigrant brought out the facts on the other side so clear that the people were convinced.

We then learned that although the New Haven Colony was an "organization," and although every man but one followed strictly the rules of health, abstaining from fruits, and most rigidly adhering to Redpath's orders in that and other respects, that every man but one out of a company of seventy-two was down sick of fever at onetime; not one able to help the other—and that thirty at least are now dead.

This emigrant denied emphatically and to him that emigrants can subsist without risk of great mortality, upon the food to be obtained in the island; that he discovered any gold mines, or that, that "chicken soup" about which he had boasted was dealt out lavishly or at all to sick emigrants.

Mr. Spencer, who denied the right of free discussion, and who, like the editor of the "Palm" believes in, and retails irresponsible rumor, had in defiance of the statute, armed himself with knife and revolver, "a la Haytian,"—a question or two from that "colored woman," brought out the disagreeable fact, when "of a sudden," and at sight of the weapons, the Rev. Mr. Hawkins and others told the gentleman to leave—he did leave, Mr. Editor, in quick time, escorted by hundreds of insulted citizens; once on the Queens highway and left to himself—he run, some said, like a deer, others like a dog, and as a finishing touch, this man of mettle, dressed as a lady, crinoline and all, jumped on the underground rail-road and took the back track. Well! he was terribly scared—no one in Chatham intended to hurt a hair of his head, although any other people would have been goaded to desperation by his impertinence, and by the persistent advocacy of this ill-timed and injurious scheme by the agents—but he pretended to believe flying baseless reports; went to the meeting, and time and again with imprudent speech experimented upon their forbearance; had they been the vulgar herd he supposed, when called chicken thieves, mean and other disgusting terms, and afforded him the sport with his weapons he anticipated, Simon T. J. Spencer would have been a head shorter before leaving the pulpit into which, he, brave little Haytian, threw both knife and pistol when at first interrogated about them.

"Out upon such valor," say the people here. Some of us who knew dear old John Brown, yes, well enough to know his plans, and who were thought "sound" enough to be entrusted with them by him, as Redpath was not, have the greatest opinion of fighting anti-slavery,—give us "plucky" abolitionism whether as shown in the moral heroism of Garrison with the halter about him, and who would not take back one good word even said in behalf of the slave; of John Brown, senior, who with Sharp's rifles made "sure work of it," or of John Brown, junior, when once he is fairly out at the back door of this cowardly Haytian scheme, and has made suitable excuses to the poor people who sacrificed all in this scheme; but out upon the miserable apologies for abolitionists who slap the faces of black gentlemen, and then run off to Hayti from the clutches of a common constable—these men who are ready and willing to buy black men's thunder, to palm upon the public as their own meritable, "roving" antics—who, unable to originate ideas, talk old colonization for northern colored men, and when their occupation is nearly gone, affect with a vanity which would be laughable, were it not so petty as to be contemptible, to "lead the anti-slavery sentiment of America."

"Out upon it!" I say, this puss in boots who, to make the parallel between the minutiæ of the Haytian scheme and slavery complete, has a lot of "Aunt Ginny's" and "Mammy," Dinahs spying around, and making up, sending and carrying news to "mars" Redpath, if forsooth, a colored man or woman happens to be "insolent" enough to warn the people against deception and calls upon the friends of the race to save them from being sold for Haytian "'ti cobs."

But! "whose business is it if we do get pay?" say these men—"and if we do invite people to Hayti?"

Whose business is it, I ask, if the negro-trader gets pay, and the hundreds who engage in pursuits which bring evil, not good upon their fellows? It is yours and mine—it is the worlds.

"This pursuit pays us less than others would; "we are purely disinterested," we are, say these men. Do you believe them, good reader?—they boast of their pay. Mr. Spencer says he gets eight hundred dollars per annum. The general and all gets handsome salaries—get paid by the month and week, say they yet they are purely disinterested. Were it honest, respectable or honorable to persuade such a people to such a country, no one would complain—honest, honorable labor should always pay; but, that "disinterestedness!" I say to this Atlas, with the colored world upon his shoulders, if anything decent under the sun pays better, go at it! But would you show your disinterestedness, work at the many better schemes which pay infinitely less.

I would ask your indulgence for this long communication, Mr. Editor, were it not that the people's cause is urgent. This scheme, like old colonization, injures those who go, and those that remain; like it, its advocates are firm in their evil purpose and sure of their pay.

"Wax fat and kick." Like old oppression on the side of this new oppressor their is power, to break which will be more noble than to conquer the old foe—for in that labor our friends help us; against this they refuse to help—they make us struggle unaided by the immoral sentiment, their press or their silence, which you please makes in its favor. We see the work before us, but if we contend persistently, earnestly, religiously, God will, as in time past, bring this scheme to naught, and the white and black Judases who wrap over the knuckles your "New York Post" for telling the truth; mark! when that truth was against it, but quote the same "Post" when it comes out in favor of it—these Judases who take the gold and divide it, will die, sir, and be buried so deep by an indignant people, that no amount of honest public effort, if they should become capable of it, will ever resurrect them.

Call a Convention of States and Canada here in Canada to crush this scheme!

Mary A. Shadd Cary.

Chatham, C. W., Oct. 18, 1861.

Haytian Emigration.

Our city, for the last few days, has witnessed a very large influx of strangers, on their way to Hayti. The majority of them were easily distinguished from our local population, by their hardy appearance, and the very large number being nearly four hundred, shows that the agents of the Haytian Government have not been idle. There is a number of very respectable people among them; but we believe that the great majority of them cannot be included in that catagory; indeed, one of the agents told us that many of them were the "scrapings" of Detroit, Toronto, and other places. We trust, however, that they may all prove valuable citizens to the Republic of Hayti.

We notice among them a great many elderly persons, and we may calculate to hear, after their arrival there, of great mortality among them. There was considerable confusion attendant upon embarkation, but that was owing more to their (the emigrants) violation of instructions, than bad management on the part of the agents. There was one thing about the arrangement that the emigrants could not understand, and that was, how so many of them should find room to move in so small a compass as the vessels on which they were to embark seemed to afford.

A spectator remarked, that they would have a pretty warm time of it after they got to sea. One of the emigrants after looking into one of the vessels, made this inquiry:—"After you kill the hog, you pack him in the barrel, after yot get the barrel full, how are you going to get any more hog in there?" This was said in illustration of the supposed incapacity of the vessel.

